Wadilal Mathuradas Jain, Petitioner v. The Assistant Collector of Central Excise and others, Respondents.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 486 of 1978, D/-1-12-1980.

Gold Control Act (45 of 1968), S. 82 — Section does not contemplate personal hearing when order under appeal is being confirmed in revision. (Natural justice — Opportunity of hearing at revisional stage; Constitution of India, Art. 226).

The only obligation upon the Government of India while deciding the revisional order under Clause (b) of sub-section (3) of S. 82 is that if the order is to be varied, then the person against whom such order is being passed prejudicial to his interest, has to be given a reasonable opportunity of making a representation and, if he so desires, of being heard in his defence. A combined reading of Sections 79, 80 makes it clear that at the stage of initial adjudication under S. 79 and at the appellate stage under Section 80 if the person concerned demands an opportunity of being heard, it has to be given. These two sections amply provide for observance of the principles of natural justice while adjudicating the matters. However, same is not the position when the revisional powers are being exercised by the Central Government. The Central Government is bound to grant a personal hearing if any order is to be varied prejudicially to the interest of any person. The intention of the Legislature, therefore, appears that it is not necessary at the revisional stage to grant a personal hearing. AIR 1977 SC 567 and AIR 1977 SC 1691, Foll. (Para 10)

So far as the rules of natural justice are concerned, they do not necessarily require that there should be repeated hearings at all later stages, namely appeals, revisions, etc. AIR 1967 Cal 321, Rel. on. (Para 13)

Kumar. Mehta with Shirish Gupte, for Petitioner; V. D. Govilkar with Miss S. G. Shah, for Respondents.

PALSHIKAR, J.:— In this petition the petitioner is challenging the orders of the authorities under the Gold Control Act.

2. According to the Central Excise Officers at Amalner, the petitioner had gone to Bombay for purchasing gold on 2nd Feb., 1970 and was likely to return by a bus from Bombay on 4th February, 1970. The Superintendent, Central Excise, Amalner, therefore, proceeded to Dhulia to apprehend the petitioner and at Dhulia they found that the petitioner was travelling by a bus from Bombay to Jalgaon. He was asked to get down with all his luggage. Thereafter his personal search was taken by the Superintendent, Central Excise, Amalner, in the presence of Panchas and he found that the petitioner was wearing two gold patlies in crude form on both his hands. These patlies weighed 113.100 gms. of gold. His luggage was, therefore, searched by the authorities and they found six gold patlies in crude form which were hidden in the bents for fitting water pipes. The pipes were closed with screws on. The total weight of these six patlies was 361.000 gms. When he was questioned by the authorities, the petitioner could not satisfactorily explain the possession of these gold patlies. All the 8 patlies were, therefore, seized along with other articles and according to the authorities the petitioner had contravened the provisions of Section 8 of the Gold Control Act as he was in possession of 8 gold patlies in crude form weighing 474.100 gms. According to them these patlies were liable to confiscation under Section 71 (1) of the G. C. Act and the petitioner was also liable to penalty under Section 74 of the G. C. Act.

3. It appears that there was a panchanama prepared by the Central Excise authorities dated 20th April, 1970. This purports to be an assay report. However, it also contains the observations of the panchas that out of these 8 patlies 6 were in complete form of ornaments and the other two patlies were in incomplete shape and form of ornaments. They also observed that such patlies were used in Maharashtra.

4. The Central Excise authorities served a show cause notice dated 15th May, 1970 upon the petitioner asking to show cause why the gold in question should not be forfeited and why he should not be penalised under the Act. The authorities relied upon two panchanamas dated 4th February, 1970 and 20th April, 1970 and also the statements dated 4th February, 1970 and 25th February, 1970 of the petitioner. According to the authorities the petitioner was in possession of primary gold in the form of round crude patlies in an unfinished form. These were hidden in the pipes and the pipes were closed with screws. Two of these patlies were worn by the petitioner on his hand.

5. The defence of the petitioner was that these were the family ornaments and when he had gone to Bombay for purchasing certain hardware materials he wanted to sell them in the market at Bombay. However, he could not get sufficient price for these articles and, therefore, he brought them back; but in order to keep them at a safe place he wore two patlies on his hands and had kept the rest of them in the pipes so that nobody would think that he was carrying gold ornaments. He also stated in his reply that these were his family ornaments in a finished form and such ornaments were normally used in conservative Marwari families and there was nothing unusual in it; but since he could not sell them in Bombay, he brought them back.

6. The Assistant Controller of Central Excise, Integrated Division, Nasik, granted a personal hearing to the petitioner and passed an order on 12th October, 1970 confiscating all the 8 patlies holding them to be the primary gold. He also levied a penalty of Rs. 500/- upon the petitioner. Against this order the petitioner filed an appeal. Before the appellate authority he was represented by a lawyer and was granted a personal hearing on 20th October, 1972. The Collector of Excise, Poona, who heard the appeal, dismissed the same by his order dated 17th November, 1972. He also confirmed the findings of the Assistant Collector of Central Excise, Nasik, that these so-called patlies were primary gold and were liable to confiscation.

7. Being aggrieved by the appellate order, the petitioner filed a revision application before the Government of India. The Government of India did not grant any personal hearing to the petitioner and decided the revision application by its order dated 27th July, 1976. The Government of India also held that these patlies were not the ornaments as defined by the Gold Control Act and they were clearly the pieces of primary gold. The Government of India, therefore, confirmed the findings recorded by the Assistant Collector of Central Excise Nasik, and the Collector of Central Excise, Poona. These orders have now been challenged in the present petition.

8. Shri Mehta, the learned counsel for the petitioner, argued that the order passed by the Government of India was vitiated because no personal hearing was granted to the petitioner. According to him he had demanded a personal hearing even before the Government of India and since the same was not granted, the principles of natural justice were violated. He said that the Government of India was acting in a quasi-judicial manner while disposing of the revision application. It was, therefore, obligatory upon the revisional authority to grant a personal hearing. He further submitted that the Government of India as well as the authorities below have not taken into consideration an important piece of evidence viz. the panchanama dated 20th April, 1970. He submitted that this was the panchanama drawn by the authorities concerned and the Panchas were specifically asked their opinion on the question whether those patlies were the ornaments or not and whether such ornaments were used in the State of Maharashtra or not. The opinion expressed by the Panchas was binding on the Department, and since none of the authorities has stated any reasons for rejecting the said panchanama, all the orders are liable to be set aside. He also argued that it was not open to the authorities concerned to examine the articles themselves and come to their own independent conclusions. Mr. Mehta also argued that the opinion expressed by the Panchas should have been accepted by the authorities concerned. He, therefore, contended that all the orders of the authorities concerned, are liable to be set aside.

9. Before dealing with the questions raised by Shri Mehta, it would be necessary to note certain provisions as regards adjudication of the disputes under the G. C. Act. Chap. XIV of the G. C. Act deals with adjudication, appeal and revision under the Act. Section 79 lays down that no order of adjudication or confiscation or penalty shall be made unless the owner of the gold, conveyance, or animal or other person concerned is given a notice in writing— (i) informing him of the grounds on which it is proposed to confiscate such gold, conveyance or animal or to impose a penalty; and, (ii) giving him a reasonable opportunity of making a representation in writing within such reasonable time as may be specified in the notice against the confiscation or imposition of penalty mentioned therein and, if he so desires, of being heard in the matter. We are not concerned in the present petition with the rest of the provisions of Section 79. This section clearly lays down that if before the adjudicating authority the person concerned demands a personal hearing, it has to be granted.

10. Section 80 provides for an appeal against the order passed by the authorities under Section 79. It lays down that the appellate authority may, after giving to the appellant an opportunity of being heard, if he so desires, and after making such further inquiries, if any, as it may consider necessary, pass such order as it thinks fit, confirming, modifying or reversing the decision or order appealed against, or may send back the case, with such directions, as it may think fit, for a fresh adjudication or decision, as the case may be, after taking additional evidence if necessary. Section 80 also, therefore, provides that if the appellant demands an opportunity of being heard, it has to be granted. We may observe at this stage that both the Assistant Collector of Central Excise, Nasik, and the Collector of Central Excise, Poona, had granted an opportunity of being personally heard to the petitioner. We are mainly concerned in this petition with the question whether it was obligatory upon the revisional authority to grant a personal hearing. Section 82 of the G. C. Act empowers the Central Government either on its own motion or otherwise, to call for and examine the record of any proceeding in which any decision or order has been made on appeal for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of such decision or order and may pass such order thereon as it may think fit. The only obligation upon the Government of India while deciding the revisional order under Clause (b) of sub-section (3) of Section 82 is that if the order is to be varied, then the person against whom such order is being passed prejudicial to his interest, he has to be given a reasonable opportunity of making a representation and, if he so desires, of being heard in his defence. A combined reading of all these provisions makes it clear that at the stage of initial adjudication under Section 79 and at the appellate stage under Section 80 if the person concerned demands an opportunity of being heard, it has to be given. In our opinion, these two sections amply provide for observance of the principles of natural justice while adjudicating the matters. However, same is not the position when the revisional powers are being exercised by the Central Government. The Central Government is bound to grant a personal hearing if any order is to be varied prejudicially to the interest of any person. The intention of the Legislature, therefore, appears that it is not necessary at the revisional stage to grant a personal hearing.

11. In Madhya Pradesh Industries Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1966 SC 671, it has been laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in para 10 which reads as under :

“10. As regards the second contention, I do not think that the appellant is entitled as of right to a personal hearing. It is no doubt a principle of natural justice that a quasi-judicial tribunal cannot make any decision adverse to a party without giving him an effective opportunity of meeting any relevant allegations against him. Indeed, R. 55 of the Rules, quoted supra, recognizes the said principle and states that no order shall be passed against any applicant unless he has been given an opportunity to make his representations against the comments, if any, received from the State Government or other authority. The said opportunity need not necessarily be by personal hearing. It can be by written representation. Whether the said opportunity should be by written representation or by personal hearing depends upon the facts of each case and ordinarily it is in the discretion of the tribunal. The facts of the present case disclose that a written representation would effectively meet the requirements of the principles of natural justice. But there is some apparent justification in the submission that the Central Government had taken into consideration an extraneous matter that came into existence subsequent to the filing of the revision, namely, that Messrs. Manganese Ore (India) Ltd., which is a public sector undertaking, had applied for the lease of the area in question on October 5, 1962, for the purpose of mining. The appellant did not allege in its affidavit that this fact was not brought to its notice before the Central Government made the order; indeed, it did not file any reply affidavit to the effect that the said matter was kept back from it. I would have pursued the matter a little further but for the fact that I am refusing to interfere in this appeal on other grounds."

However, it was argued that personal hearing even at the revisional stage was necessary because the decision of the Supreme Court in the aforesaid case was held to be no longer good law. However, the Supreme Court in a later decision is Tara Chand Khatri v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1977 SC 567 observed in para 24 as under:

"24. We would also like to point out that the observations in Travancore Rayon Ltd. v. Union of India, (AIR 1971 SC 862) (supra) that in Bhagat Raja v. Union of India, (AIR 1967 SC 1606) (supra) this Court in effect overruled the judgment of the majority in Madhya Pradesh Industries Ltd. v. Union of India, (AIR 1966 SC 671) (supra) seem to have crept therein through some oversight. A careful perusal of the decision in Bhagat Raja v. The Union of India (supra) would show that this Court did not make any observations therein which can be interpreted as overruling the majority judgment in Madhya Pradesh Industries Ltd. v. Union of India (supra). It is also worthy of note that in Bhagat Raja's case (supra), the amendment of Rule 55 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960 introduced in July, 1965 laid down a special procedure in regard to revisions. It required the Central Government to send copies of the application for revision to all the impleaded parties including the person to whom a lease had been granted calling upon them to make such comments as they might like to make within three months from the date of the issue of the communication and on receipt of the comments from any party to send copies thereof to the other parties calling upon them to make further comments as they might like to make within one month from the date of the issue of the communication. It also provided that the revision application, the communications containing comments and counter-comments referred to above would constitute record of the case. Thus under the amended rule, the party whose application was rejected got an ample opportunity of showing to the Central Government by reference not only to the record which was before the State Government but by reference to the fresh material as well that the State Government was misled in its consideration of the matter or that its decision was based on irrelevant considerations. This is evident from the following observations made in Bhagat Raja v. The Union of India (supra):

"The old Rule 55 was replaced by a new rule which came into force on 19th July, 1965. Whereas the old rule directed the Central Government to consider comments on the petition of review by the State Government or other authority only, the new rule is aimed at calling upon all the parties including the State Government to make their comments in the matter and the parties are given the right to make further comments on those made by the other or others. In effect, the parties are given a right to bring forth material which was not before the State Government. It is easy to see that an unsuccessful party may challenge the grant of a leave in favour of another by pointing out defects or demerits which did not come to the knowledge of the State Government. The order in this case does not even purport to show that the comments and counter-comments which were before the Central Government in this case, had been considered."

It is clear from this paragraph that the decision in Madhya Pradesh Industries case (AIR 1966 SC 671) was still a good law and relying upon the said decision in Madhya Pradesh Industries case and this case, there is no manner of doubt that the petitioner had no right of personal hearing at the revisional stage before the Central Government under Section 82 of the Gold Control Act as a matter of right.

12. It may also be pointed out that the Supreme Court in Shrikrishnandas Tikara v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 1691 observed as follows (at p. 1694):—

"... .. The lessee having been heard, natural justice has been complied with. The fact that in the second notice by the Collec-for a personal hearing was offered, does not mean that the failure personally to hear the petitioner was a contravention of the canon of natural justice in the first case. It is well-established that the principles of natural justice cannot be petrified or fitted into rigid moulds. They are flexible and turn on the facts and circumstances of each case. Has there been any unfair deal by the authority? Has the party affected been hit below the belt? Has he had a just opportunity to state his plea? Having regard to the features of the present case, we are hardly satisfied that the order is bad on this score."

It is, therefore, clear that in the present case the petitioner had ample opportunity to defend himself against the proposed action before the Assistant Collector of Central Excise who originally adjudicated the matter. From the reply to the show cause notice it appears that the petitioner had every opportunity to defend himself. It is also clear from the appellate order that the Collector of Central Excise, Poona, also gave an opportunity to the petitioner of being represented by a lawyer and of being heard personally. If this be so, we do not think that there was any violation of the principles of natural justice, when the Government of India declined to grant any personal hearing. In their order the Government of India have stated that they carefully considered the submissions made by the applicant in his revision application and also examined the records. The plea of the petitioner for a personal hearing was turned down on the ground that it was not so provided in law and that the Government of India did not think it necessary, having regard to the nature and circumstances of the case, to meet the ends of natural justice. We find from the order of the Government of India that they were aware of the argument advanced that the Collector ignored the opinion of the gold dealers, though experts in gold business. We may further observe that it was not pointed out to us that since no personal hearing was granted, the petitioner was prejudicially affected in his defence in any manner. In the absence of any such material on record, we do not think that the order of the Government of India dated 27th July, 1976 is vitiated on this count.

13. We may also usefully rely upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Prafulla Kumar Mazumdar v. Inspector General of Police, West Bengal, AIR 1967 Cal 321, wherein it was observed that at the stage of an enquiry, the accused must be heard and given every opportunity to defend himself.

But once the proceedings have terminated, subsequent stages like appeals or revisions are in most cases governed by rules and regulations which are framed or according to practice. Though personal hearing is essential at the primary stage of enquiry, at later stages if the rules do not permit it, personal hearing cannot be given since the matter is governed by rules framed. So far as the rules of natural justice are concerned, they do not necessarily require that there should be repeated hearings at all later stages, namely appeals, revisions, etc.

14. As already observed, Section 82 does not contemplate a personal hearing when the order under appeal is being confirmed. In our opinion, therefore, the order is perfectly valid. When we turn to the next contention raised by Shri Mehta, we find that so far as the panchanama dated 20th April, 1970 is concerned, the Assistant Collector of Central Excise has taken into consideration the same. However, the real question that arises is what is the evidentiary value of this panchanama and the opinion expressed by the so-called experts. In the first place, there is no legal bar to the authorities concerned in using their own eyes to compare the articles and to come to their own conclusions. Neither the sections nor the rules create any such legal bar. In our opinion, therefore, it was open to the authorities concerned to physically examine the articles and come to a finding whether they were ornaments or primary gold. Moreover, they have also taken into account the panchanama dated 20th April, 1970. However, it was argued by Shri Mehta that no reasons were stated by the authorities concerned for not accepting the said piece of evidence and according to him without assigning any cogent reasons for rejecting that piece of evidence the authorities could not compare the articles and come to their own finding. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, we find that when the authorities have examined the articles themselves and have come to the conclusion that this was primary gold, by necessary implication they have rejected the panchanama to the extent of the opinion of the expert. There is another aspect in this case. In the first place, we do not accept that the two panchas were experts on the question whether the articles were ornaments or primary gold. There is nothing on record to suggest that they had any expertised knowledge in the field. If that is the state of affairs, we do not think that even non-consideration of the panchanama, if any, would vitiate the order.

15. It was also contended that the department failed to establish that the articles in question were the pieces of primary gold. We must examine this question with reference to the defence made out by the petitioner in his reply to the show cause notice. In paragraph 3 of his reply the petitioner stated that he had gone to Bombay for purchase of certain hardware goods and that at that time he had carried with him 8 patlies for the purpose of sale in Jhaveri Zazar at Bombay. However, since he could not get the desired price as the purity of the gold was found to be less, he brought them back. For the purpose of safety of his valuable articles he wore two of them on his hands and kept the others in the pipe bents so that nobody would doubt the possession of the valuables. He has also stated that they were family ornaments in a finished form and were normally used in a conservative Marwari family. The Assistant Collector of Central Excise, personally examined these articles and found that they were primary gold from their finish. The ends of those pieces were crudely cut and the inside surface was so rough and crudely made that the pieces could hardly be called ornaments intended for decorating human body in any society in this country. The same is the finding of the higher authorities. We do not accept the contention of the petitioner that the department has failed to establish that these were the pieces of primary gold. Having regard to the circumstances under which the petitioner brought them from Bombay to Dhulia and the explanation given by him which was ultimately found to be false, the authorities were justified in coming to their own conclusion.

16. In the result, the rule is discharged with costs.

Petition dismissed.

PALSHIKAR, J.

Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay and another, Petitioners v. Vijay Metal Works, Bombay, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 3253 of 1980, D/- 13-3-1981.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), Ss. 126 and 129 — Scope — Sections give protection even to a salaried employee who advises his employer on legal matters — However, communication should not be in furtherance of illegal purpose.

GY/GY/D397/81/HR/RSK

A salaried employee who advises his employer on all legal questions and also other legal matters would get the same protection as others, viz., barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil, under Ss. 126 and 129, and, therefore, any communication made in confidence to him by his employer seeking his legal advice or by him to his employer for the purpose of giving legal advice should get the protection of Ss. 126 and 129, provided that such communication is not made in furtherance of any illegal purpose. AIR 1954 J & K 11 and (1972) 2 QB 102, Rel. on. (Para 4)

The Law Officer of the Municipal Corporation had prepared a note for the purpose of sending a reply by the Municipal Commissioner to a letter of the State Government. No legal advice was sought from the Law Officer on any question. The sum and substance of the note was that eviction proceedings under the Corporation Act were started against the occupants of the Arches below a bridge on the ground of reconstruction of the said bridge, but really they were not covered by the reconstruction of the bridge and it was necessary to drop enquiries against those occupiers and it was also decided to create a public purpose i.e. storage of cement etc. for the bridge so as to evict the occupants on the pretext of public interest. It was also sought from the Municipal Commissioner whether the Corporation should apprise the State Minister for Urban Development about the real facts of the case as to why the eviction proceedings had been started against the occupants.

Held, the document was not in the nature of a confidential communication between the client and his legal adviser. On the contrary it disclosed certain shocking facts that destroyed the privilege, if any granted under Ss. 126 and 129. It showed that the enquiries were started against the occupants on a false ground and pretext that they were required to be evicted because of the reconstruction of the bridge. However, since they were not under the bridge the enquiries were dropped and the Corporation was preparing another false ground to evict the occupants as if it was in the public interest. Certain facts were sought to be suppressed from the Government for which the orders of the Municipal Commissioner were required. In the circumstances, the document could not get any protection of law either under S. 126 or 129 of the Evidence Act. (Para 5)

R. T. Walawalkar with Smt. M. V. Shetty, N. V. Kamat and P. B. Karhadkar, for Petitioners; C. M. Korde, i/b M/s. Crawford Baylay and Company, for Respondent.

ORDER:— The petitioners had initiated action against the respondents for eviction on the ground that Mahalaxmi Bridge at Bombay was to be reconstructed and those premises which are in the shape of Arches at the junction of Clark Road and Hains Road were to be vacated. The notices were, therefore, served by the petitioners upon the respondents and eviction proceedings under Section 105-B of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, 1888 were taken, before the Small Causes Court at Bombay. During the cross-examination of the witness for the respondents, the Corporation was called upon to produce original letter dated 5-2-1975. Earlier inspection of this letter was granted by the Corporation and I am told that the letter has been filed before the Enquiry Officer of the Corporation. When the respondents called upon the Advocate of the Corporation to produce the original letter dated 5-2-1975, an objection was raised mainly as regards privilege. According to the Corporation, this was a confidential communication by the Legal Adviser of the Corporation and the same was privileged under Sec. 129 of the Evidence Act. The learned Judge of the Small Causes Court by his order dated 8th Oct., 1980 held that this communication was not privileged either under S. 129 or under S. 126 of the Evidence Act. He, therefore, ordered the production of that letter and adjourned the case till 28th Oct., 1980. This order has been challenged in the present petition.

2. Shri R. T. Walawalkar the learned counsel for the petitioners argued that the letter dated 5-2-1975 was a confidential communication by the Legal Adviser of the Corporation to his client, the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay. Under Section 129 of the Evidence Act no one shall be compelled to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which has taken place between him and his legal professional adviser, unless he offers himself as a witness, in which case, he may be compelled to disclose any such communication as may appear to the Court necessary to be known in order to explain any evidence which he has given, but no others.

Shri Walawalkar, therefore, argued that the learned Judge was in error in compelling the production of this document by the Corporation.

3. Shri Korde, the learned counsel appearing for the respondents argued that the Law Officer of the Corporation who has written the said letter dated 5-2-1975, is not covered by either S. 126 or 129 of the Evidence Act. A salaried Law Officer of the Corporation is not the Legal Adviser, or even Barrister, Vakil or Attorney. He is a paid employee of the Corporation and there is no relationship between the Corporation and him as that of client and Legal Adviser. He further submitted that what Ss. 126 and 129 contemplate is that a person who is practicing law in Courts of law has the privilege under these sections and it is not an employee who acts as a Law Officer who is protected by these sections. He further submitted that Ss. 126 and 129 are supplementary to each other and they must be construed in the same manner and a Legal Adviser which is mentioned in S. 129 must be of the category of a Barrister, Vakil or Attorney as mentioned in S. 126, and not anybody employed by a Corporation or a Company.

4. Section 126 protects the professional communications made by a client to his barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil. It prohibits these persons from disclosing any communication made to them in the course and for the purpose of their employment as such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil by or on behalf of the client, unless there is an express permission of the client to disclose the same. These persons are also prohibited from stating contents or conditions of any document with which they are acquainted in the course of and for the purpose of their professional employment. They also cannot be compelled to disclose what advice was tendered by them to the client in the course of and for the purpose of such employment. However, the section does not protect any disclosure regarding any such communication made in furtherance of any illegal purpose of any fact observed by any barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, in the course of his employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment. It is immaterial under this section whether attention of such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil was or was not directed to such fact by or on behalf of his client. These obligations not to disclose certain communications as stated above continue even after the employment as such has come to an end. Sec. 129 gives protection to persons that they shall not be compelled to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which has taken place between him and his legal professional adviser, unless he offers himself as a witness, in which case, he may be compelled to disclose any such communications as may appear to the Court necessary to be known in order to explain any evidence which he has given but no others. Therefore, any confidential communication between a client and a legal professional adviser is protected under S. 129 and they shall not be compelled to disclose any such communications to the Court unless such person offers himself as a witness and it appears to the Court that such disclosure is necessary in order to explain any evidence which such person has given and nothing beyond than that. However, the crucial question which arises in this petition is what is the status of a salaried Legal Adviser who is an employee of the Corporation or Company or even for that matter of State and Central Government. Merely because he does not appear in the Court does he cease to get this protection of law? Is it that only those persons who are professing and practicing law in the Law Courts are entitled to protection under the law of evidence? A close reading of these sections would make it clear that what is protected is a disclosure made in confidence by a client to his legal adviser. Of course, there is no protection to any such statement which is for illegal purpose or for offence for practicing fraud or for committing forgeries. While considering these two sections we must look to the spirit behind the law rather than the letter of law. In the recent past a practice of employing legal advisers who are well qualified in law has grown up. Instead of going to the professional lawyers every now and then a practice has come into operation to retain the lawyers in full time employment of the Corporation. Their nature of duty is to advise their employers on the questions which are of a legal character. They advise their employers on all matters pertaining to law and litigation. Their nature of duties is the same as that of barrister, pleader, vakil, or attorney except that they do not appear in Courts. If it is so, then I do not see any reason why they should not get same protection of law as the other legal advisers who appear in Courts of law. In my opinion, therefore, a paid or salaried employee who advises his employer, on all questions of law and relating to litigation, must get the same protection of law and therefore any such communication made in confidence by his employer to him for the purpose of seeking legal advice or vice versa should get protection of Sections 126 and 129 of the Evidence Act. In AIR 1954 J & K 11, L. Tirath Ram v. His Highness Govt. Jammu and Kashmir, the learned Judge has observed that a communication made by a Legal Remembrancer of the Government is privileged under Section 129. Even though there is no elaborate discussion of this question, I respectfully agree with the statement of law made by the learned Judge. What the learned Judge of the Jammu and Kashmir held in 1954 has been elaborated by Lord Denning M. R. in (1972) 2 QB 102 at p. 129. The Great Judge in Crompton Ltd. v. Customs and Excise Commrs. (C. A.), has observed as follows :—

“The law relating to discovery was developed by the Chancery Courts in the first half of the 19th century. At that time nearly all legal advisers were in independent practice on their own account. Nowadays it is very different. Many barristers and solicitors are employed as legal advisers, whole time, by a single employer. Sometimes the employer is a great commercial concern. At other times it is a government department or a local authority. It may even be the Government itself, like the Treasury Solicitor and his staff. In every case these legal advisers do legal work for their employer and for no one else. They are paid, not by fees for each piece of work, but by a fixed annual salary. They are, no doubt, servants or agents of the employer. For that reason Ferbes J. thought that they were in a different position from other legal advisers who are in private practice. I do not think this is correct. They are regarded by the law as in every respect in the same position as those who practice on their own account. The only difference is that they act for one client only, and not for several clients. They must uphold the same standards of honour and of etiquette. They are subject to the same duties to their client and to the Court. They must respect the same confidences. They and their clients have the same privileges. I have myself in my early days settled scores of affidavits of documents for the employers of such legal advisers. I have always proceeded on the footing that the communications between the legal advisers and their employer (who is their client) are the subject of legal professional privilege: and I have never known it questioned. There are many cases in the books of actions against railway companies where privilege has been claimed in this way. The validity of it has never been doubted.

I speak, of course, of their communications in the capacity of legal advisers. It does sometimes happen that such a legal adviser does work for his employer in another capacity, perhaps of an executive nature. Their communications in that capacity would not be the subject of legal professional privilege. So the legal adviser must be scrupulous to make the distinction. Being a servant or agent too, he may be under more pressure from his client. So he must be careful to resist it. He must be as independent in the doing of right as any other legal adviser. It is true, as the Law Reform Committee said in their report in 1967 on Privilege in Civil Procedure (Cmd. 3472) that the "system is susceptible to abuse," but I have never known it abused. So much so that I do not think the law should be changed in the way that Forbes J. would have it. There is a safeguard against abuse. It is ready at hand. If there is any doubt as to the propriety or validity of a claim for privilege, the master or the judge should without hesitation inspect the documents himself so as to see if the claim is well founded, or not. He has ample power under R. S. C. Order 24, R. 12. The affidavit should not be treated as conclusive, nor anything like it. A party cannot use the affidavit as a taboo or spell to prevent anyone looking at the documents. When the master or judge sees the documents, he will see if the privilege is rightly claimed — or not — and make an order accordingly."

With due respect to the learned Judge, I am in full agreement with the position of law stated in this case. I, therefore, hold that a salaried employee who advises his employer on all legal questions and also other legal matters would get the same protection as others under Sections 126 and 129 of the Evidence Act and even otherwise these communications are properly covered by these sections.

5. It was then contended that since such communication is privileged one the learned Judge was in error in ordering production of that document. It is, therefore, necessary to see whether the letter in question is confidential one which is protected by these sections. A reading of this letter makes it clear that the Law Officer of the Corporation had prepared a note for the purpose of sending a reply by the Municipal Commissioner to a letter of the State Government. It refers to the endorsement dated 25-1-1975. The endorsement number is MGC/8959 dated 21-5-1975. This is an endorsement made to the Law Officer that a draft reply for the Municipal Commissioner's approval has to be prepared. Now this was for a reply to the letter from the Government dated 24-1-1975, wherein the Government had made certain queries. It, therefore, appears that the Law Officer was requested to prepare a draft reply to the letter dated 24th January, 1975 for the purpose of Municipal Commissioner who was supposed to reply that letter. It appears that no legal advice was sought from the Law Officer on any question. On the contrary this draft letter discloses the facts as they had occurred. Sum and substance of this letter is that eviction proceedings under S. 105/B of the Corporation Act were started against the occupants of the Arches below Mahalaxmi Bridge on the ground of reconstruction of Mahalaxmi Bridge, but really they were not covered by the reconstruction of Mahalaxmi Bridge and it was necessary to drop enquiries against those occupiers and it was also decided to create a public purpose i.e. storage of cement etc. for the bridge so as to evict the occupants on the ground of public interest. It was also sought from the Municipal Commissioner whether the Corporation should apprise the State Minister for Urban Development about the real facts of the case as to why the eviction proceedings have been started against the occupants. In my opinion, this document is not in the nature of a confidential communication between the client and his legal adviser. On the contrary it discloses certain shocking facts that would destroy the privilege, if any. This shows that the enquiries were started against the occupants on a false ground and pretext that they were required to be evicted because of the reconstruction of Mahalaxmi Bridge. However, since they were not under the Mahalaxmi Bridge the enquiries were dropped and the Corporation was preparing another false ground to evict the occupants as if it was in the public interest. Certain facts were sought to be suppressed from the Government for which the orders of the Municipal Commissioner were required. The text of the entire letter is such that it shocks the conscience of common man about the manner in which the public bodies like Corporation is behaving. In my opinion, such a document can never get any protection of law either under Section 126 or 129 of the Evidence Act.

6. Apart from this, this letter has been produced in another enquiry No. 119/1976, 240/1976 as Exhibit 1. The original document has been produced before the Enquiry Officer. The respondent was also given inspection of the same with the express consent of the Municipal Corporation. Considering these facts, I do not think that any such protection either under Section 126 or 129 of the Evidence Act is available to the petitioners.

7. In the result, therefore, I confirm the order passed by the learned Judge, though for different reasons.

The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

Rule is discharged.

Corporation should pay costs of this petition to the respondents and bear its own.

Petition dismissed.

PENDSE, J.

Moreshwar Narayan Bhadke, Petitioner
v. Shashikant Balakrishna Malkar, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 639 of 1980, D/- 12-9-1980.

(A) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 11 (3) and S. 12, Explan. I — Application for fixation of standard rent under S. 11 (3) — Limitation under S. 12, Explan. I — Notice under S. 12 (2) received on April 27, 1974 — Application filed only on June 10, 1974, i. e. on reopening of Court after vacation — Held application was within time in view of provisions of S. 4 r/w. S. 29 (2) of Limitation Act (1963) or S. 11 of Bombay General Clauses Act (1904). (Limitation Act (1963), Ss. 4, 29 (2) and Bombay General Clauses Act (1904), S. 11).

(Paras 8, 9)

(B) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 11 (1) and (3), and S. 12 (2) — Application for fixation of standard rent — To be filed under S. 11 (1) or S. 11 (3) depending upon class of tenant, S. 11 (3) applying to tenants who have received notice under S. 12 (2) for arrears of rent, S. 11 (1) to tenant who has not received such notice — Held District Judge erred by holding that application by all classes of tenants could be filed only under S. 11 (1) and that Section 11 (3) merely provided for fixation of interim rent.

There is a distinction between an application to be filed by the tenant under sub-section (1) and sub-section (3) of S. 11. The application under sub-section (1) of Sec. 11 does not require the tenant to deposit any interim rent, nor can such a tenant be called upon to deposit any amount in the Court. The power to direct the tenant to deposit interim rent is conferred on the Court provided the tenant has received notice under sub-section (2) of S. 12 and files an application under sub-section (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act. The intention of the Legislature in imposing additional obligation on the tenant who files the application under sub-section (3) is obvious. The tenant who has committed default in payment of rent and receives notice from the landlord, cannot avoid his liability to make payment by merely filing an application for determination of the standard rent. Sub-section (5) of S. 11 also provides that such a tenant would not be entitled to file any appeal against the order passed in his application under sub-section (3) of S. 11. Hence it is wrong to proceed on an assumption that the application for fixation of standard rent by all classes of tenants can be filed only under sub-section (1) and sub-sec. (3) of S. 11 merely provides for fixation of interim rent. The scope of sub-section (1) and sub-section (3) is totally different and the application under sub-section (3) of Sec. 11 is an independent application.

(Para 10)

(C) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 11 (3) and S. 12, Explan. I — Benefit of Explan. I of S. 12 — Cannot be denied merely on ground that on date of filing of application under S. 11 (3) the tenant did not get interim rent fixed — Application for determination of interim rent is not a sine qua non to attract Explan. I of S. 12.

Once an application is filed for determination of standard rent under sub-sec. (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act, then a duty is cast upon the Court to forthwith specify the amount of rent. It is open either for the tenant to file such an application or for the landlord to request the Court to fix the interim rent, but the date of such a request or actual fixation of interim rent cannot be deemed to be the date of filing of the original application under sub-sec. (3) of Section 11 of the Rent Act. The application for determination of interim rent is not a sine qua non to attract Explan. I of Sec. 12 of the Rent Act. It is open for a tenant to file the application under sub-section (3) and thereafter to pay or deposit the contractual rent without seeking determination of the interim rent. In such a case, even though interim rent is not fixed, the advantage of explanation is available to the tenant. Determination of the interim rent is merely a facility accorded to the tenant and it cannot be treated as an obligation or a liability of the tenant. (Para 11)

M. A. Rane, for Petitioner; G. R. Rege with D. R. Banavalikar, for Respondent.

ORDER:— By this petition filed under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India, the petitioner is challenging the legality of the judgment dated Jan. 5, 1980, passed by the District Judge, Kolhapur, reversing the decree passed by the Second Joint Civil Judge, Junior Division, Kolhapur, on June 7, 1977.

2. The proceedings arise out of a suit for eviction filed by the respondent under the provisions of S. 12 (3) (a) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Rent Act). The respondent is an owner of a house bearing City Survey No. 1094 at Kolhapur with three rooms on the first floor. One room on the loft and two rooms on the ground floor were let out to the petitioner for his residence at the contractual monthly rent of Rs. 70/-. The petitioner remained in arrears from Aug. 1, 1970 and the respondent terminated the tenancy and called upon the petitioner to pay the arrears of rent as required by Section 12 (2) of the Rent Act by notice dated April 17, 1974. The notice was received by the petitioner on April 27, 1974. On June 10, 1974, the petitioner filed Misc. Appln. No. 98 of 1974 in the Court of Civil Judge, Junior Division, Kolhapur for fixation of standard rent as provided by S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act. Thereafter on June 12, 1974, the respondent instituted Civil Suit No. 498 of 1974 in the Court of Civil Judge, Junior Division, Kolhapur for recovery of possession of leased premises on two grounds. The first was that the premises are unlawfully sublet by the petitioner, while the second ground was that the petitioner had incurred liability by not paying the arrears of rent and is liable to be evicted under Section 12 (3) (a) of the Rent Act.

3. In the Misc. Application filed by the petitioner, on July 28, 1974, an application was filed by the petitioner for fixation of interim rent. It appears that no order was passed on the application by the trial Court.

On August 29, 1974, the respondent/landlord filed an application in the suit instituted by him for direction to the tenant to pay the rent. In answer to this application, the petitioner filed an application at Exh. 14 on Sept. 16, 1974 in the suit requesting the trial Court to fix interim rent. On this application, the trial Court passed order, in the suit, on Oct. 4, 1974 directing the petitioner to deposit the entire arrears then due before Nov. 11, 1974 and also to deposit the costs of the suit. Accordingly, the petitioner deposited the entire arrears on Oct. 16, 1974 along with the amount of costs. It is not in dispute that thereafter all along the petitioner-tenant had regularly paid the rent in the Court.

4. At the hearing of the suit, the trial Court found that the petitioner-tenant had filed the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act within one month of the receipt of notice and has also paid the interim rent as directed by the Court, and is, therefore, entitled to the advantage of Explan. 1 to Section 12 of the Rent Act. The trial Court held that the case of the petitioner falls under S. 12 (3) (b) of the Rent Act and dismissed the claim of the respondent for recovery of possession as conditions of that sub-section were satisfied. The trial Court also found that the petitioner was not guilty of unlawfully subletting the premises.

5. The respondent carried an appeal before the District Judge, Kolhapur and before the learned District Judge the only ground on which possession was sought was the default committed by the petitioner in payment of rent. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the application for fixation of standard rent under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act was not filed by the petitioner within a period of one month from the date of receipt of the notice under sub-section (2) of S. 12 of the Rent Act, and, therefore, the tenant is not entitled to the advantage of Explan. 1 to Sec. 12 of the Rent Act. The learned District Judge also held that the mere filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act is not sufficient to attract the Explan. 1 of S. 12, but it is obligatory on the tenant to get the interim rent determined forthwith. The learned District Judge also held that as the petitioner did not apply for fixation of interim rent till July 28, 1974 the application under Section 11 (3) of the Rent Act should be deemed to have been filed on that day. The learned District Judge was of the opinion that mere filing of the application under Sec. 11 (3) of the Rent Act by the petitioner without seeking fixation of the interim rent forthwith, indicates that the application was not bona fide. On the strength of these findings, the learned District Judge allowed the appeal and passed the decree of eviction. The judgment of the learned District Judge is under challenge in this petition.

6. Shri Rane, the learned counsel appearing in support of the petition, submitted that the learned District Judge has committed an error apparent on the face of record in disturbing the decision of the trial Court. Shri Rane submitted that the presentation of the application on July 10, 1974, could by no stretch of imagination be held to be beyond period of one month from the date of receipt of notice. Shri Rane further urges that the learned District Judge did not properly appreciate the scope of sub-section (1) and sub-sec. (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act. The learned counsel submits that the assumption of the learned District Judge that advantage of Explan. 1 of Section 12 is available only when the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act is filed and an application for fixation of interim rent is made forthwith, is not correct. Shri Rege, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent, on the other hand urges that the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge are in accordance with law and need no interference in this petition. Shri Rege submits that the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act filed by the petitioner did not include prayer for interim rent and unless the application includes such a prayer, the advantage of Explanation 1 of S. 12 of the Rent Act is not available. Shri Rege also submitted that the presentation of the application after the expiry of one month from the date of receipt of the notice disentitles the petitioner from claiming advantage of the explanation.

7. In view of these rival submissions, two questions fall for my determination in the present petition. The first question is whether the presentation of the application on June 10, 1974 by the petitioner was within period of limitation provided by Explanation 1 to S. 12 of the Rent Act, and secondly whether the petitioner is entitled to advantage of Explan. 1 of S. 12 of the Rent Act even though the interim standard rent was not determined at the behest of the tenant immediately on the lodging of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act.

8. Turning to the first question, it is not in dispute that the notice of termination issued on April 17, 1974 was received by the petitioner-tenant on April 27, 1974. On receipt of such notice, it was open for the tenant to file an application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act within a period of one month to claim advantage of Explan. 1 to Section 12. It is not in dispute that the Civil Courts at Kolhapur were closed for Summer Vacation from May 6, 1974 to June 9, 1974. The period of one month from the date of receipt of notice expired during the time the Court was closed for vacation. The petitioner filed the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act on the reopening of the Court i.e. on June 10, 1974. The trial Court rightly held that the presentation of the application on the reopening of the Court was perfectly within time in view of provisions of S. 4 read with Section 29 of the Limitation Act, 1963. The learned District Judge observed that the trial Court seems to have developed a new idea to attract the provisions of S. 4 read with S. 29 of the Limitation Act to the filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act. The learned District Judge is obviously in error in assuming that the provisions of S. 4 read with S. 29 (2) of the Limitation Act has no application to the filing of proceedings under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act. The learned District Judge overlooked that S. 4 of the Limitation Act specifically provides that—

“Where the prescribed period for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, preferred or made on the day when the Court re-opens.”

The Limitation Act, 1963 encompasses in its sweep not only the suits or appeals, but the applications also. Sub-section (2) of S. 29 of the Limitation Act provides that—

“Where any special or local law prescribes for any suit, appeal or application a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the Schedule, the provisions of Section 3 shall apply as if such period were the period prescribed by the Schedule and for the purpose of determining any period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law, the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 24 (inclusive) shall apply only in so far as, and to the extent to which, they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law.”

Article 137 of the Limitation Act provides that the period of limitation for filing any application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the schedule is three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. This residuary article provides period of three years for any application, but by the provisions of the Rent Act, which is local law, period for filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act is limited to one month from the date of receipt of the notice under S. 12 (2) of the Rent Act. Sub-section (2) of S. 29 of the Limitation Act would clearly attract to the filing of such applications. In my judgment, it is very difficult to appreciate why the learned District Judge observed that the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act are not attracted to the filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act.

9. Even otherwise, the learned District Judge has overlooked the provisions of Section 11 of the Bombay General Clauses Act, 1904. That section provides that—

“Where, by any Bombay Act (or Maharashtra Act) made after the commencement of this Act, any act or proceedings is directed or allowed to be done or taken in any Court or office on a certain day or within a prescribed period, then, if the Court or office is closed on that day or the last day of the prescribed period, the act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards on which the Court or office is open.”

Proviso to S. 11 states that—

“Nothing in this section shall apply to any act or proceedings to which the Indian Limitation Act, applies.”

In my judgment, the provisions of the Limitation Act applies to the filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act, but even otherwise the provisions of Sec. 11 of the Bombay General Clauses Act, 1904, is a clear answer to the finding of the learned District Judge that the application filed on July 10, 1974 was not within period of limitation.

10. The learned District Judge deprived the protection of Explan. 1 of S. 12 of the Rent Act to the petitioner-tenant on the ground, that even if the application filed on June 12, 1974 under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act is found to be within period of limitation, the petitioner-tenant has not filed the application for determination of the interim rent on the same date. The conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge is clearly erroneous. Section 11 of the Rent

Act provides for determination of the standard rent when a dispute arises between the landlord and the tenant about the quantum of rent. Sub-section (1) of S. 11 enables the Court upon an application made to it to fix the standard rent having regard to the provisions of the Act and the circumstances of the case. Sub-section (1) of Section 11 enables either the tenant or the landlord to approach the Court for fixation of standard rent. The tenant would file an application if contractual rent, according to him, is excessive, while the landlord would file the application if contractual rent is required to be increased due to alteration in the premises or due to change in the amenities or in respect of any other factors which are relevant to the fixation of the standard rent. Sub-section (2) of Sec. 11 enables the landlord or tenant to approach the Court for determination of the dispute regarding the amount of permitted increases. Sub-section (3) of S. 11 provides that an application for fixing the standard rent or for determination of permitted increase can be filed by the tenant who has received the notice from his landlord under sub-sec. (2) of S. 12 of the Rent Act. In other words, sub-section (3) carves out a class of tenants who have received notice under sub-sec. (2) of S. 12 about being in arrears of rent. A tenant who has not received such a notice can approach the Court for determination of the standard rent under S. 11 (1) of the Rent Act and for determination of permitted increases under sub-section (2) of Section 11 of the Rent Act, but a tenant who receives notice under sub-section (2) of Section 12 can file the application only under sub-section (3) of S. 11. The Legislature expects such a tenant to perform certain obligations. The tenant who files the application under sub-section (3) of S. 11 is required to deposit the interim rent that would be determined by the Court. In fact sub-section (3) itself provides that on filing of the application the Court shall forthwith specify the amount of rent or permitted increases which are to be deposited in Court by the tenant and make an order directing the tenant to deposit such amount. A copy of such order is also required to be served upon the landlord. Sub-section (3) further provides that if the tenant fails to deposit such amount, his application shall be dismissed. It is required to be stated that there is a distinction between an application to be filed by the tenant under sub-sec. (1) and sub-section (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act. The application under sub-section (1)

of S. 11 does not require the tenant to deposit any interim rent, nor can such a tenant be called upon to deposit any amount in the Court. The power to direct the tenant to deposit interim rent is conferred on the Court provided the tenant has received notice under sub-section (2) of S. 12 and files an application under sub-sec. (3) of Section 11 of the Rent Act. The intention of the Legislature in imposing additional obligation on the tenant who files the application under sub-section (3) is obvious. The tenant who has committed default in payment of rent and receives notice from the landlord, cannot avoid his liability to make payment by merely filing an application for determination of the standard rent. Sub-section (5) of S. 11 also provides that such a tenant would not be entitled to file any appeal against the order passed in his application under sub-section (3) of Sec. 11. In other words, a tenant filing an application under sub-section (3) is required to perform certain obligations and is also deprived of a right to file an appeal against the order passed in the application, while these restrictions are not present in the case of a tenant who files an application under sub-section (1) of S. 12 of the Rent Act. This distinction has escaped the attention of the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge proceeded on the assumption that the application for fixation of standard rent by all classes of tenants can be filed only under sub-section (1) and sub-sec. (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act merely provides for fixation of interim rent. As pointed out hereinabove, the scope of sub-section (1) and sub-section (3) is totally different and the application under sub-section (3) of Sec. 11 is an independent application.

11. The learned District Judge was also in error in holding that the tenant is required forthwith to apply to the Court under sub-section (3) of S. 11 for fixation of interim rent and in absence thereof it will be deemed that the application under sub-section (3) was filed only when a request is made by the tenant for fixation of interim rent. The assumption of the learned District Judge is not warranted by the language of sub-section (3). Once an application is filed for determination of standard rent under sub-section (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act, then a duty is cast upon the Court to forthwith specify the amount of rent. It is open either for the tenant to file such an application or for the landlord to request the Court to fix the interim rent, but the date of such a request or actual fixation of interim rent cannot be deemed to be the date of filing of the original application under sub-section (3) of S. 11 of the Rent Act. The application for determination of interim rent is not a sine qua non to attract Explan. 1 of S. 12 of the Rent Act. It is open for a tenant to file the application under sub-sec. (3) and thereafter to pay or deposit the contractual rent without seeking determination of the interim rent. In such a case, even though interim rent is not fixed, the advantage of explanation is available to the tenant. It must be remembered that determination of the interim rent is merely a facility accorded to the tenant and it cannot be treated as an obligation or a liability of the tenant. In my judgment, the advantage of the explanation to S. 12 of the Rent Act cannot be denied to the tenant merely on the ground that on the date of filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act, the tenant did not get the interim rent fixed. The application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act cannot be treated as not bona fide on that count.

12. Shri Rege, relied upon certain observations made by Chief Justice Chagla in the case of Karamsev Kanji v. Velji Virji, reported in (1954) 56 Bom LR 619 to claim that not only filing of the application under S. 11 (3) of the Rent Act avoid the liability of the tenant of being ejected under Section 12 (1) of the Rent Act. There cannot be any dispute with the principle laid down by the learned Chief Justice, but it is a far cry to suggest that the tenant must also get the interim rent determined within one month from the date of receipt of notice under S. 12 (2) of the Rent Act. Neither the section requires it nor the judgment relied upon supports such proposition. The judgment of the learned District Judge cannot be sustained.

13. Accordingly, the petition succeeds and the rule is made absolute and the judgments of the learned District Judge dated Jan. 5, 1980 is set aside and that passed by the Second Joint Civil Judge, Junior Division, Kolhapur on June 7, 1977 is restored. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

ORDER :— This petition raises an interesting point of law with regard to the grant of maintenance pendente lite under S. 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955.

2. The petitioner-husband filed a petition for divorce in the Bombay City Civil Court at Bombay, being M. J. Petition No. 647 of 1977, against the respondent-wife on the ground that the respondent wife after the solemnization of the marriage had treated the petitioner with cruelty. After the filing of the petition the respondent-wife took out a Notice of Motion dated 31-10-1977 against the petitioner-husband for maintenance pendente lite under Section 24 of the said Act, claiming a sum of Rs. 1000/- per month. The Notice of Motion was argued on the footing that the amount of Rs. 1000/- per month was claimed by the respondent-wife not only for maintaining herself but also three daughters of the said marriage, who had attained majority. The learned Judge of the City Civil Court in a detailed judgment dated 9-3-1978 passed an order for maintenance pendente lite of a sum of Rs. 225/- per month for the respondent-wife and a sum of Rs. 175/- per month for each of the three daughters. It may be pointed out that the eldest daughter Sunita was married on 7th September, 1978 i.e. after the passing of the impugned Order. The eldest daughter Sunita was born in 1955, the second daughter Anita was born in 1957 and the youngest daughter Samita was born in 1960. It is not in dispute between the parties that all three had attained majority at the time when the respondent-wife had taken out her Notice of Motion in the City Civil Court at Bombay on 31-10-1977.

3. Mr. Samant, the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioner-husband, has challenged the judgment and order of the learned Judge of the City Civil Court only in so far as the learned Judge has ordered the petitioner to pay a sum of Rs. 175/- per month to each of the three daughters. Mr. Samant has not impugned the order in respect of the payment of Rs. 225/- per month to the respondent-wife. Under S. 24 the Court could provide for the maintenance either of the wife or the husband, as the case may be, in the event of either party not having any independent income sufficient for his or her support and necessary expenses of the proceedings. Mr. Samant contended that Section 24 did not provide for an order of maintenance of children either minor or adult. Provision for the maintenance of minor children was made under Section 26 of the said Act both pendente lite as also after the passing of the decree. According to Mr. Samant the learned Judge of the City Civil Court by granting maintenance for the three adult daughters had traversed beyond the scope of Sections 25 and 26 of the said Act. Sections 25 and 26 of the said Act, provide :—

“25. (1) Any Court exercising jurisdiction under this Act may, at the time of passing any decree or at any time subsequent thereto, on application made to it for the purpose by either the wife or the husband, as the case may be, order that the respondent shall, pay to the applicant for her or his maintenance and support such gross sum or such monthly or periodical sum for a term not exceeding the life of the applicant as, having regard to the respondent's own income and other property, if any, the income and other property of the applicant, the conduct of the parties and other circumstances of the case, it may seem to the Court to be just, and any such payment may be secured, if necessary, by a charge on the immovable property of the respondent.

(2) If the Court is satisfied that there is a change in the circumstances of either party at any time after it has made an order under sub-section (1), it may, at the instance of either party, vary, modify or rescind any such order in such manner as the Court may deem just.

(3) If the Court is satisfied that the party in whose favour an order has been made under this section has remarried or, if such party is the wife, that she has not remained chaste, or, if such party is the husband, that he has had sexual intercourse with any woman outside wedlock, it may at the instance of the other party vary, modify or rescind any such order in such manner as the Court may deem just."

"26. In any proceeding under this Act, the Court may, from time to time, pass such interim orders and make such provisions in the decree as it may deem just and proper with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of minor children, consistently with their wishes, wherever possible, and may, after the decree, upon application by petition for the purpose, make from time to time, all such orders and provisions with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of such children as might have been made by such decree or interim orders in case the proceeding for obtaining such decree were still pending, and the Court may also from time to time revoke, suspend or vary any such orders and provisions previously made."

4. Mr. Samant relied upon the judgment of the Gujarat High Court in the case of Patel Dharamshi Premji v. Bai Sakar Kanji, reported in AIR 1968 Guj 150 wherein the Division Bench was pleased to observe (at p. 155):—

"The lower appellate Court, however, seems to have committed an error in taking into account the needs and requirements of the son in determining the amount of permanent alimony to be awarded to the respondent. We do not think that in fixing the amount of permanent alimony the lower appellate Court was entitled to take into consideration the amount of maintenance which would be necessary for the purpose of meeting the needs and requirements of the son and in doing so the lower appellate Court clearly took into account an extraneous or irrelevant factor. This is not to say that the respondent would not be entitled to claim maintenance for the minor son from the appellant but the needs and requirements of the son could not be taken into account in determining what should be the amount of permanent alimony to be awarded to the respondent. The order of the lower appellate Court increasing the amount of permanent alimony from Rs. 20 to Rs. 28 per month was, therefore, vitiated by an error of law."

5. Mr. Samant also relied upon a judgment of the Patna High Court in the case of

Bankim Chandra Roy v. Smt. Anjali Roy reported in AIR 1972 Pat 80, wherein the learned single Judge of that Court was pleased to observe (at p. 81):—

"It would thus be seen that an order can be made if the petitioner has no independent income sufficient for her or his support. No monthly allowance can be granted under Sec. 24 for the support of the children. That being so, the grant of monthly allowance of Rs. 325/- not only for the support of the respondent but also for the support of the three children is contrary to law and has been made by committing an illegality in exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court under S. 24 of the Act."

6. Mr. Nain, the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the respondent-wife, has raised an initial objection with regard to the maintainability of this Revision Petition. Mr. Nain contended that the powers of the Court sitting in Revision were restricted to the issue of jurisdiction wrongly exercised by the lower Court or the exercising of a jurisdiction which was not vested in the lower Court. Mr. Nain submitted that the present Revision Petition in effect was filed against the quantum of maintenance awarded by the lower Court to the wife, taking into consideration the requirements of the three daughters. Mr. Nain urged that this Court, sitting in Revision, should not interfere with the order of the learned Judge of the City Civil Court since no issue affecting the jurisdiction of that Court under the Act had been raised by the petitioner. Mr. Nain has drawn my attention to a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Manindra Land and Building Corporation Ltd. v. Bhutnath Banerjee, reported in AIR 1964 SC 1336, wherein their Lordships were pleased to observe (at p. 1338):—

"It is not open to the High Court to question the findings of fact recorded by a subordinate Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 115 of the Code, which, it is well settled, applies to cases involving questions of jurisdiction, i. e. questions regarding the irregular exercise or non-exercise of jurisdiction or the illegal assumption of jurisdiction by a Court and is not directed against conclusion of law or fact in which questions of jurisdiction are not involved."

7. Mr. Nain relied upon another ruling of the Supreme Court in the case of Vora Abbasbhai Alimahomed v. Haji Gulamnabi Haji Safibhai in the same volume, i. e.

AIR 1964 SC 1341, wherein their Lordships were pleased to observe (at p. 1347):—

“The High Court had, in exercise of its powers under S. 115, Civil P. C., no authority to set aside the order merely because it was of the opinion that the judgment of the District Court was assailable on the ground of error of fact or even of law. * * * The power of the High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C. was not thereby excluded, but the exercise of that power is by the terms of the statute investing it severely restricted. The High Court may exercise its powers in revision only if it appears that in a case decided by a Subordinate Court in which no appeal lies thereto the Subordinate Court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or has failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.”

8. Mr. Nain, therefore, contended that in the instant case the petitioner-husband had not succeeded in pointing out that the learned Judge of the City Civil Court had exercised his jurisdiction irregularly or had failed to exercise jurisdiction which had been vested in him nor was any material illegality pointed out.

9. Now, it may be pointed out that on a reading of S. 24, it becomes evident that that section makes provision for granting maintenance pendente lite to a party who has no independent income sufficient for his or her support. This section does not provide for granting maintenance for the children. Section 26 of the said Act provided for interim orders from time to time as also for making provision in the decree with regard to custody, maintenance and education of minor children consistently with their wishes. Section 26, therefore, empowered the Court to provide for the maintenance of minor children. It provided for maintenance both pendente lite as also after the passing of the decree. The learned Judge in granting separate maintenance to each of the three adult daughters had clearly traversed beyond the scope of Section 24 and S. 26 of the said Act. The learned Judge having transgressed beyond the scope of the provision of the sections in exercising his jurisdiction, his order was invalid and contrary to law. That being the case, the petitioner was entitled to approach this Court in revision. I, therefore, negative this submission of Mr. Nain.

10. Mr. Nain then contended that the learned Judge was justified in taking into consideration the requirements of the maintenance of the three adult daughters for the reason that in deciding the quantum of maintenance to a wife he had to take into consideration the overall financial position of the wife and the husband and their necessities having regard not merely to their income but their property, debts, liabilities and obligations. Mr. Nain argued that it would be unreasonable to state that the mother was no longer called upon to maintain her three daughters just because they had attained majority. I am unable to agree with the submission made by Mr. Nain. The adult daughters were entitled to have recourse for seeking maintenance from their father under S. 20 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956. The learned Judge in awarding maintenance pendente lite to the three adult daughters in an application under S. 24 of the said Act, had clearly transgressed beyond the scope of the section and the resultant order is, to my mind, vitiated by an error of law. It is, therefore, necessary that the order to the extent that it awarded maintenance to the three adult daughters at the rate of Rs. 175/- per month to each of them must be set aside.

11. In the result Rule is made partially absolute. The order of the learned Judge dated 9-3-1978 to the extent of granting maintenance pendente lite to the three adult daughters at the rate of Rs. 175/- per month to each of them is set aside. The rest of the order is confirmed. There will be no order as to the costs of this petition.

Order accordingly.

KANADE, J.

Kazi Cumruddin Hussein, Petitioner v. Rajendrakumar Maneklal and another, Respondents.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 2776 of 1975, D/- 15-7-1980.

(A) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 15 (1) — “But subject to any contract to the contrary” — Meaning.

In the present case, the defendant-tenant to whom the open plot was leased out constructed a superstructure on it at his own cost and leased it out to a sub-tenant. Previous to the present suit, there were cross suits, one by the landlord and the other by the tenant against each other. The parties arrived at the compromise in both the suits and a consent decree was passed. Under the consent decree, the landlord admitted and approved of the fact of subletting and the parties agreed that the tenant to pay to the landlord the increased municipal taxes by reason of the subletting. The tenant was ready to pay the arrears of rent according to the consent decree, but the landlord did not accept the amount and filed the present suit for recovery of possession of the suit land on the ground of alleged subletting without consent.

Held that having regard to the words "but subject to any contract to the contrary" and having regard to the fact that plaintiff-landlord had given a right to the defendant-tenant to sublet the superstructure, the alleged sub-tenancy would not be unlawful within the meaning of S. 15. Taking into consideration the terms in the consent decree, it did not appear that the plaintiff-landlord put a restriction on the defendant-tenant to sublet the suit premises.

Raju S. Mohite for M. A. Rane, for Petitioner; Ramchandra K. Shah with A. R. Pandit, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER:— This application under Article 227 of the Constitution of India has been filed by the petitioner-tenant challenging the judgments and orders passed by the lower Courts.

2. Few facts leading to this application are as under:

A piece of land admeasuring 1500 sq. feet from City Survey No. 1789 situated at Bombay Parel-Sewree Division Municipal Street No. 89, Tokersey Jivraj Road, Sewree, Bombay-400 015 was leased out to the petitioner somewhere in the year 1924. The respondents are admittedly the owners of the said piece of land. It is also an admitted fact that the petitioner raised a structure on the said piece of land at his own costs.

3. Respondents-plaintiffs filed Suit No. 2257 of 1955 against the petitioner and one Mohmed Gafoor in the City Civil Court at Bombay for a declaration that the petitioner and others trespassed on the suit land. The said suit was contested by the petitioner denying the claim of the respondents. The petitioner also filed Suit No. 63 of 1957 against the respondents and the said Mohmed Gafoor in the City Civil Court at Bombay for a declaration that he was the tenant of the suit land and the shed thereon and for injunction restraining them from disturbing his possession of the suit land and the structure thereon.

4. Both the suits were ordered to be heard together and the parties arrived at the compromise in both the suits and a decree in terms of the compromise was passed on Nov. 9, 1959 in both the suits. It was decreed that the petitioner was the monthly tenant of suit land admeasuring 1500 sq. ft. on a monthly rent of Rs. 35/-. The petitioner agreed to pay to the respondents-defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the Suit No. 63 of 1957 Rs. 35/- per month as monthly rent and also the permitted increases under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the "Bombay Rent Act"). It was further agreed and decreed that the petitioner shall pay to the respondents herein the increased municipal taxes levied and to be levied by the Bombay Municipality by reasons of the petitioner having sublet a portion to Babu Vasudeo who was carrying on business of Bidies and Tobacco. The petitioner also agreed to pay to the defendants-respondents herein all the arrears of rent and permitted increases as well as the municipal taxes levied by the Bombay Municipality by reason of the petitioner having kept sub-tenant as from Sept. 1, 1948. It was further agreed:

"The said dispute between the parties shall be referred to Mr. G. R. Ganatra, Advocate as the sole arbitrator and the parties hereto agree to be bound by his award as final and binding upon them."

The petitioner in the last paragraph of the consent terms agreed not to dispose of the demised premises or his business until the amounts due to the respondents as per Cls. 4 and 5 are paid off by the petitioner to the respondents herein.

5. It is, therefore, the respondents filed R. A. E. Suit No. 2146 of 1963 against the petitioner in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay for recovery of possession of the suit land on the allegation that the petitioner unlawfully sublet the suit land and parted with possession or transferred interest in the suit land without their consent.

6. The said suit was resisted by the petitioner. He filed his points of defences and denied the allegation of unlawful subletting of the suit land. The petitioner denied the legality of the notice to quit. It is also denied that he has illegally sublet, assigned and/or parted with the possession and/or transferred his interest as alleged. Lastly it is contended that by the consent terms filed in the City Civil Court in Suit No. 63 of 1957, the petitioner-defendant only agreed not to dispose of the demised premises.

7. The learned trial Court recorded the evidence adduced by the parties and after careful consideration of the evidence on record was pleased to pass a decree for possession by the judgment and decree, dated March 9, 1967 and directed the petitioner to deliver possession of the suit land. It was held that the petitioner has unlawfully sublet the suit premises.

8. The petitioner feeling aggrieved by the said judgment and decree passed by the trial Court preferred an appeal being Appeal No. 198 of 1967 to the Bench of the Small Causes Court at Bombay. The Appellate Court on consideration of the evidence confirmed the findings recorded by the trial Court and dismissed the appeal by the judgment and decree, dated Sept. 6, 1975. Against the said judgment and decree passed by the Bench of the Small Causes Court at Bombay, the petitioner has filed the present Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India challenging the legality and correctness of the said appellate Court's judgment and decree.

9. Shri Raju S. Mohite, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner, submitted that the consent decree passed by the City Civil Court in Suit No. 63 of 1957 has been misconstrued by both the Courts below. It is argued that both the Courts below had cast the burden on the petitioner to prove that the suit land has not been illegally sublet to the sub-tenant. He pointed out that the admissions of the petitioner relied upon by the lower Courts are not the admissions. In fact, the transfer of the interest in the suit land has not been effected by the petitioner or that he has not transferred his interest in the open land to the sub-tenant. It is further argued that the sub-tenants inducted on the superstructure on the land are not inducted as unlawful sub-tenants. Lastly, it is argued by Shri Mohite that in any case, there is no transfer of interest so far as the open land is concerned. What has been let out is the superstructure and the landlords have no interest in the superstructure and it is therefore there is no transfer of interest in the immoveable property belonging to the respondents or that there is no unlawful tenancy created by the petitioner giving rise to a right to the landlords to get a decree for eviction on the ground of subletting as provided by the provisions of S. 13 (1) (e) of the Bombay Rent Act. Shri Mohite very strongly relied upon the unreported judgment of the Division Bench of this Court in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 1511 of 1960 decided by D. V. Patel and K. K. Desai, JJ. on Nov. 21, 1962. He also cited reported judgment of this Court in Vasant Ramchandra Sharma v. Narayanibai Mulchand, (1973) 75 Bom LR 24: (AIR 1973 Bom 214). While relying upon the said two judgments of this Court, Shri Mohite contended that since the petitioner was merely a tenant of the open plot and the superstructure was built by him, it cannot be said that he has sublet the open piece of land.

10. Shri Hemchandra K. Shah, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents submitted that while entertaining an application under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India, this Court will not be justified in reappreciating the evidence on record and disturb the finding recorded by both the Courts below. He further pointed out that it was alleged in the plaint that the petitioner-defendant had unlawfully sublet the suit premises and this fact has not been specifically denied by the tenant in the written statement. He brought to my notice the averment made in para 4 of the plaint and in para 3 of the written statement of the petitioner. According to Shri Shah, there is no specific denial of the fact that the petitioner-defendant has unlawfully sublet the suit premises. It is further argued that the petitioner-defendant has categorically admitted the transfer of interest in favour of the sub-tenant. Shri Shah strongly relied upon the later part of the judgment of Justice Vaidya, referred to above in (1973) 75 Bom LR 24 : (AIR 1973 Bom 214) and contended if this Court comes to the conclusion that there is no unlawful subletting, then admittedly the petitioner had inducted sub-tenants on the superstructure and thereby assigned or transferred his interest in the said manner, and it is therefore the judgments and decrees by the Courts below are correct in law.

11. Having heard the learned counsel appearing on behalf of both the sides, it appears that both the Courts below have misdirected themselves on the question of law as well as on the question of facts of this case. It is not a disputed fact in the present case that the open plot was leased out to the petitioner. It is also not disputed that the superstructure was built at the cost of the petitioner-tenant. It also appears from the record that the petitioner had let out the superstructure to Bapu Vasudeo who conducted a business of bidies and tobacco. In para 3 of the consent decree, the landlords admitted and approved this fact of subletting and the parties agreed that the petitioner to pay to the respondents herein the increased municipal taxes levied and to be levied by the Bombay Municipality by reasons of the petitioner having sublet a portion to Bapu Vasudeo who does the business of Bidies and Tobacco. In para 6 of the consent decree it is stated that the petitioner herein agreed not to dispose of the demised premises or his business until the amounts due to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 — the respondents herein as per Cls. 4 and 5 of the consent terms are paid off by the petitioner to the respondents herein. The petitioner has stated that he had paid part of arrears of rent to the respondents as per the consent terms, by money order. Respondents did not accept Money Order sent by him after consent terms. Taking into consideration the terms in the consent decree, it does not appear that the landlords put a restriction on the petitioner to sublet the suit premises. As stated above, it appears that they have admitted the fact that the petitioner-tenant was entitled to sublet the suit premises. In view of these facts, it cannot be said that the tenant has unlawfully sublet the suit premises. The provision of S. 15 (1) of the Bombay Rent Act provides :

"15 (1). Notwithstanding anything contained in any law, but subject to any contract to the contrary, it shall not be lawful after the coming into operation of this Act for any tenant to sublet the whole or any part of the premises let to him or to assign or transfer in any other manner his interest therein and after the date of commencement of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control (Amendment) Act, 1973, for any tenant to give on licence the whole or part of such premises."

The words "but subject to any contract to the contrary" have been inserted and shall be deemed always to have been inserted by Bombay Act No. 49 of 1959. Having regard to the said amendment to Section 15 and having regard to the fact that the landholder had given a right to the tenant to sublet the superstructure, the alleged sub-tenancy shall not be unlawful within the meaning of S. 15 of the Bombay Rent Act. It is in this view of the matter, the decree of eviction passed by the lower Courts will have to be set aside.

12. On another ground also, the decrees for possession passed by the lower Courts are erroneous. The Division Bench of this Court consisting of D. V. Patel and K. K. Desai, JJ. on the facts of that case observed as under :—

"As held by the learned trial Judge, with whom we agree, since the petitioner was merely a tenant of the superstructure belonging to opponent No. 2, it cannot be said that by that reason alone he was also a sub-tenant in respect of the open piece of the plot. As the learned Judge says, it only means that he was a licensee of the land and a tenant of the superstructure. Once it is held that he was merely a licensee of the land, there can be no question of application either of S. 14 or of Ordinance III of 1949 or the subsequent amended Section 15 of the Rent Restriction Act."

It is clearly held by the Division Bench of this Court that if there is a lease in respect of the open land and the superstructure is built by the tenant, the tenant occupying the superstructure cannot be said to be the sub-tenant in respect of open piece of the plot. It only means that the sub-tenant was a licensee of the land and not tenant of the superstructure (sic). The said Division Bench Judgment is binding on me. In view of the ratio laid down in the said case, it means that the lower Courts have committed an error in coming to the conclusion that the superstructure was unlawfully sublet by the tenant-petitioner. In subsequent judgment, Vaidya, J. in (1973) 75 Bom LR 24 : (AIR 1973 Bom 214) (supra) considered the observations of the Division Bench of this Court and also two more unreported judgments of this Court, delivered in

Ibrahim Ahmed Welder v. Ramesh Janardan Shroff, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1 of 1966, decided by Pal J., on March 2, 1966 and in Dina Manekji Mody v. Malshi Bharmal, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1191 of 1967 decided by Bhasme J., on Mar. 10, 1970. Vaidya, J. observed that as stated above, the decision of Division Bench of this Court is binding on him and it is unnecessary for him to consider the validity of the view taken by Bhasme, J. It is further observed by Vaidya, J. (at p. 221 of AIR):—

“With respect, what Patel and K. K. Desai, JJ. decided was also in the context of the question before them as to whether the obstructionist could be regarded as a sub-tenant under the provisions of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 of the plot of land in dispute in that case. It is clear that they have laid down that the tenant of a structure built by a tenant could never claim the sub-tenancy in respect of the plot of land.”

In view of the aforesaid two judgments of this Court, it must be held that there was no unlawful subletting by the petitioner in respect of the superstructure built by the petitioner-tenant. In that view of the matter, the decisions rendered by both the Courts below are not correct in law and therefore deserve to be set aside.

13. Shri Shah strongly relied upon the later part of the judgment of Vaidya, J. in (1973) 75 Bom LR 24: (AIR 1973 Bom 214). He argued that under the provisions of S. 13 (1) (e) of the Bombay Rent Act unlawful subletting is not the only ground but there is another ground viz. if the tenant assigns or transfers in any other manner his interest therein. Relying upon this ground, Shri Shah contended that the petitioner has inducted M/s. Metal Works Tin Wood Manufacturing Company and thereby assigned and transferred the tenant's interest in the said land without plaintiffs'-respondents' consent. It is true in the later part of the judgment Vaidya, J. has observed (at p. 221 of AIR):

“If the landlord establishes any other assignment or transfer of any interest of the tenant other than unlawful subletting, he is entitled to succeed under S. 13 (1) (e).” It is further observed that the words “in any other manner” have reference to the unlawful subletting referred to earlier, however, in certain circumstances, such other manner may be even creation of a sort of irrevocable licence. In the said case, it appears that after the termination of the tenancy of the tenant by the landlord, the tenant inducted defendant Nos. 2, 9, 13 and 17. It was considered in that case that it was a transfer or assignment “in any other manner of his interest” within the meaning of Sec. 13 (1) (e) of the Bombay Rent Act. In that case, the tenant became a statutory tenant after the termination of his tenancy by a quit notice. In view of that fact, Vaidya, J. held that there was a transfer or assignment “in any other manner of his interest”, within the meaning of S. 13 (1) (e). Accordingly, in the said case, it was held that the landlord's case against respondents must fail as they were mere licensees and the landlord if became entitled to recover possession from defendant No. 1, the decree for eviction can be executed against other defendants also. In the present case, the facts are quite different. It is not stated in the plaint by the landlords-respondents as to when M/s. Metal Works Tin Wood Manufacturing Company was inducted as tenant or sub-tenant on the superstructure. It is stated in para 4 of the plaint:

“The plaintiffs say that the defendant is not ready and willing to observe and perform the terms of tenancy inasmuch as he has illegally sublet or assigned and/or parted with possession and/or transferred his interest in the said land without the plaintiffs' knowledge and consent in writing and contrary to the provisions of Bombay Rent Act and in breach of the consent terms filed in the City Civil Court Suit No. 63 of 1967 to one M/s. Metal Works Tin Wood Manufacturing Company.”

Admittedly by quit notice, the landlords terminated the tenancy of the petitioner by letter, dated Dec. 15, 1962. There is nothing in evidence of the plaintiffs as to when the said Metal Works Tin Wood Manufacturing Company was put in possession of the superstructure. In the absence of such evidence on record, it is not possible to come to the conclusion that the tenant had assigned or transferred “in any other manner his interest” within the meaning of Section 13 (1) (e) of the Bombay Rent Act.

14. Shri Shah very strongly argued that this Court will not be justified to interfere with the finding of fact recorded by both the Courts below, while entertaining an application under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India. It is true the powers of this Court under Art. 227 of the Constitution are limited. This Court cannot convert itself into a Court of appeal and reappreciate the evidence on record and record a finding reversing the finding recorded by the appellate Court. It is, however, the duty of this Court to see that the subordinate Courts acted within the bounds of law. In the present case, the consent terms have been misconstrued or there is no proper application of mind to the consent terms. So-called admissions have no support in the evidence. Stray sentences have been picked up without the reference to such sentences. In the last para of deposition of the petitioner, he has stated as under :—

From this admission, the lower Court, picked up first sentence and arrived at the conclusion that the tenant has admitted that the suit premises have been sublet to Tin factory. Careful reading of that part of the evidence shows that there was no admission whatsoever by the tenant that he had sublet the open plot to the said factory. Similarly, evidence of the Manager Makarand has not been properly appreciated and considered. Admittedly, Makarand could not be present at the time of letting out to the said company. That piece of evidence of Makarand cannot be availed of by the landlords to prove what were the terms between the petitioner-tenant and respondents. The entire approach of both the Courts below is misdirected and one may say that the findings recorded by both the Courts below are perverse or without any evidence on record, and accordingly cannot be sustained. In the said circumstances, this Court will be justified to reverse the said findings as the said findings are not based upon the evidence available on record. From the tenor of both the judgments of the Courts below they have failed to follow the principle laid down by this Court in the judgment of the Division Bench referred to above. It appears that both the Courts below misunderstood the ratio of the case laid down by Vaidya, J. in the case referred to above. In this context and in view of the facts and circumstances, the judgment and decree cannot be sustained.

15. In the result, Rule in this Special Civil Application is made absolute. The judgment and decree passed by the Bench of the Small Cause Court at Bombay dated Sept. 16, 1975 in Appeal No. 198 of 1967 confirming the judgment and decree passed by the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, dated March 9, 1967 in R. A. E. Suit No. 2146 of 1963 is set aside and the plaintiff's suit for possession is dismissed with costs throughout.

Rule made absolute.

DESHPANDE AND MODY, JJ.

Roosi K. Modi and another, Petitioners
v. Union of India and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 2864 of 1979, D/- 4-3-1980.

Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), Ss. 6 and 48 — Notification under S. 6 — Part of land however subsequently acquired under S. 10 (3) of Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act, 1976 — Section 6 notification to the extent of remaining land remains unimpaired and could be acted upon to that extent. (Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act (1976), Ss. 10 (3) and 42).

Section 42 of the U. L. C. Act gives overriding effect to the provisions thereof, notwithstanding anything contrary in any enactment or contract etc. Even the notification and orders passed thereunder are bound to have such overriding effect on the notification or orders passed under any other such enactment, provisions of which have to yield to the provisions of the Urban Land Ceiling Act in terms of the mandate of Section 42. The notification thus issued under Section 10 (3) of the Urban Land Ceiling Act acquiring a portion of the land sought to be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act is bound to have such overriding effect on the earlier notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act, because of its patent inconsistency and consequentially the latter notification becomes ineffective to the extent of the portion of the land acquired under the Urban Ceiling Act. The notification under Section 6 of the L. A. Act to the extent of portion not acquired under the Urban Land Ceiling Act remains unimpaired and there is no reason why it could not be acted upon to that extent. (Para 9)

Any question of withdrawing from the acquisition of any part of the land under Sec. 48 of the L. A. Act or cancellation of the notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act does not arise in such a case. In either of these situations continuation of the acquisition proceedings is not obstructed by any legal impediment, and discontinuation of the proceedings is entirely the choice of the appropriate Government. These considerations can have no application where partial invalidity is the creation of the Statute and nothing in any such Statute prevents proceeding with the valid part of the declaration and the acquisition proposal. AIR 1966 SC 1593, Rel. on. (Para 10)

S. H. Kapadia, for M/s. Gagrut & Co., for Petitioners; C. J. Sawant, Addl. Govt. Pleader with D. P. Hegde, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondent Nos. 2 and 3.

DESHPANDE, J.:— The petitioners in this writ petition under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution, challenge the validity of the award dated 23-11-1979 made by the Land Acquisition Officer under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, hereinafter referred to as "the L. A. Act". The award fixes the compensation for an area measuring 5,967.12 sq. metres out of C. S. No. 42 known as "Ashley House" situated at Bund Garden and Sassoon Road, Pune-1. The petitioners have become the owners of this property under a Settlement Deed dated 7-7-1960 and a Transfer Deed dated 26-3-1974. A notification under S. 4 of the L. A. Act was issued by the Commissioner on 1-9-1962 indicating Government's proposal to acquire the entire land measuring in all 47,396 sq. metres for the public purpose of the construction of the residential quarters for the employees in the Income-tax and Excise Department of the Central Government and office building for the Excise Department. The proposal was then finalised and a notification under S. 6 was issued on 14-5-1963 after disposal of the objections of the interested persons. The trustees of the property instituted a suit being Suit No. 27 of 1966 during petitioners' minority, challenging the validity of the said acquisition proceedings. This suit was decreed by the trial Court on 12-3-1972 but dismissed in appeal (F. A. No. 529 of 1972) by a Division Bench of this Court on 18-3-1973. A leave to appeal petition under Art. 136 of the Constitution was rejected by the Supreme Court on 25-11-1974. The present petitioners, on whom the property was settled, became its absolute owners on attaining majority on 28-8-1974. The petitioners then instituted another suit on 13-8-1975 along with one Thrity Modi challenging the said land acquisition proceedings again in a Suit No. 1497 of 1975. This suit was dismissed on 16-7-1977 as also the appeal against the same.

2. In the meanwhile the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act, 1976 herein-after referred to as "the U. L. C. Act" was enforced on 17-2-1976 placing a ceiling limit on the holdings of vacant land as defined under the said Act. The Act contemplated enquiry into the total holdings of each one of the holders and for that purpose holders were required to submit a statement of the holding under Sec. 6 of the U. L. C. Act. The petitioners also submitted such statement on 13-8-1976. The competent authority declared the petitioners to be a surplus holder to the extent of 41,396.83 sq. metres by his order dated 29-9-1977, their total holding having been found to be 49,396.83 sq. metres including C. S. No. 42 and another piece of land. Petitioners' appeal against the same was dismissed on 20-1-1979. A notification under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act was issued eventually on 7-6-1979 for the acquisition of the surplus holdings of the petitioners measuring 41,396.83 sq. metres out of C. S. No. 42 as per the details indicated in the notification excluding the remaining area of 5,967.12 sq. metres of C. S. No. 42 covered by old residential quarters.

3. Immediately after the issuance of Section 6 notification on 14-5-1963 under L. A. Act, notices under S. 9 of the Act were served and the trial of the claim for compensation at the market rate as on 1-9-1962 was concluded by the time, U. L. C. Act was enforced. The passing of the award was withheld due to the proceedings under the U. L. C. Act. Consequent on the acquisition of surplus 41,396.83 sq. metres of the land of C. S. No. 42 under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act, only residential area of 5,967 sq. metres of C. S. No. 42 was left for acquisition in the pending proceedings under the L. A. Act. The Land Acquisition Officer proceeded to fix the price of this remaining area of the land, namely, 5,967.82 sq. metres and take further necessary steps. He did not think it necessary to issue fresh notice under S. 9 of the L. A. Act to the present petitioners as the Trustees had already appeared before him after notice under Sec. 9 and had set up their claim of compensation and led evidence in support thereof. He accordingly fixed compensation and passed the award. After the award was pronounced on 23-11-1979, a notice was issued by him on that very day calling upon the petitioners to deliver possession of the land to him. The petitioners thereupon filed this writ application on 3-12-1979 and obtained the stay of further proceedings.

4. Mr. Kapadia, the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners contends that the award is void and invalid on the following grounds :—

(i) Land Acquisition Officer being merely the agent of the appropriate Government, he cannot himself proceed to pass award for any lesser area than the one indicated in the notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act.

(ii) No authority from appropriate Government for making award for any lesser area can be effective, without first withdrawing from the acquisition proceedings under Section 48 of the L. A. Act or cancelling the earlier notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act and issuing fresh notification thereunder in respect of the reduced area.

(iii) Acquisition proceedings under L. A. Act become ineffective and invalid in their entirety due to their inconsistency with U. L. C. Act, after finalisation of the statement of surplus land under S. 9 and acquisition thereof under S. 10 (3) thereunder.

(iv) Such reduction in the available area for acquisition is destructive of the original public purpose and invalidates the notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act based thereon.

(v) Fresh notice under S. 9 and opportunity to the owner of the land to claim compensation in the changed situation, was obligatory.

5. Now Mr. Kapadia may be right in contending that, it is for the Central Government at whose instance the land is being acquired for construction of quarters and not for the L. A. Officer to decide whether, reduced area, would still serve the purpose and further steps in acquisition proceedings should be taken after the non-availability of the major portion of the intended area due to the notification under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act. The Land Acquisition Officer is empowered under the L. A. Act firstly to take the measurements, hear the objections of the interested parties and report to the competent authorities the result of his investigation and, proceed to determine the claims of compensation after notice to the interested parties, pass the award and implement the proposal of acquisition finally under S. 6 of the L. A. Act. The Land Acquisition Officer thus cannot of his own decide to restrict or expand the area of acquisition. That decision is left to the appropriate Government under the Land Acquisition Act.

6. The assumption, however, of Mr. Kapadia that, the Land Acquisition Officer, in this behalf acted on his own initiative is not well founded. The affidavit in reply sworn in by the Land Acquisition Officer shows that he was instructed by the State Government, after consultation with the Central Government, to proceed further with the acquisition proceedings of the area of 5,967.82 sq. metres out of C. S. No. 42 left with the petitioners, after, acquisition of the major portion thereof under Section 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act. In fact Mr. C. J. Sawant had brought the file of the correspondence between the State Government, the Central Government, and the Land Acquisition Officer in this behalf, and had offered the same for our inspection. It is clear to us that situation arising out of the acquisition of the land under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act and reduction in the size of the area available for the acquisition under the L. A. Act, was brought to the notice of the Central Government and the Central Government ultimately decided to proceed with the acquisition proceedings even of the smaller area in terms of its earlier decision to acquire the same.

7. It is pertinent to note that the Central Government is empowered to delegate its statutory functions to the State Government or its officers under Art. 258 of the Constitution. Mr. C. J. Sawant, the learned Additional Government Pleader drew our attention to, (1) a notification in this behalf under which its functions under the L. A. Act are delegated to the State Government and its officers by reference to Art. 258 of the Constitution r/w. S. 3 (ee) of the L. A. Act, (2) as also to the provisions of the Bombay Commissioners of the Divisions Act, 1957 under which Commissioners can perform the functions of the State Government. We are unable to see any illegality or infirmity in this procedure adopted by the Land Acquisition Officer after the notification under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act.

8. Coming to the second contention of Mr. Kapadia it is true that, the extent of the area to be acquired is one of the main ingredients of any acquisition proposal and the eventual notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act. The existence of the need and the public purpose with reference thereto, cannot be divorced from such extent of the area to be acquired. Requirements of any notification under S. 6 (2) of the Act have to be weighed in this context. Relying on this, Mr. Kapadia contends that the proceedings for acquisition for the remaining area of 5,967 sq. metres cannot be valid unless the earlier notification dated 14-5-1963 is completely nullified and fresh one covering the area of 5,967 sq. metres is issued after holding enquiry under Sec. 5-A of the L. A. Act. According to Mr. Kapadia, the earlier notification being only partly invalidated it can be nullified only by cancelling it or withdrawing from it under Section 48 of the L. A. Act. De novo proceedings from the stage of S. 5-A enquiry are indispensable for any valid award for the reduced area.

9. This contention appears to us to be wholly untenable. It is necessary to bear in mind that reduction of the area of acquisition from 47,396 to 5,967 sq. metres is the direct consequence of the notification issued under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act and not of any act or omission involving any violation on the part of the appropriate Government. Section 42 of the U. L. C. Act gives overriding effect to the provisions thereof, notwithstanding anything contrary in any enactment or contract etc. Even the notification and orders passed thereunder are bound to have such overriding effect on the notification or orders passed under any other such enactment, provisions of which have to yield to the provisions of this Act in terms of the mandate of S. 42. The notification thus issued under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act acquiring 41,396 sq. metres out of C. S. No. 42, is bound to have such overriding effect on the earlier notification dated 14-5-1963 under S. 6 of the L. A. Act, because of its patent inconsistency and consequentially the latter becomes ineffective to the extent of such 41,396 sq. metres. It is this inconsistency and consequential partial invalidity that has driven the authorities acting under the Land Acquisition Act to restrict the acquisition proceedings thereunder only to the area of 5,967 sq. metres left untouched by the acquisition under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act. The notification dated 14-5-1963 to the extent of 5,967 sq. metres remains still unimpaired and there is no reason why it could not be acted upon to that extent.

10. Any question of withdrawing from the acquisition of any part of the land under Sec. 48 of the L. A. Act or cancellation of the notification dated 14-5-1963 does not arise in such a case. In either of these situations continuation of the acquisition proceedings is not obstructed by any legal impediment, and discontinuation of the proceedings is entirely the choice of the appropriate Government. These considerations can have no application where partial invalidity is the creation of the Statute and nothing in any such Statute prevents proceeding with the valid part of the declaration and the acquisition proposal. That withdrawing from proceedings under Sec. 48 of the L. A. Act is not the only way of relieving the Government of its rights and obligations under S. 6 notification is emphasised by the Supreme Court in the judgment of the Supreme Court in State of M. P. v. Vishnu Prasad, AIR 1966 SC 1593. In that case the notification had become invalid consequent to the decision of the Court to that effect. Invalidity resulting from the operation of an overriding provision of any other enactment, in our opinion, does differ in quality.

11. This again is not a case where the appropriate Government is called upon to consider any question of fresh acquisition or reduction of the area of acquisition already decided. As discussed earlier the reduction in the area is the result of the impact of another order under another overriding enactment. The appropriate Government is driven to give effect to the partial invalidity created thereby. It had only to decide if acquisition of the remaining area under the valid and subsisting part of the notification still serves its purpose to any extent or not. It seems to have thought that it does. It, therefore, directed the L. A. Officer to proceed ahead with the fixation of the compensation with regard to the portion of the land left untouched by the notification under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act. This obviously does not involve any process of fresh proposal and fresh investigation or issuance of such notification under S. 6 of the Act. It is merely a question of implementing the valid part of the notification already issued on 14-5-1963 unaffected by the notification under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act. Question therefore of issuing any fresh notification under S. 6 of the Act cannot arise in the present case. The contentions raised by Mr. Kapadia in this behalf appear to us to be thoroughly misconceived and unacceptable.

12. Mr. Kapadia drew our attention to the judgments reported in the cases of Girdharilal v. State of Gujarat, reported in AIR 1966 SC 1408, State of M. P. v. Vishnu Prasad, reported in AIR 1966 SC 1593; Mahendra Lal v. State of U. P., AIR 1963 SC 1019; Sreenivasa Shenoy v. State of Kerala, AIR 1968 Ker 325; Girdharilal v. State of Gujarat, (1965) 6 Guj LR 569. We are unable to see any relevance of the points decided therein to the point under consideration. Girdharilal's case (supra) is an authority for the proposition that withdrawal from the land acquisition proceedings under Sec. 48 of the L. A. Act is not the only way, to put S. 4 notification out of the way. The same object can be achieved by cancelling it and power to cancel can be traced in S. 21 of the General Clauses Act. Vishnu Prasad Sharma's case (supra) lays down that if under S. 6 notification, lesser area is acquired than is indicated in Sec. 4 notification the appropriate Government cannot proceed to acquire remaining portion of the land treating S. 4 notification as reservoir, and a decision to abandon acquisition of the remaining land can be inferred from such notification. The authority of this judgment is now shaken due to the subsequent amendment of the L. A. Act. In Mahendra Lal's case (supra) it is held that mere intention indicated in the correspondence between the Government Officers, to drop any part of the land covered by S. 4 notification cannot have the effect of modifying the S. 4 notification in any manner whatsoever unless fresh notification under S. 4 is issued afresh so modifying the earlier notification. In Shenoy's case (supra), the Kerala High Court held that withdrawal from the proceeding only of a portion of the land notified for acquisition is not permissible under S. 52 of the Local Act corresponding to S. 48 of the Central L. A. Act. In Girdharilal's case the Gujarat High Court held that fresh notification under S. 6 of the L. A. Act is permissible if the earlier such notification is found to be legally invalid. It is not necessary to initiate proceedings afresh with S. 4 notification in that case. There is nothing in any of these cases, militating against what we have held earlier.

13. It is true that in the case Ganesh v. Spl. Land Acqui. Officer, Pune reported in 1979 Mah LJ 786 a Division Bench of this Court has held that proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act become inconsistent with the proceedings under the U. L. C. Act as soon as the statement under S. 9 is finalised and the area of the surplus land is ascertained for acquisition under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. Act and it includes the land sought to be acquired under the L. A. Act. But the judgment also makes it clear that inconsistency is restricted only to the area of the land sought to be acquired under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act. In other words this judgment is no authority for the proposition, sought to be canvassed before us by Mr. Kapadia, that the finalised statement under S. 9 or notification under S. 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act results in invalidating L. A. proceedings in their entirety. There is nothing in the U. L. C. Act to prevent the Land Acquisition Officer from proceeding with the acquisition proceedings under the L. A. Act in respect of the land or any portion thereof not covered by the statement under S. 9 or notification under S. 10 (3) therefor.

14. It is true that the land was sought to be acquired for raising quarters for office of the Excise Department and quarters for income-tax and excise department servants on the entire C. S. No. 42 measuring 47396 sq. metres. This was the public purpose for which acquisition proceedings were initiated in 1962. The objections of the interested persons in the course of hearing under Section 5-A of the Act were overruled by reference to this public purpose. No property can be acquired compulsorily without the existence of any such public purpose. Mr. Kapadia relies on this and contends that the reduction in the area, available for acquisition from 47396 to 5967.82 sq. metres must necessarily result in making achievement of the notified public purpose impossible and that continuation of the proceedings under the L. A. Act has become illegal.

15. This contention of Mr. Kapadia is no doubt attractively plausible. It is, however, not permissible for any Court at this last stage to go behind the declaration under S. 6 of the L. A. Act which has become final for all purposes. The stage of any such challenge in enquiry under S. 5-A of the L. A. Act was crossed long back when notification under S. 6 was issued on 14-5-1963. The L. A. Act neither contemplates any challenge to the existence of the public purpose at any later stage nor does it contemplate taking notice of the subsequent developments on this count. The failure of the challenges thereto in the two successive suit proceedings also further confirmed their finality as far as this case is concerned. This apart, it cannot be said that residential quarters cannot be raised on the reduced area of 5967.82 sq. metres in the manner in which the same could have been raised on the larger area of 47,396.83 sq. metres. The fact that smaller area may not be sufficient to satisfy the needs to the same extent as the area 47,396.83 sq. metres could have done, is altogether a different matter. The purpose can still be fulfilled to a limited extent and cannot be said to have become impossible of fulfilment as urged by Mr. Kapadia. The contention raised by Mr. Kapadia is thus untenable.

16. Mr. Kapadia lastly contends, that it was obligatory on the L. A. Officer to issue notices under S. 9 of the L. A. Act to the petitioners when he was directed to determine the compensation of lesser area of 5946 sq. metres. According to Mr. Kapadia, the reduction in the area, enables the owners to claim compensation at higher rates and also additional compensation on account of damages caused by severance. Unfortunately the petition does not disclose the necessary details to enable us to get any idea as to the basis for higher compensation. In the absence of any of these particulars and specific details, it is difficult to appreciate what the basis of additional claim could be. The question of compensation on account of severance cannot arise in this case as severance was effected by acquisition under Section 10 (3) of the U. L. C. Act and entire land left thereafter is being acquired under L. A. Act. It is also not in dispute that the petitioners have already made an application for reference under S. 18 of the L. A. Act after the impugned award was notified to the petitioners and the same is still pending before the L. A. Officer. We are unable to see why petitioners cannot raise all these claims therein. Mr. Kapadia's fear, however, is that S. 25 (2) of the L. A. Act will prevent the petitioners from claiming any higher compensation on any basis which was not and could not be set up by them before the Land Acquisition Officer. This also does not appear to be correct. Section 25 (2) merely prohibits claiming higher amount than claimed and does not prohibit furnishing additional basis for the same. Market price in either case is liable to be determined by reference to the prices that prevailed on 1-9-1962 when S. 4 notification was issued and not by reference to the prices on 7-6-1979 when area stood reduced due to notification under Section 10 (3) of U. L. C. Act.

17. Mr. Kapadia, however, contends that he has already made applications for exemption under S. 21 of the U. L. C. Act and though the same is rejected by the competent Officer on 13-8-1979, an appeal against the same is still pending. Mr. Kapadia, therefore, contends that possibility of his exemption application being granted, and the notification under S. 10 (3) of U. L. C. Act being cancelled consequentially, cannot be ruled out outright at this stage. Petitioners in that case would not lose the area of 41,657.09 sq. metres and acquisition of a pocket of 5967 sq. metres may assume a different complexion enabling the claimant to demand compensation at higher rate. We do not think it proper to set aside the award on this highly speculative contingency. The claim of the petitioners for any such higher compensation, assuming the claim to be well founded, can be protected otherwise than by setting aside the award. Mr. C. J. Sawant the learned Additional Government Pleader made a statement at the Bar that in the event of, such exemption applied for being allowed and any occasion arising for claiming additional compensation on that account, the Government would waive those objections under Section 25 (2) of the L. A. Act and will not oppose the reference or the claim in the Court on the basis of Section 25 (2) of the L. A. Act without prejudice to Government's other objections thereto. We also direct that in the event of petitioners' application for exemption being granted, and petitioners raising any claim for additional compensation on account of the situation arising out of the same, the authority or the Court entertaining the same will not deny it on account of the petitioners' failure to set up such claim under S. 25 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act. The result is that the application fails. Rule is accordingly discharged. There will be no order as to costs in the circumstances of the case.

18. Mr. Kapadia applies for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 of the Constitution. Leave refused. Mr. Kapadia requests that the operation of the judgment delivered by us should be stayed for three weeks from today. We direct that the operation of this judgment will be stayed for three weeks from today.

Order accordingly.

DESHPANDE, J.:— 1 to 5. x x x

6. Shri M. R. Kotwal, the learned Government Pleader, appearing for the appellant-State, apart from challenging the finding as to negligence of Defendant No. 1, contended that running of hospitals is part of the regal functions of the State and the State can never be held liable for the tortious acts of its servants when the complained acts of negligence are claimed to have been committed by the servants in the discharge of such regal functions. Reliance is placed on a Division Bench judgment of this Court (Vaidya & Naik, JJ.), in First Appeal No. 620 of 1968 with First Appeal No. 852 of 1968 dated 15-4-1977.* The judgment no doubt, supports his contention. One Chandrikabai in that case died in the Government owned hospital after her delivery and sterilisation operation. The two doctors attending to her operation were alleged to have sutured the wound without caring to remove the cotton swab inserted during the operation. Her death was attributed to this negligence of the doctors. Her husband and children claimed compensation for these tortious acts from the doctors and also from the Government for its vicarious liability for the negligence of its servants. The trial Court held the doctors to be guilty of negligence and passed a decree against the doctors and the Government. The Division Bench, however, did not find evidence enough to sustain the finding of negligence. The question of any liability for compensation of either of the defendants for any such negligence, obviously could not arise on this finding. Further question whether running hospitals was part of its regal functions and whether Government could not be vicariously liable for the negligence of its servants also could not arise for decision. Even so, the learned Judges discussed this point in paras 238 to 253 of their judgment and held that running the hospital was part of the regal functions of the Government and the Government can never be held liable for the tortious acts of its servants in the discharge of any such delegated regal functions. Amongst others, the learned Judges relied on the judgment of the Madras High Court in the case of Etti v. Secretary of State, reported in AIR 1939 Mad 663 and the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Management of Safdar Jung Hospital, New Delhi v. Kuldip Singh Sethi, reported in AIR 1970 SC 1407. Ratio of the earlier Supreme Court judgment in Hospital Mazdoor Sabha's case reported in AIR 1960 SC 610 was found to have been overruled. The Division Bench also seems to have thought the ratio in Safdar Jung Hospital case had the effect of making the Supreme Court judgment in the case of State of Rajasthan v. Mst. Vidhyawati reported in AIR 1962 SC 933 and Kasturi Lal v. State of U. P. reported in AIR 1965 SC 1039 and Division Bench judgment in the case of Union of India v. Sugrabai reported in (1968) 70 Bom LR 212 : (AIR 1969 Bom 13), irrelevant. The Division Bench also thought that the Government has to run such hospitals to comply with the directive principles of the Constitution and functions required to be so discharged in compliance with the Constitution, cannot but be held to be regal.

7-8. Shri B. P. Apte, the learned Advocate appearing for the plaintiff, however, relied on a subsequent judgment of the larger Bench of the Supreme Court (Seven Judges) in the case of Bangalore Water Supply v. Rajappa reported in AIR 1978 SC 548 in which ratio of its judgment in Mazdoor Sabha's case is affirmed and that of Safdar Jung Hospital's case is overruled, and contended that ratio of the Division Bench judgment, based on Safdar Jung Hospital case, is no more a good and binding law. This contention appears to us to be well founded.

9. Immunity of the Government from any claim for damages against the "act of the State" is based on the English Common Law doctrine that the King could do no wrong. The extent of its application to India was considered by a Full Bench of the then

* Reported in ILR (1980) Bom 660.

Supreme Court of Calcutta in its classic judgment in the case of Peninsular Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State, reported in (1861) 5 Bom HCR App A 1 hereinafter referred to as "the Calcutta Supreme Court case". The case pinpoints the distinction between the acts of the State committed in discharge of its sovereign or regal functions and other acts falling beyond the limits of such functions and which can be performed by any private individual.

10. The law laid down in this case has been uniformly followed by the Privy Council and all the High Courts in India. The Supreme Court had an occasion to consider the impact of the Constitution thereon in the light of Art. 300 of the Constitution in the case of State of Rajasthan v. Vidhyawati reported in AIR 1962 SC 933 and in the case of Kasturi Lal v. State of U. P. reported in AIR 1965 SC 1039. The State was held liable in the former for tortious act of its employee-driver in driving the truck negligently, while it was held not so liable for seizure of the goods negligently in the course of its regal function of investigating an offence. In the latter case Gajendragadkar, C. J. approvingly summarised the ratio of the Calcutta Supreme Court judgment as follows (at p. 1046):—

"Thus, it is clear that this case recognises a material distinction between acts committed by the servants employed by the State where such acts are referable to the exercise of sovereign powers delegated to public servants, and acts committed by public servants which are not referable to the delegation of any sovereign powers. If a tortious act is committed by a public servant and gives rise to a claim for damages, the question to ask is: was the tortious act committed by the public servant in discharge of statutory functions which are referable to, and ultimately based on, the delegation of the sovereign powers of the State to such public servant? If the answer is in the affirmative, the action for damages for loss caused by such tortious act will not lie. On the other hand, if the tortious act has been committed by a public servant in discharge of duties assigned to him not by virtue of the delegation of any sovereign power, an action for damages would lie."

11. The learned Judge then emphasised the importance of such distinction in the post Constitution era in India in the following words (at p. 1048):—

"It is not difficult to realize the significance and importance of making such a distinction particularly at the present time when, in pursuit of their welfare ideal, the Government of the States as well as the Government of India naturally and legitimately enter into many commercial and other undertakings and activities which have no relation with the traditional concept of governmental activities in which the exercise of sovereign power is involved. It is necessary to limit the area of these affairs of the State in relation to the exercise of sovereign power, so that if acts are committed by Government employees in relation to other activities which may be conveniently described as non-governmental or non-sovereign, citizens who have a cause of action for damages should not be precluded from making their claim against the State. That is the basis on which the area of the State immunity against such claims must be limited; and this is exactly what has been done by this Court in its decision in the case of State of Rajasthan (AIR 1962 SC 933)."

12. In Hind Mazdoor Sabha, the question that directly fell for consideration was if hospital run by the Government could be an industry within its definition under S. 2 (j) of the Industrial Disputes Act. It was argued that Government had to establish and run hospitals in compliance with the directive principles of the Constitution, and running of the hospital would be a part of its regal functions as a Welfare State. The Court observed that, "Negatively stated, the activities of Government which can properly be described as regal or sovereign activities are outside the scope of Section 2 (j)."

The contention, that activities indulged in by the State to comply with the directive principles or in pursuit of its welfare policies could be such regal activities, was turned down on the ground that they cannot be said to be "primary and inalienable functions of a Constitutional Government" and are not such that "no private citizen can undertake the same". Test laid down in the above Calcutta Supreme Court's case must have been in the mind of the learned Judges while making the above observations, though the case does not make any direct reference to the same. The Court further held that the words "industry" or "trade" or "business" must be interpreted in a broad manner to include the hospitals run by the Government or charitable institutions. It was held that inclusive second part of the definition had this effect. Hidayatullah, C. J. did not agree with this view in the Safdar Jung Hospital case (AIR 1970 SC 1407) and held that hospital cannot be an "industry" unless it is run on commercial lines. This view is now overruled in Bangalore

Water Works case (AIR 1978 SC 548) virtually confirming the ratio of Mazdoor Sabha's case.

13. Thus, in the first place, the decision of the Division Bench* is obiter in that the question had not cropped up for consideration. Secondly the basis of its judgment, namely the ratio of Safdar Jung Hospital case, is itself now knocked out. Thirdly, view of the Supreme Court in Mazdoor Sabha's case that activities undertaken by the Government in pursuit of welfare policies, and in compliance with the directive principles, were not part of the regal functions of the State, was not dissented in Safdar Jung Hospital's case. In fact, difference of view centred round how to interpret the second part of the definition in S. 2 (j) of the Act. With respect, Division Bench was not right in ignoring the ratio of Mazdoor Sabha's case and preferring to rely on the Madras High Court case whose reasoning is impliedly overruled in Mazdoor Sabha's case. Fourthly, and far more importantly, question of the extent of the State's vicarious liability for the torious acts of its employees had not arisen at all in the case either of Hind Mazdoor Sabha, Safdar Jung Hospital or Bangalore Water Works. It had directly arisen in Vidyawati and Kasturi Lal's cases. The ratio of these cases was followed by a Division Bench of this Court earlier in the case of Union of India v. Sugrabai Abdul Majid reported in (1968) 70 Bom LR 212 : (AIR 1969 Bom 13). The later Division Bench could not ignore the ratio of the cases directly dealing with the point. The Division Bench* judgment relied on by Shri Kotwal thus cannot be said to have laid down any good and binding law.

JUDGMENT:— A very interesting and rather important question of law arises in this Second Appeal. The question relates to the right of an auction-purchaser in a Court sale, who has purchased property but has found to his surprise that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property that he (auction-purchaser) purchased. The question is, whether he can proceed against the decree-holder and/or judgment-debtor for the recovery of the moneys paid by him for the purchase of the property in auction. Normally speaking it would have been enough for me to refer to the Division Bench the judgment of this Court in Santimappa

v. Balbhim Co-operative Credit Society, AIR 1950 Bom 313, and allow the appeal. However, I find that certain aspect of the question which did not fall for consideration of the Division Bench remained undecided in the said decision presumably on account of the peculiar pleadings in that case. I find that without a decision being given on that aspect, the question falling for the consideration of this Court cannot really be said to have been fully decided and this is what has propelled me to give a rather fulsome judgment on the case as a whole.

2. The facts of the case fall within a very narrow compass. For the sake of convenience I will refer to the parties, with reference to their position in the original execution proceedings, that is to say, as judgment-debtor, decree-holder and auction-purchaser. Sometime before the year 1965 one Vishwanath had obtained a money decree against Moiz Gayasuddin, the judgment-debtor. In execution of the decree, he filed Darkhast No. 2 of 1965 and brought the house property, presumably in possession of the judgment-debtor, for sale. On 3rd April, 1965, the said house was purchased by Jan Mohamed, hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff/auction-purchaser, for a sum of Rs. 4,025/-. The said sale was confirmed on 9-7-1965. After this confirmation, out of the amount of the sale proceeds, a sum of Rupees 1,600/- receivable by the decree-holder under the decree was paid to the decree-holder by the Court and the balance of the amount was paid by the Court to the judgment-debtor. A sale certificate was issued in favour of the auction-purchaser, which is Ex. 43 in these proceedings, on 9-7-1965.

3. It appears that either during these proceedings of the sale of the house in auction or immediately after 9-7-1965, Suit No. 145/65 was filed by one Mahemudabi (who was none other than the wife of Gayasuddin, the judgment-debtor himself) for a declaration that it was she who was the owner of the property and that the judgment-debtor had not a title of right to have the property sold for satisfaction of the decree passed against him. She also applied for injunction restraining the decree-holder from interfering with her possession of the suit house. The said suit was decreed on 30-6-1967. The appeal against the said decree came to be dismissed on 11-6-1968. It was in these circumstances that the present Suit No. 229/69 was filed by the auction-purchaser on 29-10-1969 both against the decree-holder as well as the judgment-debtor for recovery of the amount of Rupees 4,025/-, that is to say, the purchase money which he had paid for the purchase of the house in question. The decree-holder was defendant No. 1 and the judgment-debtor was defendant No. 2 in the said suit. The learned trial Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff/auction-purchaser was entitled to recover the amount of purchase money deposited by him in the Court. Question arose as to from whom the plaintiff/auction-purchaser could recover the amount. This aspect of the matter is dealt with by the learned trial Judge very briefly in para 15 of his judgment. He observed therein as follows:—

“15. As I have stated above the defendant No. 1 took necessary precautions before putting the house for auction and there was no mistake committed by him in it and hence he cannot be held liable to return the amount to the plaintiff, but the suit amount is liable to be recovered either from the person or from the property of defendant No. 2. It was he who allowed to put the house for auction knowing or believing it to know that it was of Mahmoodabi and not of his. In my opinion, the suit of the plaintiff is fit to be decreed against defendant No. 2, and hence issues Nos. 4 and 5 are decided into (in the ?) affirmative. His suit is fit to be dismissed against the defendant No. 1. There is no need to go in details how much amount was withdrawn by each of the defendants from the Court. The defendant No. 2 is liable to pay the whole of the suit amount to the plaintiff.”

In the view taken by the learned trial Judge, he decreed the plaintiff's suit against the original judgment-debtor (defendant No. 2) to the extent of Rs. 4,025/- with costs. The suit against defendant No. 1, the decree-holder, was dismissed with no order as to costs.

4. Against the said decree the plaintiff/auction-purchaser himself filed Appeal No. 357/71 to the District Court, Bhir. It is difficult to conjecture as to what motivated the plaintiff/auction-purchaser to file the said appeal. He had already got decree for the entire amount which he had prayed for. We assume that he was faced with some difficulty in the wake of execution of the same against defendant No. 2 and probably that was what actuated him to prefer an appeal for the purpose of getting a decree against defendant No. 1 decree-holder as well. Whatever that may be, the fact remains that such an appeal was filed. In the said appeal, the learned District Judge held that the auction-purchaser had a remedy by way of an independent suit even against the decree-holder on the principles analogous to Section 65 of the Contract

Act. He, therefore, held that a suit by auction-purchaser for recovery of the purchase money from the decree-holder was maintainable. The learned District Judge held that the decree-holder in the present case had recovered a sum of Rs. 1,600/- from out of the amount of Rs. 4,025/- deposited by the auction-purchaser and that, hence, the auction-purchaser was entitled to recover the said amount from the decree-holder. The learned District Judge, therefore, allowed the appeal; but the decretal order that he passed in the appeal is rather peculiar and of rather remarkable character. He set aside the portion of the judgment of the trial Court dismissing the suit against defendant No. 1 decree-holder and decreed the plaintiff's suit against the said decree-holder to the extent of Rs. 1,600/-. It is evident from the decretal order that so far as the decree for Rs. 4,025/- passed against defendant No. 2 the judgment-debtor was concerned, he kept the same intact as it was. We are thus faced with a strange spectacle. The plaintiff auction-purchaser had filed a suit for Rs. 4,025/-; as a result of the judgment of the appellate Court, the decree is passed in his favour totally for a sum of Rs. 4,025/- plus Rs. 1,600/-, that is to say, Rs. 5,625/-. The error contained in this part of the judgment, however, is the evident result of a technical slip. Since I am setting aside the entire decree passed by the appellate Court and since the decree passed by the trial Court against defendant No. 1 has got to be restored because he had filed no appeal against the same, I need not refer to this part of the error, the technical error, committed by the learned District Judge, in this judgment any further.

5. Against the said decree passed by the learned District Judge, the original decree-holder defendant No. 1 in these proceedings, has filed the present Second Appeal.

6. As stated hereinabove, I am referring the plaintiff herein as the auction-purchaser, defendant No. 1 as the decree holder and defendant No. 2 as the judgment-debtor.

7. As regards the correctness of the judgment of the lower appellate Court, I am little unhappy to state that no pains appear to have been taken from the side of the Bar or the side of the Bench either to look up the case law on the point or to examine the first principles upon which the real question falling for determination in the appeal arose. The learned District Judge has relied upon the judgment of the Rajasthan High Court in Thakkar Lal v. Nathulal, AIR 1964 Raj 140, to come to his ultimate decision. By following the said decision, he has held that the decree-holder was liable to pay back the amount received by him to the auction-purchaser under the provisions of S. 65 of the Contract Act. While relying upon the said decision attention of the Court should have been invited to the binding authority of this Court in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313) (supra). The ratio decidendi of the Bombay authority is in direct conflict with that of the Rajasthan authority and it is needless to say that it is the Bombay authority which was binding upon the Court below. It is therefore a manifest error on the part of the learned District Judge to rely upon and follow the ratio of the Rajasthan judgment when the question in issue was finally decided by our own High Court. While making this observation, I am alive to the position that the Bombay judgment of the Division Bench might not have been, nay must not have been, brought to the notice of the learned District Judge. But the rather sorry state of affairs emerges not from the fact that the Bombay judgment was not referred to by the learned Judge because of the want of assistance from the Bar, but the fact is that the Rajasthan High Court judgment, referred to above, itself refers to the Bombay judgment delivered by the Division Bench and the Rajasthan judgment mentions its disagreement with the Bombay view. When the attention of the learned Judge was invited to the Rajasthan judgment he could not have, or rather he should not have, lost sight of the important portion of the judgment where reference is made to the Bombay judgment. I do not wish to go into the matter more deeply, but earnestly hope that this observation will have its own effect for the guidance of the lower judiciary.

8. Coming to the question arising in this Second Appeal, the question really has got to be analysed as follows:—

(1) Whether the auction-purchaser had any right to recover the purchase money deposited by him in the Court for the purpose of purchase of the property brought for sale in the execution proceedings on account of the fact that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property after the confirmation of the sale.

(2) If he had any such right, who was the person, between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, upon whom the corresponding liability could be fastened.

(3) Assuming that by virtue of the right in the auction-purchaser and the corresponding liability upon either of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder there arose a cause of action in favour of the auction-purchaser, what was his remedy? Whether his remedy lay only within the machinery provided by Order 21 of the Civil P. C. or whether an independent suit was maintainable.

(4) What would be the nature of the suit? That is to say, would it be founded in Torts, Contract, quasi-contract and so on?

9. As stated above, practically all the above questions have been fully answered by the Division Bench of this Court while deciding the case of Santimmappa v. Balbhim Co-op. Credit Society, AIR 1950 Bom 313. As will be presently pointed out, for some reason or the other, the last aspect of the question remained undecided by the Court. Again, as will be presently pointed out by me, the real question in this dispute cannot be said to be fully answered and decided unless even the last mentioned aspect is decided upon. This rather exhaustive judgment on my part is necessitated on account of this peculiar position.

10. This leads me to the judgment of this Court in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313). The facts of the case were as follows: A co-operative credit society had obtained an Award against its judgment-debtor Basawwa for a sum of Rs. 576/-. In execution of the Award the property belonging to the judgment-debtor was brought to sale in Feb. 1934. There were some other creditors having enforceable rights against the same judgment-debtor; but the facts relating to that aspect of the case are totally irrelevant for our purpose and hence I need not mention the same in this judgment. The relevant fact is that the Co-operative Society brought the suit property belonging to the judgment-debtor for sale and the same was purchased by the auction-purchaser. The auction-purchaser also got possession of the property and the co-operative society got its moneys recovered from the amount paid by the auction-purchaser. Later on the adopted son of Basawwa filed a suit against the auction-purchaser for the recovery of the self-same property contending that the original judgment-debtor had no right, title and interest to alienate the property. His suit was decreed and as a result of the decree the auction-purchaser was dispossessed of the property purchased by him in the auction sale. In these circumstances the auction purchaser filed a suit against the decree-holder, viz. the co-operative society, for refund of the purchase money from the society. The basis of the suit was that the judgment-debtor had absolutely no salable interest in the suit property and that, hence, the decree-holder was in equity liable to repay the moneys received from the auction-purchaser. The plaintiff/auction-purchaser was non-suited by the trial Court and his appeal in the District Court met with the same fate. The auction-purchaser filed Second Appeal in this Court and it is this Second Appeal which was referred to the Division Bench for consideration. Reference to the Division Bench was necessitated by virtue of the apparent conflict between the two previous judgments of this very Court, viz. in Rustomji Ardeshir v. Vinayak Gangadhar, (1911) ILR 35 Bom 29 and in Balvant Raghunath v. Bala, ILR 46 Bom 833 : (AIR 1922 Bom 205).

11. The Division Bench consisting of Bavdekar and Dixit, JJ. considered practically the entire case law on this point. It firstly came to the conclusion that there was no real conflict between the above mentioned two Bombay authorities. The Division Bench held that the first authority which was decided as early as in the year 1911, reported in (1911) ILR 35 Bom 29, was really based upon the old Civil P. C. of 1882, which had in effect given a specific right to the auction-purchaser to file a suit against a decree-holder for recovery of his purchase money in the event of the failure of the consideration. The Division Bench found that the subsequent Civil P. C., 1908, had made a sharp departure from this legal procedure. The decision of this Court reported in ILR 46 Bom 833 : (AIR 1922 Bom 205) was based upon the new Code of the year 1908. In the latter Bombay authority the Court came to the conclusion that the suit contemplated by the old Code was itself the result of the statute and not the result of any common law right. Further, the Division Bench came to the conclusion that the right to sue, facilitated by the old Code, was taken away by the Civil P. C. of 1908. The Division Bench deciding the question in the year 1950 in Santimmappa's case thus found that there was no real conflict between the two authorities as such.

12. This Court in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313) proceeded further to consider the question regarding the right of the auction-purchaser in fullness. It considered the various aspects of the question and it held that the judgment of this Court in Balvant Raghunath v. Bala, ILR 46 Bom 833 : (AIR 1922 Bom 205) was a correct judgment. By the said judgment it was held that the auction-purchaser had no right to file an independent suit against the decree-holder after the confirmation of the sale for the recovery of the purchase money from him on the ground that the original decree-holder (judgment-debtor? Ed.) had no saleable interest in the property in question.

13. But while upholding the said judgment of this Court reported in (Balvant Raghunath v. Bala, 24 Bom LR 308 : ILR 46 Bom 833 : (AIR 1922 Bom 205)) the Division Bench deciding Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313) went further and discussed the various decisions upon which the correct view was based. While doing so this Court had also examined the judgments of the various other High Courts, the conclusions arrived at by whom were at variance with each other. This Court also referred to the judgment of the Privy Council in support of its findings. It is not necessary for me to refer to each of the aspects examined, discussed and adjudicated upon by the Division Bench. Suffice it here to say that the Division Bench has specifically held in Santimmappa's case that neither the judgment-debtor nor the decree-holder gave warranty of title of any kind whatsoever at any time during the course of the auction-sale. Further this Court held that prior to the advent of 1908 Civil P. C., there existed a right available to the auction-purchaser to demand back the purchase money paid by him from the decree-holder, (if the judgment-debtor was found to be having no saleable interest in the property) not only before the confirmation of the sale but even thereafter, that it emanated from the 1882 Code and that in view of the peculiar provisions of the 1882 Code he could do so even by resort to a suit. This Court held that this right was the creature of the specific statute, viz. Civil P. C., 1882, that this right was taken away by the subsequent Code of 1908 and that there ended the right of an auction-purchaser to file a suit for recovering back the purchase moneys paid by him in the given circumstances.

14. It was argued before the Division Bench that a suit would lie upon equitable consideration, viz. that a purchaser who had been misled because of the action of the decree-holder in bringing to sale the property in which the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest is entitled to hold the decree-holder responsible for the loss caused to him. The argument was two-fold. In the first instance it was argued that there was a misrepresentation by the decree-holder and, secondly, it was contended that even otherwise the auction-purchaser was entitled to rescind the sale on the ground of mistake. This Court held that once it is held that no question of the decree-holder giving a warranty of title arose, no question of misrepresentation could arise. As regards the plea of mistake, this Court observed in para 7 of the judgment (AIR series) as follows:—

"7. Now there is some authority for saying that where it is found subsequent to the auction sale that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property a suit for money had and received on the ground of total failure of consideration would lie. That such a suit would lie when the officer who held the sale had no authority to do so was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case mentioned above, Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdul Azeez, (1878) 5 Ind App 116. We must not go, however, into that question in this case because the action which the plaintiff brought in this case was certainly not an action for money had and received."

The question regarding the auction-purchaser's right to sue on the principle of money had and received was thus left unconsidered and undecided by this Court. Presumably, parties' pleadings in the said case left no scope for the Court to consider the effect of the equitable principle of moneys had and received. But whatever the position may be in that case, so far as the present appeal is concerned, I find no justification to refrain from deciding the right of the auction-purchaser, if any, based upon the principle of moneys had and received. The facts and pleadings obtaining in the present case and the contentions advanced in all the three Courts including this Court compel me to decide this aspect of the case.

15. Moreover, it would be useful referring to the observations of this Court in paragraph 11 of the judgment in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313) (supra). Those observations have been made with reference to the decision of the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court (AIR 1932 Lah 401), which decision was based upon Section 65 of the Contract Act. While dealing with the view of the Lahore High Court this Court observed as follows:

"11. It is true that their Lordships of the Lahore High Court in the Full Bench case which I have mentioned above referred to this section, but they referred to this section as well as to other sections of the Contract Act merely by way of analogy. The ground upon which they based their conclusion, viz. that the auction purchaser was entitled to file a suit for refund of the purchase money, was two-fold; (1) there was a representation by the judgment-creditor when he brought the property to sale that the judgment-debtor had some interest in the property. They said consequently that there was a misrepresentation by the judgment-debtor for which subsequently the auction purchaser was entitled to avoid the transfer. In the second instance they said that there was also a mistake by both the parties and an action for money had and received would therefore lie. Immediately we hold that there is no representation by the judgment-creditor that the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property, the argument that the sale can be avoided because of misrepresentation fails. In our view, therefore, it is not possible to accept the view that an auction purchaser who has not come to Court to set aside the sale in time had either independently or under the present Code a right of suit other than a suit for money had and received."

16. It will be noticed that even while considering the view of the Lahore High Court, the Division Bench has expressed no opinion on the question of the right of the auction-purchaser to sue on the basis of moneys had and received. It is this aspect of the judgment of the Division Bench that has propelled me, with infinite deference to the Bench, to give this rather fulsome judgment expressing my views regarding the right of the auction-purchaser arising out of the doctrine of moneys had and received. To my mind, it cannot be said that the auction-purchaser's claim is fully adjudicated upon unless his right under the said doctrine of moneys had and received is fully examined; and hence I have devoted some time and space to this aspect of the case in spite of the fact that ultimate conclusion that I have arrived at is the same to which the Division Bench had arrived while deciding Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313).

17. There is another reason why I feel that the examination of the various manifestations of the doctrine of moneys had and received is necessary in the context of the facts of the present case. After the judgment in Santimmappa's case there has been a well considered judgment of the Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court reliance upon which has been placed by the lower Appellate Court. In the said judgment the Rajasthan High Court has given relief to the auction-purchaser against the decree-holder in identical circumstances by resorting to the principle of moneys had and received. I have no doubt expressed my disapproval of the fact that while following the authority of the Rajasthan High Court, the learned District Judge had overlooked the judgment of the Division Bench of this Court in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313). That was because, evidently, the Rajasthan judgment could have only a persuasive effect, whereas the judgment of this Court in Santimmappa's case was a binding authority so far as the lower appellate Court was concerned. But that fact does not obviate the necessity of this Court's considering the correctness of the judgment delivered by the Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court. This is so for two reasons in particular. Firstly, the decision in Santimmappa's case was examined and followed by a learned single Judge (Jagat Narayan, J.) of the Rajasthan High Court in Thakar Lal v. Nathulal, AIR 1961 Raj 193. But this decision was overruled and the Division Bench ruling of this Court in Santimmappa's case was dissented from by the Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court in the case of Thakar Lal v. Nathulal, AIR 1964 Raj 140. Secondly, because, I must say with great respect, their Lordships of the Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court have summarised the previous case law in a very happy manner. It is stated by their Lordships of the Rajasthan High Court in paragraphs 4, 5, 6 of their judgment (AIR series) as follows :

"4. The principal question which thus emerges for determination in this appeal is whether an auction purchaser is entitled to recover back the purchase money from the decree-holder after the confirmation of the sale in his favour if it is held in a suit brought by a third party that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property purchased by the auction-purchaser, and, thereafter he is deprived of the possession of such property.

5. As rightly observed by the learned single Judge, there is a divergence of judicial opinion on this point among the various High Courts in India, and, if we may say so, this divergence is further to be found in some cases between the decisions of the same High Court. One view is that an auction-purchaser at a court-sale is not entitled to maintain a suit for the recovery of the purchase money paid by him in the event of the judgment-debtor being proved not to have any title to the property sold after a sale has been confirmed. This view is based on the ratio decidendi that there is no warranty of title in an auction-sale, and the auction-purchaser has, therefore, no right either in law or in equity to recover the purchase price from the decree-holder in case it subsequently turns out that what he has purchased does not belong to the judgment-debtor. Reliance has also been placed in support of this view on the theory that a statutory right was granted by S. 325 of the C. P. Codes of 1877 and 1882 by which an auction-purchaser was entitled to sue to recover the purchase price under those Codes; but with the repeal of that section in the Code of 1908, that statutory right came to an end, and Rr. 91 to 93 of O. 21 of the present Code do not permit any such thing to be done.

This view is forcefully propounded in a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Amarnath v. Firm Chotelal, AIR 1938 All 593 (FB), and a Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Santimmappa v. Balbhim Co-op. Credit Society, AIR 1950 Bom 313. To indicate the acuteness of the conflict which has existed on this subject it may be permissible to point out at this place that in an earlier Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Bindeshri Parshad Tewari v. Badal Singh, AIR 1923 All 394 (FB), it was held that an auction-purchaser under a decree which had been set aside after the confirmation of the sale as a result of a separate suit was entitled to recover his purchase money from the decree-holder. It was further held in this case that his remedy lay by an application under S. 47, C. P. C. As other instances of decisions on this side of the line, we may refer to Kameshwar Singh v. Bansidhar Marwari, AIR 1937 Pat 532, Amal Chandra v. Ram Swarup, AIR 1939 Cal 310 and Abinash Chandra v. Motilal, AIR 1961 Cal 172.

6. On the other side of the line are the Full Bench decisions of the Oudh Chief Court and the High Courts of Lahore, Madras and Rangoon in Bahadur Singh v. Ram Phal, AIR 1930 Oudh 148 (FB), Mehar Chand v. Milkhi Ram, AIR 1932 Lah 401 (FB), Macha Koundan v. Kottora Koundan, AIR 1936 Mad 50 (FB) and Aye Maung Maung v. A. Scott and Co., AIR 1940 Rang 1 (FB) respectively, and the High Court of Travancore Cochin in State v. Padmanabhan Pillai, AIR 1956 Trav-Co. 216 and of Andhra Pradesh in P. Malliah v. Brahmaya, AIR 1960 Andh Pra 89, have also taken the same view. The view taken in these cases, broadly speaking, is that the purchaser of an immovable property at an auction held by the Court in execution of a decree is entitled to maintain a suit for recovery of the price paid by him, if he is deprived of the property subsequent to the confirmation of the sale in his favour, the judgment-debtor having been found to have had no salable interest in it, inasmuch as the sale in such a case is founded on a mutual mistake of fact between the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser or there is a total failure of consideration, or such a claim is accepted to be maintainable on the basis of money had and received or a like equitable ground. It has been further held in these cases that the object of the Legislature in enacting R. 93 of O. 21, C. P. C. by which an auction-purchaser is entitled to an order for the repayment of the purchase money on the setting aside of a sale before it is confirmed was not to deprive the auction-purchaser of any rights which he otherwise may have had in that connection but was merely to provide him with an unconditional right, capable of being enforced summarily to get back the purchase money if and when the sale is set aside under R. 92 and it is maintained that in other cases, his right to have recourse to the ordinary remedy of instituting a suit for refund and to bring his case within the ambit of the rules of equity or what may be called the general principles of law cannot be held to have been adversely affected."

I do say with great respect that no fault can be found with the summary of the case law regarding both the schools of thought propounded by the various High Courts. After giving the summary of the view expressed by the two schools of thought, the learned Judges observed in para 7 of the report as follows:

"... With respect, we believe that in a matter attended with such divergence of opinion, the best course should be to deal with the controversy on first principles and this is therefore the course which we think fit to adopt. The more so, as we are unable to agree with all the reasons which have been given by even those Courts which favour the view which has commended itself to us."

18. However, after expressing their determination to decide the case on first principles all that their Lordships of the Rajasthan High Court say in this behalf is that there was no cogent reason on the whole, as to why an auction-purchaser who has been deprived of the property purchased by him as a result of a suit filed by third party against him ... should not have the right to recover the purchase money paid by him, on the broad consideration that a purchaser should not be made to lose the property as well as the price he paid for it for no fault of his (emphasis supplied). I emphasise the words "for no fault of his" because, to my mind, those are the words which make the view of the Rajasthan High Court a vulnerable one. This position becomes clear from what is stated by their Lordships of the Rajasthan High Court in paras 10 and 11 of their judgment. As for instance their Lordships have specifically repelled the view that there was some misrepresentation or fraud practised by the judgment-debtor upon the auction-purchaser. The learned Judges have thus, in effect, found that no right accrued to the auction-purchaser either under the law of Torts or of Contract to claim back the purchase money. However, after having found that there was no justification for assuming any such right in favour of the auction-purchaser on the basis of implied warranty of title or fraud or misrepresentation, their Lordships of the Rajasthan High Court still proceeded to hold that there did vest some kind of right in the auction-purchaser to recover back the moneys. Evidently this view is arrived at by the Court on the lone belief that auction-purchaser was not at fault. But if the auction-purchaser was not at fault so were the decree-holder or judgment-debtor not at fault. Fault could be legitimately imputed to the decree-holder or judgment-debtor if either of them was guilty of misrepresentation or fraud; but we have seen that that ground is not sustainable at all and even the Rajasthan High Court has wholly exonerated the decree-holder as well as the judgment-debtor of that charge. Moreover, it may not be wholly correct to say that the auction-purchaser was at no fault at all. I will refer to this aspect presently, but here I will deal with another aspect of the reasoning of the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court. Another basis of their reasoning is that the auction-purchaser "should not be made to lose the property as well as the price he paid for it for no fault of his". If that was so, why should the decree-holder be made to lose the fruits of the decree as well as the sale proceeds received from the Court in satisfaction of the decree?

19. It is necessary to analyse this theory of loss being caused to the auction-purchaser "for no fault of his" as also the theory of double loss to him. If we analyse this aspect we shall have to note that there is a basic difference between a transaction of voluntary sale between two willing parties and transaction of compulsory sale like a Court sale between two parties, one of whom is an unwilling party and the other is a party hoping to get some advantage from the fact that the sale was a compulsory sale. In the normal voluntary sale there is the warranty of title but the raison d'être for the warranty itself is that the purchaser has paid full amount that the vendor expects from his property. This is not so in the case of any compulsory sale, such as the auction sale. It is well known that in the case of an auction sale the auction-purchaser expects and hopes to purchase the property at the price much lower or at least somewhat lower than its market price. This is the principal advantage which the auction-purchaser gets in the compulsory sale such as the Court sale and this is something of which the Court is entitled to and must take judicial notice. This is the reason why the auction-purchaser has got the corresponding disadvantage of subjecting himself to a risk, viz., that, perhaps, he might not get anything whatsoever for the moneys paid by him. The theory that he loses both the moneys and property for no fault of his is, therefore, not quite correct.

20. Moreover, such a position is not unusual even vis-a-vis a private sale. Sec. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act ensures warranty of title to the purchase of immovable property, but even such statutory warranty is subject to a contract to the contrary. A purchaser purchasing any property subject to such a contract to the contrary can never be heard to complain that his vendor has no salable interest in the property in question. It could be readily seen that the position of a purchaser at Court sale is no better than that of a private purchaser such as the above who purchases the property subject to a contract to the contrary. Such private purchaser could not be heard to complain that he was deprived of his purchase money for no fault of his.

21. After formulating the question that fell for their consideration the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court have observed as follows (at p. 145):

"... .. and we see no reason why such wrong should be allowed to go altogether unredressed. The right to recover money that has been paid for a certain consideration, which has absolutely failed, and which is the sale of the property of which the auction-purchaser has been completely dispossessed is, in our opinion, a right of a civil nature"

22. The above reasoning of the Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court assumes, (a) that there was a right vesting in the auction-purchaser to recover back the purchase money if the consideration paid by him absolutely failed; (b) consequently there was a wrong done to him.

23. The question then arose as to what is the source of the said right vesting in the auction-purchaser. The learned Judges therefore proceeded to find out the source of this right from (i) the doctrine of frustration finding place in S. 65 of the Contract Act; (ii) doctrine of moneys had and received obtaining in the English law.

24. So far as the provisions of S. 65 of the Contract Act are concerned, that aspect of the question is already considered and disposed of by the Division Bench of this Court in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313) (supra) and hence it is not necessary for me to re-examine that aspect of the case. It is sufficient for me to say with great respect that I am fully in agreement with what is expressed by their Lordships, viz., that the principles underlying Section 65 of the Contract Act can have no application whatsoever to the kind of transaction, such as the instant one.

25. It is the second source of the auction-purchaser's right, doctrine of moneys had and received, relied upon by the Rajasthan High Court, that necessitates closer examination. This question is dealt with in para 18 onwards in the said judgment. But I am somewhat surprised that instead of examining the same with reference to the basic principles of common law or equity, the learned Judges have examined the same mainly with reference to and have decided the same mainly by reliance upon the provisions of Article 62 of the Limitation Act. This is what they observe:—

"18. We should also like to mention that a right like this may also be founded on the principle of money had and received which has been recognised under the English law and to which effect has been given under the Indian Law also as would appear from the language of Art. 62 of the Indian Limitation Act. It has been observed that when this article speaks of a suit for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use, it points to the well-known English action in that form and consequently it applies where the defendant has received money which in justice and equity belongs to the plaintiff under circumstances which in law renders the receipt of it a receipt by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff. Thus where money is paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under an agreement which is void or which is discovered to be void, the money would be money received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff within the meaning of this article. We have had occasion to consider the scope and ambit of Article 62 of the Limitation Act in Jain Brothers and Co., Bundi v. State of Rajasthan (Civil Reference No. 64 of 1961, D/- 19-8-1963 : (AIR 1964

Raj 17) to which both of us were parties) and what we held there may be briefly reproduced in the following extract (at pp. 20-21):

"Our conclusion, therefore, on a most careful and earnest consideration that we are able to give to this vexed matter is that we find it difficult to escape the view, on the whole, that the correct interpretation to be put on the key words in Art. 62 is the one which should conform to the meaning of these words in the English cases and that a simple or literal interpretation of these words which appear to us to be clearly technical as discussed above would not be correct. That being so, it must follow that Art. 62 governs suits for money had and received, not only where the defendant may have actually received money for the use of the plaintiff as his agent or in a like capacity, but it also governs suits for money whereof it can be rightly postulated that the defendant has received money which he had no right to receive and the receipt whereof by the defendant therefore amounts in law or by a legal fiction to a receipt by him for the plaintiff's use'."

26. In this connection I must state at the very outset that the Limitation Act (Art. 27 thereof — corresponding to Art. 28 of the old Act) does not create any substantive right in favour of any party. The right of the plaintiff/auction-purchaser could not, therefore, be said to be flowing from any of the provisions of the Limitation Act. It is true that the Limitation Act does give an indication of certain causes of action arising out of certain substantive law. But the Limitation Act by itself does not create any new right from which a cause of action stems. That Act can hardly be considered as a source of right.

27. All the same, let us examine the provisions of Article 62 of the old Limitation Act, which provided as follows:

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
62. For money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use.	three years.	When the money is received.

Let us now examine whether the cause of action for the plaintiff's present suit can be said to be governed by the said Article 62.

In order that the Article may so govern the plaintiff's cause of action, it must be shown that the decree-holder received moneys from the auction-purchaser and the moneys were received by him for the auction-purchaser's use. It is difficult to see how the cause of action of the plaintiff-auction-purchaser's suit in the instant case could be said to be of the description given in column 1 of the said Article 62. The decree-holder did not receive moneys from the auction-purchaser. He received it from the Court where the auction-purchaser had deposited the same. There was absolutely no privity between the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser. Further, it is difficult to see as to by what principle of common law or equity the decree-holder could be said to have received the same to the auction-purchaser's "use". This is one of the aspects of the matter, which shows that the plaintiff cannot be said to be having any conceivable cause of action against the decree-holder.

28. I would like to probe the matter a little deeper. Does Article 62 enact any substantive law? No. It provides only a period of limitation in respect of a cause of action which is the result of the substantive law. The substantive law as such is to be found elsewhere. In the instant case it will be found principally in S. 72 of the Contract Act. Unfortunately, the attention of the learned Judges of the Rajasthan High Court was not invited to the said S. 72 of the Contract Act. To my mind, the correct legal position is that the said S. 72 of the Contract Act exhausts all the categories of cases of moneys had and received so far as the law in force in India is concerned. Section 72 of the Contract Act may, therefore, be set out verbatim :

"72. A person to whom money has been paid or anything delivered by mistake or under coercion, must repay or return it."

Since, to my mind, the said S. 72 embraces all the aspects of the doctrine of moneys had and received so far as the law applicable in India is concerned, I will first analyse this section and see whether the plaintiff's suit could be said to be governed by this section. I will thereafter proceed to give my reasons for holding that this section is exhaustive as regards the suit based on the doctrine of money had and received.

29. Coming to the analysis of this section vis-a-vis the facts of the present case, what the section provides is that the person who receives money from another person must pay back to himself. One cannot read the section as follows :

"A person who is paid money or has delivered anything by mistake or under coercion, receive the same."

I am stressing this aspect of the case because it must be seen that in cases such as the instant case the auction-purchaser has not paid moneys to the decree-holder at all. The moneys were deposited by him in the Court. The moneys were received by the decree-holder from the Court. On a plain analysis of S. 72, therefore, the principle underlying the said section can have no application to the supposed rights of auction-purchaser to recover back his money on account of failure of consideration. If this section does not apply, it follows that Art. 62 of the Limitation Act would be equally inapplicable. Reliance upon the said article for spelling out the liability of the decree-holder towards the auction-purchaser is, therefore, not justified.

30. Let us now consider the question as to whether S. 72 of the Contract Act is exhaustive in its character. It is well-known that the principle embodied in the said Section 72 is equitable principle, although it has now become a part of the English Common Law. It may be that the principle has received more amplification and is of wider amplitude in English law. But the framers of the Indian Contract Act have chosen to give to the same statutory shape in the form of S. 72 of the Contract Act. It is well-known that when a principle of common law is embodied in a statute it is not open for a Court to rely upon the principle of common law merely because the provision of the statute does not cover or govern the case before them. (See AIR 1959 SC 135 headnotes (c) and (d)).

31. But assuming that I am not right in holding that S. 72 of the Contract Act is exhaustive in this behalf and even assuming that the principle of moneys had and received has some other source as well on the general principles of English law. I must point out that even applying the principles of English law the auction-purchaser could not be said to be having any equity in his favour.

32. Reference in this behalf may be made to most relevant principle that equity cannot come to the rescue of any person who suffers any detriment to himself with open eyes. Reference in this behalf may be made to Dutton v. Thompson, (1883) 23 Ch D 278 at 281, where it is held :

"It is not the province of a Court of justice to decide on what terms or conditions a man of competent understanding may choose to dispose of his property. If he thoroughly understands what he is about, it is not the duty of a Court of Justice to set aside a settlement which he chooses to execute on the ground that it contains clauses which are not proper."

Reference may also be equally made of the recognised principle of equity, viz. that equity does not save people from consequences of their own folly, but will save them from being victimised by other people (see (1887) 36 Ch D 145 at pp. 182, 183 and (1952) 2 TLR 516 at p. 519). (See Snell's Principles of Equity page 546).

33. If we appreciate the fact that the auction-purchaser has exposed himself to a risk with open eyes it can be safely said that there can be no equity in his favour and hence not even any independent principle analogous to the one embodied in Section 72 of the Contract Act can be invoked by the plaintiff/auction-purchaser. Assuming therefore that S. 72 of the Contract Act is not exhaustive, still I find there is no cause of action accruing to the plaintiff/auction-purchaser for refund of purchase money.

34. In any event no cause of action can be said to have accrued to the plaintiff as against decree-holder. I set out this position particularly to point out that even assuming that the auction-purchaser has got some kind of equity in him, at least he has no equity higher than the one had by the decree-holder. In the case before us the decree-holder has as much equity as the auction-purchaser has, if not more. After all it is he who has parted with the moneys in favour of the judgment-debtor, had wasted his time, money and energy for instituting the litigation and had obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor. It is not, as if he had given any invitation to the auction-purchaser to purchase the property. It has been held by this Court and even by the Rajasthan High Court that he gave no warranty of title to the auction-purchaser when the auction-purchaser paid for the purchase of the property in auction. The equities are, therefore, at least equal in this case, if not higher as against the auction-purchaser. It is well-known that when equities are equal the first in time shall prevail. In the present case the equity in favour of the decree-holder is undoubtedly first in point of time and, therefore, it must prevail and therefore the auction-purchaser cannot be said to be having any right against the decree-holder at all.

35. The Division Bench of the Rajasthan High Court has also observed and held that right of the plaintiff is of a civil nature contemplated by S. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code. But to my mind this approach rests upon a basically erroneous postulate. Section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code does not create any right in favour of any party at all. All that S. 9 of the said Code says is that if any person has a right of civil character he can enforce it in a Court of civil law unless the same is barred by any statute or otherwise. For finding out as to whether the plaintiff has got any cause of action or not, one has to turn not to Section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code but to the substantive law and the substantive law does not seem to have devised any right for an auction-purchaser, in the case such as the present one. While making this observation I am ignoring the cases where the auction-purchaser's claim is founded upon fraud or misrepresentation. The claim of the auction-purchaser such as that would be clearly governed by the law of torts. But I find that there is no right in the auction-purchaser against the decree-holder and hence Sec. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be invoked at all.

36. In this connection I may very briefly analyse the various sources of substantive rights of persons which may give them cause of action for filing suits against other persons. Under the common law, a right can be founded either in torts or contract. Thereafter there come rights arising out of the various statutes. It is well-known that equity stepped in thereafter and rights which were not recognised by common law were recognised and enforced in Courts of Equity. It is thus that we find rights in the nature of trusts, etc. Lastly, we find rights arising out of the provisions of the Constitution of the various countries which may fall in a class of their own. I have pointed out that the plaintiff/auction-purchaser can have no right in contract. He cannot fasten any tortious liability upon the decree-holder. By no stretch of imagination it can be conceived that a decree-holder holds moneys in trust for the auction-purchaser. This is for the very simple reason that there cannot be conceived any relationship between the plaintiff/auction-purchaser and decree-holder. All that we are left with, then is right under the statute. A brief examination of the history of Civil Procedure Code in this behalf would show that the plaintiff/auctionpurchaser's rights are extended by the provisions of the Code and they have no place outside the Code. This Court had considered this aspect of the question while considering Santimmappa's case. This Court had come to the conclusion that 1882 Code created a right in favour of auction-purchaser to recover the moneys. This Court also held that the right could be exercised not only by filing application in the execution proceedings, but the remedy of the auction-purchaser lay even in an independent suit and that too even after the confirmation of the sale. This Court further held that the amendment brought about in his position by the 1908 Code did away with this extra right of the auction-purchaser to file a suit for refund of money even after the confirmation of sale. This Court left the question open whether an independent suit on moneys had and received was maintainable or not. But this Court has specifically overruled any contention regarding maintainability of an independent suit under any provisions or principles of law. I have held here that the principle of money had and received cannot be invoked by the auction-purchaser in the context of the facts of the present case.

37. It would be somewhat enlightening and illuminating to have a look at the course that Civil Procedure Code has now adopted by virtue of the latest amendment. From the latest amendment it is clear that the procedure under O. 21 of the Code is an extensive and self-contained Code for the purpose of rights of the auction-purchaser for recovering back of his purchase moneys.

38. Reference may be made in this connection to the old provisions of the unamended Civil Procedure Code contained in O. 21, R. 103. These provisions specifically provided for independent suit, but even that suit related to the title of the judgment-debtor to the property in question. An auction-purchaser could not file a suit against either the judgment-debtor or a decree-holder for recovery of the purchase money deposited by him in Court. Under the amended Civil Procedure Code, which is in force at present, the entire provision for an independent suit is done away with and a self-contained machinery is provided whereby, if a judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sought to be purchased by the auction-purchaser, he can recover back the purchase money deposited by him in the Court. Having regard to this scheme of these various Codes, I find no reason for holding that the unamended Civil Procedure Code, 1908 envisaged a suit being filed by the auction-purchaser against the decree-holder for refund of purchase money deposited by him in the Court.

39. I may mention here that I have considered the question of the right of the auction-purchaser only against the decree-holder. I have not expressed any opinion as regards the auction-purchaser's right against the judgment-debtor, as such. Prima facie it appears to me that since it is not a voluntary sale by the judgment-debtor, the same principle should hold the field; but I need not express any opinion on that point since the same does not arise in this appeal.

40. However, in the present case the trial Court had passed a decree against the judgment-debtor for the full amount claimed by the auction-purchaser and he had filed no appeal against the same. The decree passed against him has therefore become final. The decision in the present appeal can have no effect upon the said decree obtained by the decree-holder against the original judgment-debtor.

41. I have delivered rather a fulsome judgment in this case because I find that this question arises with too much of frequency before the Courts and because the important aspect of the case was undecided by this Court in Santimmappa's case (AIR 1950 Bom 313).

42. In view of the position discussed by me above, the appeal filed by the decree-holder must be allowed. The decree passed by the lower Court is set aside and the one passed by the trial Court is restored. The appeal is allowed with costs against the plaintiff.

Appeal allowed.

*To set aside order passed by Govt. of India at New Delhi, D/- 25-10-1978.

— Grant of approval — Cannot be arbitrary — Condition cannot be imposed on basis of Government policy contemplated by S. 637-AA.

Under S. 314 (1-B) of the Act no relative of the General Manager of the Company can hold any office or place of profit in the Company, which carries a total monthly remuneration of not less than three thousand rupees, except with the prior consent of the Company by a special resolution and the approval of the Central Government. When on the basis of a resolution an application is filed before the Central Government, under Section 637-A, the Central Government can accord its approval to the appointment and impose a restriction on the salary that may be paid to the employee. However, this power to impose a ceiling on the salary payable cannot be exercised in an arbitrary manner. Further, Section 637-AA does not apply to approvals for an increase in the remuneration of relatives of managers under S. 314 (1-B) of the Act. AIR 1977 SC 831, Ref. to.

S. 637-AA in terms only applies to approval under Ss. 309, 310, 311 or S. 387. These sections pertain to the remuneration of Directors, including any Managing or whole time Director and the remuneration of a Manager. Under S. 637-AA, in granting its approval, the Central Government has to take into account the financial position of the Company and other factors which are enumerated in that section. These include public policy relating to the removal of disparities in income. Since this section does not apply to approval under S. 314 (1-B), the only relevant section for the purpose of approval under S. 314 (1-B) is S. 637-A. Under S. 637-A no such factors as in S. 637-AA have been enumerated which are required to be considered by the Central Government. This does not, however, mean that it is open to the Central Government to grant its approval or withhold such approval arbitrarily. Nor is it open to the Central Government to impose any condition arbitrarily while according its approval. If any conditions are sought to be imposed, they must be imposed on the basis of relevant material pertaining to the Company which seeks such an approval. In view of Form No. 24-A which has been prescribed by the Central Government for making applications inter alia under S. 314 (1-B), the financial condition of the Company, its management structure, its capital structure, nature of the services to be rendered by the person concerned, his qualifications, the number of employees who are in receipt of a salary over Rs. 3000 and other relevant information pertaining to the relative mentioned in it, are all relevant for considering the application for approval of an increase in remuneration of the relatives of the Manager. While S. 637-AA refers to an additional factor to be taken into consideration viz., public policy for removal of disparities in income, there is no reference to such a public policy under S. 637-A. Thus the Central Government is not under any statutory obligation to consider a public policy (if formulated) for removal of disparities in income while considering applications for approval under S. 314 (1-B), much less any Government policy. It must consider the relevant information supplied to it under Form No. 24-B in deciding upon the conditions, if any, subject to which it proposes to grant its approval under S. 314 (1-B). It is difficult to see how it can arrive at any decision simply on the basis of any policy of the Government unconnected with the relevant material pertaining to the Company in question and the person whose salary is to be increased. In the absence of any provision in the Companies Act, 1956, it is difficult to uphold any policy fetters on the exercise of discretion by the Central Government. (Para 8)

In the instant case, the second petitioner is the younger brother of the General Manager of the Company, the first petitioner. The second petitioner holds a very important post viz., the post of Manager, Sales and Circulation. According to the first petitioners, he also assists the General Manager. He is in charge of the sales and circulation and sales promotional activities of the company's publications both in India and abroad. He is also responsible for bringing out various commentaries, digests and other publications. It is also the case of the first petitioners that as a result of the work done by the second petitioner and the General Manager the turnover and the net profits have substantially increased. In a meeting held on 14-1-1978 a resolution was passed sanctioning the pay scale of Rs. 5000-250-6250 to the second petitioner with effect from 1-7-1977. The first petitioner forwarded to the Central Government necessary information in prescribed form and enclosed all necessary documents for obtaining approval. The Government sanctioned the appointment but fixed the salary of Rs. 4100 p.m. in the pay scale of Rs. 4100-100-4500 and only one yearly increment was sanctioned. On a subsequent representation by the first petitioners, the Central Government substituted a fixed salary of Rs. 4500, other conditions remaining the same. The increase was sanctioned with effect from 1-2-1978.

Held, that the order of the Central Government was arbitrary and the date from which the increases are to be granted has also been selected arbitrarily.

(Para 7)

In the present case, the orders do not indicate that all the relevant factors were considered by the Central Government while imposing the condition relating to salary. On the contrary, there is some indication in the orders that the conditional approval which was granted was based on Government's policy a factor irrelevant under S. 637-A. There is nothing in those orders which would indicate on what basis originally the salary of Rupees 4100 in the pay-scale of Rs. 4100-100-4500 was prescribed and thereafter the same was revised to a fixed salary of Rs. 4500. The revised order retains other conditions prescribed by the previous order. These are referable only to a salary scale. Granting approval to a fixed salary while retaining conditions which are applicable only to a salary scale shows non-application of mind by the Government to the relevant material. The date from which the increase is granted is also fixed arbitrarily. The orders, therefore, are passed without any application of mind by the Central Government and are clearly bad in law.

(B) Companies Act (1956), Ss. 314 (1-B) and 637-A — Approval of Central Government — Duty of Central Government.

It was held by the Court that it was not necessary in the case in question to examine whether the approval granted under S. 314 (1-B) read with S. 637-A is in the exercise of quasi-judicial powers or not, though prima facie it would appear that such an approval has to be granted taking into account the relevant material relating to financial structure of the Company and its managerial structure. 1980 Tax LR 2098 (Guj) and 1980 TLR 2132 (Delhi) and AIR 1969 SC 414, Ref. to.

V. R. Manohar and A. B. Oka, for Petitioners; M. G. Bhangade, for Respondent.

SUJATA MANOHAR, J.— The first petitioners are a well known law publishing house known as All India Reporter Limited. They are a public limited company registered under the Companies Act and have a registered office at Bombay and a branch office at Nagpur. The first petitioners publish monthly journals, commentaries on various Central Statutes, various types of digests, manuals etc. They also have their own printing press. The second petitioner is the Manager, Sales and Circulation, of the first petitioners from 1-4-1967. He is an Arts Graduate and holds an LL. B. Degree also. The second petitioner is the younger brother of the General Manager of the first petitioners. By a resolution passed by the Board of Directors on 30-4-1967 the second petitioner was designated as Manager, Sales and Circulation, with effect from 1-4-1967 and his remuneration was fixed at Rs. 2500 in the pay-scale of Rs. 2500-150-3250. The second petitioner reached the maximum in his pay-scale, namely, Rs. 3250 on 1-1-1973. Thereafter it seems that the first petitioners granted with effect from 1-9-1973 a general rise in the salary of all the employees of the petitioner Company to the extent of 25% of their salary. As a result, the second petitioner started drawing a salary of Rs. 4063 per month with effect from 1-9-1973. With the coming into effect of the new Section 314 (1-B) of the Companies Act, 1956, which was introduced by the Companies (Amendment) Act 41 of 1974, it became necessary for the first petitioners to obtain the approval of the Central Government for granting to the second petitioner the remuneration of Rs. 4063 per month because the second petitioner was the younger brother of the General Manager of the petitioner Company and drew a salary exceeding Rs. 3000 per month. The first petitioners accordingly applied to the Central Government for approval under Section 314 (1-B) of the Companies Act. The Central Government, by its order dated 22-1-1976, granted its approval. The second petitioner continued to draw his salary of Rs. 4063 per month thereafter. In the Extraordinary General Meeting of the first petitioner Company held on 14-1-1978 it was unanimously resolved that subject to the approval of the Central Government, the first petitioner approved and accorded sanction to a revision of pay-scale of the second petitioner with effect from 1-7-1977 in the pay scale of Rs. 5000-250-6250, plus provident fund and gratuity admissible as per the Rules.

2. The first petitioners by their letter dated 31-1-1978 forwarded to the Central Government the necessary information in the prescribed form and enclosed all the necessary documents required for obtaining the approval of the Central Government to the employment of the second petitioner in the first petitioners Company on the terms fixed by the special resolution dated 14-1-1978. Thereafter the first petitioners received a communication from the Central Government dated 29-6-1978 which is Annexure I. By this communication the Central Government approved the continuance of the second petitioner as Manager, Sales and Circulation, in terms of the special resolution passed by the Company at its Extraordinary General Meeting held on 14-1-1978 but on the following remuneration with effect from 1-2-1978:—

(a) Salary of Rs. 4100 per month in the pay-scale of Rs. 4100-100-4500.

There were other terms relating to perquisites with which we are not concerned at present. It was further provided that the approval was subject to the following conditions, limitations, or restrictions:—

(a) that not more than one increment will be allowed in a year;

(b) that any other increase in remuneration by way of salary etc. except as in para (1) of the letter will be subject to the approval of the Central Government;

(c) that the incumbent shall not be employed in any other company in any capacity.

It was further stated that the above approval had been accorded without prejudice to any changes in the Government's policy or any action that may be taken in pursuance of the provisions of the Companies Act, 1956, or of any amendments thereto that may be enacted by Parliament from time to time. On receipt of this communication the first petitioner wrote a letter dated 14-8-1978 addressed to the Secretary, Ministry of Law, Justice & Company Affairs, setting out in detail the financial position of the Company and asking the Central Government to grant approval to the Company's resolution for increase in the remuneration. Thereafter by its letter dated 25-10-1978 addressed to the Company, the Central Government wrote as follows:

"With reference to your letter of August 14, 1978, on the above subject, I am directed to say that the Central Government has carefully considered the representation of the company in the light of submissions made therein and has been pleased to amend this Department's Letter No. 1 (45) CL. VII. 78 (ii) dated 29th June, 1978 in respect of Shri W. W. Chitale as follows:—

1. For the existing sub-para (a) of para (1) the "Salary of Rs. 4500 (Rupees four thousand & five hundred)" may be substituted.

2. The other terms and conditions of the said letter shall remain unaltered.

3. This letter is issued by order and in the name of the President of India."

3. Being aggrieved by this communication of the Central Government, the petitioners have filed the present petition challenging the orders passed by the Central Government dated 29-6-1978 and 25-10-1978. According to the first petitioners, the second petitioner is performing very important duties. He is in charge of the sales and circulation and sales promotional activities of the Company's publications both in India and abroad. He assists the General Manager of the Company. He is also responsible for bringing out various commentaries, digests and other publications. He makes substantial contributions to the work of the first petitioners. The first petitioners have also contended that as a result of the work done by the second petitioner and the General Manager of the Company, the turnover of the Company had increased from Rs. 1,06,03,290 in 1974 to Rs. 1,51,12,604 in 1976, and to Rs. 1,58,51,307 in 1977. The net profits of the Company have increased from Rupees 5,17,145 in 1974 to Rs. 26,87,287 in 1977. According to the petitioners, the second petitioner has been drawing a fixed monthly remuneration of Rs. 4063 from 1-9-1973 onwards. Looking to the increase in the turnover and profits of the Company, the first petitioners submit that they are entitled to grant to the second petitioner the increased salary in the pay-scale of Rs. 5000-250-6250 with effect from 1-7-1977.

4. Before we examine the contentions raised by the petitioners, it is necessary to examine the provisions of the Companies Act, 1956, in this connection. Section 314 (1-B) provides as follows:

"(1-B). Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1),—

(a) no partner or relative of a director or manager,

(b) no firm in which such director or manager, or relative of either, is a partner,

(c) no private company of which such a director or manager, or relative of either, is a director or member, shall hold any office or place of profit in the company which carries a total monthly remuneration of not less than three thousand rupees, except with the prior consent of the company by a special resolution and the approval of the Central Government:

Provided that in a case where no office of profit could have been held in the company by a person if this Section had been in force at the time when the appointment or re-appointment to such office of profit was made, the company shall, within a period of six months from the commencement of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1974, obtain the approval of the company in general meeting and of the Central Government for the holding by such person of the office of profit."

Section 637-A provides as follows:

"637-A. Power of Central Government or Company Law Board to accord approval, etc., subject to conditions and to prescribe fees on applications.— (1) Where the Central Government or Company Law Board is required or authorised by any provision of this Act,—

(a) to accord approval, sanction, consent, confirmation or recognition to or in relation to any matter;

(b) to give any direction in relation to any matter; or

(c) to grant any exemption in relation to any matter, then, in the absence of anything to the contrary contained in such or any other provision of this Act, the Central Government or Company Law Board may accord, give or grant such approval, sanction, consent, confirmation, recognition, direction or exemption subject to such conditions, limitations or restrictions as it may think fit to impose and may, in the case of contravention of any such condition, limitation or restriction, rescind or withdraw such approval, sanction, consent, confirmation, recognition, direction or exemption."

By virtue of Section 314 (1-B) no relative of the Manager shall hold any office or place of profit in the Company which carries a total monthly remuneration of not less than three thousand rupees, except with the prior consent of the Company by a special resolution and the approval of the Central Government. It is not in dispute before us that the requisite resolution under Section 314 (1-B) has been passed by the first petitioner Company. The question before us is whether the conditional approval which is granted by the Central Government to increase the monthly remuneration of the second petitioner is valid or not.

5. Under Section 637-A of the Companies Act, where the Central Government is required under the provisions of the Companies Act to accord its approval in relation to any matter, it can accord such approval subject to such conditions, limitations or restrictions as it may think fit to impose. The Supreme Court in the case of Company Law Board v. Upper Doab Sugar Mills Ltd. reported in AIR 1977 SC 831, has interpreted the provisions of Section 637-A, and has held that in exercise of its powers under S. 637-A it is open to the Central Government to impose a condition relating to a limit on the salary that may be paid to the person concerned in the Company. Thus, under Section 637-A the Central Government can accord its approval to the appointment of the second petitioner and impose a restriction on the salary that may be paid to the second petitioner.

6. This power, however, to impose a ceiling on the salary payable cannot be exercised in an arbitrary manner. In the present case, the petitioner Company had forwarded to the Central Government their balance-sheets and profit and loss accounts for the calendar years 1974, 1975 and 1976. They had also sent to the Central Government all relevant information required to be set out in Form No. 24-B prescribed under the Companies (Central Government) General Rules and Forms, 1956, setting out the nominal and paid-up capital of the Company, its management structure, details of its capital structure, its turnover, and net profits for the last three financial years, the nature of services rendered by the second petitioner, his age, qualifications and experience, and particulars regarding other employees in receipt of a salary above Rs. 3000. Under the Companies (Central Government) General Rules and Forms, this information is required to be supplied.

ed by the Company whenever it applies for sanction for an increase in remuneration under the provisions of the Companies Act. Presumably this information is sought for because it is to be taken into account by the Central Government while according its sanction or approval to the increase in the remuneration. In the present case, if we examine the first order dated 29-6-1978 there is nothing in the order which would indicate that the material supplied by the first petitioner Company had been considered in reducing the proposed salary from Rs. 5000-250-6250 to Rs. 4100-100-4500. Even in the return filed by the respondents the basis for fixing this revised pay-scale is not disclosed. The only portion of the order which indicates some reason for the revised pay scale is paragraph 2 where it is stated: "The above approval has been accorded without prejudice to any changes in the Government's policy." In view of the above statement the best inference that can be drawn in favour of the respondents is that they had prescribed the salary scale Rs. 4100-100-4500 in pursuance of the Government's policy. This order is revised by the order dated 25-10-1978 by which a fixed salary of Rs. 4500 has been substituted for the salary of Rs. 4100 per month in the pay-scale of Rs. 4100-100-4500. The revised order provides that the other conditions of the said order shall remain unaltered. Once again, the basis for altering the salary and substituting a fixed salary for a salary scale is not indicated anywhere in the order.

7. There is much substance in the submission made by learned counsel for the petitioners that both these orders are passed without application of mind by the Central Government. Under the revised order a fixed salary of Rs. 4500 has been sanctioned. The order, however, provides that the other terms and conditions of the original order would remain unchanged. One of the terms and conditions of approval in the original order provides that not more than one increment will be allowed in a year. Clearly if no pay-scale is sanctioned by the Central Government, there can be no question of any increment being granted. In revising the order, therefore, the respondents do not appear to have considered the terms and conditions laid down in their previous order, much less the material supplied by the petitioners. Secondly, the first petitioner Company had sought the approval of the Central Government to the increase in salary of the second petitioner with effect from 1-7-1977. The Central Government has sanctioned the increase with effect from 1-2-1978. There is nothing in the order which indicates how the date 1-2-1978 has been selected by the Central Government and on what basis the date proposed by the first petitioner Company has been disapproved. At the same Extraordinary General Meeting the first petitioner Company had passed a resolution to increase the salary of its Administrative Officer with effect from 1-7-1977. The Central Government has sanctioned a reduced increase in his case with effect from 1-7-1977. In the case of the second petitioner, however, the increase is sanctioned as from 1-2-1978. In the absence of anything in the orders or even the return to indicate the basis for such differentiation, it must be held that the dates from which these increases are to be granted have been selected arbitrarily by the Central Government.

8. As earlier pointed out, there is a reference to the approval having been accorded without prejudice to any changes in the Government's policy. Presumably, therefore, the approval granted has some nexus with some Government policy. It is not known what the policy of the Government is for approving an increase in the remuneration of the relatives of the Managers of the Companies. It is also not known whether this Government policy is similar to the public policy for removal of disparities in income referred to in Section 637-AA. In this connection, it is necessary to bear in mind that Section 637-AA, which was inserted by the Companies (Amendment) Act of 1974, does not apply to applications for approval of an increase in the remuneration to relatives of Managers. Section 637-AA lays down certain factors which have to be taken into account while granting approvals under that section. This section, however, does not apply to approvals for an increase in the remuneration of relatives of Managers under Section 314 (1-B). Such a sanction became necessary for the first time by reason of the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1974, which, inter alia, introduced Section 314 (1-B) in the Companies Act, 1956. Under Section 637-AA it is provided as follows:—

"637-AA. Power of Central Government to fix a limit with regard to remuneration.—Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 198, Section 309 or Section 637-A, the Central Government may, while according its approval under Section 269 to any appointment or to any remuneration under Section 309, Sec. 310, Section 311 or Section 387, fix the remuneration of the person so appointed or the remuneration, as the case may be, within the limits specified in this Act, at such amount or percentage of profits of the company, as it may deem fit and while fixing the remuneration, the Central Government shall have regard to—

(a) the financial position of the company;

(b) the remuneration or commission drawn by the individual concerned in any other capacity including his capacity as a sole selling agent.

(c) the remuneration or commission drawn by him from any other company;

(d) professional qualifications and experience of the individual concerned;

(e) public policy relating to the removal of disparities in income."

Section 637-AA in terms only applies to approval under Sections 309, 310, 311 or Section 387. These sections pertain to the remuneration of Directors, including any Managing or whole time Director and the remuneration of a Manager. Under Section 637-AA, in granting its approval, the Central Government has to take into account the financial position of the Company and other factors which are enumerated in that section. These include public policy relating to the removal of disparities in income. Since this section does not apply to approvals under Section 314 (1-B), the only relevant section for the purpose of approval under Section 314 (1-B) is Section 637-A. Under Section 637-A no such factors as in Section 637-AA have been enumerated which are required to be considered by the Central Government. This does not, however, mean that it is open to the Central Government to grant its approval or withhold such approval arbitrarily. Nor is it open to the Central Government to impose any condition arbitrarily while according its approval. If any conditions are sought to be imposed, they must be imposed on the basis of relevant material pertaining to the Company which seeks such an approval. In view of Form No. 24-B which has been prescribed by the Central Government for making applications inter alia under Section 314 (1-B), the financial condition of the Company, its management structure, its capital structure, nature of the services to be rendered by the person concerned, his qualifications, the number of employees who are in receipt of a salary over Rupees 3000 and other relevant information pertaining to the relative mentioned in it, are all relevant for considering the application for approval of an increase in remuneration of the relatives of the Manager. While Section 637-AA refers to an additional factor to be taken into consideration viz., public policy for removal of disparities in income, there is no reference to such a public policy under Section 637-A. Thus the Central Government is not under any statutory obligation to consider a public policy (if formulated) for removal of disparities in income while considering applications for approval under Section 314 (1-B), much less any Government policy. It must consider the relevant information supplied to it under Form No. 24-B in deciding upon the conditions, if any, subject to which it proposes to grant its approval under Section 314 (1-B). It is difficult to see how it can arrive at any decision simply on the basis of any policy of the Government unconnected with the relevant material pertaining to the Company in question and the person whose salary is to be increased. In the absence of any provision in the Companies Act, 1956, it is difficult to uphold any policy fetters on the exercise of discretion by the Central Government.

9. In the present case, the orders do not indicate that all the relevant factors were considered by the Central Government while imposing the condition relating to salary. On the contrary, there is some indication in the orders that the conditional approval which was granted was based on Government's policy a factor irrelevant under Section 637-A. There is nothing in those orders which would indicate on what basis originally the salary of Rs. 4100 in the pay-scale of Rs. 4100-100-4500 was prescribed and thereafter the same was revised to a fixed salary of Rs. 4500. The revised order retains other conditions prescribed by the previous order. These, as earlier stated, are referable only to a salary scale. Granting approval to a fixed salary while retaining conditions which are applicable only to a salary scale shows non-application of mind by the respondents to the relevant material. The date from which the increase is granted also is fixed arbitrarily. The orders, therefore, are passed without any application of mind by the Central Government and are clearly bad in law.

10. Shri V. R. Manohar, learned counsel for the petitioners, has also challenged the orders on the ground that the orders passed under Section 314 (1-B) read with Section 637-A of the Companies Act are quasi-judicial orders. He has submitted that such orders must disclose the reasons for passing them. In the absence of disclosure of such reasons both in the orders as also in the return filed by the respondents, the orders must be considered as bad in law. He relied upon the observations of the Gujarat High Court in the case of Cibatul Ltd. v. Union of India reported in 1980 Tax LR 2098. In that case the Gujarat High Court was required to consider the guidelines issued by the Government of India in 1969 in respect of ceiling on remuneration inter alia, of Managing Directors. While striking down the guidelines the Gujarat High Court held that the Central Government's exercise of power in granting such approval was an exercise of quasi-judicial powers. The Gujarat High Court relied upon the ratio of the judgment of the Supreme Court in R. D. & Chemical Co. Ltd. v. Company Law Board, New Delhi reported in AIR 1970 SC 1789, where the Supreme Court held that the Central Government's powers to accord approval to the payment of Managing Agents under Section 326 was a power which carried with it a duty to act judicially, that is to say, to hold an inquiry in the manner consistent with the rules of natural justice, to consider all relevant matters, ignore irrelevant matters, and to reach a conclusion without bias, without predilection and without prejudice. Learned counsel for the petitioners also drew our attention to a decision of the Delhi High Court in the case of Mahindra & Mahindra Ltd. v. Union of India reported in 1980 Tax LR 2132, in which the guidelines of 1978 issued by the Central Government were also struck down. On the other hand, Shri Bhangade, learned counsel for the respondents, strongly urged that the power to grant approval under Section 314 (1-B) was a purely administrative power and there was no duty cast on the Central Government to give any reasons or to explain in any manner the reasons for its order of approval. He relied upon the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of Som Datt v. Union of India, reported in AIR 1969 SC 414 to the effect that there is no rule of natural justice which requires a statutory tribunal to give in every case reasons in support of its decision. It is, however, not necessary in the present case to examine whether the approval granted under Section 314 (1-B) read with Section 637-A is in the exercise of quasi-judicial powers or not, though prima facie it would appear that such an approval has to be granted taking into account the relevant material relating to financial structure of the Company and its managerial structure. We need not go into this aspect of the matter to determine whether the order of approval should indicate reasons for imposing conditions on approval since the orders in the present case ex facie disclose non-application of mind by the Government to the matter at issue and the material which was required to be considered by it in arriving at its decision.

11. We accordingly set aside the orders dated 29-6-1978 and 25-10-1978 passed by the Central Government and direct it to consider the application of the first petitioners after taking into account all relevant material supplied by the first petitioner. Rule is made absolute accordingly. The respondents to pay the costs of this petition to the petitioners.

Rule made absolute.

ral Manager of the Company as Administrative Officer in the pay scale of Rupees 4000-250-5250 i.e. on a salary exceeding Rs. 3000, but the Central Government had sanctioned salary of Rs. 2500 in the pay scale of Rs. 2500-50-3000 in the first instance and subsequently, on representation being made, granted approval to a fixed salary of Rs. 3000, both the orders were liable to be set aside on ground of absence of application of mind on the part of Central Government. Under S. 314 (1-B) approval of the Central Government is required only if the salary that is proposed to be paid to a relative of the Manager is not less than Rs. 3000. In the initial order which was passed in the present case, the Central Government approved the salary of Rupees 2500 in the pay scale of Rs. 2500-50-3000. Clearly for such a salary scale, there is no need to obtain the sanction of the Central Government. While passing the initial order the Central Government did not take into account even the provisions of S. 314 (1-B) of the Act. V. R. Manohar and A. B. Oka, for Petitioners; M. G. Bhangade, for Respondent.

SMT. SUJATA MANOHAR, J.:— In this petition the first petitioners have sought approval under the provisions of S. 314 (1-B) of the Companies Act to the appointment of the second petitioner as Administrative Officer of the first petitioner Company on a salary of Rs. 4000 in the pay-scale of Rs. 4000-250-5250. The second petitioner is the younger brother of the General Manager of the first petitioner Company and accordingly sanction is required for his being appointed as Administrative Officer in the pay scale of Rs. 4000-250-5250. The second petitioner is a graduate. He is working with the first petitioner since 1954. He was designated as Assistant Manager with effect from 1-4-1967 and his remuneration was fixed at Rs. 1500 per month in the pay-scale of Rs. 1500-100-2000 with effect from 1-4-1967. He reached the maximum in the scale on 1-4-1972. Thereafter on account of the 25% increase in the salary which was granted by the first petitioner to all its employees, he started drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 2500 with effect from 1-9-1973. By a special resolution passed by the Company on 14-1-1978 he was appointed Administrative Officer and he was given a salary of Rs. 4000 in the pay scale of Rs. 4000-250-5250 with effect from 1-7-1977. Thereafter by its letter dated 31-1-1978 the first petitioner applied to the Central Government for its approval to the above appointment giving all relevant material. By its order dated 29-6-1978 the Central Government granted its approval to the second petitioner being appointed as Administrative Officer. However, it accorded its sanction to a reduced increase in the salary of the second petitioner. It sanctioned a salary of Rs. 2500 per month in the pay-scale of Rs. 2500-50-3000, effective from 1-7-1977. The other terms and conditions imposed by this order were similar to the terms and conditions imposed in the order in Special Civil Appln. No. 160 of 1979: (Reported in AIR 1982 Bom 41). Thereafter on the application of the first petitioners, this order was revised by the Central Government by its order dated 25-10-1978. By the revised order the Central Government granted its approval to a fixed salary of Rs. 3000 and other terms and conditions of the previous letter were to remain unaltered.

2. For the reasons set out in our judgment in Special Civil Appln. No. 160 of 1979: (Reported in AIR 1982 Bom 41), these two orders which are in terms identical with the orders in Special Civil Appln. No. 160 of 1979, except for the quantum of salary, are also passed without application of mind. In the present case, there is another additional factor which also further strengthens the conclusion that the orders are passed without application of mind. Under S. 314 (1-B) of the Companies Act, approval of the Central Government is required only if the salary that is proposed to be paid to a relative of the Manager is not less than Rs. 3000. In the initial order which was passed in the present case, the Central Government approved the salary of Rs. 2500 in the pay-scale of Rs. 2500-50-3000. Clearly for such a salary scale, there is no need to obtain the sanction of the Central Government. While passing the initial order the Central Government did not take into account even the provisions of S. 314 (1-B) of the Companies Act, much less the relevant material supplied by the petitioner Company. In the case of the second petitioner in this petition his salary increase has been approved with effect from 1-7-1977 while in the case of the second petitioner in Special Civil Appln. No. 160 of 1979 the increase in salary is approved only with effect from 1-2-1978. There is nothing in the orders to indicate why such a distinction has been made between the two sets of orders by the Central Government.

3. For the reasons set out above as also in our judgment in Special Civil Appln. No. 160 of 1979: (Reported in AIR 1982 Bom 41), the present petition is allowed. The orders of the Central Government dated 29-6-1978 and 25-10-1978 with reference to the second petitioner are set aside and the respondent is directed to issue fresh orders under S. 314 (1-B) read with S. 637-A of the Companies Act after taking into consideration the material supplied by the first petitioners. The respondent will pay to the petitioners the costs of this petition.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 50

DESAI AND LENTIN, JJ.

J. Satyavrata and another, Petitioners v. Mohamedbhai Abdulhussen Sadiq Bahreinwalla and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 2350 of 1977, D/- 24/25-3-1980.

(A) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 24 — Word “withhold” — Connotes withdrawal or deprivation of essential supply or service by some indirect or negative act on part of landlord, i.e., by his failing to do what he was bound to do and what was within his power and control to do. 1973 Cri LJ 1848 (Bom), Overruled. (Rent Control — Withdrawal or deprivation of essential supply or service).

There is nothing in S. 24 or in Explan. II for that matter, to warrant the conclusion that Explan. II can be said to limit the scope and ambit of the word ‘withhold’ in sub-section (1) or the word ‘withheld’ in sub-sec. (3). Also, the words ‘cut-off’ and ‘withheld’ do not have the same shade of meaning. They have different meanings with well-marked and distinct connotations and, cannot be read ejusdem generis with each other. The word “withhold” in S. 24 (1) connotes the withdrawal or deprivation of an essential supply or service by some indirect means or act on the part of the landlord. Thus, where a landlord wrongfully fails to do something, whereby he indirectly deprives the tenants of the essential supply or service enjoyed by them and which they are entitled to enjoy, the landlord can be said to have withheld such essential supply or service, even though he may have done no direct act to that end. The various shades and nuances of the meaning of the word ‘withhold’ disclose the holding or keeping back or refraining on the part of the landlord the granting or continuing to grant to the tenants the essential supply or service, which it is within the power and control of the landlord to make available to the tenants. Thus, while the word ‘cut-off’ is positive and applies where the withdrawal or deprivation of the essential supply or service is brought about by some direct and positive act or means on the part of the landlord, the word ‘withhold’ connotes some negation on the part of the landlord which results in the essential supply or service not being made available to the tenants even though it is within the landlord’s power and control to make available.

(Para 14)

Despite the fact that the essential service has come to an end not on account of any act directly done by the landlord but on account of an act done by a third party or by reason of some factor over which the landlord had no direct control, even so, he can be said to have withheld the supply or service if it was within his power and control to get the same restored and despite that, failed to do so.

(Para 16)

The instances given in Explan. II are merely illustrative and not exhaustive as is apparent from the use of the words “shall include” in the Explanation and a landlord can be said to withhold an essential supply or service even without the intervention of the local or competent authority, if the act or omission is “attributable to the landlord”. In such a case, while the landlord no doubt may do no direct or overt act resulting in the cessation of the essential supply or service, he can certainly be said to have withheld it by some indirect or negative act, namely, by his failing to do what he was bound to do and what was within his power and control to do. AIR 1978 Guj 121 and AIR 1958 SC 444, Rel. on; Criminal Appeal No. 123 of 1966, D/- 1-5-1968 (SC), Refd.; (1960) 62 Bom LR 380, Explained; 1973 Cri LJ 1848 (Bom), Overruled.

(Para 14)

(B) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 24 — “Just or sufficient cause” — A cause is “just or sufficient” if it is reasonable, bona fide and substantial and does not allow a landlord to take advantage of or perpetuate his own wrong.

The liability of the landlord not to cut off or withhold an essential supply or service is concomitant with the right of the tenant to receive it. That right, however, is not absolute in all sets of circumstances. In a given case, it would be open to the landlord to establish that he is absolved from his liability provided he makes out a just or sufficient cause. This would, of course, apply only in cases where the landlord himself, or anyone acting or purporting to act on his behalf, has not wrongfully done any direct or overt act or failed to do something he was bound to do, thereby resulting in wanton deprivation of such essential supply or service. No landlord can deliberately or wantonly create a situation and then claim just or sufficient cause in extenuation of his liability arising out of a situation of his own creation. What is just or sufficient cause must necessarily depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Several factors may arise for consideration, to wit, the degree of the essentiality and nature of the supply or service, namely conservancy and sanitation, water, electricity, lift and so forth. In a fit case, the amount which the landlord would have to spend in restoring such supply or service may also be taken into consideration, provided, of course, the deprivation of such supply or service is not the result of some wanton act or omission on the part of the landlord himself. In brief, a cause is "just or sufficient" when it can be said to be reasonable, bona fide and substantial and which does not allow a landlord to take advantage of or perpetuate his own wrong. (Para 17)

Held, in the instant case, the defects pointed out by the Inspector of Lifts arose out of the direct act or default on the part of the landlords themselves in not maintaining the lift in a proper condition which they were bound to do. Therefore, the landlords could not be allowed to take advantage of their own wrongful conduct in not keeping the lift in proper order and maintenance and thereafter plead an alleged expenditure of Rs. 20,000/- as a just or sufficient cause for not setting right the defects, which it was within their power to do and which would not have arisen in the first place but for their utter neglect of this essential service. V. T. Walwalkar with J. J. Miranda and Narendra Walwalkar, for Petitioners; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondents.

LENTIN, J.:— The two petitioners before us are the tenants of flats on the 2nd and 4th floors of New Readymoney Building (renamed Alhafiz Building) situate at Clare Road, Byculla, Bombay. The respondents are the present landlords of this building which comprises of a ground and four upper floors and has in all 55 tenants. The tenants were in enjoyment of the service of a lift in this building. It appears that in 1974 the respondents' predecessors-in-title had partially withdrawn the lift facility by restricting the working hours of the lift from 10.00 a.m. to 2.00 p.m. and from 4.30 p.m. till 8.30 p.m. in the place of the original working hours, viz. from 9.00 a.m. till 9.00 p.m. Criminal proceedings were thereupon initiated against the respondents' predecessor-in-title by the tenants which resulted in the restoration of the lift service to the original hours, viz. from 9.00 a.m. to 9.00 p.m. and the concomitant withdrawal of the criminal proceedings. On 1st April, 1975, the respondents became the owners of New Readymoney Building, whereafter, according to the petitioners, the respondents started harassing the tenants in various ways, with the result that the tenants filed proceedings against the landlords in the Court of Small Causes for fixation of standard rent and for a permanent injunction restraining the respondents from cutting off the electric supply. In Dec., 1975, the lift facility was totally withdrawn by the landlords and despite the tenants' requests to them, the same was not restored. Thereupon in March, 1976 the present petitioners and another tenant, one Mrs. Mendes, residing on the 3rd floor, filed an Application No. 424/RES of 1976 in the Court of Small Causes against the landlords under S. 24 (3) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (referred to hereafter as "the Rent Act"), for restoration of the lift facility. In those proceedings, no reply was filed by the landlords themselves. However, their Rent Farmer one Shoeb (Shaikh) Hashim Contractor filed a reply denying that the landlords had cut off or withheld the lift service either directly or indirectly and urged that if they had done so, it was for just or sufficient cause on the ground that the lift having been installed prior to 1940 had outlived its utility; that the cost of repairs would be in the vicinity of Rupees 20,000/- which the landlords could ill-afford; and that even if repairs were carried out to the lift, no useful purpose would be served as the repairs would not last for any length of time. In those proceedings, the petitioners and other tenants gave evidence. The landlords however did not step into the witness-box but contented themselves by leading the evidence of their Rent Farming Contractor. The trial Court passed its impugned order on 7th Dec., 1976. Following the decision of the learned single Judge of this Court in Dhanrajmal Gobindram & Co. Pvt. Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra, 75 Bom LR 245: (1973 Cri LJ 1848), the trial Court upheld the landlords' contentions and dismissed the tenants' application, holding that it had not been established that the landlords had cut off or withheld the lift service and that if they had done so, it was for just or sufficient cause. The petitioners thereupon preferred a revision application to the appellate side of the Court of Small Causes. Relying on the decision in Dhanrajmal's case, the lower appellate Court held that while it was the landlords' case that the repairs required to be carried out by the Lift Inspector would come to Rs. 20,000/- (Rupees twenty thousand), the landlords had failed to adduce any reliable evidence that the cost of the repairs would be that much. It was further held that on the showing of the tenants themselves the cost of repairs would come to Rs. 2,000/- (Rupees two thousand) but even that expenditure the landlords could not be asked to incur as rents are controlled by the Rent Act. With the observation that—

"..... it is difficult to see that how in this case it can be said with certainty that the respondents had done a particular act or deliberately omitted to do an act which they were bound to do and which has resulted in the stoppage of the lift. The only thing that can be definitely said against the respondents is that they have not carried out the repairs as informed by the Lift Inspector in his letter at Ext. 4", the lower appellate Court dismissed the petitioners' revision application on 31st Aug., 1977.

2. Hence the present Special Civil Application was filed by the present petitioners for setting aside the impugned orders dated 7th Dec., 1976 and 31st August, 1977 passed by the trial Court and the lower appellate Court respectively, and for restoration of the lift service from 10.00 a.m. to 2.00 p.m. and from 4.00 p.m. to 8.30 p.m.

3. This Special Civil Application came up before our learned Brother Dharmadhikari, before whom it was urged on behalf of the petitioners that the lower Courts were in error in following the decision of the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) (Bom) in preference to an earlier decision of another learned single Judge of this Court in the case of Bombay Bullion Association Ltd. v. Jivatlal Pratapsi, (1960) 62 Bom LR 380. To the contrary were the submissions urged on behalf of the respondents. In view of the apparently conflicting decisions of the two learned single Judges of this Court in Dhanrajmal's case and the Bombay Bullion case, Dharmadhikari, J. was of the view that the matter should be placed before a Division Bench and accordingly reported the matter to the learned Chief Justice. It is in these circumstances that the present Special Civil Application has come up before us.

4. In challenging the impugned orders, Mr. Walwalkar, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioners, urged that the lower Courts were in error in applying the ratio laid down by the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) (Bom), instead of following the ratio laid down by another learned single Judge in the earlier Bombay Bullion case (1960-62 Bom LR 380). On the other hand, in supporting the impugned orders, Mr. Abhyankar, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the landlords, urged that the earlier decision in the Bombay Bullion case had been considered and disapproved by the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case and that being a later decision the lower Courts were correct in following the ratio laid down in Dhanrajmal's case which was the authoritative law on the subject and binding on the lower Courts. Such is the crux of the present controversy before us.

5. At this stage, it would be pertinent to recapitulate S. 24 of the Rent Act, which reads as under:—

"(1) No landlord either himself or through any person acting or purporting to act on his behalf shall without just or sufficient cause cut off or withhold any essential supply or service enjoyed by the tenant in respect of the premises let to him.

"(2) A tenant in occupation of the premises may, if the landlord has contravened the provisions of sub-sec. (1), make an application to the Court for a direction to restore such supply or service.

"(3) If the Court on inquiry finds that the tenant has been in enjoyment of the essential supply or service and that it was cut off or withheld by the landlord without just or sufficient cause, the Court shall make an order directing the landlord to restore such supply or service before a date to be specified in the order. Any landlord who fails to restore the supply or service before the date so specified shall for such day during which the default continues thereafter be liable upon a further direction by the Court to that effect to fine which may extend to one hundred rupees.

"(4) Any landlord, who contravenes the provisions of sub-sec. (1) shall, on conviction, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine or with both."

"Explanation I: In this section essential supply or service includes supply of water, electricity, lights in passages and on staircases, lifts and conservancy or sanitary service."

"Explanation II: For the purposes of this section, withholding any essential supply or service shall include acts or omissions attributable to the landlord on account of which the essential supply or service is cut off by the local authority or any other competent authority." (The underlining is ours to highlight the scope of the present controversy before us.)

6. A plain reading of S. 24 reveals 6 broad ingredients, namely, (i) that there must exist the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties qua the premises; (ii) that the supply or service in question must be an essential supply or service; (iii) that such essential supply or service was enjoyed by the tenants; (iv) that it was cut off or withheld; (v) that the cutting off or withholding was by the landlord himself or through any person acting or purporting to act on his behalf; and (vi) that the cutting off or withholding of such essential service was without just or sufficient cause.

7. In the present case, there is no controversy regarding the first three ingredients of Sec. 24 for it is nobody's case that they are not satisfied. Also not in dispute is the fact that this essential lift service was enjoyed by the tenants but is no longer available to them. The question that arises is whether this essential service was "cut-off" or "withheld" by the landlords and, if so, whether such cutting off or withholding was "without just or sufficient cause". The burden of establishing the cutting off or withholding the essential supply or service would undoubtedly be on the tenant. The Court would then have to ascertain whether the cutting off or withholding was "without just or sufficient cause". The tenant cannot be expected to establish the negative, viz. that the cutting off or withholding by the landlord was "without just or sufficient cause." In order to escape inculpation, the burden would be on the landlord to establish the positive, viz. that the cutting off or withholding of the essential supply or service was for "just or sufficient cause". That is for the landlord to establish and the burden is heavily upon him to do so.

8. With these introductory remarks, we shall advert to two decisions of the Supreme Court before analysing the two decisions of the learned single Judges of this Court in the Bombay Bullion case ((1960) 62 Bom LR 380) and Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848). In Kanaivalal Chandulal v. Indumati, 60 Bom LR 929 : (AIR 1958 SC 444), the facts were that the landlord's predecessor-in-title had made a default in the payment of municipal taxes, with the result that water supply was cut-off by the Municipality. The tenants called upon the landlord to get water connection restored with a threat of prosecution under Section 24 of the Rent Act if the landlord failed to do so. The landlord refused or neglected to have the water connections restored by making payment of Rs. 11-4-0 to the Municipality, with the result that the tenant filed a complaint under Section 24 of the Rent Act. On these facts, it was held by the Supreme Court that while the landlord may not have been directly responsible for cutting off the supply of municipal water and that it was within his power to get the supply restored by paying the prescribed fee, the tenant had not shown that she had enjoyed the amenity of the supply of the tap water from the Municipality at any time after the Act came into force, with the result that it could not be said that the offence under Section 24 (1) had been brought home to the landlord. In the unreported case of Bai Phoolvati Dharambir Agarwala v. Krishna Babu Kanchan, (1968) Criminal Appeal No. 123 of 1966, decided by the Supreme Court on 1st May, 1968, the facts were that a certain estate known as Morbaug belonged to one Morwala. Out of this estate, one open plot was leased out by Morwala to one Parab who constructed a chawl on this plot and had let it out to different tenants. Parab had his own property in which the electric meter was installed and during the period that Parab was the tenant of this plot and the landlord of his tenants in the chawl from 23rd Dec., 1949 to 20th Dec., 1963, he supplied electricity to all his tenants from his meter. On 10th Oct., 1963, Parab surrendered his leasehold rights and the chawl constructed by him was purchased by a third party. As a result thereof, with effect from 20th Dec., 1963, the electric supply to all the tenants stood cut-off and withheld. All the tenants of the chawl attorned tenancy to the new purchaser. One of the tenants filed a complaint against the purchaser for cutting off or withholding the electric supply within the meaning of subsections (1) and (4) of Section 24 of the Rent Act. The learned Magistrate convicted her and the conviction was upheld by the Bombay High Court. The Supreme Court observed as under :—

“Dr. V. D. Mahajan, learned counsel for the respondents, relied on the decision of this Court, in Kanaiyalal Chandulal Monim v. Indumati T. Potdar (AIR 1958 SC 444) where this Court had held that though the landlord may not have been directly responsible for cutting off supply of municipal water, nevertheless, it was within his power to get the supply restored, on payment of the prescribed fee, and any inaction in that regard, by the landlord would amount to an omission, within Explanation II to Section 24 of the Act. In this case, counsel points out that it is the duty of the appellant, after she became the owner of the property, to arrange for continuous supply of electricity in the same manner, as it was done, prior to her purchase.

“In our opinion, the finding arrived at by the trial Court as well as by the High Court are not based upon the evidence in the case and even the inferences drawn by the Courts do not flow from the facts. We have already referred to the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2, who have both admitted that they were not personally aware of the appellant cutting off electricity supply. It is also clear from their evidence that they were getting the supply of electricity, on payment of separate charges from Parab, through a meter, situated within his premises. Neither of the witnesses has spoken to the appellant having any right to compel Parab to supply electricity to the premises of the complainant. The casual statement made in the letter sent by the appellant, Ex. D, that in any event she was not bound to supply electricity has been taken out of its context by the Court to draw an inference that the appellant herself impliedly recognized her obligation in that regard. Reading the letter, as a whole and, if the letter is read in its entirety, no such inference or conclusion is possible. On the other hand, the appellant specifically pleads that she has not cut off electricity at all, and that statement of hers finds support from the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2. Nor can the letter dated April 18, 1964, written nearly four months after the complaint had been filed, be taken into account for holding that the appellant was adopting coercive methods, for instance, by cutting off supply of electricity on December 20, 1963 for getting vacant possession of the property. As we have already pointed out, the supply of electricity to the complainant was being done from a meter, situated in a property which was still in the possession of Parab. Whether the appellant has got any rights in respect of that meter or any right to get supply of electricity, from that meter, are all matters on which there is absolutely no evidence on record.

“The decision of this Court relied on by Dr. Mahajan does not help the respondents. That was a case where this Court held that it was within the power of the landlord to get supply of water restored, by payment being made to the Municipality. But in the case before us it has not been established that it was within the power of the appellant to get supply restored from the meter which was in the premises owned by Parab”

9. With these two decisions of the Supreme Court in the forefront, we shall advert to the decisions of the two learned single Judges of this Court in the Bombay Bullion case and Dhanrajamal's case, reported in (1960) 62 Bom LR 380 and 75 Bom LR 245 : (1973 Cri LJ 1848) which have raised the dust of the present controversy before us.

10. In the Bombay Bullion case, (1960) 62 Bom LR 380, the facts were that since 1939 the opponent, one Jivatlal Pratapsi, was the tenant of the 5th floor of a certain building owned by the petitioners. When the opponent took the premises on lease in 1939, there was no lift installed in the building but it was his case that the arrangement for the lift had already been made even before he came on the premises as the tenant of the petitioners and that it had been agreed between him and the landlords at the time of the lease that as a condition of the lease he would be supplied with the service of the lift when installed. In 1942, the lift was installed and the tenant used it for about 18 years until it went out of order in February, 1959. In April, 1959, the tenant made an application to the Court of Small Causes under Section 24 of the Rent

Act complaining that he had been deprived of the service of the lift which he enjoyed for 18 years till February 1959 as the landlords had omitted to put the lift in working order and prayed for a direction from the Court for restoration of the lift service to him. The landlords' contention was that the amenity of the lift had neither been withdrawn nor withheld by them but that the lift was not working owing to circumstances over which they had no control. It was the case of the landlords that the lift had become worn out and was incapable of being restored and that it was not possible for the landlords to replace it by a new lift for want of financial means. On these facts, it was urged on behalf of the landlords that Section 24 of the Rent Act was not attracted as there was no withholding of any essential supply or service within the meaning of that section and that the mere omission on the part of the landlords to repair the lift which was worn out and had fallen into disuse would not amount to withholding of any essential amenity enjoyed by the tenant. Reliance was also placed on Explanation II in support of these contentions. It was observed by the learned single Judge (Datar J.) that it was not quite clear how Explanation II supported the landlords' contention, inasmuch as that Explanation is only an inclusive explanation, and far from supporting the landlords' contention, appeared to indicate clearly that withholding of any essential supply or service included not merely those acts or omissions expressly described in that Explanation but also all other acts or omissions which resulted in such supply or service being withheld. At page 381 of the Report, it was further observed as under:—

"... . If the landlord locks the lift and makes it unavailable to his tenant, he has withheld an essential supply or service to him within the meaning of Section 24. If the landlord omits to effect necessary repairs to his lift or otherwise fails to keep it in working order and thus makes the lift unavailable, even then the result is the same; he has in fact withheld an essential supply or service to his tenant within the meaning of that section."

(The underlining is ours to emphasise the applicability of these observations to the facts of the matter before us, as will appear later in this judgment).

Before Datar J. in the Bombay Bullion case, reliance was placed on behalf of the landlords on the following observations of the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case (AIR 1958 SC 444 at p. 447) (supra):—

"It may also be pointed out that it is doubtful whether, before the second Explanation was inserted into the section, as aforesaid in 1953, the cutting off of the water supply by the Municipality, or the omission of the landlord to take steps to have the connection restored, would have come within the mischief of the penal section. Supposing the second Explanation was not there, could the prosecution attribute the cutting off of the connection by the Municipality and the subsequent refusal of the landlord to get the connection restored, as an act or omission of the landlord within the meaning of S. 24 (1)?" Datar J. observed as under:—

"The argument is that it is only by reason of the Explanation certain omissions as described therein were included in the word 'withhold' and the omission to effect repairs and put the lift in working condition being not any such omission as is mentioned in the Explanation cannot amount to withholding any essential supply or service within the meaning of Section 24. I do not think there is any substance whatever in this argument. As I have already stated, the Explanation only refers to certain acts or omissions and does not mean that acts or omissions which themselves result in the withholding of an essential supply or service are not to be included in the word 'withhold'. In fact, even in the passage from the judgment of the Supreme Court quoted above, their Lordships have described the expressions 'cutting off' or 'withhold' (paraphrased as refusal to get the connection restored) as an act or omission of the landlord within the meaning of S. 24 (1)." (The underlining is ours)

11. Coming to the later decision of learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case, 75 Bom LR 245: (1973 Cri LJ 1848), the facts in that case were that a three-storeyed building known as "Calcot House" once belonged to Sir Cawasji Jahangir. The respondents were in occupation of the entire third floor as tenants from 1936 at a monthly rent of Rs. 188.71. A lift had been installed in this building even before the respondents became the tenants from 13th Dec., 1965, the lift stopped working by which time Sir Cawasji Jahangir had ceased to be the owner and one M/s. Onkar Investments and Properties Ltd. had become owners of the building. The respondents called upon the landlords to repair the lift and to restore its operation. The landlords pleaded their inability to do so on the ground that it involved an expenditure of about Rs. 10,000/- which they wanted the tenant to share. The latter was however not agreeable to do so and insisted that the lift being essential service, he was entitled to get it restored under the provisions of the Rent Act. In the meanwhile accused No. 1 company purchased the property on 1st June, 1968. Accused Nos. 2 to 5 were the Directors of accused No. 1 company. Thereafter the respondents also called upon the accused to restore the lift service and on their failure to do so, lodged a complaint before the learned Presidency Magistrate under Section 24 (1) read with sub-sec. (4) of the Rent Act and in the Court of Small Causes under Section 24 (2) and (3) for restoration of the lift service. Amongst the defences taken by the accused before the learned Presidency Magistrate were that they had neither cut-off nor withheld the lift service, that the operation of lift was stopped due to a mechanical defect, and also by reason of the switch-over of the D. C. current to A. C. current by B. E. S. T. since 1965. On these admitted facts, it was observed by the learned single Judge at p. 247 (of Bom. L. R.) : (at pp. 1849, 1850 of Cri. L. J.) of the Report as under :—

“... .. it should be difficult to hold that the landlord cut-off or withheld the essential service of lift and deprived the tenant of such service by any act or omission on his or their part. The lift stopped working due to none of their acts or omissions. Some act of volition is implicit in the phraseology of the words “cut off” or “withhold”. Without any conscious, deliberate and voluntary act or omission on the part of the landlord, essential service of lift cannot be said to have been “cut off” or “withheld” by the accused. He cannot be held liable where stoppage of lift is due to the mechanical defect or to wear and tear of the machinery in the ordinary course or to the change of policy of the B. E. S. T. with regard to the supply of electrical energy..... Before the landlord is held guilty, some act or omission of his own volition must be found to have taken place which can be said to have caused the stoppage of the lift. This by itself was sufficient to acquit the accused and hold that the accused had not either cut off or withheld the essential service with regard to the lift and the question of conviction of the accused on these admitted facts and the plain wording of Section 24 (1) of the Act should not have arisen.” (The underlining is ours.)

It may also be stated, to complete the narration of facts, that it was also the contention of the accused in that case that the service of the lift could not be restored without the old worn out lift being replaced by a new lift involving an expenditure of about Rupees 50,000/- which they could not afford.

Construing the word “withhold” in S. 24 (1) of the Rent Act, the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case (75 Bom LR 245) : (1973 Cri LJ 1848) observed at page 247 (of Bom LR) : (at p. 1850 of Cri LJ) of the Report as under :—

“... .. The word ‘withhold’ in this sub-section (1) of Section 24 is preceded by the word ‘cut off’, and necessarily must get its colour therefrom. It is difficult to conceive of any process of cutting off without the volition of the person so cutting. The same must be said to be true of the word ‘withhold’. One can withhold only that which one was holding out or giving out or supplying. The very expression connotes voluntarily stopping of something which was being supplied voluntarily. But where, as here, operation of the lift gets blocked or stopped independently of any act or omission on the part of the landlord, due to the operation of some extraneous factor or factors, the landlord cannot be said to have ‘withheld’ the lift. His mere omission to repair the same or replace the same or ensure its continuance cannot be brought within the scope of its ordinary and natural connotation in the present context. In fact, the word ‘withhold’ is not susceptible of such wide connotation in view of the setting in which this word has been employed The section speaks of, (1) either the landlord himself cutting off or withholding such service or, (2) cutting off or withholding such service ‘through any person acting or purporting to act on his behalf’. Deprivation of such service due to any third factor or extraneous reason is plainly excluded from the sweep of this section in view of its peculiar phraseology”

After comparing the phraseology of S. 23 with that of S. 24 of the Rent Act, the learned single Judge observed that as against the positive obligation of the landlord to keep the premises in good and tenantable repair under S. 23, the phraseology of S. 24 (1) contemplates imposing a negative obligation and that the manner in which S. 24 (1) was couched, did not admit of imposing a positive obligation on the landlord to continue essential supply and services in any building, the operation of which was found to have been stopped due to some factor not attributable to any act or omission on the part of the landlord. After observing that S. 24 is a penal provision enjoining the landlord not to cut-off or withhold any essential supply or service on pain of imprisonment and fine, the learned single Judge continued that it was inconceivable that the legislature could have intended to make it obligatory on the part of the landlord to restore such essential supply or service in respect of the premises let, in the event of the machinery or apparatus pertaining thereto getting worn out in the ordinary course, on pain of penalty and imprisonment, when it had not cast any obligation on him to reconstruct the worn out premises let and had chosen to restrict his liability to keep it in tenatable repairs alone. At page 249 (of Bom LR) : (at pp. 1851, 1852 of Cri LJ) of the Report, it was further observed as under :—

“... .. Section 24 seems to have been aimed at ensuring that the landlord does not render the protection afforded to the tenant illusory by compelling him to vacate by deliberately depriving him of any essential supply or services or by some positive acts of omission and commission to that effect. Ensuring the continuance of such essential supplies and services to the tenant appears to be beyond the scope of the section. It will, therefore, not be permissible to import into S. 24 an obligation on the landlord, in the absence of any clearer language to that effect, to restore the essential supplies or services enjoyed by the tenant in respect of the premises, even when the same are lost to the tenant due to no fault of his.

The learned single Judge thereafter referred to the Supreme Court decision in Kanaiyalal's case (AIR 1958 SC 444) and the following observations therein, namely (at p. 447),

“It may also be pointed out that it is doubtful whether, before the second Explanation was inserted into the section, as aforesaid, in 1953, the cutting off of the water supply by the municipality, or the omission of the landlord to take steps to have the connection restored, would have come within the mischief of the penal section. Supposing the second Explanation was not there, could the prosecution attribute the cutting off of the connection by the municipality and the subsequent refusal of the landlord to get the connection restored, as an act or omission of the landlord within the meaning of S. 24 (1) ?”

Considering those observations, the learned single Judge opined that they unmistakably indicate that but for the expanded connotation of the word ‘withhold’ incorporated in Explanation II, such act or omission on the part of the landlord could not have attracted the penal consequences under S. 24 (4) and that it was possible to contend that Explanation II is only a clarificatory piece of legislation which did not in any manner detract from the above observations of the Supreme Court. It was further observed by the learned single Judge that Explanation II only sought to specify the acts or omissions of the landlord implicit in the section itself in view of this clarificatory amendment and that the true import and implication of the above observation were that the natural connotation of the word ‘withhold’ in the context is a restricted one, intended to cover only some positive acts or omissions resulting in the loss of amenities to the tenant. The learned single Judge also referred to the earlier decision of Datar J. in the Bombay Bullion case (1960-62 Bom LR 380) observing that while the ratio of that judgment undoubtedly supported the tenant in Dhanrajmal's case (75 Bom LR 245 : 1973 Cri LJ 1848) it ran counter to the specific observations quoted earlier by the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case. The learned single Judge further observed as under at page 252 (of Bom LR) : (at p. 1853 of Cri LJ) of the Report :—

“... .. If the matter were to rest there, it would have been necessary for me to consider referring this case to the Division Bench. I, however, find that the approach adopted by the learned Judge is not approved by the Supreme Court which is clear from its another judgment in Bai Phoolvati Dharambir Agarwala v. Krishna Babu Kanchan, ((1968) Criminal Appeal No. 123 of 1966, decided on 1st May, 1968).”

Quoting the following observations of Vaidialingam, J. in Phoolvati's case, namely, ...

“In our opinion, the findings, arrived at, by the trial Court, as well as, by the High Court, are not based upon the evidence, in the case, and even the inferences, drawn by the Courts, do the flow from the established facts. We have already referred to the evidence of P. Ws. 1 and 2, who have both admitted that they were not personally aware of the appellant cutting off electricity supply.” the learned single Judge observed :

“It is thus clear from the above observations as well as the discussion in the earlier parts of the judgment that the question posed by the Supreme Court was: whether cutting off of the electricity supply or withholding was done by the accused himself? and not: whether accused had exposed himself to penalty by not continuing to supply electricity by installing a fresh meter? On behalf of the tenant reliance was placed on the Supreme Court judgment in Kanaiyalal Chandulal v. Indumati, (AIR 1958 SC 444) and it was argued that it was the duty of the landlord, after she became the owner of the property to arrange for continuance of supply of electricity in the same manner it was done prior to her purchase. This contention was negatived by pointing out that electricity was supplied from a property which still was in the possession of ex-landlord Parab and there was no evidence of the new landlord having any rights in respect of that meter or any right to get the supply of electricity from that meter. The learned Judges then observed that the ratio of the earlier judgment of the Supreme Court was not applicable as in that case it was within the power of the landlord to get supply of water restored by payment of tax arrears to the Municipality. Their Lordships then observed:

“... in the case before us, it has not been established that it was within the power of the appellant, to get supply restored, from the meter which was in the premises owned by Parab.”

Construing the phraseology from the judgment of the Supreme Court “when it speaks of the supply of electricity being ‘within the power of the appellant’”, the learned single Judge concluded with the following observations at page 253 (75 Bom LR): (at pp. 1854-1855 of 1973 Cri LJ) of the Report:—

“... In the context the words ‘within the power’ can have no reference whatsoever to the financial capacity of the landlord. These words have been employed by the learned Judges to repel the contention of the complainant that the landlord had withheld the supply of electricity and it was answered by saying that the landlord cannot be said to have withheld the supply inasmuch as the meter located in the premises of Parab, who had ceased to be the landlord, is not proved to have been at the disposal of the new purchaser of the property. In my opinion, the emphasis laid by the learned Judges of the Supreme Court, on the absence of evidence of the new landlord having cut off the electricity, time and again, in the course of the judgment, and observation that before the landlord can be held guilty of withholding the supply, it shall have to be established that it was within his power to do so, thoroughly negatives the contention of Mr. Andhyarujina that the word ‘withhold’ in sub-section (1) of Section 24 should be so broadly construed as to mean even the conscious omission of the landlord to effect repairs in the lift or restore the lift or to replace the lift even when it became unworkable due to no fault of his.”

The learned single Judge set out the ratio in Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) by the following observations:—

“... The precise extent of liability of the landlord under any such implied obligation to keep the machinery and apparatus, from which essential supplies and services are made available to the tenant during the currency of contractual or statutory tenancy, shall have to be worked out in a properly instituted action in a competent Civil Court. Section 28 of the Rent Act is wide enough to deal with any such claim or question arising out of this Act or any of its provisions. I do not find it possible to spell out any such absolute liability of the landlord in this penal provision of Section 24 to continue the essential supplies and services to the tenant in respect of the premises let out to him, even when the tenant stands deprived thereof as a result of some extraneous factor with which the landlord had nothing to do either directly or indirectly.”

(The underlining is ours).

12. All these decisions referred to by us, including Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) (Bom) were considered by the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in State v. Sunderlal, AIR 1978 Guj 121. In that case, the question which arose before the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court was whether the landlord was bound to restore the essential supply or service when it was within his power to do so and whether his failure to do so amounted to withholding of the essential supply or service enjoyed by the tenant as contemplated by S. 24 (1) and made punishable under sub-sec. (4) of S. 24. The facts in that case were that two prosecutions were launched by two tenants against two landlords in the Court of the learned Judicial Magistrate under S. 24 (1) of the Act, the case of the tenants being that their respective premises had a facility of attached basket type latrines which were cleansed by sweepers employed by the Nagar Panchayat. In pursuance of a decision taken by Government to do away with manual sweeping of refuse, the local authorities issued a circular pursuant whereto the Nagar Panchayat of Dwarka directed the landlords to convert the basket type latrines into flush type latrines by a specified date. Both the landlords failed to do so. The Nagar Panchayat stopped providing services of sweepers for cleansing basket type latrines. The result was that the conservancy service provided to the tenants in both the cases came to an end. The tenants thereupon gave notice to the landlords calling upon them to restore the conservancy service which the landlords failed to do on the plea that it was not they who had cut off or withheld the essential service but that the same had come to an end as a result of the decision taken by the Nagar Panchayat in not providing the sweeping of latrines by human labour. Thus the landlords contended that there was no act or omission on their part which resulted in the cutting off or withholding of the essential service in question. The learned Magistrate rejected the landlords' plea as not being just or sufficient and convicted the landlords under S. 24 (4) read with sub-sec. (1) of the Act and sentenced them to a fine of Rs. 50/- and simple imprisonment for 10 days in case of default. Against that conviction and sentence, the landlords preferred revisional applications to the learned Sessions Judge who set aside the orders of conviction and sentence. Against the acquittals the State approached the High Court in appeal which appeals were decided by the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court, which allowed the appeals and upheld the convictions and sentence on the landlords.

13. The Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court considered the Supreme Court decisions and the decisions of the Bombay High Court in the Bombay Bullion case (1960-62 Bom LR 380) and Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) and after reproducing the observations of the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case (AIR 1958 SC 444) and of the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case, dissented from the latter with the following observations at page 126 of the Report :—

"The learned single Judge said that their Lordships have described the expressions 'cutting off' or 'withhold' (paraphrased as refusal to get the connection restored) as an act or omission of the landlord within the meaning of Section 24 (1). One thing is quite clear. The aforesaid observations do not purport to lay down that Explanation II is exhaustive of the acts or omissions attributable to the landlord which may result in withholding of essential supply or service. The learned single Judge in the later Bombay decision in Dhanrajmal's case, however, dissented from the earlier decision of the Bombay High Court in the Bombay Bullion Association's case and observed as under :

"With great respect to the learned Judge, I do not think that his judgment adequately explains or even attempts to explain the ratio of the Supreme Court passage quoted by me above'.

"With great respect, it is not possible to agree with the view of the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case (supra) in view of the reason given above by us."

(The underlining is ours.)

Applying the ratio laid down by the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case and citing with approval the decision of the learned single Judge of this Court in the Bombay Bullion case, the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court concluded with the following observations (at p. 126) :—

"... .. Applying the ratio laid down by the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case mentioned above and applying the correct connotation of the word 'withhold', it is clear that it was within the power of the landlords to get this conservancy service restored either by getting the latrine converted into aqua privy or water closet or by providing for its cleansing privately through human labour. No just or sufficient cause was made out in the trial Court for the omission to do so. Therefore, the conviction of the two landlords in the facts of this case was quite correct and proper."

14. With this ratio laid down by the Gujarat High Court (with which we are in respectful agreement) in the forefront, we are of opinion that in the facts of the matter before us, it is not possible to give to the word 'withhold' in Section 24 (1) the restricted meaning attributed to that word by the learned single Judge in Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) (Bom). A plain reading of S. 24 reveals that the legislature intended that a tenant in enjoyment of an essential service must get the protection of the law. It is in view thereof that S. 24 enjoins the landlord not to cut off and prohibits him from cutting off such essential service by some direct or overt act on his part. The words 'cut' or 'cut-off' have not been defined in the Act itself. Their dictionary meaning in the Random House Dictionary is as under :

"Cut 5. to hew or saw down; fell :... .. 18. to stop; half the running of Cut off the water 19 to cease; discontinue 20, to suspend or terminate ... 27. to switch off ... 38. to interfere."

"Cut-off. 1. an act or instance of cutting off, 2. something that cuts off ..."

Shorter Oxford Dictionary defines 'cut' and 'cut-off' as under:—

"Cut. The act of cutting ... To penetrate so as to sever the continuity of with an edged instrument ... To reduce by cutting; to trim, shear; to prune cut-off. An act of cutting off or portion cut off ... A stopping of a continuance or flow ..."

The fact that an act must be positive or direct is manifest from the positive phraseology 'cut-off' in sub-sections (1) and (3). In other words, the act which leads to the consequence complained of must necessarily be a positive or overt act on the part of the landlord, as for instance a landlord putting his lock to the lift or to the water pump or switching off the electric current and thereby depriving the tenants of the essential supply or service in question by a direct and overt act on his part. On the other hand, the word 'withhold' in S. 24 (1) connotes the withdrawal or deprivation of the essential supply or service by some indirect means or act on the part of the landlord, as for instance, when the electricity is cut-off by the supplier as a result of the default on the part of the landlord in paying electric bills or where an essential service like a lift ceases to be available to the tenants due to the wrongful failure on the part of the landlord to carry out necessary repairs, or undertake adequate maintenance, or effect replacement of parts, or due to the closing down of the lift facility by the Lift Inspector by reason of the wrongful failure on the part of the landlord to carry out requisitions. These are but a few illustrations when a landlord can be said to withhold an essential supply or service. Thus where a landlord wrongfully fails to do something, whereby he indirectly deprives the tenants of the essential supply or service enjoyed by them and which they are entitled to enjoy, the landlord can be said to have withheld such essential supply or service, even though he may have done no direct act to that end. Nowhere is the definition of the word "withhold" to be found in the Act. Shorter Oxford Dictionary defines 'withhold' as ...

"to hold back; to keep back; or refrain from granting or giving."

Random House Dictionary defines 'withhold' as ...

"to hold back; restrain or check, to refrain from giving or granting; to withhold payment to hold back; refrain."

Thus the various shades and nuances of the meaning of the word 'withhold' disclose the holding or keeping back or refraining on the part of the landlord the granting or continuing to grant to the tenants the essential supply or service, which it is within the power and control of the landlord to make available to the tenants. Thus while the word 'cut-off' is positive and applies where the withdrawal or deprivation of the essential supply or service is brought about by some direct and positive act or means on the part of the landlord, the word 'withhold' connotes some negation on the part of the landlord which results in the essential supply or service not being made available to the tenants even though it is within the landlord's power and control to make available. To illustrate, if by reason say of load-shedding or a power-cut, which are circumstances over which the landlord has no possible control, the essential supply or service cannot be made available to the tenants during certain hours, it is inconceivable that the tenants can be allowed to make any grievance on that score, because the load-shedding or the power-cut are certainly not circumstances within the power and control of the landlord and cannot be attributed to him. It is manifest that the instances given in Explanation II are merely illustrative and not exhaustive as is apparent from the words "shall include" in Explan. II. Thus a landlord can be said to withhold an essential supply or service not only in the manner illustrated in Explan. II but also in a variety of ways even without the intervention of the local or competent authority, provided, however, in any event, the act or omission is "attributable to the landlord". One instance would be the contumacious failure on the part of the landlord to carry out repairs or replace worn out or defective parts or failure to undertake regular maintenance of the essential service resulting after a lapse of time in the essential service becoming useless for the purpose it was meant to serve. Such failure is "attributable to the landlord" and is within his power and control to prevent. In such a case, while the landlord no doubt may do no direct or overt act resulting in the cessation of the essential supply or service, he can certainly be said to have withheld it by some indirect or negative act, namely, by his failing to do what he was bound to do and what was within his power and control to do. It is within the power and control, and for that matter it is a landlord's duty, to keep the essential supply or service available to the tenants by carrying out regular repairs and undertaking regular maintenance and by doing such other acts as would not result in the wanton deprivation of this facility to the tenants. No landlord can be heard to say — "I shall carry out no repairs. I shall undertake no maintenance. I shall not replace even a nut or a bolt. Let the service, be it essential, go to rack and ruin. I shall do nothing". If, as a result of such attitude, sooner or later the essential service or supply grinds to a halt, and is no longer available to the tenants for no fault of theirs, a landlord can be said to have withheld the essential supply or service in question by wantonly bringing about a state of affairs which it was in his power and control to have prevented in the first place. Thus no landlord can be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong and then be heard to plead that he has withheld nothing after wantonly creating a situation of his own making. In such a case, while a landlord may not have cut-off the essential supply or service, he can certainly be said to have withheld it, if it was within his power and control to have made available to the tenants. There is nothing in S. 24 or in Explanation II for that matter, to warrant the conclusion that Expln. II can be said to limit the scope and ambit of the word 'withhold' in sub-section (1) or the word 'withheld' in sub-section (3). On the plain reading of Section 24 and Expln. II, we are unable to hold that a limited or restricted meaning should be given to the word 'withhold'. The words 'cut-off' and 'withheld' do not have the same shade of meaning. They have different meanings with well-marked and distinct connotations and, in our opinion, cannot be read ejusdem generis with each other. This is brought to the forefront by the observations of the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case (60 Bom LR 929): (AIR 1958 SC 444): at p. 930 (of Bom LR): (at p. 446 of AIR) of the Report as under:—

"..... It may be that the appellant was not to blame for the default in payment of municipal dues, but it was open to him to pay Rs. 11-4-0 and have the water connection restored. He may not have been directly responsible for the cutting off of the supply of municipal water, but it was within his power to get the supply restored by the municipality on payment of the prescribed fee. Hence, in so far as the appellant omitted to do so, such an omission is attributable to him within the meaning of Expln. II which was inserted into the Act in 1953. There can, therefore, be no doubt, that the appellant was continuing to withhold an essential supply within the meaning of S. 24, as it stood in 1953."

(The underlining is ours.)

15. The above discussion and the observations of the Supreme Court in Kanaiyalal's case (AIR 1958 SC 444) make demonstrably clear that even where a landlord is not directly responsible for the deprivation of an essential service he would still be liable if he omits to get such service restored provided it is within his power and control to do so. In such circumstances, his failure to do so would amount to his withholding the essential supply or service. The above observations of the Supreme Court enunciating the correct test have been followed by the learned single Judge in the Bombay Bullion case (1960-62 Bom LR 380). However, with respect, it appears that in the later Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) (Bom) those observations of the Supreme Court do not appear to have been given their due weight in preference to other observations in that case, viz. (at p. 447):

"It may also be pointed out that it is doubtful whether, before the second Explanation was inserted into the section, as aforesaid, in 1953, the cutting off of the water supply by the municipality or the omission of the landlord to take steps to have the connection restored, would have come within the mischief of the penal section. Supposing the second Explanation was not there, could the prosecution attribute the cutting off of the connection by the municipality and the subsequent refusal of the landlord to get the connection restored, as an act or omission of the landlord within the meaning of S. 24 (1)?"

This aspect has been dealt with by the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in Sunderlal's case (AIR 1978 Guj 121) by the observations indented in para 13 of this judgment.

16. Thus the test is — was it within the power and control of the landlord to have the essential supply or service restored even though he himself may not have been responsible directly for its discontinuance. Despite the fact that the essential service has come to an end not on account of any act directly done by the landlord but on account of an act done by a third party or by reason of some factor over which the landlord has no direct control, even so, he can be said to have withheld the supply or service if it is within his power and control to get the same restored and despite that, fails to do so. Thereby the landlord refrains from restoring and making available to the tenants the essential supply or service even though it is within his power and control to restore and make available to them. For instance, if the electric current is cut off by the supplier for failure of the landlord to pay electricity bills the landlord can be said to have withheld the essential supply or service because it is within his power and control to have the electricity restored and thereby making the essential supply or service in question available to the tenants by the expedient of paying the electricity bills which it was the landlords' obligation to do in the first place. In brief, applying the "power and control" test, even though a landlord may not be directly responsible for cutting off the essential supply or service, if it is within his power and control to get the same restored, and even so, fails to do so, his act would amount to withholding the essential supply or service. In coming to this conclusion we are fortified by the observations of the Gujarat High Court in Sunderlal's case (AIR 1978 'Guj 121) at page 125 of the Report as under:—

"where the landlord is not directly responsible for the deprivation of the tenant of the essential supply or service, if it is within his power to get the supply or service restored and he omits to do so, such an omission would amount to withholding of the essential supply or service by the landlord. This is because, by this omission he is refraining from granting or giving the privilege of the supply or service to the tenant though it is within his power to restore the same. Looking to the context in which the word 'withhold' occurs and keeping in mind the legislative object, we find no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that in a case where the essential service or supply has come to an end not on account of any direct act done by the landlord but on account of the act done by a third party, or on account of any factor over which the landlord had no control, the landlord can be said to have withheld the supply or service if he omits to get it restored though it is within his power to do so. His omission in such a case amounts to refraining from granting or giving the privilege of the supply or service to the tenant The test is that even though the landlord may not be directly responsible for cutting off of the supply or service, if it was within his power to get the same restored and he omits to do so, that act of his amounts to withholding supply or service"

We are in respectful agreement with these observations of the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in Sunderlal's case.

17. The question that next arises is, what is the meaning and implication of the words "just or sufficient" in sub-sections (1) and (3). The liability of the landlord not to cut off or withhold an essential supply or service is concomitant with the right of the tenant to receive it. That right, however, is not absolute in all sets of circumstances. In a given case, it would be open to the landlord to establish that he is absolved from his liability provided he makes out a just or sufficient cause. This would, of course, apply only in cases where the landlord himself, or anyone acting or purporting to act on his behalf, has not wrongfully done any direct or overt act or failed to do something he was bound to do, thereby resulting in wanton deprivation of such essential supply or service. No landlord can deliberately or wantonly create a situation and then claim just or sufficient cause in extenuation of his liability arising out of a situation of his own creation. No landlord can be heard to plead just or sufficient cause of what he himself has been responsible directly or indirectly by bringing about a situation of his own making. He does so at his peril. To illustrate, no landlord can curtail the longevity or hasten the demise of an essential service say like a lift by failing to carry out repairs or failing to undertake proper maintenance or failing to do what a prudent and reasonable person would do or by doing what a prudent and reasonable person would not do, and then be heard to plead with any degree of success "just or sufficient" cause in mitigation or as an extenuating circumstance of his own wanton act or omission, direct or indirect. In a word, no landlord can create a situation and then be heard to plead just or sufficient cause resulting from a situation of his own making. Such a cause is neither "just" nor "sufficient". What is just or sufficient cause must necessarily depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Several factors may arise for consideration, to wit, the degree of the essentiality and nature of the supply or service, namely conservancy and sanitation, water, electricity, lift and so forth. In a fit case, the amount which the landlord would have to spend in restoring such supply or service may also be taken into consideration, provided, of course, the deprivation of such supply or service is not the result of some wanton act or omission on the part of the landlord himself. If it is the result of some direct act on the part of the landlord or the result of an indirect cause which was within the power and control of the landlord to prevent, the landlord is bound and liable to restore such supply or service, irrespective of the cost he may have to undergo, for he cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong and then plead a large expenditure as just or sufficient cause for not incurring it in order to restore a service which it was within his power and control not to deprive the tenants of and is within his power and control to restore. It would indeed be a rare and exceptional case where a landlord can be heard to plead with any degree of success 'just or sufficient cause' in the case of the most essential and basic amenity like conservancy, sanitation or water supply, irrespective of cost and even if for their restoration the landlord may have to go out-of-pocket. The most important consideration is the manner in which the essential supply or service came to an end. We emphasise that if deprivation of the essential supply or service was the result of any wanton act or default on the part of the landlord, or the result of an indirect act which was within his power and control to prevent, he cannot be allowed to plead an exorbitant cost in extenuation of his own wrong, and which would not have resulted in the deprivation of the essential supply or service had he been careful and vigilant to start with. In brief, a cause is "just or sufficient" when it can be said to be reasonable, bona fide and substantial and which does not allow a landlord to take advantage of or perpetuate his own wrong.

18. We have set out these broad principles in an attempt to reconcile the apparently divergent views expressed by the two learned single Judges of this Court, respectively, in the Bombay Bullion case (1960-62 Bom LR 380) and Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848). While the reasoning in the earlier decision in the Bombay Bullion case appears to advocate complete immunity to the tenant, the reasoning in the later decision in Dhanrajmal's case appears to propound complete immunity to the landlord in its interpretation of Sec. 24. We have chosen to follow the middle path and to that end have set out the broad principles based on the "Power and control" test.

19. With this test in the forefront, the question that arises is whether the present landlords have made out their case of just or sufficient cause pleaded by them. Indisputably the lift service has not been available to the tenants from Dec., 1975. It has not been suggested to us, and rightly so, that the tenants had failed to discharge the burden upon them. It is not even the landlords' case that the non-availability of the lift service was by reason of any wrongful act or default on the part of the tenants. The question that arises is whether the landlords have discharged the burden of proof, namely that they had just or sufficient cause in withdrawing this essential amenity. It may be recalled that the defence of the landlords in the lower Courts was that the lift having been installed prior to 1940 had outlived its utility and that the cost of repairs would come to a sum of Rs. 20,000/- which the landlords could ill-afford and further that even if the repairs were carried out by them, no useful purpose would be served because the repairs would not last for any length of time. In respect of these defences taken up by the landlords, it may also be recalled that they did not offer to lead their own evidence but satisfied themselves by leading the evidence of their Rent Farmer, Shoeb (Sheikh) Hashim Contractor. It is not in dispute that shortly prior to the withdrawal of the lift service in Dec., 1975, a girl residing in that building had lost one of her fingers as a result of an accident due to the lift suddenly moving when it was not supposed to. Thereafter the Inspector of Lifts ordered the lift to be stopped as it required certain repairs. These repairs the landlords refused to carry out for the reasons stated earlier. The respondents' Rent Farming Contractor admitted in his evidence that the lift was not in a working condition since the middle of Dec., 1975 and that a communication dated 16th Aug., 1975 had been received by the landlords from the Inspector of Lifts requesting them to rectify the defects in the lift by 31st August, 1975 and report written compliance. The defects listed were 16 in number, namely, (1) that the lift was moving when the car gate was open, (2) the final limit was rusted and was mal-functioning, (3) the lift gave jerks while stopping, (4) replacement of broken pickets of landing gates, (5) repair of defective locks of landing gates, (6) discontinuance of using the machine room as a store room or living room, (7) replacement of the missing load place inside the car, (8) repair of the phase failure relay, (9) replacement of the broken fuse bridge of the main switch, (10) cleaning the machine room and lift parts, (11) replacement of worn out parts in the machine to eliminate noise, (12) providing bell push button and call bell on the landings, (13) the narrowing doors to 25 mm. the gap between the car edge and the landing edge, (14) providing a counter-weight protection screen up to the height of 2 metres, (15) providing a carpet on the car platform so as to make the platform smooth and non-slippery, and (16) replacement of the missing handle of landing gates. Such were the defects noticed by the Inspector of Lifts which the landlords were called upon to rectify. Here it may be mentioned that even before the letter of 16th August, 1975 was addressed by the Lift Inspector to the landlords, an earlier letter dated 18th July, 1975 had also been sent to the landlords by the Lift Inspector stating that on inspection of the lift defects had been noticed. As these defects had not been removed, the Inspector of Lifts again sent his subsequent letter dated 16th Aug., 1975.

20. It is not in dispute that the defects pointed out by the Lift Inspector were the only defects in the lift. This is brought to the forefront by the admission in evidence of the landlords' Rent Farmer who has stated that the lift was defective in the manner described by the Lift Inspector in his letter dated 16th August, 1975. He admitted that in Nov., 1975 a child operating the lift had lost one of her fingers as a result of an accident by reason of the fact that the lift would operate even when the car door was open and that on an inspection of the lift by the Lift Inspector, it was at his insistence that the lift service had been discontinued.

21. Can a landlord be heard to plead just or sufficient cause on the ground that tenants have been deprived of this essential amenity because the Lift Inspector insisted on the discontinuance of the lift in these circumstances? Certainly not. In the facts and circumstances of the present matter, there can be no doubt that the defects pointed out by the Inspector of Lifts arose out of the direct act or default on the part of the landlords themselves in not maintaining the lift in a proper condition which they were bound to do. There is nothing on record to indicate that the landlords had done anything that was within their power and control to keep the lift in a proper condition or in proper repairs, or that they had even entered into any maintenance contract for its due maintenance and repairs. On the contrary, there is the admission of the landlords' rent farmer that no maintenance contract had been entered into by the landlords for the due upkeep of the lift. In other words, the landlords sat back, did nothing towards keeping the lift in a working condition and wantonly allowed the lift to develop the defects listed by the Lift Inspector which were within their power and control to prevent by taking reasonable care which they totally and absolutely failed to do. It does not behove the landlords not to carry out the barest of repairs, undertake no maintenance, take no proper and reasonable care of the lift and thereafter plead helplessness on their part. The degree of the landlords' culpability is demonstrated by the startling fact that the Lifts Inspector found the machine room being used as a store room or living room which the landlords were directed to discontinue from doing. The respondent-landlords cannot be allowed to take advantage of their own wrongful conduct in not keeping the lift in proper order and maintenance and thereafter plead an alleged expenditure of Rs. 20,000/- as a just or sufficient cause for not setting right the defects, which it is within their power to do and which would not have arisen in the first place but for their utter neglect of this essential service. What also is important is that there is nothing beyond the ipse dixit of the respondents' Rent Farmer in his evidence that an amount of Rs. 20,000/- would have to be incurred for setting right the defects in this lift and that the respondents do not have the necessary funds. The landlords themselves have chosen to give no evidence. Not a single scrap of documentary evidence has been produced by the respondents or by their Rent Farmer in order to establish that they would have to incur an expenditure of Rs. 20,000/- as alleged by them. The cross-examination on this aspect of the respondents' Rent Farming Contractor discloses in no uncertain terms the unreliability of his ipse dixit that a sum of Rs. 20,000/- would have to be expended for curing the defects in the lift. The mere assertion by the landlords' Rent Farming Contractor that the landlords do not have the necessary funds is futile when significantly enough the landlords themselves have not chosen to step into the witness-box. No explanation is forthcoming for this curious lapse on their part. Be that as it may, in a case such as this, where the defects have arisen as a direct result of the wanton acts and omissions on the part of the landlords themselves, it does not now lie in their mouths to plead an alleged expenditure of

Rs. 20,000/- after having been responsible for reducing the lift into the condition in which it was found by the Lift Inspector. The mala fides on the part of the landlords is further demonstrated by the fact that the defects enumerated by the Lift Inspector cannot be said to be any major defects requiring any major repairs or a large expenditure. Most of these defects are of a minor character and some of them are quite trifling. According to the tenants, the cost of rectifying these defects would be in the vicinity of about Rs. 2,000/- though that suggestion has been denied by the respondents' Rent Farming Contractor, according to whom the expenditure would be Rupees 20,000/-, for which there is nothing beyond his bare word. While the landlords have chosen to lead no evidence of income or outgoings in respect of this property, we are informed across the Bar that the annual rents received by the landlords came to Rs. 43,720/- as against the total annual outgoings aggregating to Rs. 20,000/- including taxes. The failure therefore of the landlords to give evidence themselves becomes understandable for their presence in the witness-box would have exposed the hollowness of their pretence of financial inability. In these circumstances, there can possibly be no justification for the landlords to plead financial disability in carrying out the repairs. The landlords' further ground of resistance, namely that the lift had outlived its utility is also of no substance in view of the admission made by their Rent Farming Contractor in evidence that there is nothing in the communication of the Lift Inspector and the defects pointed out by him to suggest that the lift had become so useless that it was irreparable. The evidence of the landlords' Rent Farmer discloses the total hollowness of the defences taken up by the landlords in a vain attempt to establish just or sufficient cause. The record discloses nothing which can be said to be just or sufficient cause for the landlords not carrying out the repairs to the lift as required by the Lift Inspector. It was within the power and control of the landlords not to have reduced the condition of the lift to what it is. It is also within their power and control to make this essential service once again available to the tenants by carrying out the requisite repairs.

22. This is a gross case where nothing can be said in mitigation for the landlords. We were informed across the Bar that the landlords have even taken away the lift motor and that all that remains at present is the cage. Mr. Abhyankar appearing for the landlords, however, stated that the motor has been removed by the landlords for safe keeping. If so, just as well for in that event they should have no difficulty in restoring it to its proper place instead of having to purchase a new one to put the lift in working condition to the satisfaction of the Lift Inspector. This the landlords shall do on or before 31st July, 1980.

23. Mr. Abhyankar ultimately invited us to remand this case back to the lower Court to enable the landlords to give evidence. Mr. Abhyankar urged that if this opportunity is given, the landlords will be able to establish just or sufficient cause. We have no difficulty in repelling this suggestion of Mr. Abhyankar, which is an application ad misericordiam. There is no reason and none was suggested, why the landlords did not choose to step into the witness-box when they had the opportunity to do so or why they contented themselves until now on relying upon the evidence of their Rent Farming Contractor, which instead of being of any assistance to the landlords has let the cat out of the bag. Having done so, it is not now open to the landlords to ask us to remand the case back to the lower Court for their evidence which they could have given earlier. The intention of the landlords is transparent, namely to put off the evil day.

24. We conclude this judgment with the observation that if we have differed from the reasoning of our learned Brother in Dhanrajmal's case (1973 Cri LJ 1848) (Bom) we have done so with the greatest respect and after a great deal of cogitation, alive as we are to his vast knowledge and legal acumen.

25. In the result, the impugned orders are set aside and the Special Civil Application is allowed in terms of prayers (a) and (b). The respondents shall restore the lift service in terms of prayer (b) and obtain the requisite clearance certificate from the Lift Inspector on or before 31st July, 1980. In default, liberty to the petitioners to apply to this Court for further orders in accordance with S. 24 (3) of the Rent Act. As this controversy involved in the main a legal point, namely the interpretation of Sec. 24, there will be no order as to costs throughout.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 66

MODY, J.

B. J. Patel, Plaintiff v. M/s. Vadilal Dolatram and Sons and others, Defendants.

Notice of Motion No. 1608 of 1980 (In Suit No. 1816 of 1979), D/- 5-2-1981.

Transfer of Property Act (4 of 1882), S. 52 — Application for relief from lis pendens — Principles to be applied.

Though there cannot be any exhaustive enumeration of principles to be applied in considering an application for relief from lis pendens one thing is clear that this is a discretionary order and lis pendens is a rule and relief is an exception and strong grounds must be made out to deprive the plaintiff of the fruits of litigation. (Para 4)

This being a discretionary relief, it will depend on the several circumstances which inter alia, can be, the nature of the plaintiff's case and the defence, the nature of property market and the circumstances of the defendants. If the Court is convinced on the affidavits and the pleadings that even if all the evidence was led by the parties there is a very strong probability that the plaintiff will lose the matter, it will be a very important factor, possibly conclusive for granting relief. The Court will also have to consider the inconvenience and injustice that is likely to be caused to the defendants if the relief is not granted and balance it with the inconvenience and injustice that is likely to be caused to the plaintiff if the relief from lis pendens is granted. The Court must necessarily take into consideration the price at which the property is allegedly agreed to be sold originally and the present market value. In case the plaintiff offers to purchase the property at the value of the property on the date of application as alleged by the defendant then no injustice can be caused to the defendants if condition is imposed that the defendants should sell the property to the plaintiff at that price or application is refused. However, if in addition to this the plaintiff is willing to give up rest of his claim, this will confer additional benefit on the defendants and the balance will certainly tilt in favour of the plaintiff. (Para 5)

The defendant is not entitled to make it a matter of prestige, by insisting on selling the property to outsiders though he is getting a fair market value from the plaintiff.

(Para 6)

M. Ghelani with S. J. Rahimtoola, for Plaintiff; J. I. Mehta with H. H. Mody, for Defendants.

ORDER:— This is an application by the defendants under the provisions of S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act for relief from lis pendens. The grounds urged in the affidavit-in-support of this application are, inter alia, that the plaintiff's suit is for specific performance of an alleged agreement which is oral only, that the 1st defendants' firm which has allegedly agreed to sell the property consists of partners who are very old and that they are not helped in the business by their sons who have their own independent business, that none of the defendants reside at the suit property, that the property is a valuable property worth about Rs. 20 lacs and that the defendants desire to wind up the affairs of the partnership and the main thing necessary for the purpose is to sell the property. The affidavit thereafter proceeds to narrate shortly the circumstances surrounding the alleged agreement and concludes that the entire case in the plaint is false and that the suit is filed only with a view to prevent the defendants from selling the property pending the suit. It is contended that in fact the plaintiff has no cause of action at all and that is the reason why the plaintiff did not apply for interim relief. It is stated that in the present uncertain conditions in the present property market, the defendants are anxious to sell the property and that several enquiries were received but the purchaser is not willing to make an agreement in view of the suit. From the said affidavit, one fact that clearly, emerges is that enquiries have been received from purchasers and it can therefore be safely presumed that the value of the property mentioned in the affidavit is obviously based on the said enquiries, and therefore, the value of about Rs. 20 lacs can be said to be a fair market value according to the defendants.

2. Mr. Mehta took me through the facts of the case with a view to convince me that the plaintiff does not have any case or in any event a very weak prima facie case. The case made out in the plaint is so weak as is hardly likely that the plaintiff will succeed in the suit. After Mr. Mehta completed his arguments, the case was adjourned for negotiations and it is being heard today.

3. Mr. Ghelani for the plaintiff states that his client is prepared to buy the said property for a price of Rs. 21,33,600/- which is equivalent to the value of the property as alleged by the defendants themselves and give up rest of the claim. This offer is not acceptable to the defendants.

4. The principles applicable to granting of relief from lis pendens are not available in any reported case nor are they given in the section. This being free from any reported case I have to form my own view as to what are the principles which are to be applied. Though, there cannot be an exhaustive enumeration of principles one thing is clear that this is a discretionary order and lis pendens is a rule and relief is an exception and strong grounds must be made out to deprive the plaintiff of the fruits of litigation.

5. This being a discretionary relief, it will depend on the several circumstances which inter alia, can be, the nature of the plaintiff's case and the defence, the nature of property market and the circumstances of the defendants. If the Court is convinced on the affidavits and the pleadings that even if all the evidence was led by the parties there is a very strong probability that the plaintiff will lose the matter, it will be a very important factor, possibly conclusive for granting relief. The Court will also have to consider the inconvenience and injustice that is likely to be caused to the defendants if the relief is not granted and balance it with the inconvenience and injustice that is likely to be caused to the plaintiff if the relief from lis pendens is granted. While comparing this comparative injustice and inconvenience, the Court must necessarily take into consideration the price at which the property is allegedly agreed to be sold originally and the present market value. In case the plaintiff offers to purchase the property at the value of the property on the date of application as alleged by the defendant then no injustice can be caused to the defendants if condition is imposed that the defendants should sell the property to the plaintiff at that price or application is refused. However, if in addition to this the plaintiff is willing to give up rest of his claim, this will confer additional benefit on the defendants and the balance will certainly tilt in favour of the plaintiff.

6. When the plaintiff has filed the suit and there is some evidence to show possibility of an agreement having been arrived at, supported by the facts of exchange of draft agreement and the letter of authority given in favour of the architect and when the plaintiff offers to buy the property at the present market value claimed by the defendants, and which is not accepted, it will be one of the strong grounds for refusing the relief of lis pendens as it discloses the bona fide of the plaintiff as against the lack of bona fides of the defendants. If the plaintiff offers a fair market value as on the date of the application for relief and when he has some case though it may be weak, it cannot be said that his claim is imaginary and if the defendants are not willing to sell at the present value alleged by the defendants themselves, it will be one of the grounds for refusing the relief from lis pendens. In an application of present type, the main purpose of the defendants in most cases has to be to get a proper market value and avoid possible future loss caused because of delay in litigation. The defendant is not entitled to make it a matter of prestige, by insisting on selling the property to outsiders though he is getting a fair market value from the plaintiff.

In the circumstances notice of motion is dismissed. Costs, cost in the cause.

Notice of motion dismissed.

MODY, J.

Central Bank of India, Plaintiff v. Femme Pharma Ltd. and others, Defendants.

Summons for Judgment No. 237 of 1980 (in Sum. Suit No. 597 of 1977), D/- 23-2-1981.

High Court of Bombay Original Side Rules (1980), R. 227 — Suit placed on board for dismissal — Court has wider discretion now than under the Rules of 1957 and is not bound to dismiss the suit. (Para 2)

P. P. Khambata, for Plaintiff; J. M. Patel, for Defendants.

ORDER:— Mr. Patel refers to R. 227 of the High Court Original Side Rules 1980 and to R. 220 (4) of the Rules of 1957 and contends that I must place the suit on board for dismissal and must dismiss the same. He says that under the old rule the Court had discretion to dismiss or not to dismiss the suit depending on whether sufficient cause is shown or not, while under the present rule there is no such discretion vested in Court. In my view the position is actually to the contrary.

2. Under the old rules, the Court's discretion was limited to sufficient cause being shown and if it was not shown the suit had to be dismissed. As against this the present rule only provides that the suit shall be placed on board for dismissal but it does not provide as to what is to happen thereafter. In my view the Court will, therefore, have a wider discretion now than before and the Court is not bound to dismiss the suit.

3. Application is rejected, particularly, in view of the fact that the summons for judgment is now taken out, even before the matter could be notified for being placed on board for dismissal.

JY/JY/E612/81/VRK/RSK

4. In view of the fact that the summons for judgment has been taken out after such delay, unconditional leave to defend. Suit transferred to the list of long causes. Written Statement within 8 weeks. Usual orders for discovery and inspection.

Ordered accordingly.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 68

DHARMADHIKARI, J.

Minoti, Appellant v. Sushil Mohansingh Malik and another, Respondents.

First Appeal No. 182 of 1981, D/- 29/30-4-1981.

Hindu Succession Act (30 of 1956), S. 25 — 'Murder' — Word 'murder' must be construed in its popular sense and not in technical sense as defined in I. P. C. — Includes culpable homicide or unlawful manslaughter.

Sections 25 and 27 of the Hindu Succession Act were enacted by the legislature to give statutory approval to the principles of equity, justice and goods conscience which disqualifies murderer or a person who abets commission of murder from inheriting the property of the person murdered. Therefore, the words and phrases used in S. 25 will have to be construed in the light of these principles. It is well settled that the word not defined in the Act but a word of every day use must be construed in popular sense as understood in common parlance and not in a technical sense. In popular sense the word "murder" means unlawful homicide or unlawful killing of human being. In popular parlance the word "murder" is not used or understood in the technical sense as defined in S. 300 of the I. P. C. Therefore, to construe the said word in a technical sense as defined in S. 300 of the I. P. C. will result in defeating the very object of the legislation. It will also run counter to the well established principles of equity, justice and good conscience, or the paramount principle of public policy enshrined in S. 25 of Hindu Succession Act. Section 25 does not contemplate punishment for murder to disqualify the murderer from inheriting the property of the murdered. The application of the section should not be approached from the point of view of punishment for murder. It is pertinent to note that the words used in S. 25 are "commits murder or abets commission of murder" and not "is convicted of an offence of murder or abetment of offence of murder". Therefore, it is clear that the legislature has used the term "murderer" in S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act not in a technical sense as defined in S. 300 of the I. P. C., but in a wider and popular sense, which must include in its import even culpable homicide or unlawful manslaughter. It is neither possible nor desirable to lay down general rule in this behalf, because to some extent it must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. M. D. Pathak, for Appellant; M. P. Patel, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— The plaintiff who is a minor filed the suit through her next friend, maternal grand-mother for a declaration that the money lying in the special Savings Bank Account No. 14/1168 with the State Bank of Hyderabad, Juhu Branch, Bombay exclusively belongs to her deceased mother as her self-acquired and self-earned separate property and in view of the provisions of S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 daughter alone is entitled to get the said amount.

2. It appears to be an admitted position that defendant No. 1 Sushilkumar was prosecuted for an offence punishable under Section 302 of the Penal Code in Sessions Case No. 196 of 1980 decided on 29th of Oct., 1980. After appreciating all the evidence on record the Sessions Court came to the conclusion that accused Sushilkumar used a sharp-edged weapon for inflicting various injuries on deceased Revati. While inflicting the injuries he chose vital part of the body and used considerable force. The Sessions Court further found that in view of the number of injuries and their location considered together with other factors clearly indicate that accused Sushilkumar did the act with intention of causing the death of Revati. After recording this finding the learned Judge ultimately came to the conclusion that he committed the said act of assault while he was deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation given to him by deceased Revati. As a result of this finding he was convicted of the offence punishable under S. 304 Part I of the I. P. C. and was sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for seven years and to pay a fine of

Rs. 1000/- or in default to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for six months. In the suit filed on behalf of the minor it was contended that as the defendant No. 1 was responsible for committing murder of deceased Revati, he is not entitled to succeed to the property of deceased in view of the provisions of S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act. In this suit an injunction was also sought against defendant No. 1 restraining him from withdrawing the amount from the Bank. The trial Court framed necessary issues and ultimately came to the conclusion on the strength of the affidavit filed by the guardian and next friend of the plaintiff that money lying in the special saving bank account exclusively belonged to the deceased mother of the plaintiff. He also came to the conclusion that in view of the conviction of defendant No. 1 under S. 304, Part I of the I. P. C. he is not disqualified under S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act. So far as the amount of Rs. 6,800/- is concerned, which according to the plaintiff belonged to her being proceeds of the lottery prizes earned in the lottery tickets purchased in her name and credited in the account in the Bank, the learned Judge held that for that purpose the plaintiff will have to pursue a separate remedy as such a declaration cannot be granted in the present suit as framed. In view of these findings the learned Judge decreed the claim of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 5831-31 p. only and also granted leave to the plaintiff to file a fresh suit in respect of the amount of Rs. 6800/-. He also granted necessary reliefs including that of permanent injunction to the extent of Rs. 5831-31 p.

3. Being aggrieved by this judgment and decree the plaintiff has filed the present appeal. Defendant No. 1 has also filed a cross-objection challenging the finding recorded against him and has also explained the circumstances under which he remained absent in the trial Court and has prayed that the ex parte decree should be set aside and he should be given an opportunity to defend the suit on merits. According to him he could not remain present in Court because he was detained in jail and the Counsel appearing for him remained absent on the date of hearing.

4. Shri Pathak, learned Counsel appearing for the appellant contended before me that the interpretation put forward by the learned Judge upon the provisions of S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act is wholly illegal. According to Shri Pathak the phraseology used in S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act is "a person who commits murder or abets commission of murder". The section does not contemplate that the person should be convicted or sentenced for the offence of murder. Shri Pathak has also contended that the word "murder" is not defined in the Hindu Succession Act. Therefore, the meaning assigned to the said word in the I. P. C. cannot be incorporated in S. 25 while construing the said provision. In the absence of the definition of the term "murder" it will have to be given the meaning as understood in common parlance; and if so understood it will include all sorts of culpable homicides. In support of his contention Shri Pathak has relied upon the decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Nannepuneni Seetharamaiah v. Nannepuneni Ramakrishnaiah, AIR 1970 Andh Pra 407. A decision of this Court in Girimallappa Channappa v. Kanchava, ILR (1921) 45 Bom 768 : (AIR 1921 Bom 270), which is confirmed by the Privy Council in Kanchawa Sonyellappa v. Girimallappa Channappa, AIR 1924 PC 209. He is also relying upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Sarvanabhava v. Sallemmal, (1972) 2 Mad LJ 49.

5. On the other hand it is contended by Shri Patel, learned Counsel appearing for respondent No. 1 that as the word "murder" is not defined in the Hindu Succession Act and is only defined in the I. P. C., the said term will have to be given the meaning as assigned to it in the I. P. C. Therefore, unless a person is convicted of the offence of murder, under S. 302 of I. P. C., he is not disqualified under S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act. According to Shri Patel, as in the present case respondent No. 1 is convicted for an offence punishable under S. 304, Part I of the I. P. C. viz. culpable homicide not amounting to murder, the learned Judge of the trial Court was right in coming to the conclusion that defendant No. 1 was not disqualified to succeed to the property of the deceased Revati under S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act.

6. For properly appreciating the controversy raised before me, it is necessary to make a detailed reference to the provisions of Ss. 25 and 27 of the Hindu Succession Act, which read as under:—

"25. A person who commits murder or abets the commission of murder shall be disqualified from inheriting the property of the person murdered or any other property in furtherance of the succession to which he or she committed or abetted the commission of the murder.

27. If any person is disqualified from inheriting any property under this Act, it shall devolve as if such person had died before the intestate."

7. It is an admitted position that the word "murder" is not defined in the Hindu Succession Act. It appears that S. 25 was introduced in the Hindu Succession Act practically to give statutory sanction to the view expressed by the Privy Council in Kanchawa v. Girimallappa, AIR 1924 PC 209. While dealing with such a contention the Privy Council observed that there is much to be said in support of the principles of jurisprudence which can be traced in Hindu Law, which would warrant an inference that a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong. The Privy Council further observed that this principle is the principle of equity, justice and good conscience, which disqualifies and excludes the murderer from inheriting any interest in the property of the person murdered. The Privy Council also held that the murderer in such case should be treated as non-existent and not as one who forms the stock for fresh line of descent. Thus, it appears that Ss. 25 and 27 were enacted by the legislature to give statutory approval to the principles of equity, justice and good conscience which disqualifies murderer or a person who abets commission of murder from inheriting the property of the person murdered. Therefore, the words and phrases used in S. 25 will have to be construed in the light of these principles viz. the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. This is also the well established principle of public policy.

8. As observed by the Privy Council in Lawrence Arthus Adamson v. Melbourne and Metropolitan Board of Works, AIR 1929 PC 181:

"It is always unsatisfactory and generally unsafe to seek the meaning of words used in an Act in the definition clauses of another statute dealing with matters more or less cognate even when enacted by the same legislature."

The Supreme Court has also expressed the similar view in the Board of Muslim Wakfs, Rajasthan v. Radha Kishan, AIR 1979 SC 289 and has observed that (at p. 295):

"It is not a sound principle of construction to interpret expressions used in one Act with reference to their use in another Act and decisions rendered with reference to construction of one Act cannot apply with reference to the provisions of another Act, unless the two Acts are in pari materia."

It is an admitted position that two enactments are neither cognate nor pari materia and cover different fields. Therefore, in my opinion words and phrases used in S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act will have to be construed and interpreted harmoniously keeping in view the object of the legislation, and not in technical sense as defined in I. P. C.

9. In this context a reference could also be made to the following observation in Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, Vol. 39, para. 1315, p. 869:—

"Murder or manslaughter. It is contrary to public policy that a man should be allowed to claim a benefit resulting from his own crime. Accordingly a donee who is proved to be guilty of the murder or manslaughter of the testator cannot take any benefit under his will."

It is this principle of public policy that a person cannot be allowed to claim benefit resulting from his own crime which is approved by the Privy Council in Kanchawa's case (AIR 1924 PC 209). When the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 was enacted, the legislature had before it the decision of the Privy Council in Kanchawa's case and it appears that it is this well established principle of public policy which legislature thought fit to incorporate in S. 25 of the Act, so that the person will not be tempted to commit murder to inherit the property of the person murdered.

10. It is well settled that the word not defined in the Act but a word of every day use must be construed in popular sense as understood in common parlance and not in a technical sense. In popular sense the word "murder" means unlawful homicide or unlawful killing of human being. In popular parlance the word "murder" is not used or understood in the technical sense as defined in S. 300 of the I. P. C. Therefore, to construe the said word in a technical sense as defined in S. 300 of the I. P. C. will result in defeating the very object of the legislation. It will also run counter to the well established principles of equity, justice and good conscience, or the paramount principle of public policy enshrined in S. 25 of Hindu Succession Act. I am fortified in this view by the decision of the Madras High Court in Sarvanabhava v. Sallammal, (1972) 2 Mad LJ 49 wherein the Madras High Court has observed as under:

"Almost all systems of law have recognised that a person guilty of homicide cannot succeed to the property of his victim. Section 25 of the Hindu Succession Act gives statutory recognition to the above proposition."

11. In the present case defendant No. 1 is convicted of the offence punishable under

S. 304, Part I of I. P. C. viz. for the offence of culpable homicide. From the findings recorded by the learned Sessions Judge it is clear that as many as eleven incised injuries were inflicted by defendant No. 1 with a sharp edged knife on the person of deceased Revati. He chose vital part of the body for inflicting these injuries and had used considerable force. He assaulted Revati with the intention of causing her death. Therefore it can safely be held that he has committed murder of Revati within the meaning of the said expression as used in S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 and therefore is disqualified from inheriting the property of deceased Revati, the person murdered. Similar view is taken by Andhra Pradesh High Court in Nannepuneni Seetaramaiah v. Nannepuneni Ramakrishnaiah, AIR 1970 Andh Pra 407, wherein it is observed by the Andhra Pradesh High Court that to apply the disqualification under S. 25 of Hindu Succession Act it is not necessary that the person who committed murder or abetted commission of murder must also have been convicted of the offence of murder or of abatement of murder under S. 302 of the I. P. C. The said section does not contemplate punishment for murder to disqualify the murderer from inheriting the property of the murdered. The application of the section should not be approached from the point of view of punishment for murder.

12. In my opinion this is the correct approach for interpreting the provisions of Section 25 of the Act, which incorporates a paramount principle of public policy based on principles of justice, equity and good conscience, so that the person will not be able to take the advantage of his own crime. In this context it is pertinent to note that the words used are "commits murder or abets commission of murder" and not "is convicted of an offence of murder or abatement of offence of murder." Therefore, it is clear that the legislature has used the term "murderer" in S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act not in a technical sense as defined in S. 300 of the I. P. C., but in a wider and popular sense, which must include in its import even culpable homicide or unlawful manslaughter. It is neither possible nor desirable to lay down general rule in this behalf, because to some extent it must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case.

13. However, at this stage I am informed by Shri Pathak, learned counsel for the plaintiff that an appeal is filed against the said order of conviction by the defendant No. 1 and the same is pending. He has further stated that the complainant has also filed a revision petition against the order of acquittal passed by the learned Sessions Judge acquitting him of the offence under Section 302 of the I. P. C. and the said revision petition is also pending. Therefore, I am not called upon at this stage to decide the question as to what will be the scope of inquiry before the Civil Court in case of acquittal. I have decided the question of disqualification under S. 25 of the Hindu Succession Act on the basis of the position as it stands today. Parties are at liberty to raise all permissible contentions in case of subsequent development or change in circumstances.

14. So far as the merits of the controversy are concerned, it does appear that because of the pendency of the sessions case and subsequent conviction, defendant No. 1 remained absent in the trial Court. It is no doubt true that he had engaged a counsel at the initial stage but subsequently the counsel also remained absent and the matter proceeded ex parte against him. Shri Patel, learned counsel appearing for defendant No. 1 has contended that money lying in deposit in Bank belonged to defendant No. 1 alone and not to deceased Revati. He further contended that to prove this fact defendant No. 1 should be given an opportunity to file a written statement and lead evidence in support of his case. In all fairness Shri Pathak has conceded before me that in view of the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case he has no objection if defendant No. 1 is given an opportunity to contest the claim of the plaintiff on merits. However, he has further submitted that in that case the plaintiff should also be given an opportunity to amend the plaint and claim a relief of declaration even qua the amount of Rs. 6,800/- which according to the plaintiff exclusively belongs to her as it represents the proceeds of lottery prize earned by the plaintiff herself on the tickets purchased in her name though said amount was credited in the joint account of Revati and defendant No. 1. Shri Patel, learned counsel appearing for respondent No. 1 has no objection for giving such an opportunity to the plaintiff. In this view of the matter by consent of the parties the judgment and decree passed by the learned Judge of the City Civil Court, Bombay dated 23-11-1980 is set aside and the matter is remitted back to the City Civil Court for deciding it on merits in accordance with law after giving a reasonable opportunity to both parties to put forward their respective cases. It is needless to say that after remand the plaintiff will be entitled to amend her plaint and claim a relief of declaration qua Rs. 6,800/- and also carry on other consequential amendments, if necessary. The defendant will also be at liberty to file his written statement and thereafter the trial Court will decide the suit on merits in accordance with law. Since the plaintiff is a minor and her mother is dead and the father is also in jail, this is a fit case which requires priority and, therefore, the trial Court is directed to hear and decide the suit as expeditiously as possible preferably before the 31st of Dec., 1981.

15. During the pendency of the suit the ad interim injunction granted by the trial Court restraining the defendant No. 1 from withdrawing the amount from the Bank shall continue. The parties are directed to appear before the trial Court on 29th of June, 1981. Thus the appeal is partly allowed. Since by consent of the parties the matter is being remitted back, no orders on cross-objection are necessary. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs in this appeal as well as in cross-objection.

Arbitration Petn. No. 106 of 1980 in Award No. 30 of 1980, D/- 21-4-1981.

(A) Arbitration Act (10 of 1940), Ss. 2 (a) and 33 — Arbitrator not having jurisdiction for want of a written arbitration agreement — Mere acquiescence by a party to the jurisdiction and admission of liability before him would not estop such party from questioning arbitrator's jurisdiction. (Evidence Act (1872), S. 115; Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9).

An arbitration agreement must be one as defined in S. 2 (a) of the Arbitration Act and hence must be in writing. If that sine qua non is absent, the result would be that the initial lack of jurisdiction on the part of the arbitrator cannot be cured by oral acquiescence on the part of the party and any admission of liability by such party before the arbitrator can avail the other side nothing as it is made before an authority, who, for want of an arbitration agreement as defined in S. 2 (a) initially has no jurisdiction to act as arbitrator and is therefore incompetent to make an award. Lack of jurisdiction goes to the root of the matter; it is not merely an irregularity which can be cured by oral acquiescence. AIR 1925 Sind 144 and AIR 1962 SC 1810, Rel. on:

V. V. Tulzapurkar, for Petitioner; D. H. Mehta, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This in an utterly mala fide petition for setting aside an award.

2. New Textiles Ltd. were the sole selling agent of the respondent. By certain contracts entered into between the petitioner and the respondent's selling agent, the petitioner agreed to purchase certain quantities of yarn of the total value of Rs. 2,40,761.77 subject to the terms and conditions contained in the respondent's printed contract form. Clause 21 in the respondent's printed form provided for reference of disputes to arbitration in the following words:—

"All disputes and questions whatsoever which shall arise between the parties hereto out of or in connection with this agreement or as to the construction or application thereof or the respective rights and obligations of the parties hereunder or as to any clause or thing herein contained or any account or valuation to be made hereunder or as to any other matter in any way relating to these presents shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the rules of the Millowners' Association, Bombay, for the time being in force regulating arbitration with respect to piece-goods."

However, no such arbitration clause was specifically incorporated in the contracts between the petitioner and the respondent's selling agent. Disputes having arisen between the parties by reason of the petitioner's failure to pay the balance amount of Rs. 2,11,022.63, the respondent invoked the arbitration clause contained in its printed contract form and referred the disputes to the Millowners' Association, which in turn called upon the petitioner to appoint its arbitrator. The petitioner failed to do so, with the result that under the rules of the Association the disputes stood referred to the respondent's arbitrator as sole arbitrator. At the hearing before the arbitrator on 21st Nov., 1979 the respondent appeared through its authorised representative; the petitioner also appeared through its authorised representative, namely, its partner one Bhagwandas. The minutes of the arbitrator of that day reveal that Bhagwandas admitted the petitioner's liability to the respondent in the amount of Rs. 2,11,022.63 and also stated before the arbitrator that the petitioner was not in a position to pay this amount and required time to make payment. Thereupon, the meeting was adjourned by the arbitrator to enable the petitioner to approach the respondent for this purpose. The arbitrator's minutes of the next meeting fixed on 21st Feb., 1980 reveal that the petitioner's partner Bhagwandas did not appear, having informed the arbitrator earlier that "he was pre-occupied elsewhere". At the third and final meeting held on 14th Mar., 1980, the petitioner again appeared before the arbitrator thro' its partner Bhagwandas. At this meeting Bhagwandas informed the arbitrator that no useful purpose would be served by the petitioner taking up the matter with the respondent and that the arbitrator should proceed with the reference. The minutes further reveal that after hearing both the parties, the arbitrator concluded the hearing and both parties were informed that the award would be made in due course. For the purpose of this petition, the correctness of the minutes of the meetings before the arbitrator was not disputed by Mr. Tulzapurkar, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner. Here it may also be stated that it is not even the petitioner's case that Bhagwandas was not the petitioner's authorised representative or had no authority to represent the petitioner before the arbitrator. Thereafter on 19th Mar., 1980, the arbitrator made his award against the petitioner in the sum of Rs. 2,11,022.63. It is now to set aside this award that the petitioner has filed the present petition.

3. The only ground of challenge to which the petitioner's learned counsel Mr. Tulzapurkar confined himself in inviting me to set aside the award, was that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to make the award as there was no arbitration agreement between the parties. To the contrary was urged by Mr. Mehta, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent. Mr. Mehta further urged that by appearing unconditionally before the arbitrator and admitting its liability before the arbitrator, the petitioner had acquiesced to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator and hence is now estopped from challenging his jurisdiction.

4. I shall first deal with Mr. Mehta's contention and get it out of the way. An arbitration agreement must be one as defined in S. 2 (a) of the Arbitration Act and hence must be in writing. If that sine qua non is absent, the result would be that the initial lack of jurisdiction on the part of the arbitrator cannot be cured by oral acquiescence on the part of the party and any admission of liability by such party before the arbitrator can avail the other side nothing as it is made before an authority, who, for want of an arbitration agreement as defined in S. 2 (a), initially has no jurisdiction to act as arbitrator and is therefore incompetent to make an award. Lack of jurisdiction goes to the root of the matter; it is not merely an irregularity which can be cured by oral acquiescence. In Kishindas Pursomal v. Menghraj Khailoas, AIR 1925 Sind 144, it was held that appearing without protest before an arbitrator devoid of jurisdiction, did not amount to waiver of the right to question the arbitrator's jurisdiction. In Khardah Co. v. Raymon & Co., AIR 1962 SC 1810 (1811), it was held by the Supreme Court that a party applying under S. 33 of the Arbitration Act is not estopped by its conduct in appearing before the arbitrators and in taking part in the proceedings before them, from questioning the validity of the award; what confers jurisdiction on the arbitrator to hear and decide a dispute is an arbitration agreement as defined in S. 2 (a) and where there is no such agreement there is an initial want of jurisdiction which cannot be cured by acquiescence. In the light thereof, if in the present matter the arbitrator had no jurisdiction as urged by Mr. Tulzapurkar, oral acquiescence by the petitioner can avail the respondent nothing. If on the other hand I hold against the petitioner on the aspect of jurisdiction, the question of the petitioner's acquiescence does not arise.

5. This therefore brings me to the only ground of challenge urged by Mr. Tulzapurkar, viz. that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction for want of an arbitration agreement between the parties. Mr. Tulzapurkar urged that the arbitration clause appearing in the respondent's printed form was not directly germane to the transaction of purchase covered by the contracts of the respondent's selling agent and hence could be incorporated in the latter, not by general words, but only by clear and specific words to that effect, and that the same not having been done, the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to enter upon the reference and the award is a nullity. Mr. Tulzapurkar elaborated that the only terms directly germane to the purchase of the goods by the petitioner were those pertaining to price, payment, carriage and so forth and that the arbitration clause had nothing to do with the same and hence could not be incorporated in the contracts of the respondent's selling agent by general words. To the contrary was urged by Mr. Mehra on behalf of the respondent.

6. In support of their rival contentions, both learned counsel relied on the general clause in the contracts between the respondent's selling agent and the petitioner, which reads as under :

"We (viz. the petitioner) hereby agree to purchase from you within mentioned goods subject to the terms and conditions on the Company's (viz. the respondent's) Printed Form."

It is not in dispute that the respondent's printed form contained the arbitration clause. It is not even the petitioner's case that the petitioner was not aware of that arbitration clause. Indisputably the arbitration clause has not been specifically set out in the contracts of the respondent's selling agent. The question therefore that arises is whether by reason of the general clause indented above, the arbitration clause in the respondent's printed form was incorporated in the contracts of the respondent's selling agent.

7. In support of his contentions, Mr. Tulzapurkar relied on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Abu Road Electricity Co. v. Industrial Cases, AIR 1977 Cal 482, not so much for what was decided therein but for the purpose of the principles enumerated therein. It is unnecessary to dilate at any length on that decision of the Calcutta High Court, because apart from the fact, that the facts in that case are different from those in the present matter, the Calcutta High Court ultimately came to the finding that (at p. 488) —

"..... strictly the question of incorporation is not a relevant matter for consideration in respect of the controversy in issue between the parties in this proceeding."

Mr. Tulzapurkar however concentrated on certain observations reproduced in that judgment from certain English decisions. This concentration is misplaced, for those observations, based on the peculiar facts of those cases, can possibly be of no assistance to the present petitioner. Those observations are to the effect that, (a) incorporation by general words of an arbitration clause in the Bill of Lading would be wholly unintelligible and inconsistent with the terms of the earlier contract, viz. the charter party, and that in the facts of those cases, the nature of the arbitration clause in the charter party was such that it could not be imported into a contract relating to a different subject-matter; (b) if the arbitration clause was imported bodily into the Bill of Lading, it would deal with no disputes arising under the Bill of Lading and would be vague, uncertain and insufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts; (c) if the arbitration clause in the original contract (viz. the charter party) was written into the subsequent contract (viz. the Bill of Lading), it had to be intelligible and consistent with the terms of the subsequent contract and had on the face of it to apply to all disputes arising under the subsequent contract; (d) disputes pertaining to the conditions of the charter party did not pertain to disputes arising under the Bill of Lading inasmuch as the arbitration clause governed disputes between the parties to and out of the conditions of the charter party and not to disputes arising out of the Bill of Lading; and (e) if the dispute was exclusively under the Bill of Lading and not under the charter party, the arbitration clause would not apply. It was therefore in the context of the facts and circumstances of those cases that it was held that the arbitration clause in the charter party was not directly germane to the subject-matter of the Bill of Lading and hence such a clause could not be incorporated in the Bill of Lading merely by general words. Thus, the sum and substance of those observations is that on the facts of those cases the arbitration clause in the charter party not being directly germane to the subject-matter of the Bill of Lading, the arbitration clause could not be incorporated by general words in the Bill of Lading but only by words which were appropriate and explicit, leaving no scope for generalisation, speculation or uncertainty. The principles culled out by the Calcutta High Court from the observations in the English decisions and other cases (including Dwarkanadas v. Daluram, AIR 1951 Cal 10 (FB), referred to hereafter at length in this judgment) are that (i) a clause in an earlier contract can be imported into a subsequent contract if the language is appropriate, unambiguous and clear; (ii) such clause in the earlier contract can be written in bodily into the later contract if there is no inconsistency or vagueness or uncertainty; (iii) a clause in the earlier contract which is germane to the subject-matter of the later contract may be incorporated therein by general words though some degree of manipulation may be involved; and (iv) in respect of a clause in the earlier agreement which is not directly germane to the subject-matter of the later agreement, it is not permissible to construe general words as incorporating such clause therein when the clause in terms does not relate to transactions of such later contract; such a clause can only be incorporated in the later contract by clear words either in the earlier or subsequent contract.

8. Applying the very principles enumerated by the Calcutta High Court to the facts of the present matter, it is difficult to appreciate why the arbitration clause appearing in the respondent's printed form, is not directly germane to the subject-matter of the contracts between the petitioner and the respondent's selling agent. The arbitration clause in the terms and conditions in the respondent's printed form, would certainly be one of the terms and conditions on which the petitioner agreed to purchase the goods under the contracts of the respondent's selling agent. There is no inconsistency, vagueness or uncertainty, as is manifest from the general clause in the contracts of the respondent's selling agent, which in terms refers to the terms and conditions contained in the respondent's printed form, the arbitration clause being one of them. On the contrary, far from being of assistance to the petitioner, the principles enumerated by the Calcutta High Court go against the petitioner, as is also borne out by the cases hereafter.

9. What happens where A sells goods to B by a contract containing an arbitration clause and thereafter B enters into a contract with C to sell the same goods to C on the same terms and conditions as in the contract between A and B? Can it be said that the arbitration clause in the earlier contract was incorporated in the later contract or not? In Louis Dreyfus & Co. v. Arunachala Ayya, (1931) 58 Ind App 381 : (AIR 1931 PC 289), the Privy Council answered the question in the affirmative. The facts in that case were that on 25th Apr., 1918 a written agreement was entered into between the appellants and certain other persons whereby the latter were to act as Dubashes (Dubash = an interpreter—Ed.) to the appellants. The agreement contained an arbitration clause. Under that agreement several contracts were made between the appellants and the dubashes including 4 contracts in Aug., 1918, each containing the words—

"Conditions as per agreement with you (i.e. the appellants) dated 25th Apr., 1918." Observing that each of the 4 contracts—

"..... by direct reference to the agreement of Apr. 25, 1918, embodied the arbitration clause".

it was held by the Privy Council that the combined effect of the agreement of 25th Apr., 1918 and the 4 contracts was to import into each of the 4 contracts a provision for arbitration in terms of the arbitration clause contained in the agreement of 25th April, 1918. In Vali Mahomed Ayoob v. Shamdeo Gopiram, (1930) 34 Cal WN 447 : (AIR 1930 Cal 774), in respect of a contract of sale, the entry in the sowda book of the vendors signed by the purchasers, recited that the vendors had purchased the goods from a certain importing firm and that all the terms in the present transaction were to be according to the contract between the vendors and the importing firm. It was held by the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the terms of the contract between the vendors and the importing firm, so far as they could and did apply, were made applicable by the above to the present transaction and accordingly an arbitration clause to be found in the first contract must be taken to have been imported into the second contract. The decision in Haji Vali Mahomed's case was approved by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Dwarkadas v. Daluram, AIR 1951 Cal 10 (FB). In that case, A entered into a contract with B for sale of certain cloth. It was an express term in the contract that it was subject to all the terms and conditions of contract to A by C (viz. the importers of the cloth). The arbitration clause in the contract between A and C referred to arbitration of disputes which arose "in respect of the goods or in reference to any of the conditions thereof". It was held that the arbitration clause in the earlier contract between A and C was in fact framed in the widest terms and if the clause were to be written in the subsequent contract between A and B, it would be wholly intelligible and consistent with the terms of the subsequent contract and would on the face of it apply to all disputes under the subsequent contracts; that being so, the arbitration clause found in the contract between A and C was imported into the subsequent contract between A and B. It was observed by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the terms of a document can be incorporated by reference when they are not inconsistent with the express terms of the incorporating document and are not repugnant to the transaction which that document represents. It was further observed that the general rule of construction is that a document should be construed according to the plain meaning of the words used; but if the literal construction leads to absurdity, repugnancy or inconsistency, then the general rule should be modified to avoid such a result and the incorporation of such a clause is excluded in the case of inapplicable or insensible conditions. It was further observed that an arbitration clause in one contract can be imported into a subsequent contract provided that when so imported, it is not inconsistent with the terms of the subsequent contract.

10. These decisions were brought by me to the pointed attention of Mr. Tulzapurkar. With his habitual discretion, he had no comment to offer and no doubt rightly so. These decisions including the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Daluram's case (AIR 1951 Cal 10) (FB) (which has also been referred to in Abu Road Electricity case (AIR 1977 Cal 482) (supra)), are a complete answer to the petitioner's challenge to the award and put the same beyond the pale of controversy. To uphold Mr. Tulzapurkar's contentions to the contrary, would be to do violence to the plain reading of the general clause, contrary to all canons of construction.

11. In the result, the petition must stand dismissed with costs. The facts are gross and the challenge to the award without a vestige of tenability. If I do not mulct the petitioner in compensatory costs, it is a temptation I resist with some difficulty.

Petition dismissed.

H. V. Gala, for Petitioner; S. M. Jhunjhunwala, for Respondent.

ORDER :— This is a petition to challenge the arbitration award of the East India Cotton Association Ltd. made pursuant to the rules of the said Association.

2. The facts leading to the award and the challenge thereto are as follows. Pursuant to several contracts which were all made subject to the bye-laws of the said Association, the petitioner agreed to sell and deliver to the respondent, various quantities of cotton bales aggregating to 5750. Disputes and differences arose between the parties, which resulted in a claim being filed by the petitioner before the arbitrators. In the said arbitration the respondent did not appear and an award came to be passed for Rs. 1,15,164.13 ps. in favour of the petitioner. The rules provided for a right of appeal to the board of directors of the said Association, and an appeal was filed by the respondent. In the appeal the amount was reduced to Rs. 37,500/- and interest. It is the result of the appeal which is under challenge.

3. After the appeal was decided the respondent sent to the petitioner a sum of Rs. 38,944-67 ps. along with its letter dated 24-3-1980, in full implementation of the award. The amount was made up of the principal amount and interest. This amount was sent by demand draft and the demand draft was encashed by the petitioner before 2nd April, 1980. After encashing the same the petitioner addressed a letter to the respondent stating that the petitioner intended to take proceedings to set aside or modify the said award and that the demand draft was accepted without prejudice to the petitioner's rights and contentions in the matter. It is thereafter that this petition was filed challenging the award.

4. The petitioner challenges the award on the ground of misconduct viz., that the Board has taken into consideration material which was not before the arbitrators such material being a letter addressed by a broker allegedly varying the conditions regarding the commencing of interest and that the letter was neither referred to nor produced before the arbitrators nor can the same be said to have been proved as no evidence was lead for proving the same. Mr. Gala for the petitioner contends that looking to the facts and circumstances of the case, the Board in appeal could not have relied on the said letter or based its decision thereon without oral evidence having been led particularly, when no contention based on the said letter was taken up at the first stage of arbitration nor was the said letter even referred to anywhere or at any time in the course of the first arbitration. Mr. Gala further contended that this being an appeal, principles analogous to these applicable to appeal Court in Civil Procedure Code were applicable and the Board in appeal ought not to have taken fresh evidence except on the same principles and that these principles did not permit fresh evidence at the appellate stage in the present case.

5. Mr. Jhunjhunwala for the respondent contends that having accepted the payment under the decision of the Board of Directors of the said Association, the petitioner is now estopped from challenging the award and that in any event there is nothing to show that the Board has taken into consideration the said letter and passed an award thereon. He has also contended and tried to establish that from the various contentions and the ultimate decision of the Board, it is apparent that this particular claim of the respondent based on the said letter is not accepted by the Board.

6. Coming to the first contention of Mr. Jhunjhunwala, it appears to me clear from the authorities cited by him that in the facts and circumstances of this case, the petitioner is estopped from challenging the award. Though several authorities were cited, I would refer only to three of them. One is a judgment of the Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chagla C. J. and Bhagwati J. dated 28th August 1952 in Appeal No. 32 of 1952, Kantilal Jiwabhai v. Vadila Chunilal. In that case an award was given in favour of the appellant against the respondent for Rs. 22,736-15-10 and one of the respondents sent a cheque for Rs. 21,736-15-10. This cheque was accepted by the appellant and was sent to the bank for encashment. Even before the cheque was sent the appellant had intimated to the respondents his intention to challenge the award. The appellant also replied to the letter sending the cheque saying that he had accepted the cheque under protest and without prejudice to his rights and contentions. It was held by the single Judge that the appellant having received the benefit under the award could not challenge the award relying on the principle that a person cannot approbate and reprobate. This judgment was upheld by the Division Bench. While dismissing the appeal the Division Bench held, inter alia, as follows:—

“But in this case the appellant’s case was that the award was bad and illegal, and that the arbitrator had no right to make it. Therefore, nothing whatever was due to the appellee under the award, and acceptance of any amount awarded to him under the award is clearly a case where he accepted a benefit under the award and thereby acquiesced in the correctness of the award and the validity of the award, and thereby precluded himself from challenging the award.”

The Principle on which the learned Judge acted is to be found in Russel on Arbitration, 14th Edition, page 191; and what the learned author says is that it will be good answer to a motion to set aside an award if the opposing party can show that the party moving has acquiesced in the award by knowingly accepting a benefit under it. The emphasis on ‘knowingly’ is in order to point out that the acceptance of the benefit under the award should not be in ignorance of the fact that the award has been made. If the party accepting the benefit wishes to challenge the award, as in this case there cannot be the slightest doubt that the benefit was accepted knowingly by the party.

“But before he filed this petition he never thought it advisable to return the cheque or the amount of the cheque which he had cashed and which he had utilised. It is difficult to see how it would ever be open to a party solemnly to get up in Court and challenge the award in respect of which he has obtained a substantial benefit and which he never thinks of returning to the other side.”

7. The next authority which is cited by Mr. Jhunjhunwala is 1940 AC 412, Lissenden v. C. A. V. Bosch Limited. In that case an award was made by a County Court under the Workmen’s Compensation Act for payment of certain weekly amount to a worker. There was a right to appeal against the said award given by the rules framed under the Act. The Worker after accepting some weekly payments, filed an appeal challenging the award and it was contended that the appeal was barred on the principle of “approbate and reprobate”. It was held by the House of Lords that this principle may be applicable to the award in normal sense of the petition to challenge the award but was not applicable and was not appropriate in the case of an appeal from an order of Court and complete different principles applied in such a case. It was held in that case that the award was in the nature of an order of the Court and appeal was a normal right of appeal provided by statute as in the case of Court's orders and decrees. This case was therefore, not directly a case of an award as is normally understood. However, while explaining the difference between the position as applicable to an appeal against orders of Court and petition for setting aside an award, the House of Lords has stated at page 434 as follows :

"In arbitration in the ordinary sense the award is the fruit of a consensual agreement under which the parties have agreed to accept the arbitrator's award, which thus governs them by their agreement. There is no appeal in the proper sense of the term. The Court has certain powers over arbitrators, which the parties may invoke. Thus a party may claim that the award was made without jurisdiction or that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct and that for those or other like reasons should be set aside. A party who has treated the award as valid, for instance, by accepting payment of what it awarded him, would generally be barred from adopting the inconsistent attitude of claiming to set it aside. It might then be said that he could not affirm and disaffirm or perhaps even that he could not approbate and reprobate".

8. The principle that emerges from the two decisions is that it is possible in an appeal against decree or order of Court to confirm the same partly and set aside the same partly even though two parts may not be severable. Another thing to be noted in such a case is that when an appellant challenges a decree against him, the result of the appeal can only be adverse to the appellant to the extent of his challenge in case his challenge fails and if he succeeds only that part is set aside while the part of the decree which is not challenged remains untouched; therefore, the appellant when he receives the money or some other benefit under the decree under challenge always retains the benefit whether he wins or loses the appeal. This is not the position in the case of an award. Whenever an award is challenged on whatever ground it may be, the award has to be set aside in toto or if made in parts, the entire part challenged and thereafter there will not exist any basis for the person challenging the award to retain the benefit received by him under the award or the part of the award which is challenged. In my view this is an important distinction between an award and a decree or order of the Court.

9. Another case cited by Mr. Jhunjhunwala was Dexters Ltd. v. Hill Crest Oil Company (Bradford) Ltd. reported in (1926) 1 KB 348. In that case the umpire made three awards on different footings and then stated a special case leaving the Court to decide which award was right. The amounts in the first and the second awards which were in favour of the appellant were different, the amount in the second award being higher than the one in the first award. The third award was against the appellant in that case. The Court decided that the first award was the correct award. The appellant in whose favour the said first award was decided, demanded the amount and obtained payment and thereafter appealed from the decision of the Judge contending that the second award was the right one. It was held in that case that having demanded and accepted payment under the first award the appellant was precluded from contending that it was wrong. This case was decided on the same basis as the decision in the earlier cases and also on the basis that by accepting payment under the first award the appellant had precluded the respondent from challenging the second award and contending that the third award was the correct award.

10. Accordingly, in my view the principle of estoppel applies and the petition is not maintainable.

11. As regards the second contention of Mr. Jhunjhunwala and the contentions of Mr. Gala, it is for the petitioner to establish from the record that the Board has taken into consideration the new evidence viz., the said letter of the broker. There is absolutely nothing to show that it has been so taken into consideration. The only material available is grounds for appeal, reply thereto and the minutes of the meeting and they do not support the contention of Mr. Gala, in fact, they do not throw any light on the question. The original claim was and the amount awarded was Rs. 1,15,164-13 ps. The amount on the basis of the impugned letter according to the respondent, as stated in the memo of appeal would come to Rs. 81,400-06 ps. But this amount includes not only the interest and the bank charges but also the amount of interest relating to period after 18th April, 1977 when admittedly, there were six contracts containing the period of grace of 25 days covering 1700 bales and so there was no question of relying on the said letter. This admission was made before the Board as is recorded in the minutes. The statement annexed to the memo of appeal shows that the amount of interest as per the said alleged letter would come to Rs. 42,771-22 ps. Mr. Gala contends that the amount awarded would have been Rs. 34,164/- if the contention of the respondent regarding the sum of Rs. 81,400-06 ps. was accepted in toto. This would be the position if all other claims of the respondent were rejected. But the amount awarded is not that but Rs. 37,500/- which approximates the amount of Rs. 37,124.19 ps. which would be payable if the contention of the respondent based on this letter was rejected and only the other contentions of the respondent which were in respect of the lorry hire, hundies for excess amount, shortage in weight and for rebate in respect of contracts for which the credit was admittedly to be given were accepted. This being the position it is not possible to conclude that the Board took into consideration the impugned letter.

12. It is not permissible for the Court to speculate as to how the minds of the members of the Board worked, but the discussion above clearly shows that it is possible that the Board may not have accepted the contention of the respondent based on the said letter and it was possible for the Board to arrive at the figure it did without relying on the impugned letter. It is for the petitioner to conclusively establish that the arbitrators have acted otherwise which it has failed to do.

13. In the circumstances the petition fails and is dismissed with costs. Looking to the time taken, the cost is quantified at Rs. 1,000/-.

Petition dismissed.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 677 of 1979, D/- 16-1-1980.*

Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), S. 94 and O. 39, Rr. 1 and 2 — Grant of injunction — During pendency of proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., suit for perpetual injunction restraining defendant from disturbing plaintiff's possession over suit lands filed — After institution of suit Kararnama executed in favour of defendant and defendant's possession thus acknowledged by plaintiff himself — Also order of Magistrate passed under S. 145, Criminal P. C. holding defendant to be in possession — Held application for temporary injunction filed thereafter could not be allowed and order of Magistrate under S. 145, Criminal P. C. was binding on plaintiff unless it was set aside under Expl. 8 to S. 11, C. P. C.

*From order of V. L. Ruikar, Extra Asst. J., Akola, D/- 27-11-1979.

An application for temporary injunction in a suit for perpetual injunction proceeds on an assumption that the plaintiff on the date of the suit and on the date of making of such an application is in actual possession of the property and that his peaceful possession is being threatened. If the plaintiff is not in possession then the suit for perpetual injunction simpliciter in fact would be untenable and if in such a situation if he applies for temporary injunction (not being in possession) and if the Courts were to grant such a relief, there is every possibility that such an order obtained by an ingenious and crafty plaintiff on suppression of true facts is likely to be used not as a shield to preserve and protect his possession, but verily as a warrant of possession against which the Courts issuing an order of injunction must guard themselves. The prima facie case for the plaintiff, therefore, lies in pointing out satisfactory evidence that the possession (and not title) is with him. Even assuming that on the date of the suit the possession was with the plaintiff, but on the day on which he moves the Court for temporary injunction his possession is lost, then not only the application for temporary injunction (which is founded on the fact that the plaintiff is in actual possession) is untenable, but even the suit itself simpliciter for perpetual injunction would be bad. The application for temporary injunction could not be allowed in the teeth of the fact that the plaintiff is not in possession when he made such an application. In fact, when the Magistrate under Section 145, Cr. P. C. orders handing over possession that right would come to an end only on passing of a decree or order for eviction in due course of law, but so long as that right exists, no injunction order can be issued, since the order under Section 145, Cr. P. C. protects eviction from the date of the order and the remedy of the aggrieved party is either to get it cancelled by way of revision or by filing a suit, but a suit only for temporary injunction without claiming relief of possession would be misconceived. R. N. Deshpande, for Petitioner; M. S. Deshpande, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This revision application is filed by the original defendant No. 1 against an order passed by the Extra Assistant Judge, Akola allowing the application of the plaintiff (non-applicant) for temporary injunction. The trial Court had rejected the application of the plaintiff for temporary injunction, but in the appeal the order was set aside and the learned Extra Assistant Judge having allowed the same, the original defendant No. 1 preferred the present revision application.

2. The defendant No. 1 is the adopted son of the plaintiff. Admittedly the plaintiff was the owner of the suit fields and he filed the suit only for perpetual injunction praying that the defendant No. 1 should not disturb his possession over the suit fields, which he tried to do a few days prior to the filing of the suit with the help of some persons.

3. The plaintiff filed an application for temporary injunction and an ex parte temporary injunction was granted by the trial Court. When the defendant No. 1 put in appearance in response to the show cause notice, he stated that he was the adopted son of the plaintiff by virtue of the registered adoption dated 1-5-1971. The plaintiff was old and infirm and suffered from gangrene and as he was unable to manage the property, the management and cultivation was entrusted to him and he was in actual possession of the same. His name was also entered in the Record of rights after notice to the plaintiff and that his possession for the year 1978-79 is also shown in the crop-statement. He further stated that the plaintiff was disputing the adoption deed at the instance of his nephews and was trying to disturb his possession. He, therefore, prayed for vacation of the order of temporary injunction passed ex parte against him, since he was himself in possession of the property to the exclusion of the plaintiff on the date of the suit.

4. As stated earlier, the trial Court after hearing both the parties vacated the temporary injunction order which was issued earlier, but in appeal the learned Extra Assistant Judge allowed the same and hence this revision application by original defendant No. 1.

5. Shri R. N. Deshpande, the learned counsel for the applicant, submitted that prior to the filing of the present suit on 25-6-1979 proceedings under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were commenced on 20-5-1979 and the learned Sub Divisional Magistrate had passed orders on 3-9-1979 upholding the possession of the defendant No. 1 and directing the plaintiff not to disturb his possession. He further submitted that even after the institution of the suit on 25-6-1979 the plaintiff himself had executed a Kararnama, or an agreement, on 3-7-1979 whereby he requested the defendant No. 1 to execute sale deed in respect of 5 acres in favour of each of his two nephews. He submitted that this Kararnama was wrongly read by the learned appellate Judge when the recitals contained an admission of the plaintiff that the defendant no. 1 was the full owner in the management of the property.

6. It was further submitted by Shri R. N. Deshpande, that the defendant No. 1 had filed an affidavit at Ex. 56 of the wife of the plaintiff himself in which she had admitted the fact of possession of the defendant No. 1. The other evidence that was relied upon in the Courts below and also relied upon in this revision are the affidavits of Jiwanising, Balwant and Dharmarao (Exts. 43 to 45) stating that they had received amounts from the defendant No. 1 for performing the summer operations of this land. Mr. R. N. Deshpande further submitted that even assuming that the defendant No. 1 was only in joint possession of the suit fields, as observed by the learned Appellate Court, then a writ of temporary injunction could not be issued against him restraining him from entering upon the suit fields.

7. Mr. M. S. Deshpande, the learned counsel for the non-applicant (plaintiff), on the other hand, submitted that the crop-statements for the years 1976-77 and 1977-78 showed that it was the plaintiff who was in possession of the suit property, though in the year 1978-79 the possession of the defendant No. 1 came to be shown. He referred me to one notice dt. 20-5-1979 (Ex. 20/1) which was issued by the defendant No. 1 to the plaintiff just a month or so before the suit wherein the defendant No. 1 had stated that the plaintiff and his wife were not on talking terms and were residing separately, about which he was extremely sorry and he requested both the plaintiff and his wife to come and reside together. He, therefore, submitted that no weight could be attached to the affidavit at Ex. 56 of the wife of the plaintiff relied upon by the defendant No. 1. He further submitted that the grant or refusal of injunction was a discretionary relief and it should not be lightly interfered with by this Court in its revisional jurisdiction.

8. Mr. M. S. Deshpande relied upon Manickvachakam Chettiar v. Official Receiver, East Tanjore, Nagapatam (AIR 1939 Mad 733) which lays down that if the lower Court wrongly decided the question as to burden of proof it was no ground for interference in revision. In Mt. Bibi Rafiquan v. Gopi Mohton (AIR 1953 Pat 399) what was observed was that when justice has been done between the parties and no prejudice to their respective claims has occurred, the High Court would not interfere. Further in Naik Brindhavanrai v. Churamani Thapa, (AIR 1969 Manipur 29) it was observed that interference under S. 115 of the C. P. C. is not to be made in an order based on appreciation of evidence and lastly in Manohar Lal Chopra v. Rai Bahadur Rao Raja Seth Hiralal, (AIR 1962 SC 527) which was relied upon, it was observed that temporary injunction could be granted under inherent jurisdiction by a Court.

9. On the other hand, Mr. R. N. Deshpande referred me to Namdeo v. Digambar, (1977 Mah LJ (SOC) 82) in support of his proposition that the evidence tendered by the parties cannot be ignored and if it is ignored on unsustainable grounds, it would be an error of jurisdiction entitling the High Court to interfere.

10. Now, in the first place, I find that an application for temporary injunction in a suit for perpetual injunction proceeds on an assumption that the plaintiff on the date of the suit and on the date of making of such an application is in actual possession of the property and that his peaceful possession is being threatened. If the plaintiff is not in possession then the suit for perpetual injunction simpliciter in fact would be untenable and if in such a situation if he applies for temporary injunction (not being in possession) and if the Courts were to grant such a relief, there is every possibility that such an order obtained by an ingenious and crafty plaintiff on suppression of true facts is likely to be used not as a shield to preserve and protect his possession, but verily as a warrant of possession against which the Courts issuing an order of injunction must guard themselves.

11. The prima facie case for the plaintiff, therefore, lies in pointing out satisfactory evidence that the possession (and not title) is with him. Even assuming that on the date of the suit the possession was with the plaintiff, but on the day on which he moves the Court for temporary injunction his possession is lost, then not only the application for temporary injunction (which is founded on the fact that the plaintiff is in actual possession) is untenable, but even the suit itself simpliciter for perpetual injunction would be bad.

12. The learned appellate Judge in the instant case tried in vain to address himself to the question of title and to the provisions of S. 12 (c) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act. Even assuming that the defendant No. 1 is the adopted son of the plaintiff and did not and could not divest the adoptive father of his title, if it is established that the plaintiff had put him in possession of the management of the property on his behalf, the remedy of the plaintiff lay in filing a proper suit for possession of title and not a bare suit for perpetual injunction. In this view of the matter, the following observations of the lower appellate Court seem wholly irrelevant:

"Thus defendant No. 1 being the adopted son, the plaintiff expressed his desire that this defendant should thereafter look after the management of the property of the plaintiff. Does it thereby mean that the plaintiff has surrendered all his interest in his property and exclusively given the entire property in such kind of possession of the defendant No. 1 and that no interest of the plaintiff was retained with the plaintiff in the suit property? I do not think that it was such an intention of the parties. It simply means that the plaintiff became old and was not in a position to physically supervise the cultivation of the suit property. Seeing that the defendant No. 1 is living with him probably it appeared to him that it would be better if the management is entrusted to defendant No. 1. It does not mean that the possession of the plaintiff is lost. Such a possession of the defendant No. 1 would not amount to his possession exclusively and separate from the plaintiff only if it is supported with some title."

13. So far as the finding of the Criminal Court in the proceedings under S. 145 of the Cr. P. C. is concerned, the learned Extra Assistant Judge again tried in vain to distinguish the case, namely, Visan Narayan Gedam v. Madhukar, (1965 Mah LJ (SOC) 70). In that case the order of the Magistrate holding the defendant to be in possession was passed prior to the filing of the suit. In the instant case the suit was filed on 25-6-1979 and the order in the proceedings under S. 145 of the Cr. P. C. came to be passed about 3 months thereafter, that is, on 3-9-1979, which in fact ought to relate to the date when the proceedings under S. 145 were commenced, that is, on 20-5-1979. When the order in those proceedings was passed, was in fact not very material. That was at any rate a relevant and material piece of evidence which negated the prima facie case of the plaintiff that he was in possession of the suit property. As stated earlier, even if it is shown that after the filing of the suit for perpetual injunction, the plaintiff lost possession during the pendency of the suit, an application for temporary injunction could not be allowed in the teeth of the fact that the plaintiff is not in possession when he made such an application. In fact, as observed in Aher Mesa Hamir v. Charan Shamla Sura (1973) 14 Guj LR 812, when the Magistrate under S. 145, Cr. P. C. orders handing over possession that right would come to an end only on passing of a decree or order for eviction in due course of law, but so long as that right exists, no injunction order could be issued, since the order under Section 145, Cr. P. C. protects eviction from the date of the order and that the remedy of the aggrieved party is either to get it cancelled by way of revision or by filing a suit, but a suit only for temporary injunction without claiming relief of possession would be misconceived. The said order passed by the Magistrate under S. 145, Cr. P. C. would also be binding on the plaintiff unless it is set aside under Explanation VIII to Section 11 of the C. P. C., as amended.

14. The Kararnama dt. 3-7-1979 executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant No. 1 after filing of the suit was in fact misread by the learned Extra Assistant Judge. The plaintiff in fact by executing the said Kararnama virtually recognised the defendant No. 1 as a full owner in actual possession and management of the suit property. This document containing the admission of the plaintiff as regards the fact of possession was duly proved by the defendant No. 1 by filing the affidavits of its scribe Sonaji (Ex. 40) and of the two attesting witnesses Bhimrao (Exhibit 42) and Ajabrao (Ex. 41).

15. The order passed by the Extra Assistant Judge setting aside the order of the trial Court has, therefore, to be set aside since the Assistant Judge without considering the question as to whether the plaintiff was in fact in actual possession of the property or not was influenced more by the fact that he was the holder of the title and that he must be deemed to be in joint possession along with his adopted son as the member of the joint Hindu family, which in fact was never the case made out by the plaintiff in applying for temporary injunction. The order being based upon wrong appreciation of the evidence and the circumstances of the case and on wrong approach to issue in question has to be set aside under S. 115 of the C. P. C. on the ground of error of jurisdiction.

16. In the result, the revision application is allowed and the impugned order passed by the learned Extra Assistant Judge is set aside and the order passed by the trial Judge has to be restored. The application of the plaintiff (non-applicant) for temporary injunction stands dismissed. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Revision allowed.

CHANDURKAR AND BHONSALE, JJ.

Bhagwan Motiram Mali (Mahajan), Petitioner v. Jayant Shridhar Khare and another, Respondents.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 369 of 1978, D/- 5-12-1980.

Maharashtra Debt Relief Act (3 of 1976), Ss. 11 and 12 — Bar of jurisdiction of Civil Courts — Civil Court is barred from deciding questions referred to in S. 7 (1) or (6). AIR 1977 Bom 42, Overruled. (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9).

On a careful scrutiny of Ss. 7, 11 and 12, it is clear that the scope of S. 11 cannot be restricted only to a dispute contemplated by S. 4 (e). For ascertaining whether the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is excluded under Section 11, all that is material is to ascertain whether any questions which under Chap. III or under the D. R. Act are required to be decided by the Authorised Officer have arisen for decision before the Civil Court and once such questions arise before the Civil Court, the Civil Court is obliged statutorily to stay the suit and make a reference to the Authorised Officer. The fact that those questions are raised or could be raised in a proceeding arising out of a claim by a debtor under Section 4 (e) to be instituted by the creditor is of no consequence for the purposes of ascertaining the nature of the questions which the Civil Court is barred from deciding. By S. 11, the Civil Court is barred from deciding any question which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer. For the purposes of identifying the question which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer under the Act and to which reference is made in S. 11, one has to go to S. 7. It is no doubt true that proceeding contemplated by S. 7 arises out of a claim under S. 4 (e). What is, however, important is that S. 7 also enumerates the questions which the creditor can raise before the Authorised Officer. Those questions are that:— (1) the person who claims to be a debtor is not a marginal farmer, a rural artisan, a rural labourer or a worker; (2) the dispute regarding the eligibility of the debtor for relief under the Act on any other ground including the valuation of the immovable property of a worker. These are, therefore, the questions which are referred to in S. 11 as the questions which are required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer by or under Chapter III of the D. R. Act. A further jurisdiction of the Authorised Officer to determine all questions which are raised by the creditor is to be found in S. 7 (6) which provides that the Authorised Officer shall have power to determine all questions in relation to, or connected with, the question or dispute raised by the creditor in his application. This provision is merely ancillary to the provision in S. 7 (1) and where the determination of any question which is related to or connected with the questions referred to in S. 7 (1) becomes necessary, the jurisdiction to decide those additional questions is also with the Authorised Officer. Therefore, wherever questions of the nature referred to in S. 7 (1) and (6) are raised before the Civil Court, the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12 of the D. R. Act will be attracted and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide those questions is ousted by S. 11 and unless a reference is made to the Authorised Officer by the Civil Court for adjudication of those questions and the decision of the Authorised Officer is communicated to the Civil Court, the Civil Court is incompetent to proceed to decide the suit if the decision of those questions is necessary for the decision of the suit. Therefore, the view taken in AIR 1977 Bom 42 that the only question which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer is one in respect of the return of the security contemplated by S. 4 of the Act and that the mischief of Ss. 11 and 12 does not extend to the cases of unsecured debts or debt-aspects of secured debts is not correct. Before each of Cls. (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) is invoked by the debtor, it will necessarily require the decision of the questions referred to in S. 7 (1) and one these questions are raised in a suit, having regard to the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide those questions will be ousted. Civil Revn. Appln. No. 539 of 1976, decided on 12-12-1977 by Kantawala, C. J. (Bom), Approved; AIR 1977 Bom 42, Overruled.

In the instant case, the plaintiff-creditor had filed a suit against the applicant debtor for recovery of an amount of Rs. 4,329.90 on the strength of a promissory note for Rupees 3,000/- executed by the debtor in favour of the plaintiff. In the suit the debtor raised the contention that he had 1 hectare of land and therefore he was entitled to the benefits under the Act. On this reference made by the debtor, the trial Court ordered that the reference be made to the proper authority. But the trial Court recalled the reference on the view that it had jurisdiction to try the matter under the reference.

Held, the order recalling the reference made by the trial Court was liable to be set aside. In the application on which the reference was made the defendant had merely stated that the defendant had 1 hectare of land and, therefore, he was entitled to the benefits of the D. R. Act. The trial Court had to determine, in the light of S. 7 read with Sections 11 and 12 whether it had jurisdiction to decide the reference. (Para 26)

P. M. Karlekar, for Petitioner; Y. S. Jahagirdar, for Respondent No. 1.

CHANDURKAR, J.:— This revision application filed by original defendant No. 1-debtor has been referred to a Division Bench in view of the conflict arising out of two decisions of this Court, one given by Mridul J. and the other by Kantawala C. J. on the construction of the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12 of the Maharashtra Debt Relief Act, 1975 (hereinafter referred to as "the Debt Relief Act").

2. The plaintiff creditor had filed Suit No. 101 of 1973 against the applicant debtor for recovery of an amount of Rs. 4,329.90 on the strength of a promissory note for Rupees 3,000/- executed by the debtor in favour of the plaintiff on 24th Dec., 1970. In the suit the debtor raised a contention that in view of the Maharashtra Debt Relief Ordinance which was promulgated on 22nd Aug., 1975 which is now replaced by the Debt Relief Act, the debtor was a marginal farmer holding less than 1 hectare of unirrigated land and, therefore, under the provisions of the Ordinance, the debt in question stood discharged and the suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed. On this application the trial Court made an order on 3rd Aug. 1976 as follows :

"Reference be made to the proper authority."

Accordingly a reference came to be made to the authorised officer.

3. It appears that in view of the decision of this Court in Promod M. Jhaveri v. Sukh- deo Ramratan, AIR 1977 Bom 42 (43), the learned Civil Judge suo motu decided to recall the reference and made the following order on 14th Mar., 1978 without hearing the petitioner :

"In view of AIR 1977 Bom 42 (43) this Court has jurisdiction to try the matter under reference. Hence I call back the reference."

This order has been challenged by the debtor-defendant in this revision application.

4. When this revision application came up for hearing before D. B. Deshpande, J., apart from the decision in Promod Jhaveri's case, another unreported decision of Kantawala, C. J. in M/s. Vithaldas Raghunathdas Soni v. Ramgopal Hiralal Tapdiya in Civil Revision Application No. 539 of 1976 decided on 12th Dec. 1977 was brought to the notice of the learned Judge. The learned Judge referred to the view taken by Mridul J. that "the mischief of Ss. 11 and 12 does not extend to the cases of unsecured debts or debt-aspects of secured debts, which matters being within the purview of Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) thereof, have to be dealt with by the Civil Courts concerned". Mridul J. had rejected the objection to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to try the issues raised in the Civil Court in its insolvency jurisdiction. Kantawala C. J. had taken the view that "the question whether a person who claimed to be a debtor was a worker or not was to be decided by the Authorised Officer" and two additional issues were, therefore, framed dealing with the question whether the defendants or any one or more of them were workers within the meaning of S. 2 (o) of the D. R. Act and whether the debt or the liability, if any, under the transaction in suit was wholly discharged by reason of the provisions of S. 4 of the D. R. Act. Deshpande J. took the view that the suit out of which the revision application decided by Kantawala C. J. arose was for a simple money transaction and did not fall within the purview of S. 4 (e) of the D. R. Act and yet Kantawala C. J. held that the jurisdiction was with the Authorised Officer alone and the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to decide this question. It is because of this conflict of view in the two decisions referred to above that this revision application has been referred to a Division Bench.

5. Mr Karlekar appearing on behalf of the debtor-defendant has contended that there is express provision in Ss. 11 and 12 as well as in S. 4 (b) of the D. R. Act which ousts the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in respect of the issue which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer under the Act and, therefore, according to the learned Counsel, when the debtor had applied to the trial Court that he was a marginal farmer because he owned less than 1 hectare of land, he was, therefore, freed of the debt liability by the provisions of the Ordinance, the question as to whether he was a marginal farmer or not could be decided only by the Authorised Officer and the Civil Court did not have jurisdiction to decide that question in view of the express provision in Ss. 11 and 12 of the D. R. Act. The learned Counsel questioned the correctness of the view taken by Mridul J. in Promod Jhaveri's case (AIR 1977 Bom 42).

6. Mr. Jahagirdar appearing on behalf of the plaintiff has wholly relied upon the decision of Mridul J. in support of his contention that the reference as contemplated by S. 12 of the D. R. Act could be made only in respect of matters which are covered by Cl. (e) of S. 4 of the D. R. Act and consequently, according to the learned Counsel, since, as held by Mridul J., an occasion to make an application under S. 7 by the creditor would arise only for the purpose of implementing the provisions of S. 4 (e) of the Act, the reference contemplated by S. 12 could be made only in a case where the question arises out of a claim for return of the pledged articles as contemplated by S. 4 (e) of the D. R. Act.

7. Before we deal with the decision of Mridul J. in Promod Jhaveri's case (AIR 1977 Bom 42) it is necessary to set out a few provisions of D. R. Act. We are not concerned with the provisions of the Ordinance which stands repealed by the D. R. Act and the relevant provisions admittedly are now the provisions of the D. R. Act. The substantive provision providing for liquidation of certain debts is contained in S. 4 of the D. R. Act. S. 4 provides :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any contract or other instrument having force by virtue of any such law, and save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, every debt of a worker whose immovable property, if any, does not exceed twenty thousand rupees in market value and every debt of any other debtor, outstanding on the appointed day, including the amount of interest, if any, payable by a debtor shall be deemed to be wholly discharged."

The substantive provision in S. 4 thus firstly deals with every debt of a worker, whose immovable property does not exceed twenty thousand rupees in market value and it further deals with every debt of any other deb-

tor. The debts of these persons which are outstanding on the appointed day are now statutorily deemed to be discharged and the debtors are freed from any liability which they may have originally owed to the creditors.

8. Section 4 further enumerates the consequences which will follow as a result of the statutory discharge of the debt liability of the workers and the debtors. The first consequence is that no such debt due from the debtor on the appointed day would be recoverable from him on, from or against any movable or immovable property belonging to him and further no such property is liable to be attached and sold or proceeded against in any manner in the execution of any decree or order relating to such debt against him. The other consequence stated in Cl. (b) is that no Civil Court shall entertain any suit or proceeding against such debtor for the recovery of any amount of such debt, including interest, if any. However, where a suit or proceeding is instituted jointly against such debtor or any other person, the suit or proceeding in so far as it relates to such other person is not affected. Further, all suits and proceedings (including appeals, revisions, attachment or execution proceedings) pending on the appointed day for the recovery of any such debt against such debtor abate. This, however, does not apply to the sale of any movable property held and concluded before the appointed day or sale of any immovable property confirmed before such day. If a debtor is undergoing detention in a civil prison in execution of any decree for money passed against him a Civil Court in respect of any such debt, the law directs that he shall be released.

9. An important consequence which follows the extinction of the debtor's liability is with regard to the right to receive back the pledged property by the debtor. This consequence is stated in Cl. (e) and since the decision in Promod Jhaveri's case (AIR 1977 Bom 42) is based mainly on S. 4 (e) read with S. 7, we reproduce Cl. (e) which reads as follows:

"(e) every property pledged or mortgaged by such debtor shall stand released in favour of such debtor, and the creditor shall be bound to return the same to the debtor forthwith on the debtor making an application in writing in that behalf; and the creditor shall pass a receipt to the debtor of having received the application. If the creditor refuses to pass a receipt, then the debtor may get the application endorsed to that effect under the signature and date of any of the officers referred to in S. 6 or by any person authorised by them in this behalf.

Explanation 1.— Nothing in this section shall be construed to entitle any such debtor to the refund of any part of a debt already repaid by him or recovered from him before the appointed day.

Explanation 2.— For the purposes of this section, the expression 'debt of a worker' includes a debt arising out of loans taken from more than one creditor."

The effect of Cl. (e) is that there is a statutory obligation created against a creditor to return the property pledged or mortgaged to a debtor forthwith when the debtor makes an application in writing in that behalf. When the debtor gives an application to the creditor, he has to pass a receipt acknowledging that the application has been received. If the creditor refuses to pass a receipt, then the latter may get that application endorsed to the effect that the creditor declines to pass a receipt under the signature and date of any of the officers referred to in S. 6 or by any person authorised by them in this behalf. The officers referred to in S. 6 are the Commissioner of Police, where there is one, and elsewhere the District Magistrate or the Superintendent of Police.

10. Section 5 of the D. R. Act prohibits the creditor from damaging, destroying or tampering with any property pledged or mortgaged with him or any document connected therewith or part with it or otherwise deal with the same except as provided in this Act. This provision operates from the appointed day. We need not refer to the provisions of S. 6 which entitles a debtor to seek assistance of a Police Officer or the District Magistrate to take such steps as may be reasonably necessary for securing the delivery of possession of the property to the debtor.

11. Then comes S. 7 (1) which reads as follows:

"If, in the course of implementing the provisions of S. 4, a creditor raises a question that the person who claims to be his debtor is not a marginal farmer, a rural artisan, a rural labourer or, as the case may be, a worker, or disputes the eligibility of the debtor for relief under this Act on any other ground including the valuation of the immovable property, if any, of a worker, then the creditor shall make an application in writing to an officer not below the rank of an Additional Tahsildar (or any officer in any department who in the opinion of the District Magistrate is of equivalent rank) duly appointed by an order in writing by the District Magistrate in this behalf hereinafter referred to as "the Authorised Officer").

Under sub-sec. (2) of S. 7, an application has to be made within seven days from the date of receipt of the application by the creditor under Cl. (e) of S. 4 or from the date of endorsement made on the application under that clause. Sub-section (6) which deals with the power and jurisdiction of the Authorised Officer reads as follows:

"(6) The Authorised Officer shall have power to determine all questions in relation to, or connected with, the question or dispute raised by the creditor in his application and accordingly, he may determine the extent, or as the case may be, the value of the property, give directions for the safe custody of the pledged property and may pass such orders as may be necessary in the circumstances of each case for enforcing and implementing the provisions of this Act. It shall be lawful for the Authorised Officer to take the assistance of the services of an expert for determining the value of any immovable property; and the provisions of sub-section (3) of S. 9 for payment of honorarium shall apply to such payment."

Sub-sec. (8) of S. 7 deals with finality to the question which the Authorised Officer is required to decide under S. 7 (1) and S. 7 (6) of the D. R. Act. Sub-sec. (8) of S. 7 reads as follows:

"(8) The Authorised Officer shall decide the question as provided in this section and his decision shall be final and conclusive and shall not be called in question in any civil Court. If the property or its value is in the possession of the Authorised Officer and the decision is in favour of the debtor, it shall be delivered to the debtor forthwith; and he shall make an endorsement on the order that the property or value has been delivered to the debtor."

12. It may be pointed out that a "worker", "debtor", "marginal farmer" and "rural artisan" have been defined in S. 2 of the D. R. Act. It is not necessary to reproduce those definitions in full. It is enough to point out that "debtor" means a marginal farmer, a rural artisan or a rural labourer whose total income from all sources did not exceed two thousand and four hundred rupees during the year immediately before the 1st day of Aug., 1975 and a worker whose total income from all sources did not exceed, if living in an urban area six thousand rupees during the year immediately before the said date, and if living elsewhere four thousand and eight hundred rupees during that year is a debtor for the purposes of the Act.

13. It is now necessary to reproduce the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12 of the D. R. Act on the construction of which the decision of this revision application will turn. Section 11 reads as follows:

"11. (1) No Civil Court shall have jurisdiction to settle, decide or deal with any question which is by or under this Chapter required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer.

(2) No order of the State Government or any officer or authority made under this Chapter shall be questioned in any Court."

Section 12 reads as follows:

"12. (1) If a suit instituted in any Civil Court involves any issues which are required to be settled, decided or dealt with, by the Authorised Officer under this Act, the Civil Court shall stay the suit, and refer such issues to the Authorised Officer for determination.

(2) On receipt of such reference from the Civil Court, the Authorised Officer shall deal with and decide such issues in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter, and shall communicate his decision to the Civil Court; and such Court shall thereupon dispose of the suit in accordance with the procedure applicable thereto."

Sections 11 and 12 both occur in Chap. III of the D. R. Act. The D. R. Act has been extensively amended by introducing Chapter V-A. It is also common ground that apart from the provisions of Chap. III there is no reference to the Authorised Officer anywhere else in the Act and the only reference to the Authorised Officer is in Ss. 7 and 10.

14. Section 11 bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to settle, decide or deal with any question which is by or under Chap. III required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer. Section 12 lays down the course which the Civil Court has to adopt where a suit before it involves an issue which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer. In case such an issue arises, the Civil Court has to stay the suit and refer the issue to the Authorised Officer for determination. Once the Authorised Officer deals with the issues and decides them and the reference is sent back to the Civil Court, the Civil Court has to dispose of the suit in accordance with the decision of the Authorised Officer in respect of those issues.

15. The crucial question which arises is which are the issues under Chap. III which are required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer. The only relevant provision is in S. 7 of the D. R. Act. Now, what is contended on behalf of the decree-holder is that S. 7 specifically refers to the jurisdiction which the Authorised Officer has to exercise while implementing the provisions of S. 4 of the D. R. Act and, according to the learned Counsel, the only material clause of S. 4 for the purposes of S. 7 is Cl. (e). Therefore, according to the learned Counsel, unless the dispute between the debtor and the creditor is one which arises out of a claim under Cl. (e) of S. 4 with regard to the return of the pledged property, there is no occasion for the creditor to make an application under S. 7 and consequently it is only in such a case that the provisions of S. 7 will be attracted. The learned Counsel, therefore, contends on the authority of Promod Jhaveri's case (AIR 1977 Bom 42) that since the Civil Court is not implementing S. 4 in a case where there is no question of return of pledged property to the debtor, no question of the Authorised Officer being required to determine any issue which is required to be decided under the D. R. Act arises in such a case. The argument, therefore, is that this scope of Ss. 11 and 12 of the Act is restricted only to a case in which the creditor would have had to apply under S. 7 of the D. R. Act. As already pointed out, this contention is based mainly on the decision in Promod Jhaveri's case, which we shall consider later.

16. Now there can be no doubt that the proceeding under S. 7 before the Authorised Officer can arise only where a creditor wants to raise a question that his debtor is not entitled to the benefits of the D. R. Act and, therefore, his debt does not stand extinguished and, therefore, further he is not bound to return the pledged property to the debtor on an application being made by him as contemplated by Cl. (e) of S. 4.

17. However, if a careful scrutiny of Sections 7, 11 and 12 is made, it appears to us to be clear that the scope of S. 11 cannot be restricted only to a dispute contemplated by S. 4 (e). Section 4 (e) of D. R. Act no doubt deals with a secured debt because it refers to "every property pledged or mortgaged by such debtor". The consequence of S. 4 (e) is that the pledged or mortgaged property shall stand released in favour of such debtor and the creditor is bound to return the same to the debtor forthwith on the debtor making an application in writing. Now if we read S. 11 of the D. R. Act, it is clear that S. 11 does not refer to any particular proceeding in which the Authorised Officer is to decide the question referred to in that section. Sec. 11 refers to "any question which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer". For the purposes of identifying the question which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer under the Act and to which reference is made in S. 11, we have to go to S. 7.

18. If we now go to S. 7, it is no doubt true that proceeding contemplated by it arises out of a claim under S. 4 (e). What is, however, important is that S. 7 also enumerates the questions which the creditor can raise before the Authorised Officer. Those questions are that:—

(1) The person who claims to be a debtor is not a marginal farmer, a rural artisan, a rural labourer or a worker;

(2) the dispute regarding the eligibility of the debtor for relief under the Act on any other ground including the valuation of the immovable property of a worker.

These are, therefore, the questions which are referred to in S. 11 as the questions which are required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer by or under Chap. III of the D. R. Act. A further jurisdiction of the Authorised Officer to determine all questions which are raised by the creditor is to be found in S. 7 (6) which provides that the Authorised Officer shall have power to determine all questions in relation to, or connected with, the question or dispute raised by the creditor in his application. This provision is merely ancillary to the provision in S. 7 (1) and where the determination of any question which is related to or connected with the questions referred to in S. 7 (1) becomes necessary, the jurisdiction to decide those additional questions is also with the Authorised Officer. Section 7, therefore, is in two parts. It deals with the nature of the proceeding and it further deals with the questions which can be decided in such proceeding. When S. 11 refers to questions which are required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer, those questions are to be identified with reference to their mention in S. 7 (1) or 7 (6) of the D. R. Act for the purposes of S. 11 or S. 12. For ascertaining whether the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is excluded under S. 11, all that is material is to ascertain whether any questions which under Chap. III or under the D. R. Act are required to be decided by the Authorised Officer have arisen for decision before the Civil Court and once such questions arise before the Civil Court, the Civil Court is obliged statutorily to stay the suit and make a reference to the Authorised Officer. In our view, the fact that those questions are raised or could be raised in a proceeding arising out of a claim by a debtor under S. 4 (e) to be instituted by the Creditor is of no consequence for the purposes of as-pertaining the nature of the questions which the Civil Court is barred from deciding. Therefore, wherever questions of the nature referred to in S. 7 (1) and (6) are raised before the Civil Court, the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12 of the D. R. Act will be attracted and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide those questions is ousted by S. 11 and unless a reference is made to the Authorised Officer by the Civil Court for adjudication of those questions and the decision of the Authorised Officer is communicated to the Civil Court, the Civil Court is incompetent to proceed to decide the suit if the decision of those questions is necessary for the decision of the suit.

19. A reference to Cl. (b) of S. 4 does not appear to be relevant for the purposes of construing the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12. One of the consequences specified in S. 4 of the Act is that in cl. (b) it is provided that no Civil Court shall entertain any suit or proceeding against the debtor for the recovery of any amount of such debt, including interest, if any. Now this, as already pointed out is merely a consequential provision consequent upon the statutory extinguishment of the liability of the debtor as a result of the operation of the D. R. Act in respect of the debts of the debtor to whom the Act becomes applicable. Before, however, the bar of Section 4 (b) can be availed of, the question whether the debt of the debtor is extinguished will have to be decided and this issue will have to be decided by the Authorised Officer. Cl. (b) of S. 4 is, therefore, not of any assistance for the purposes of the construction of Ss. 11 and 12.

20. Coming now to the decision in Promod Jhaveri's case (AIR 1977 Bom 42), though we agree with the view taken by the learned Judge that the governing concept in S. 7 is the implementation of the provision of S. 4 and that Civil Courts are not instrumentalities charged with the task of implementing the provisions of S. 4, we find ourselves unable to agree with the narrow construction which the learned Judge has placed on Ss. 11 and 12 of the D. R. Act. It was contended before the learned Judge, who decided Promod Jhaveri's case, on behalf of the creditor that only claims which relate to release and delivery of possession of security fall within the scope of the Authorised Officer's authority. The learned Judge in that case has taken the view that "reading S. 7 as a whole, the reference to S. 4 in opening part of sub-sec. (1) of S. 7 must be said to be a reference only to Cl. (e) of the said S. 4" and "the governing concept in sub-sec. (1) of

S. 7 is, implementation of the provisions of S. 4". It is not possible to dispute the validity of this view. It is also not possible for us to dispute the view taken by the learned Judge that when the Courts give effect to the consequences enumerated in Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of S. 4, the Courts cannot be said to be the instrumentalities charged with the task of implementing the provisions of S. 4 and that the Courts do not implement the provisions of law, but they merely enforce the rights and liabilities recognised by law. The learned Judge has also, in our view, correctly taken the view that the jurisdiction of the Authorised Officer is confined to such questions as are raised by the creditor in his application and that the said sub-sec. (6) of S. 7 enumerates powers of the Authorised Officer. The learned Judge has further taken the view that the Authorised Officer has no jurisdiction to decide questions or disputes which are not capable of being raised by the creditor in his application to the Authorised Officer and in the proceeding under S. 7, the Authorised Officer is not required by the Act to go into the questions or claims pertaining to debts simpliciter.

21. There can be no doubt that having regard to the provisions of S. 4 (e) and S. 7 (1), the jurisdiction to be exercised by the Authorised Officer under S. 7 (1) can be invoked only on an application made by a creditor disputing the debtor's claim. It is, however, difficult for us to concur with the view taken by the learned Judge when he further holds that the applicability of the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12 of the Act is restricted only to a case which must fall under S. 4 (e). The relevant observations of the learned Judge in para 44 of the Judgment are as follows:

"In my opinion, an authorised officer is entitled to settle, decide or deal with, questions which can be raised by a creditor in his application under S. 7, that is to say, claims arising in connection with release and delivery of possession of 'property pledged or mortgaged by' a debtor. That being so, Civil Courts have jurisdiction to adjudicate upon and adjudge all claims, questions and disputes other than those which are raised by the creditor in his application under S. 7. As held above, the applications contemplated by S. 7 of the Act do not take within their sweep claims, questions and disputes pertaining to Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of S. 4 in so far as the said disputes relate to unsecured debts or merely to debt aspect of secured debts as contradistinguished from security aspect thereof. In my opinion, the mischief of Ss. 11 and 12 does not extend to the cases of unsecured debts or debt aspects of secured debts, which matters being within the purview of Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) thereof, have to be dealt by the Civil Courts concerned."

22. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that S. 7 does not contemplate decisions of questions pertaining to Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of S. 4. These observations, in our view, are not justified by the terms of S. 4 read with S. 7. It will be clear from a careful reading of S. 4 that the consequences specified in Cls. (b), (c), (d) and (e) thereof cannot survive independently of the consequences in Cl. (a). The effect of the Act is mainly to be found in the substantive part of S. 4 and in order to decide whether any of the consequences specified in Cls. (a) to (e) follow in a given case, one must first decide whether the debt stands statutorily extinguished as provided in the main part of S. 4. Unless the debt is of the kind defined in the Act and the 'debtor' satisfies the requirements of being a debtor as defined in S. 2 (f) of the D. R. Act, the question of ascertaining whether the consequences specified in S. 4 can follow really could not arise. In order to decide whether even under S. 4 (e) a debtor is entitled to the return of the security, the Authorised Officer, even while making his enquiry under S. 7 (1), has to go back to the main provisions in S. 4 because the claim of the creditor that the debtor is not entitled to the return of the debt security can be substantiated only if the creditor is able to satisfy the Authorised Officer that the debt of the debtor does not stand extinguished under the D. R. Act.

23. These are the basic questions which are required to be decided before the provisions of S. 4 (e) are implemented, as will be clear from the provisions of S. 7 (1). There is no question which independently arises under S. 4 (e) and unless the Authorised Officer first decides the question as to whether the debtor satisfies the description of a marginal farmer, a rural artisan, a rural labourer or a worker, or whether the debtor is entitled to the benefits or the reliefs under the D. R. Act, even a claim under S. 4 (e) cannot be successfully made by the debtor. It is no doubt true that the basic questions referred to above do not fall expressly within the terms of Cl. (e), but for giving effect to the provisions of S. 4 (e), it is clear that these basic questions were required to be decided first and that is why the legislature has specifically made a reference to those questions in S. 7 (1). It would, therefore, be incorrect to say that S. 7 (1) does not contemplate the decision of the questions in Cls. (a) to (d), because unless the requirement of the main provisions of S. 4 is satisfied, the consequences enumerated in the latter part of that section could not be given effect to. The main question which is required to be decided under Chap. III is the eligibility of the debtor or the applicability of the Act or whether the debt is a 'debt' within the meaning of the Act and any other questions would be merely incidental to those main questions. As already pointed out, before giving effect to the provisions of Cls. (a) to (e), a determination of the questions referred to in S. 7 (1) is necessary for the purposes of the main part of S. 4.

23-A. With respect, to the learned Judge, it appears that the fact that Ss. 11 and 12 refer only to the questions which are required to be decided by the Authorised Officer and not to the proceedings in which those questions are to be decided under S. 7 has been overlooked by him. Section 11 refers to the questions which are to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer under Chap. III. Section 12 deals with the same questions, but the terminology used is, "any issues which are required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer under this Act". Though Section 11 uses the words "under this chapter" and S. 12 uses the words "under this Act", that does not make any difference because admittedly the questions referred to in Sections 11 and 12 are required to be decided by the Authorised Officer only under Chapter III. Thus, as already pointed out, all that has to be done for the purposes of Sections 11 and 12 is to ascertain the questions which are to be decided by the Authorised Officer under Chap. III of the Act. For this one has to look to S. 7. The fact that those questions are required to be decided in an application under S. 7 (1) does not cease to make those questions answer the description necessary for the attraction of Sections 11 and 12 of the D. R. Act. We are, therefore, of the view that the learned Judge was not right when he held that the only question which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer is one in respect of the return of the security contemplated by S. 4 of the Act and that the mischief of Ss. 11 and 12 does not extend to the cases of unsecured debts or debt-aspects of secured debts. Not much argument is necessary to point out that whether a debt secured or unsecured is not relevant for the purposes of the D. R. Act and both kinds of debts stand extinguished provided the necessary conditions required to be satisfied under the Act are fulfilled. Before each of Cls. (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) is invoked by the debtor, it will necessarily require the decision on the questions referred to in S. 7 (1) and once these questions are raised in a suit, having regard to the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide those questions will be ousted. We are, therefore, of the considered view that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide any of the questions referred to in S. 7 (1), i.e., whether the person who claims to be a debtor is not a marginal farmer, a rural artisan, a rural labourer or, as the case may be, a worker, or where the eligibility of the debtor for relief under the Act on any other ground including the valuation of the immovable property, if any, of the worker, is taken away by S. 11. Similarly, all questions in relation to or connected with the above questions also will be outside the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. The decision in Promod Jhaveri's case (AIR 1977 Bom 42) must, therefore, stand overruled.

24. We respectfully agree with the view taken by Kantawala C. J. in unreported decision in M/s. Vithaldas Raghunathdas Soni's case. That was a case in which the plaintiff had filed a suit to recover a sum of Rs. 10,198.32, being the amount due from the defendants on account of a loan advanced to them. A claim was made by the defendants that their income was less than Rs. 400/- per month and their liability in respect of the transaction was wholly discharged by reason of the provisions of the Act and the application to refer the relevant issues under S. 12 of the D. R. Act by the Authorised Officer was rejected by the trial Court and the defendants had filed a revision application. While allowing the revision application, Kantawala C. J. after making a reference to S. 12 of the D. R. Act observed as follows:

"Having regard to the provisions of S. 7, the question whether a person who claims to be a debtor is a worker or not is to be decided by the Authorised Officer specified therein. It is unnecessary in the present case for me to consider in detail the various questions which are likely to arise in determination of the plea that has been taken by the defendants before the plea can be granted. Ordinarily, these matters are to be decided by the Authorised Officer in view of the provisions of S. 11 read with S. 12 of the Act because for any question which is required to be decided or determined by the authority under the Act the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is expressly taken away to decide the same."

Two issues, one dealing with the question as to whether the defendants or any one or more of them were workers within the meaning of S. 2 (o) of the D. R. Act and the other dealing with the question as to whether the debt or the liability, if any, under the transaction in suit was wholly discharged by reason of the provisions of S. 4 of the D. R. Act were directed to be referred by the trial Court to the Authorised Officer.

25. We may, however, sound a word of caution to the Civil Courts that while it is obligatory upon them to give effect to the provisions of Ss. 11 and 12, before making a reference to the Authorised Officer, it would be the duty of the Civil Courts to first come to the conclusion that the issues which are asked for being referred to the Authorised Officer arise in the case and that they are required to be decided for the purposes of the suit. The Civil Court is not mechanically required to stay its hands the moment a plea is taken. It is common experience that vague pleas are taken by the defendants merely with a view to delay the proceedings in the Civil Courts. Before framing issues, it must be ascertained that the plea is not a frivolous one in the sense that the defendant raising these issues must make a full and complete pleading in respect of those pleas in the written statement itself. Unless such full particulars of the plea are given, the Civil Court will be justified in not framing an issue on vague and inadequate pleading. It is well-known that once such reference is made, the reference takes a long time to be disposed of and maximum care must, therefore, be exercised by the Civil Court before exercising its jurisdiction to make a reference as contemplated by Ss. 11 and 12. The minimum that is demanded in such a case is that the Court must satisfy itself that a prima facie case of being entitled to the benefits under the D. R. Act must be made out in the pleadings by the party who desires to seek a reference to the Authorised Officer under S. 11 of the D. R. Act.

26. In the view which we have taken, the order recalling the reference made by the trial Court in this case is liable to be set aside. It appears from the application on which the reference was made that the defendant had merely stated that the defendant had 1 hectare of land and, therefore, he was entitled to the benefits of the D. R. Act. The written statement of the defendant is not available at this stage. It will, however, be open to the trial Court to deal with the question of reference afresh in the light of the observations made in this judgment.

27. The revision application is, therefore, allowed. Rule made absolute. However, there will be no order as to the costs of this revision application.

Revision allowed.

REGE AND KANADE, JJ.

Kausar Husein Mohamed Hushin, Appellant v. Mohamed Umer Bhola and others, Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 104 of 1976, D/- 25-3-1981.

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 14 (1) — Nature of statutory tenancy under S. 14 (1) — Is different from that under S. 12 (1) inasmuch as S. 14 (1) does not merely protect possession of statutory tenant but also entitles him to benefits under the original contract of sub-tenancy.

It is apparent that the wording as well as the subject of S. 14 of the Rent Act are quite different from that of S. 12 (1) of the Act. Unlike S. 12 (1) object of S. 14 appears to be to protect lawful subtenancy in toto by making the lawful sub-tenant, a tenant directly of the landlord but on the same terms and conditions as existing between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Unlike S. 12 (1), the said S. 14 does not seek to protect merely the possession of the statutory tenant i.e. the tenant who has continued in possession after the contractual tenancy was terminated only on his paying standard rent and performing and observing the other conditions of tenancy. Section 14 gives to the lawful sub-tenant as the deemed tenant of the landlord also the benefit under the contract between him and the tenant along with his liability to perform and observe the conditions and the obligations thereunder. The nature of the statutory tenancy under S. 14 would therefore depend on the terms and conditions which the lawful sub-tenant had with the tenant. If one of such terms and conditions were to permit the sub-tenant to part with the possession by granting leave and licence or did not prohibit the same if otherwise permissible under law, then transferability could be considered to be an incidence of such a statutory tenancy and the same under S. 14 of the Act, therefore, would not come to an end merely because the statutory tenant had transferred possession of the premises. D. L. Jha with M. V. Paranjpe, for Appellant; V. O. Menghani (for No. 1) and Firdosh & Co. (for Nos. 3 and 4), for Respondents.

REGE, J.:— This is a Letters Patent Appeal by the original first defendant against the order of Joshi, J. summarily dismissing his appeal against the order and judgment of the learned Judge of the City Civil Court dated 14th Oct., 1976 decreeing the plaintiff's suit and declaring the plaintiffs to be the tenants in respect of the suit premises and to be entitled to continue in possession thereof and granting perpetual injunction against the first defendant restraining him from interfering with the possession of the plaintiffs and, in a particular, from executing the order/decreed of possession passed by the Court of Small Causes at Bombay in an ejectment application by the first defendant against the plaintiff and one other person, being No. E. A. 201/E/62.

2. The main question that arises is, whether on the facts of this case the landlords-respondents Nos. 2 to 7 could lawfully create a tenancy in favour of the plaintiff when the first defendant was under S. 14 of the Bombay Rent Act, a deemed tenant of the landlords by reason of being a lawful sub-tenant on the tenancy of the original contractual tenant being determined and had thereafter transferred possession thereof to the plaintiff and one Mohamed Umer Abdul Majid under a leave and licence agreement executed with them.

3. It may be pointed out at the outset that at the initial stage the contention was raised by the first defendant that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit as the same being solely within the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes u/S. 28 of the Bombay Rent Act. The trial Court had initially held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit the same being within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes and had ordered the return of the plaint for presentation to proper Court. However, in appeal to this Court against the said order being appeal No.

360/64, this Court held that the City Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit. It, therefore, set aside the said order of the City Civil Court and referred the matter back for being heard on merits.

4. To appreciate the contentions raised before us, it would be proper to set out certain facts involving prior to litigation between the parties in respect of the suit premises.

5. The building in which suit premises being shop No. 1 is situate belongs to a trust of which defendant Nos. 2 to 7 are the present trustees (hereinafter referred to as the landlords). In respect of the suit shop one Hussein Shamsuddin was initially a contractual tenant. Admittedly, the said tenant had sublet the suit premises to defendant No. 1. Thereafter the landlords filed a suit against the said tenant and defendant No. 1 as the sub-tenant, in the Court of Small Causes being R. A. E. Suit No. 3810 of 1959 for eviction and possession. At the hearing of the suit the tenant did not appear. The suit was, however, defended by defendant No. 1. On 25th Jan., 1960 the Court passed an ex parte decree of eviction against the original tenant only, directing him to vacate the premises on or before 31st Jan., 1960. However, the suit against defendant No. 1 was dismissed with no orders as to costs, the landlords at the hearing recognising the first defendant as a lawful sub-tenant. It is not disputed that on 29th Dec., 1961 defendant No. 1 entered into an agreement of leave and licence with the plaintiff herein i.e. Mohamed Umer Bhola and one Mohamed Umer Abdul Majid and handed over to them possession of the premises under the said agreement. It is the plaintiff's case that though the said agreement was termed as a leave and licence agreement, it was a camouflage for an agreement of sub-tenancy.

6. Thereafter the landlords under an application dated 25th Jan., 1962 for execution of decree of eviction against the original tenant, obtained a warrant of possession. When the landlords themselves had, while obtaining a decree for eviction against the original tenant, recognised the first defendant as a lawful sub-tenant on the footing that he was in possession of the premises, it was difficult to envisage the purpose of taking out a warrant of possession against the original tenant who was admittedly not in possession and as to how it could have been executed. However, it is not disputed that when the landlords sought to execute the said warrant of possession, the execution was obstructed. It is difficult to say from the record as to which of the two persons viz. the plaintiff or the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid had obstructed execution. However, it appears from the record that the landlords had taken out an obstructionist notice being Obstructionist Notice No. 124 of 1962 against only one obstructionist named Mohamed Umar. The said proceedings were compromised between the landlords and the said obstructionist Mohamed Umer under the consent terms dated 29th Mar., 1962. The consent terms provided :

(i) that the obstructionist notice was discharged;

(ii) the landlords accepted the obstructionist Mohamed Umer as his tenant in respect of the premises in notice; and

(iii) the said obstructionist had paid to the landlords the arrears of rent till 31st Mar., 1962.

Although the plaintiff herein claims to be the person against whom the said obstructionist notice was taken out and who had signed the consent terms, the consent terms filed in the Court (the original of which is in the record and was produced before us and a copy of the certified copy of which is a part of the paper book) show that the only person who had signed the said consent terms as an obstructionist was the other person Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid and not the plaintiff who is Mohamed Umar Bhola. Although the learned counsel for the plaintiff has by relying on the plaint filed by the first defendant in the subsequent ejectment proceedings that he took viz. E. A. 292 of 1962, contended that it was the plaintiff against whom the landlords had taken out obstructionist notice and had signed the said consent terms, the record of the proceedings and the plaintiff's subsequent conduct would show that the said obstructionist proceedings were taken out only against and the consent terms were signed only by, the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid and not against or by the plaintiff and the plaintiff had nothing to do with it.

7. Continuing the narration, thereafter the first defendant took out a Miscellaneous Notice No. 387 of 1962 in the landlords' original ejectment suit No. R. A. E. 2801 of 1959 making the said Mohamed Umar, the obstructionist, a party thereto, to set aside the said consent order between the landlords and the obstructionist, the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid on 29th Mar., 1962 in the landlords' obstructionist proceedings. It is the plaintiff's case that the said notice was served on him, but since at the hearing of the notice defendant No. 1 told him that the said notice was not against him, he had withdrawn from the proceedings. In reply to the said notice by the first defendant, the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid had as the obstructionist filed an affidavit denying that he was ever a sub-tenant of the premises, that an affidavit made by the plaintiff was not his affidavit and stating that he was the only obstructionist who had signed the consent terms and had no objection to the cancellation thereof and restoring the possession to the first defendant. The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes by his order dated 23rd Mar., 1963 allowed the first defendant's said application and set aside the said consent terms and awarded to the first defendant compensatory costs of Rs. 300/-. The learned counsel for the plaintiff has objected to the said affidavit of Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid being referred to and looked at as it was not part of the proceedings in the City Civil Court. That objection has no substance, as the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes in his said order dated 28th Mar., 1963 while setting aside the consent terms has in terms referred to the said affidavit. An appeal by the landlords against the said order of the learned Judge setting aside the consent terms and awarding costs, to the appellate Bench of that Court was refused. Against that order, revision application No. 330 of 1964 filed by the landlords to this Court was also rejected by this Court by an order dated 24th June, 1967. The result, therefore, was that the consent terms obtained in the obstructionist proceedings whereunder the landlords had accepted the obstructionist Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid as a tenant, no longer subsisted, nor was there any further execution of the decree of eviction obtained by the landlords against the original tenant.

8. At the same time, it is not disputed that the present plaintiff though being aware of the proceedings by the first defendant to set aside the consent terms between the landlords and the obstructionist, who according to the plaintiff was he himself and not the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid, the notice admittedly being served on him, did not take any steps against the said order setting aside the consent terms and has stood by.

9. After the first defendant filed the said miscellaneous application to set aside the consent terms dated 29th Mar., 1962 between the landlords and obstructionist Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid, he also filed in the Court of Small Causes an ejectment application being E. A. No. 292 of 1962 against both, the present plaintiff Mohamed Umar Bhola and the other, obstructionist Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid u/S. 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, as it then stood for an order of ejectment. At the hearing, the plaintiff herein had sought to substantiate his tenancy by producing a solitary rent receipt for the month of Mar., 1962 in his favour issued by the landlords for payment of rent. The Court held that the said act of the landlords done behind the back of the first defendant was not binding on him. The Court further held that the first defendant's tenancy not having been terminated, the landlords had no right to create a tenancy of the suit premises in favour of Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid and the same was not legal and valid. The Court, therefore, by its order dated 19th Nov., 1963 ordered the plaintiff and the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid to quit and vacate the premises on or before 20th Dec., 1963.

10. The said Mohamed Umar Bhola has, therefore, filed this suit on title, as permissible under the said Act, claiming direct tenancy with the landlords. In the plaint his case was that in pursuance of the settlement in obstructionist proceedings by the landlords, the landlords got the obstructionist notice dismissed and got the fact of the acceptance of the plaintiff as their tenant recorded in Court, for which the plaintiff relied on the rent receipt issued by the landlords in his name. As pointed out above from the record, the plaintiff's case that under the settlement the landlords accepted the plaintiff as their tenant appears to be false. In fact it appears from the record in the said settlement that it was only the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid who was a party to the said obstructionist proceedings and who had signed the consent terms, was recognised as a tenant. The main contention of the plaintiff in para 6 of the plaint was that he was in possession of the suit premises as a lawful tenant of the landlords, defendant Nos. 2 to 7, by reason of tenancy created by them, in his favour on 29th Mar., 1962, that the decree for possession was passed in favour of the landlords against the original tenant Huseinbhai Shamsuddin, that the agreement of leave and licence executed between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 even on the basis that it was intended to be acted upon, came to an end on the re-entry by title paramount when defendants Nos. 2 to 7 attempt to execute the decree for possession passed in their favour in R. A. E. Suit No. 3801 of 1959 and that the tenancy created by the landlords in favour of the plaintiff was valid and subsisting one and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to continue possession of the suit premises. On that basis the plaintiff sought a declaration that he was a tenant of the suit premises and that he was entitled to continue in possession of the suit premises. (underlining supplied)

11. The first defendant in his written statement contended that the agreement of leave and licence executed by him in favour of the plaintiff and the said Mohamed Umer Abdul Majid had not come to an end on the alleged re-entry by title paramount, as the decree was executed against the tenant only, and no decree was passed against him in the said proceedings. He also contended that no valid tenancy could be created by the landlords, defendants Nos. 2 to 7 in favour of the plaintiff, in view of what had happened in the past and in fact no such tenancy was created.

12. It appears that when the plaintiff filed the suit, the Supreme Court had not given its decision in the case of Anand Nivas Pvt. Ltd. v. Anandji Kalyanji's Pedhi, (AIR 1965 SC 414) on which both the trial Court in its judgment as well as the learned counsel for the plaintiff before us to support his case, have strongly relied. The said decision dealt with the nature of statutory tenancy under S. 12 (1) of the Bombay Rent Act. However, at the hearing of the suit the said decision was available. Therefore without amending the pleadings the Court raised an additional issue being issue No. 8 viz. whether the statutory tenancy of the first defendant if any, came to an end on 29th Dec., 1961 on account of defendant No. 1 ceasing to be in possession of the premises in suit.

13. At the hearing, the landlords defendants Nos. 2 to 7 remained absent and did not take part in proceedings. The contest was, therefore, only between the plaintiff and the first defendant who alone gave evidence in support of their respective cases. The learned Judge, only on the basis of the solitary undated rent receipt for the month of March issued by the landlords in the name of the plaintiff, held that the landlords had created tenancy in favour of the plaintiff. The Court solely relying on the aforementioned decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas case, held that since in this case the first defendant who was a statutory tenant had admittedly parted with the possession of the premises, his statutory tenancy had come to an end and therefore, the tenancy created by the landlords in favour of the plaintiff was valid. The learned trial Judge, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit. Appeal by the first defendant against the said judgment and order was summarily rejected by Joshi J. Hence this Letters Patent Appeal by the first defendant.

14. Before dealing with the contentions advanced by the learned counsel for the plaintiff and the first defendant, it may be mentioned at the outset that the plaintiff's claim of being a direct tenant of the landlords appears to be unsustainable. The plaintiff's claim in the plaint to the tenancy is on the basis of the consent terms dt. 29th Mar., 1962 obtained in the obstructionist proceedings. As pointed out above, the plaintiff was not a party to the said proceedings, nor had he signed the said consent terms. However, even if the plaintiff's plea that the obstructionist proceedings were taken out against him and that he had signed the consent terms were to be accepted still, the said consent terms having been set aside by a competent Court, they ceased to exist and as a result thereof the tenancy supposed to have been granted by the landlords to the plaintiff under the said consent terms also came to an end and ceased to exist. The plaintiff had made out no case in the plaint that independently of the said consent terms the landlords had granted a tenancy to him. If the tenancy was on the basis of the consent terms which no longer existed, then it was difficult to see how on a mere production by the plaintiff of a stray undated rent receipt issued by the landlords in his name, without a fresh tenancy being properly proved by the plaintiff, particularly when the above stated facts created a suspicion of collusion between the landlords and the plaintiff, could be said to create a new tenancy in favour of the plaintiff. That by itself was sufficient to negative the plaintiff's claim.

15. However, in spite of the said position and on the basis that the landlords had granted a fresh tenancy to the plaintiff as contended by him other contentions of the parties be considered.

16. The first main contention of the plaintiff was that since under S. 14 of the Bombay Rent Act, the first defendant was a statutory tenant of the suit premises, on his parting with the possession thereof to the plaintiff and the said Mohamed Umar Abdul Majid, under a leave and licence agreement, his statutory tenancy which entitled him under the said Act to the protection of his possession only automatically came to an end and, therefore, the tenancy created by the landlords in favour of the plaintiff thereafter was valid.

17. In support of his said contention the learned counsel for the plaintiff very strongly relied on the aforementioned decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414). The learned Judge had also relying on the said decision only, decreed the plaintiff's suit.

18. Before dealing with the said contention it would be proper to consider generally the incidence of a statutory tenancy and also to consider the ambit of S. 14 of the Bombay Rent Act under which admittedly the present case is covered.

19. A general nature or incidence of statutory tenancy, a term borrowed by us from the English law, was considered by the Supreme Court in its decision in the case of Damadilal v. Parshram, (AIR 1976 SC 2229), which was a case arising under the provisions of M. P. Accommodation Control Act permitting sub-letting by a statutory tenant, which was not a case under Ss. 12 (1) and 15 the B. R. Act. However, the observations of the Court in that decision, which were of a general nature as regards the nature of a statutory tenancy were considered to be applicable by a Division Bench of this Court in its decision in Vasant Tatoba Hargunde v. Dikkayya Pujari, 1980 Mah LJ 229 : (AIR 1980 Bom 341). The said observations of the Supreme Court at p. 2234 of the report were :

"We find it difficult to appreciate how in this country we can proceed on the basis that a tenant whose contractual tenancy has been determined but who is protected against eviction by the statute, has no right of property but only a personal right to remain in occupation without ascertaining what his rights are under the statute. The concept of a statutory tenant having no estate or property in the premises which he occupies is derived from the provisions of the English Rent Acts. But it is not clear how it can be assumed that the position is the same in this country without any reference to the provisions of the relevant statute. Tenancy has its origin in contract. There is no dispute that a contractual tenant has an estate or property in the subject matter of the tenancy and heritability is an incident of the tenancy. It cannot be assumed, however, that with the determination of the tenancy the estate must necessarily disappear and the statute can only preserve his status he had in the premises in his occupation. It is not possible to claim that the "sanctity" of contract cannot be touched by legislation." (Underlining supplied)

20. While dealing with the nature of statutory tenancy as laid down in the said decision as against the observation of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) with which we will deal presently, the Division Bench of this Court in its decision in the case of Tatoba Krishna v. Dikkayya Mattayya, (1980) Mah LJ 229 : (AIR 1980 Bom 341), at page 234 of the report (Mah LJ) : (at p. 344 of AIR Bom) observed :—

"It is difficult to escape the conclusion that the view expressed in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) as to the statutory tenant basically not having any interest, estate or property in the demised premises is irreconcilable with the view of Damadilal's case (AIR 1976 SC 2229), that heritability is the incidence of the tenancy and that a statutory tenant does not cease to hold such an estate, interest and property therein as such ordinary incidence of tenancy unless the statute protecting his such possession provides to the contrary. Transferability is as such the incidence of any tenancy as heritability. Origin of tenancy being in the contract, the same is enforceable by or against the heirs and transferees, unless any personal element is involved in the contract itself."

21. The above quoted observations, therefore would show that as a general rule, it cannot be said that, each and every statutory tenancy would come to an end ipso facto on transfer of possession by him. Transferability was as much an incidence of statutory tenancy as of a contractual tenancy and, therefore, the nature and incidence of a statutory tenancy in each case has to be determined on the provisions of the statute creating statutory tenancy.

22. In the light of the said observations, we may consider the contentions of the learned counsel for the plaintiff that in this case, where the first defendant's statutory tenancy had arisen under S. 14 (1) of the Rent Act, the same came to an end on his transferring and/or parting with the possession of the premises to the plaintiff under a leave and licence agreement and the landlords could take possession of the premises in the manner they have sought to do in this case.

23. S. 14 (1) of the B. R. Act provides :—

"When the interest of a tenant of any premises is determined for any reason, any sub-tenant to whom the premises or any part thereof have been lawfully sub-let before the commencement of the Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control (Amendment) Ordinance, 1950, shall subject to the provisions this Act, be deemed to become the tenant of the landlord on the same terms and conditions as he would have held from the tenant if the tenancy had continued.” (Underlining supplied)

In this particular case it is not disputed that the original tenant Huseinbhai who was the contractual tenant had during the subsistence of the contractual tenancy created a sub-tenancy in favour of the first defendant and that when he created that said sub-tenancy, it was lawful. It cannot be disputed that when the Court of Small Causes in the suit filed by the landlords against the original tenant as well as the first defendant had on 25th Jan., 1960 passed a decree of eviction only against the said tenant as required under the said section, the interest of the said tenant in the suit premises was determined, with the result that the first defendant who was a lawful sub-tenant, was under the said section considered to be a deemed tenant of the landlords defendants Nos. 2 to 7 on the same terms and conditions as were between him and the original tenant. It may be that ordinarily on the termination of the contractual tenancy of a tenant, the sub-tenancy would come to an end. However, since, by reason of the said S. 14, the lawful sub-tenancy of defendant No. 1 was protected, loosely speaking the first defendant who was a lawful sub-tenant, on being deemed to be a tenant of the landlords, could be termed as a statutory tenant.

24. In that connection, the decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) on which strong reliance has been placed both by the trial Court as well as by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, be first considered.

25. In that case the Court was mainly concerned with the nature of statutory tenancy under S. 12 (1) of the B. R. Act.

26. The said S. 12 (1) of the Act provides :—

“12 (1):— A landlord shall not be entitled to the recovery of possession of any premises so long as the tenant pays or is ready and willing to pay the amount of standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and observes and performs the other conditions of the tenancy in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of the Act.”

27. The facts of the case, shortly, were :

A, the landlord had given the suit premises Anand Nivas to B, as a tenant. B's tenancy had come to an end by efflux of time. Thereafter B had created a sub-lease in respect of the part of the premises in favour of C. The landlord instituted a suit against B, the tenant, for eviction in the Court of Small Causes under S. 28 of the B. R. Act, and obtained a decree. In execution of the decree the landlord took possession of the first floor which was in possession of the tenant B, but C resisted the execution in respect of the ground floor in his possession claiming to be a sub-lessee from the tenant and, therefore, having acquired a right of tenancy, C filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes for a declaration that he was not bound to deliver possession of the premises in their occupation in execution of a decree by the landlord against the tenant. Interim stay of execution was refused by the trial Court as well as by the High Court against which an appeal to the Supreme Court came to be filed.

28. As the judgment shows that the Court in that case was only concerned with the right of B as a statutory tenant after the period of lease had expired as arising under Ss. 12 (1), 13 and 15 of the Act. The extent to which the Court was concerned with S. 14 was only to consider whether sub-tenant C was a lawful sub-tenant to be protected under S. 14 of the Act and the Court held that C was not a lawful sub-tenant as B, the tenant, had created a sub-tenancy in favour of C only after B's contractual tenancy had come to an end by efflux of time and B had become a statutory tenant. While dealing with S. 12 (1) of the Act the Court at p. 422 observed :—

The Court further observed at page 423 :

“As a statutory tenant he had no estate or interest capable of being assigned or transferred and his statutory right to occupy could not in law be sub-let, because a lawful sub-letting postulates a right to enjoy the property and a right to transfer the same to another. There can be no sub-letting when there is no right in the premises especially when the statutory tenancy ceases when the tenant parts with the possession.”

29. In that case to show that a statutory tenant was entitled to the benefit of the terms and conditions of the contract of tenancy, the Court was referred to the provisions of the English Act viz. S. 15 (1) of Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act 1920 which provided that the tenant who by virtue of the provisions of the said Act retained possession of any dwelling to which the Act applied shall so long as he retained possession be entitled to benefit of the terms and conditions of the general contract so far as consistent with the provisions of the Act. The Court on the difference in the wording of English Act as against the wording of S. 12 (1) of the B. R. Act, pointed out that unlike English Act, the B. R. Act merely granted conditional protection to a statutory tenant and did not invest him with the right to enforce the benefit of any of the terms and conditions of the agreement of tenancy and that the said difference in phraseology of the two enactments was vital to the matter under discussions.

30. Both, the learned Judge, as well as the learned counsel for the plaintiff laid great emphasis on the above quoted observations of the Supreme Court in support of their case that in this case as well though arising under S. 14, the statutory tenancy of the first defendant on his parting with possession of the premises in favour of the plaintiff under leave and licence agreement came to an end.

31. It is clear from the said decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) that the Court there was concerned only with the nature of statutory tenancy as arising under S. 12 (1) of the said Act, which expressly protected only the possession of the statutory tenant and gave him no other right, with the result that on his parting with the possession of the premises the statutory tenancy ipse facto came to an end. The said observations, however, do not have application to every case of a statutory tenancy without reference to the provisions of statute under which the same was created. As pointed out by the Supreme Court in the aforesaid Damadilal's case (AIR 1976 SC 2229) and by this Court in Tatoba's case (AIR 1980 Bom 341) transferability of possession could be an incidence of statutory tenancy.

32. The question is whether the said incidence of statutory tenancy under S. 12 (1) of the Act, as held by the Supreme Court in the said decision in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) would be said to apply also to a statutory tenancy under S. 14 of the Act where a person being a lawful sub-tenant on the termination of the tenancy, was deemed to be the tenant of the landlord on the same terms and conditions as he would have held from the tenant if the tenancy had continued?

33. As pointed out by the Supreme Court in the aforesaid decision in Damadilal's case (AIR 1976 SC 2229) the nature of the statutory tenancy was to be determined from the wording of the provisions of each statute. It is apparent that the wording as well as the object of S. 14 of the Rent Act are quite different from that of S. 12 (1) of the Act. Unlike S. 12 (1) object of S. 14 appears to be to protect lawful sub-tenancy in toto by making the lawful sub-tenant, a tenant directly of the landlord but on the same terms and conditions as existing between the tenant and the sub-tenant. Unlike S. 12 (1), the said S. 14 does not seek to protect merely the possession of the statutory tenant, i.e. the tenant who has continued in possession after the contractual tenancy was terminated only on his paying standard rent and performing and observing the other conditions of tenancy. Section 14 gives to the lawful sub-tenant as the deemed tenant of the landlord also the benefit under the contract between him and the tenant along with his liability to perform and observe the conditions and the obligations thereunder. The nature of the statutory tenancy under S. 14 would therefore depend on the terms and conditions which the lawful sub-tenant had with the tenant. If one of such terms and conditions were to permit the sub-tenant to part with the possession by granting leave and licence or did not prohibit the same if otherwise permissible under law, then transferability could be considered to be an incidence of such a statutory tenancy and the same under S. 14 of the Act, therefore, would not come to an end merely because the statutory tenant had transferred possession of the premises.

34. In support of his said contention, the learned counsel for the plaintiff relied on certain observations in the decision of this Court in the case of Motwani v. Albert Sequeira, (AIR 1960 Bom 18) at p. 20 of the report to the effect:—

"Protection given to a sub-tenant under Section 14 does not confer title in land. It is not an estate in land which S. 14 creates. It is now well settled that the protection which the Rent Act gives to a tenant or a sub-tenant is a personal right and not a right to property."

35. The Court had made the said observations only in connection with the contention that the tenant's title had never been determined and his contractual title had merged with the statutory title and therefore even according to explanation to S. 43 of the Presidency Small Causes Court Act, there was no difficulty on the part of sub-tenant in obtaining possession under Chap. VII of the said Act. The Court there was only concerned with the nature of jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes under S. 43 with the explanation and S. 46 under Chap. VII of the Act. The Court was not concerned with finding out the nature of statutory tenancy as such on the wording of S. 14. The said observations were therefore, of a general nature and cannot be considered to be laying down the nature of a statutory tenancy under S. 14. On the other hand, the observations of the Supreme Court in the aforesaid decision in Damadilal's case (AIR 1976 SC 2229) as accepted by the Division Bench of this Court in its decision in Tatoba's case 1980 Mah LJ 229 : (AIR 1980 Bom 341) would go to show that depending on the wording of the statute, transferability could be an incidence of statutory tenancy.

36. In our view, in this case since the Court had to consider the nature of the statutory tenancy under S. 14 of the Act, it would not have without ascertaining the terms and conditions of tenancy between the tenant and defendant No. 1 come to the conclusion that on the defendant No. 1 transferring possession of the suit premises to the plaintiff under a leave and licence agreement, the statutory tenancy of the first defendant ipso facto came to an end.

37. The learned counsel for the plaintiff urged before us that although the wordings of S. 14 the Act were quite different from those of S. 12 (1) of the Act, the aforesaid observations of the Supreme Court in the case of Anand Nivas (AIR 1965 SC 414) should be taken as having universal application to every type of a statutory tenancy under the B. R. Act and, therefore, in spite of the different wording of that section, particularly the provision for creation of deemed tenancy on the same terms and conditions as existed between the tenant and the sub-tenant, the Court must hold that the only protection that a statutory tenant would get under S. 14 of the Rent Act was as regards his possession as under S. 12 (1). While interpreting the said S. 14, there would be no justification for omitting the said part of the section and holding that in spite of the said provision, the nature of the statutory tenancy would be the same as under S. 12 (1). As we have pointed out above, the object of S. 14 is quite distinct from that of S. 12 (1). It is to keep lawful sub-tenancy alive and intact along with its terms and conditions which would have otherwise come to an end along with the tenancy. The only thing that is sought to be done is to establish a direct contact between the landlord and the lawful sub-tenant, which was not there before but on the same terms and conditions as those of subtenancy existing between the original tenant and the landlord.

38. In our view, therefore on proper interpretation of S. 14 of the Act and in view of the aforesaid observations of the Supreme Court in Damadilal's case, (AIR 1976 SC 2229) the contention of the learned counsel for the plaintiff that on the proper interpretation of S. 14 of the Rent Act the protection granted to the lawful sub-tenant thereunder was dependent only on his being in possession of the premises and that the said protection was not available to him and came to an end on his parting with the possession, cannot be accepted.

39. Apart from this, the next question was, firstly, whether in this case the learned Judge was right in assuming that factually the landlord had obtained possession of the premises and then created a tenancy in favour of the plaintiff who was in the position of an obstructionist, only on the basis that the statutory tenancy of the first defendant had come to an end as a result of his parting with possession of the suit premises to the plaintiff under leave and licence agreement.

40. In this case, it is not disputed that the plaintiff had got into possession of the suit premises under a leave and licence agreement with the first defendant and the landlords had during the obstructionist proceedings sought to create tenancy in favour of the plaintiff without actually obtaining possession of the premises from either the first defendant or the plaintiff. The whole transaction appears to have been brought about behind the back of the first defendant by collusion between the landlords and the plaintiff who was in possession as the first defendant's licensees, from whom otherwise without the order of the Court the landlord could not have been able to obtain the possession of the premises.

41. In this case the fact that the first defendant had under an agreement of leave and licence given possession of the premises to the plaintiff and one Mohamed Umee Abdul Majid is not disputed. However, landlords defendants Nos. 2 to 7 who were the only persons to say in what manner of right they had purported to take possession of the premises and/or create tenancy of the premises in favour of the plaintiff, have not taken part in the proceeding nor had the plaintiff examined any of them to support his case. There is, therefore, no evidence on record to show that the landlords had purported to take possession of the suit premises on the basis that the first defendant's tenancy had come to an end on his parting with possession. On the other hand, the plea of the plaintiff in para 6 of the plaint in that connection was that the landlords had caused re-entry in the suit premises when they attempted to execute the decree for eviction against the original tenant. Therefore, even according to the plaintiff the landlords had entered into possession not on the footing that the first defendant's statutory tenancy had come to an end on his parting with possession to the plaintiff, but it was in attempting to execute the decree against the original tenant. It is difficult to see how the landlord could be said to have got possession of the premises from the first defendant and the plaintiff on only attempting to execute a decree against the tenant. The said plea, therefore, by the plaintiff was difficult to be sustained. However, the said plea on the part of the plaintiff clearly shows that the landlord had not sought to create tenancy in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the first defendant's statutory tenancy had come to an end on his parting possession of the suit premises to the plaintiff under a leave and licence agreement, but only on the footing of the possession being taken by the landlords on the attempted execution of the decree of eviction against the tenant.

42. Apart from this, and assuming that the contention of the learned counsel for the plaintiff were to be accepted, still, the further question was whether the landlords could and/or were entitled to take possession of the premises in a manner they have purported to do in this case i.e. in collusion with the plaintiff, so as to become entitled to create a tenancy in favour of the plaintiff. There is a difference between a right to possession and a right to enforce possession. In the existing case while the obstructionist proceedings were pending if the landlords wanted to create tenancy in favour of the third party, they could not have been able to do so without first obtaining from the Court an order determining the first defendant's tenancy and as a consequence an order to recover possession, although on the plaintiff's contention, at all times he could be said to have a right to the possession of the premises by reason of the termination of the first defendant's statutory tenancy on his parting with the possession of the premises and the possession of the plaintiff being unlawful as coming from the statutory tenant. In the ordinary course, therefore the landlord could not have got possession of the premises excepting either by surrender of premises by the first defendant, which is not the case here, or by an order of the Court for recovery of possession. In this case the landlords having failed to obtain possession of the premises in execution of the decree against the tenant they have purported, without any order of the Court, to obtain constructive possession of the premises, in collusion with the plaintiff who was in possession under leave and licence agreement with the first defendant and behind the back of the first defendant, who was recognised by the landlords as their lawful sub-tenant. Such a possession of the premises taken by the landlords cannot be considered to be lawful to entitle them to create tenancy in favour of the plaintiff.

43. Under the circumstances, in our view, the landlords were not entitled to create a tenancy in favour of the plaintiff as they have sought to do and the tenancy purported to have been created by the landlords in favour of the plaintiff cannot be considered to be lawful.

44. In the result the appeal is allowed with costs throughout. The plaintiff's suit is dismissed.

45. The learned counsel for the plaintiff/respondent makes an oral application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. The same is rejected. However, the execution of the order of the Court of Small Causes dated 19th Nov., 1963 in the first defendant's application by E. A. 292/E of 1962 stayed for four weeks from today on the same terms and conditions as in this Court's order dated 29th Sept., 1978 in Civil Application No. 3459 of 1976.

Appeal allowed.

MASODKAR AND KANADE, JJ.

Dinkar Ananda Deore, Petitioner v. Shantaram Punjaji Ahed and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 263 of 1981, D/- 27-2-1981.

(A) Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act (5 of 1962), S. 27 — Election Petition — Disqualification of returned candidate can be raised as ground of challenge and can be considered by Election Court. 1966 Mah LJ 321 and 1963 Mah LJ 834, Held not good law in view of AIR 1976 SC 2283 and AIR 1975 Bom 205 (FB).

(Para 6)

(B) Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act (5 of 1962), Ss. 16 (1) (a) (i) and 58 (1-A) — Words "Zilla Parishad" — Cannot be read as "Panchayat Samiti" — Person having direct or indirect interest in contract with Zilla Parishad is disqualified under S. 16 (1) (a) (i) to be member of Panchayat Samiti.

For all practical purposes, Panchayat Samiti is a statutory delegate available to the Zilla Parishad in the matters of execution of its own schemes and contracts. As far as the primary education is concerned, even by virtue of Second Schedule, a duty is cast on the Panchayat Samiti to manage the primary schools. In the light of this, the purpose of Cl. (i) of sub-s. (1) of S. 16 is clear, in that the member of the Panchayat Samiti should not have the direct or indirect share or interest in the contract with, by or on behalf of the Zilla Parishad. Such a contract may eventually be within the functional management of the Panchayat Samiti itself and that is the reason why the words "Zilla Parishad" need not be substituted by the words "Panchayat Samiti". (Para 13)

The provisions of S. 58 (1-A) introduce clearly a scheme by reference to the earlier provisions and the sub-section itself is self-contained with regard to the matters of modifications and changes, that are required to be made in the earlier provisions, like Sections 14, 15, 15-A, 16, 17 and 18. These modifications and changes are limited in character and enacted as such. Firstly, these sections have been made applicable in relation to the members of the Panchayat Samiti, as they apply in relation to the councillors of the Zilla Parishad. Having applied in this manner, the specific modifications have been enacted with regard to the changes in the text of Ss. 15, 16 and 17. It is obvious, therefore, that while applying these provisions no other modifications could be introduced having recourse, so as to substitute in Cl. (i) of sub-s. (1) of S. 16 the words "Panchayat Samiti" in place of the words "Zilla Parishad". That would be reading a modification by implication, a course quite hazardous and also not necessary to further the clear object and intent of the provisions of Section 16 (1) (i). Besides, wherever the Legislature intended to lay down independent disqualification qua the matters of Panchayat Samiti, it has chosen to say so, by using the language Zilla Parishad or the Panchayat Samiti, as is available in Sec. 16 (1) (a) (i). Further, the whole of the text of S. 16, because of the enacting provision of sub-section (1-A) of S. 58, is presently under the part of S. 58 itself and a member of the Panchayat Samiti is subjected to the process of disqualification because of the enacting part of S. 58, sub-sec. (1-A) and not merely because of enactment of S. 16 of the Act. For all purposes, this would be a disqualification under S. 58 itself and that is how the Legislature understands the scheme of S. 58. This is evident from the provisions of S. 62 where reference is in Cl. (1) (a) to the disqualification "under S. 58", S. 58 by itself does not lay down the disqualification, but incorporates, by reference to the provisions with regard to the disqualifications, by enacting S. 16 as a part of sub-s. (1-A) thereof. Once this enacted arrangement is available, it follows that the whole of S. 16 will have to be read as it is in the body of sub-s. (1-A) of S. 58 and so read the enacted Cl. (i) of sub-s. (1) would take in the disqualification as against the Panchayat Samiti Members when he/she has direct or indirect by himself or by his partner, any share or interest in any work done by order of the Zilla Parishad or in any contract with, by or on behalf of the Zilla Parishad. (Paras 14, 16)

Therefore, once it is shown that there exists a disqualification by virtue of direct or indirect interest with regard to the contract with the Zilla Parishad, the disqualification operates and is available, as far as the member of the Panchayat Samiti is concerned. The disqualification under S. 16 (1) (a) (i) would also operate in cases where the contract is exclusively with the Panchayat Samiti, for, the Panchayat Samiti is a statutory instrumentality at the Block level, available for the purpose of the Zilla Parishad, and interest of its works would be the interest in the works of Zilla Parishad. (Para 17)

Held, in view of S. 58 (1-A), the employment of the wife of the petitioner by the Zilla Parishad as a teacher in a primary school disqualified the petitioner under Section 16 (1) (a) (i). (Para 21)

V. Z. Kankaria, for Petitioner; P. S. Patankar (for No. 1), W. S. Devnani, Asstt. Govt. Pleader (for No. 4), for Respondents.

MASODKAR, J.:— The debated issue in the present petition relates to the jurisdiction of the Assistant Judge, Nasik, to entertain Election Petition No. 7 of 1979 and further to the disqualification that has been found against the present petitioner in view of the provisions of S. 16 (1) (a) (i) of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961, for, admittedly, the petitioner's wife is a primary teacher since Sept. 3, 1965 and she was posted at Deola at the time of election of the petitioner as a member to the Panchayat Samiti, Kalvan from Deola Electoral College and she has been thereafter serving as a primary teacher at village Adgaon which falls in the Panchayat Samiti area of Nasik. Holding that the petitioner was disqualified under S. 16 (1) (a) (i) of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961 to be the member of the Panchayat Samiti, his election has been set aside.

2. Mr. Kankaria, the learned Counsel, in support of the present petition, mainly urged three points. Firstly, the learned Counsel contended that in view of the Rules framed under S. 14 of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961 which are made applicable because of S. 58 (1-A) thereof to the election of the Panchayat Samiti, the election petitioner could, at the most, at the time of scrutiny of nomination papers, raise such an objection. Under the rules framed, against the decision of the Returning Officer, an appeal is provided and the decision in appeal is made final. The learned Counsel submits that at no other stage the question of disqualification can be re-agitated. Secondly, it is contended that the remedy provided for by S. 27 of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961, does not confer the jurisdiction on the Election Court to enquire into the matters of disqualification of the returned candidate. Reliance is placed on a Division Bench decision of this Court in the case of Gopikisan Agarwal v. District Judge, Bhandara, 1966 Mah LJ 321, which followed the earlier judgment of this Court rendered by another Division Bench in the case of Venkatrao Vithalrao v. Vithal Sambhaji, 1963 Mah LJ 834. On the authority of this decision, the learned Counsel submitted that under S. 27, the question of disqualification of the petitioner could not have been gone into and the eventual order impugned in the present petition is thus without jurisdiction. Lastly, it is contended that upon proper reading of S. 58 (1-A), which, by reference incorporates S. 16, matters of disqualification with regard to members of Panchayat Samiti, as far as the provisions of sub-s. (1) (i) are concerned, will have to be read as indicating that before a person is held disqualified, he should have direct or indirect share or interest in any work done by order of the Panchayat Samiti in place of Zilla Parishad or in any contract with, by or on behalf of the Panchayat Samiti, in place of Zilla Parishad. The submission is that, the contract with the Zilla Parishad is not the contract with the Panchayat Samiti, and therefore, the employment of the wife of the petitioner by the Zilla Parishad in a primary school of Adgaon in the area of another Panchayat Samiti, would not be a disqualification. As a second limb of this submission, the learned Counsel submitted that, the provisions of the Act show that the Panchayat Samiti is an independent entity and as such, is capable of employing servants and having contracts. Unless, therefore, there exists such type of contract, S. 16 (1) (i) is not attracted. Even otherwise, the submission is that the matters of primary education and the employment with regard to the education, are not exclusive matters of contract, but are governed by the provisions of the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947. It is contended that, at the most, the contract of employment of a teacher in a primary school would be a statutory contract within the meaning of that Act, and if it is the State which finances the matters of primary education, in substance, the contract will be at the most with the State Government or with regard to the matters of State activities. Reliance is placed particularly on Chap. V of the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947, to submit that such a contract is liable to be terminated by the modality indicated by that Act. In view of the provisions, the learned Counsel submits that the requirement of S. 16 (1) (i) is not fully satisfied. The provision of disqualification, according to the learned Counsel, being of the penal nature, should be strictly construed and should be strictly answered. There is, in his submission, an apparent error committed by the learned Election Judge in assuming that all these requirements have been satisfied.

3. We have given our anxious consideration to all these points raised by the learned Counsel.

4. As far as the jurisdiction under S. 27 of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961, is concerned, in our view, the matter is no more res integra. No doubt, as far as the passage of finding the jurisdiction with regard to the adjudication of the disputed qualification is concerned, the two judgments relied upon by the learned Counsel, being Venkatrao's case reported in 1963 Mah LJ 834 and Gopikisan's case reported in 1966 Mah LJ 321, did hold that the remedy under S. 27 of the Act, was a restricted remedy and because of the rules, the question of disqualification could not be subject-matter of issue in an Election Petition under S. 27. However, all this controversy, though no doubt under the different statute, i.e. the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 containing pari materia provisions, for providing of adjudicatory forum for deciding election disputes and the scope thereof under similar rules, has been examined by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Dattatraya v. Prabhakar, AIR 1975 Bom 205. There, the basic decision in Venkatrao's case above, which was followed in Gopikisan's case was in terms cited along with the Rules which are almost identical and the Court stated that in the view of the Full Bench, the view taken by another Division Bench of this Court in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 345 of 1962, (Radhabai Bajranglal Jaiswal v. State of Maharashtra decided on Feb. 11, 1964 : (1964 Mah LJ (Notes) 65) which was dealing with similar provisions under the Bombay Village Panchayats Act, 1958 was preferable to the view taken in Venkatrao's case, which was dealing with the provisions of the present Act, i.e. the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961. The authority of the Division Bench judgment, therefore, which normally we are bound to follow and apply, is shaken and in fact, has not been approved by the Full Bench of this Court though dealing with the question that arose under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. The Full Bench observed, after referring to the Rules and the provisions of Section 27 as well as the observations in Venkatrao's case to the following effect:

"The well recognised distinction that exists between the provisions of the statute and those of rules made in exercise of the power of subordinate legislation, was overlooked in this case. If rules cannot be reconciled with the provisions of the statute under which they are framed, then, provisions of the statute must always prevail, though every possible attempt should be made to reconcile if it could be done, but if they cannot be reconciled, then, to the extent to which the provisions of the rules are inconsistent with the provisions of statute or derogatory from the provisions, the rules to that extent will be bad and they cannot be given overriding effect over the provisions of the statute. This aspect of the matter which was considered by the earlier Division Bench in Radhabai's case (1964 Mah LJ (Notes) 65) was overlooked. Apart from this, even the language of S. 14 (2) of Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act is materially different from that of S. 17 of the Act. In our view, the view taken in Radhabai's case is preferable to the view that has been taken in Venkatrao's case by the Division Bench."

5. It is obvious that the Division Bench judgment, on which reliance is placed by the learned counsel, proceeded on a different principle and, as is pointed out by the Full Bench, did not apply the principle that the rules cannot travel beyond the terms of the statute. The jurisdiction of Election Court is created by the statute, while the jurisdiction in the matter of hearing of the appeal at the stage of scrutiny, is conferred and created by the rules. It should be impermissible for the rules to cut down the statutory jurisdiction created by the parent enactment.

6. Though, no doubt as a matter of precedent the Full Bench of this Court was dealing with the similar provisions of Section 21 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965, and the rules framed under that Act in similar terms and made these observations, we think that such observations which have the foundation in identical findings do shake the authority of the earlier judgment of the Division Bench duly considered by the Full Bench dealing with the identical or similar issues. The matter of distinction has been pointed out by the Full Bench decision and it will not be proper for us to apply the ratio of the two earlier Division Bench judgments, so as to render a judgment, which will directly conflict with the holding of the Full Bench. Not only this, but the judgment of Full Bench of this Court has been approved by the Supreme Court in the case of Madhukar v. Jaswant, AIR 1976 SC 2283. There, the Court was dealing with the provisions of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 and the matters of disqualification and the powers of the Election Court under Section 21 of that Act. While considering the language of S. 21 and the jurisdiction conferred upon the Election Court, the Supreme Court observed that an Election Petition under S. 21 was all-inclusive and not under-inclusive and went on to further observe (at p. 2298):

"What we mean is that even if the invalidation of the election is on the score of the disqualification under S. 16 it is appropriate to raise that point under S. 21 which is comprehensive. All grounds on the strength of which an election can be demolished can be raised, in a proceeding under Section 21. The language of the provision is wide enough."

The language of S. 27 of the present Act and that of S. 21 of the Municipalities Act, 1965 is pari materia and is similar. On the authority of the above judgment of the Supreme Court and also of the Full Bench of this Court in Dattatraya's case (AIR 1975 Bom 205) (supra), it must be concluded that the authority of the earlier two judgments rendered in Venkatrao's case and in Gopikisan's case, holding that the matters of disqualification cannot be raised under Sec. 27 of the present Act, is shaken and is not available as a good law. On the other hand, the decision of the Supreme Court in Madhu-kar's case clearly shows that such a challenge is permissible under S. 27 of the Act and the Election Court is competent to consider matters of disqualification.

7. Once we rule in this manner, what really remains is a question of fact and finding within the provisions of S. 16 (1) (a) (i). As far as disqualification by contract of service by the wife with the corporate body is concerned, Dattatraya's case reported in AIR 1975 Bom 205 (FB) under a similar statute is a good authority that such a service does disable the person, as well as the husband of the servant.

8. We have indicated how Mr. Kankaria wants to get out of the provisions of Section 16 (1) (a) (i) by referring to the provisions of S. 58 (1A) and the provisions of the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947.

9. As far as S. 58 (1A) is concerned, its enacting, purpose is clear, in that, for the purpose of electing two members by direct election under S. 57 (1) (f), the provisions of Ss. 14, 15, 15-A, 16, 17 and 18 with regard to the date of election, qualifications for being elected and disqualifications and the rights to vote are being incorporated in Section 58 itself. Section 57 deals with the constitution of Panchayat Samitis and provides that two members of such Panchayat Samitis are to be elected by direct election from electoral colleges. For these direct elections, the provisions of Ss. 14 to 18 have been made applicable and sub-section (1A) of S. 58 states that the same "shall apply in relation to the members of a Panchayat Samiti as they apply in relation to the Councillors of a Zilla Parishad with the modifications that". What is being contended is that in S. 16, which is enacted for the purpose of laying down disqualifications of Councillors of the Zilla Parishad, the Court should read, for the words "Zilla Parishad", the words "Panchayat Samiti" as wherever the word "Councillor" occurs, it is required to be read as the word "member". If so read, Cl. (i) of sub-section (1) of S. 16 will indicate that what is intended is to lay down a disqualification because of direct or indirect share or interest in the contract with the Panchayat Samiti. In other words, if the contract be with the Zilla Parishad, another statutory authority, then that cannot be imported as a disqualification, for the purpose of being a member of the Panchayat Samiti. It was suggested that the words in sub-section (1A) of S. 58 "as they apply in relation to" will only mean that the words occurring, having reference to Zilla Parishad, are being substituted by similar words having reference to Panchayat Samiti. A reference was also made to S. 62, wherein the provision is made with regard to the office of the member becoming vacant, if the member of the Panchayat Samiti becomes disqualified under Section 58. From this it is contended, that in S. 16 we will have to perforce of law, read, in place of words "Zilla Parishad" the words "Panchayat Samiti" and if so read, the present contract with the Zilla Parishad cannot be the contract that would render the petitioner disqualified. Now, the matters of disqualification rests on certain basic accepted principles; the first and foremost being that which is enacted for the purpose of maintaining the purity of administration and for the purpose of avoiding possible conflict of interest and duty of the holder of the public office, an interpretation that will subserve this statutory purpose will have to be preferred to the one which tends to be grammatical or literal. Equally correct is the proposition that, unless enacted, the disqualification cannot be assumed and an applicative effort has to be made to find out the exact terms of disqualification.

10. In the scheme of the present Act, Zilla Parishad is a constituted, corporate body. Chapter II deals with its constitution and Sec. 8 with its incorporation. Section 7 of the Act, enumerates the authorities which are charged with the duty to carry out the provisions of the Act, the first being the Zilla Parishad and the second being the Panchayat Samiti, followed by other committees, authorities and officers. All the incident, of statutory corporation have been expressly enacted in favour of the Zilla Parishad required to be so constituted. The constitution of the Panchayat Samiti is independently dealt with in Chap. III and that shows that it is a legal body created for the specific purpose and not by itself an independent corporation. Section 57 deals with the constitution of Panchayat Samiti which is a body established at the Block level of the District. Councillors from the Block of the Zilla Parishad become ex-officio members of the Panchayat Samiti under S. 57 (1) (a), followed by the co-opted Councillors, if any residing in the Block. (S. 57 (1) (b)). Clauses (c) and (d) of sub-section (1) of Section 57 deal with the representative of the co-operative society, while Cl. (e) with a woman representative. Clause (f) permits two members to be elected by direct election from electoral colleges. This constitution shows that a direct election has to be held only under S. 57 (1) (f) with regard to the two representatives to be elected in the manner provided for by S. 58. The Block Development Officer is the ex-officio secretary of the Panchayat Samiti. No doubt, the other provisions indicate that the office of the member has a statutory tenure as well as the Panchayat Samiti has to have the Chairman and Deputy Chairman. Followed by the scheme of S. 7, a provision is also made to constitute other committees. After this statutory constitution of the different authorities is so laid down, Chap. VI deals with the powers and duties of the Zilla Parishad, Panchayat Samiti and Committees. Section 100 deals with the administrative powers and duties of the Zilla Parishad while Section 101 with that of Panchayat Samiti, the former having reference to the First Schedule, while the latter having reference to the Second Schedule. The First Schedule shows several subjects of activities, including the development activities, which are made the part of the duty of the Zilla Parishad to carry on, so far as its district funds may allow. Entries under the heading Education from 24 to 29 include, at Entry 24, the establishment, management, maintenance, inspection, etc. of primary schools and that Entry 24 includes the matters of powers vested in the State Government, under the provisions of the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947. A similar scheme is available in Section 101 with regard to the Second Schedule, laying down that it would be the primary responsibility of the Panchayat Samiti so far as funds at its disposal will allow, to make reasonable provision for the matters enumerated by the Second Schedule, and that includes item (23-a) with regard to the management of primary schools.

11. These provisions unmistakably show that, as far as the primary education is concerned, it is the duty of the Zilla Parishad and its management of primary schools also falls under item (23-a) of the Second Schedule. The scheme of the Act shows that the district funds are at the disposal of the Zilla Parishad, out of which the funds are made available to Panchayat Samiti for the purpose of carrying out its various functions. The matter is not different, even if the reference is made to Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947. Chapter III of the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947 deals with powers, duties and functions of Zilla Parishads and other bodies like the Authorised Municipalities and Municipal School Boards. Sub-section (1) of S. 13 of that Act provides that the Zilla Parishad shall have control over all approved schools and sub-section (2) of S. 13 further provides that the Zilla Parishad shall perform the duties and functions one of which is to maintain an adequate number of primary schools. It is obvious therefore that both under the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samities Act, 1961 as well as under the Bombay Primary Education Act, 1947, the Zilla Parishad is obliged, not only to supervise the primary schools but also to maintain adequate number of schools by itself. When such Zilla Parishad Schools are within the area of the Block, it can be consistently read, in view of the Second Schedule, item (23-a), that the management of such schools is also the responsibility of the Panchayat Samiti.

12. The character of the Panchayat Samiti in relation to the Zilla Parishad is clearly one of legal authority charged with the duty by the statute, with regard to the matters primarily available in the Second Schedule. The administration of the district under the Act vests in the corporate body called Zilla Parishad. It is only at the Block level that a legal authority is created as a statutory functionary and is made available for carrying out the statutory purposes as may be laid down even by Zilla Parishad Act. Section 106 deals with the powers and functions of Zilla Parishad, while Section 108 deals with the powers and functions of Panchayat Samiti. Clause (e) of S. 108 (i) enjoins upon the Panchayat Samiti to perform such functions of the Zilla Parishad as are delegated to it by or on behalf of the Zilla Parishad. Similarly Cl. (d) of S. 108 (i) enjoins upon the Panchayat Samiti to execute, maintain, supervise and administer the works and development schemes of the Zilla Parishad. Section 108-A lays down that the Panchayat Samiti shall conform to any instructions that may be given to it by the Zilla Parishad in the execution by the Panchayat Samiti of its duties and functions under the Act. Therefore, it follows that the Panchayat Samiti is a legal body which is subjected to the jurisdiction and powers of the Zilla Parishad to the extent expressly stated by these various provisions.

13. We have referred to these provisions so as to indicate the purpose as to why it is not necessary to follow the approach of interpretation suggested by the learned counsel so as to read S. 16 (1) (i) by substituting wherever the words "Zilla Parishad" occur, the words "Panchayat Samiti". For all practical purposes, Panchayat Samiti is a statutory delegate available to the Zilla Parishad in the matters of execution of its own schemes and contracts. We have indicated that as far as the primary education is concerned, even by virtue of Second Schedule, a duty is cast on the Panchayat Samiti to manage the primary schools. In the light of this, the purpose of Cl. (i) of sub-section (1) of S. 16 is clear, in that the member of the Panchayat Samiti should not have the direct or indirect share or interest in the contract with, by or on behalf of the Zilla Parishad. Such a contract may eventually be within the functional management of the Panchayat Samiti itself and that is the reason why the words "Zilla Parishad" need not be substituted by the words "Panchayat Samiti", as is being canvassed for by the learned counsel.

14. The provisions of S. 58 (1A) introduced clearly a scheme by reference to the earlier provisions and the sub-section itself is self-contained with regard to the matters of modifications and changes, that are required to be made in the earlier provisions, like, Ss. 14, 15, 15-A, 16, 17 and 18. These modifications and changes are limited in character and enacted as such. Firstly, these sections have been made applicable in relation to the members of the Panchayat Samiti, as they apply in relation to the Councillors of the Zilla Parishad. Having applied in this manner, the specific modifications have been enacted with regard to the changes in the text of Ss. 15, 16 and 17. It is obvious, therefore, that while applying these provisions no other modifications could be introduced having recourse, as is suggested and submitted by the learned counsel for the petitioner, so as to substitute in Cl. (i), of sub-section (1) of S. 16 the words "Panchayat Samiti" in place of the words "Zilla Parishad". That would be reading a modification by implication, a course quite hazardous and also not necessary to further the clear object and intent of the provisions of S. 16 (1) (i).

15. Therefore, once it is shown that there exists a disqualification by virtue of direct or indirect interest with regard to the contract with the Zilla Parishad, the disqualification operates and is available, as far as the member of the Panchayat Samiti is concerned. It is not necessary in all cases that such a contract must be with the Panchayat Samiti so as to attract the said disqualification.

16. Wherever the Legislature intended to lay down independent disqualification qua the matters of Panchayat Samiti, it has chosen to say so, by using the language Zilla Parishad or the Panchayat Samiti, as is available in S. 16 (1) (a) (i). So also, when any other body was to be indicated like the Village Panchayat, specific mention of such a body, is available in S. 16 (1) (h) "a Panchayat Samiti or Zilla Parishad or under or in the gift of the Government". So is the position with regard to Cl. (k). No doubt each of the clauses from (a) to (m) of sub-section (1) of S. 16 is an independent subject by itself, but its text can offer a guideline in the matters of interpreting the other clauses. Particularly when an interpretative debate is raised suggesting the modifications in the text of a clause like the present one, because of its application to the members of the Panchayat Samiti. The whole of the text of S. 16, because of the enacting provision of sub-section (1A) of S. 58, is presently under the part of S. 58 itself and a member of the Panchayat Samiti is subjected to the process of disqualification because of the enacting part of S. 58, sub-section (1A) and not merely because of enactment of S. 16 of the Act. For all purposes, this would be a disqualification under S. 58 itself and that is how the Legislature understands the scheme of S. 58. This is evident from the provisions of S. 62 where reference is in Cl. (1) (a) to the disqualification "under S. 58". Section 58 by itself does not lay down the disqualification, but incorporates, by reference to the provisions with regard to the disqualifications, by enacting Section 16 as a part of sub-section (1A) thereof. Once this enacted arrangement is available, it follows that we will have to read the whole S. 16 as it is in the body of sub-section (1A) of S. 58 and so read the enacted Cl. (i) of sub-section (1) would take in the disqualification as against the Panchayat Samiti Members when he/she has direct or indirect by himself or by his partner, any share or interest in any work done by order of the Zilla Parishad or in any contract with, by or on behalf of the Zilla Parishad.

17. An argument was advanced that this interpretation will not cover cases where the contract is exclusively with the Panchayat Samiti. We do not think so. The position of the Panchayat Samiti, as is indicated, is that of a statutory authority and it is really an instrumentality of the Zilla Parishad itself. A person having contract of the nature contemplated by Cl. (i) of Sec. 16 (1) given by the Panchayat Samiti would nonetheless be having an interest in the contract which is either by or on behalf of the Zilla Parishad. The scheme of the various functions of the Panchayat Samiti, its statutory funds and its subordination to the Zilla Parishad, clearly goes to show that it is not an independent corporation as such. It is a statutory instrumentality at the Block level, available for the purpose of the Zilla

Parishad, and interest of its works would be the interest in the works of Zilla Parishad. It will be futile to contend that when the work is being done, if it be the case of a work, or the contract is being executed if it be the case of a contract, the Zilla Parishad will not have any interest, either in the execution, implementation or possession of the work or of the contract. The integrated scheme of the present Act shows that the defined district is placed under the administration of Zilla Parishad and for the purpose of development works and schemes, in the jurisdiction of the Zilla Parishad several instrumentalities have been created so as to achieve the objects of the Act. Though the Panchayat Samiti is constituted as an authority, that by itself is not enough to confer a separate identity on its functioning so as to take away the contracts out of the interest that Zilla Parishad has. This approach furthers the object to avoid possibility of conflict of interest with public duty attached to the office of the member of the Panchayat Samiti. We have, therefore, no manner of doubt that the words in S. 16 (1) (i) are wide enough to include the contracts given, assuming it can be so given, by the Panchayat Samiti but that would normally be in the interest of the Zilla Parishad so as to attract the disqualification.

18. This conclusion is reinforced, if we see the scheme of the district fund, which is placed at the disposal of the Zilla Parishad. It is the Zilla Parishad who can levy taxes or collect the fees and it is one of the obligations of the Zilla Parishad to set apart and allocate moneys out of that fund even to the Panchayat Samiti. Section 104 makes district fund ordinarily liable for all costs and expenses including the liability that arises under any contract or agreement in relation to any Panchayat Samiti. Therefore, we are satisfied that without the substitution of the words "Zilla Parishad" by the words "Panchayat Samiti" as is argued, the efficacy of Cl. (i) of S. 16 (1) is not whittled down, nor there is any scope to avoid the disqualification by reason of the contract with the Panchayat Samiti, which would obviously be a part of the activity in relation to the Zilla Parishad and thus within the terms of Cl. (i).

19. There is yet another principle which must be applied to the matters of disqualification. We have indicated above that Section 16 by process of statutory incorporation is the part of S. 58. As far as the constitution of Panchayat Samiti is concerned, it does not merely consist of the elected members, as is provided by the process of holding elections under S. 58, but there are other members, like all councillors, who are elected to the Panchayat Samiti from the electoral divisions included in the Block. Similarly, there are co-opted councillors residing in block and further are the members who come under Cls. (c), (d) and (e) of S. 57 (1). By virtue of the constitution provided for in Section 57 all those who come under these different categories from Cls. (a) to (f) of sub-section (1), become the members of the Panchayat Samiti. While interpreting the matters of disqualifications which are the matters of disabling the holders of the public office qua the public office, we think the interpretative approach should be to achieve and apply the uniform norms in the matters of qualifications and disqualifications. This principle of uniformity underlies the scheme of incorporation by reference in the terms of sub-section (1A) of S. 58. It subjects the members, to be elected under S. 57 (1) (f), to the same process of qualifications for being elected, and disqualifications as applies to councillors. That shows that to all categories of members the Legislature intends that the matters of disqualification shall apply uniformly and in the same manner. This scheme is further clarified by the provisions of S. 62 dealing with the disqualification of a member of Panchayat Samiti. That has a reference to the member of the Panchayat Samiti other than a councillor. By that a member other than a councillor, is subjected to the disqualifications enacted by S. 58, while the councillor remains subject to the same disqualification by virtue of Section 16 of the Act. If we were to read the changes in S. 16 (1) (i) by substituting the words "Panchayat Samiti" in place of the words "Zilla Parishad", then obviously there would be two different types of disqualifications with regard to the members under S. 57 (1) (f) and the councillors who become the members under other clauses of sub-section (1) of S. 57. Though the councillors, by virtue of their office, become the member of the Panchayat Samiti with regard to them a different rule of the disqualification will apply while with regard to the members who are elected because of the election under S. 58, different rule with regard to the same matter will be operative.

20. By suggesting interpretation, it is not necessary to work out any such antithetical results. The said interpretation, as we indicated above, assumes a total independence and identity in favour of Panchayat Samiti, the position, however, being just the otherwise. An instrumentality for specific purpose need not be equated with the corporation. When such an instrumentality enters in any contract, it should necessarily follow that a corporate body like Zilla Parishad under the present statute would be interested in execution as well as the fruits of such contracts. Therefore, uniformly the councillors and members are subjected to the same disqualification. Furthermore this principle of uniformity requires that all those who become the members of the Panchayat Samiti either because of their being the councillors residing in the Block or because of their election, should be subjected to the similar process of disqualification. Such a disqualification is very much enacted in terms by S. 16 (1) (i) and, because of sub-section (1A) of S. 58, is made applicable to those who are elected under S. 58 and become the members of the Panchayat Samiti.

21. We, therefore, hold that the contract of service as teacher in the Zilla Parishad Primary School of the wife of the present petitioner is within the disqualification enacted by S. 16 (1) (i) applicable, because of sub-section (1A) of S. 58, to the petitioner.

22. In view of all this, we find no merits in any of the submissions of the learned counsel. Rule discharged with no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

JUDGMENT :— This second appeal is filed by original defendant No. 1 against the decree for possession passed against her by the learned Assistant Judge, Satara. The original plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 are the respondents before me.

2. It will be useful to set out the genealogical table showing the relationship of the parties.

From the genealogy it will be seen that Madhavrao had two sons Laxman and Ramu. Admittedly Ramu died before the year 1937. He had no male issue. His widow's name was Gunabai and his daughter was Krishnabai, who was defendant No. 1 in the suit. Gunabai died on 7th Nov., 1967. Rama's brother Laxman left behind him two sons viz. Dnyandeo Laxman (plaintiff No. 1) and Dattu Laxman (plaintiff No. 2).

3. The plaintiff's contention in the plaint was that at the time of his death Rama was joint with Laxman. According to the plaintiff on 4th Oct., 1907, a maintenance deed was executed by Laxman in favour of Gunabai and by virtue of that maintenance deed a portion of land admeasuring 3 acres out of Survey No. 573 and one house were given to Gunabai for her maintenance during her lifetime. In the maintenance deed it was mentioned that she would be entitled to get the income of the property only. As a matter of fact initially the income of the property was given to her by Laxman himself by cultivating the property. But the provision was that if he failed to give such income she was to get possession of the land and was to get it cultivated herself. But there is no room for doubt left by the said document that during her lifetime Gunabai was to enjoy the property as owner. This is what is stated in the maintenance deed in this behalf.

"After your lifetime we will be owners of both these properties".

Thus, there is no room for doubt that during her lifetime she was the owner of the property but was to have only a widow's estate. In other words what was given to Gunabai was only a widow's estate in the said property by virtue of the said maintenance deed. It appears that in spite of the maintenance deed Gunabai was smarting under some grievance. Her exact grievance is to be found only from the documents she filed in Civil Suit No. 66/1915 on 9th Oct., 1916 against Laxman and his two sons i.e. the present plaintiffs. In that suit she maintained that the statements made in the impugned maintenance deed were not correct and that she came to know about those statements only subsequently. In the said suit i.e. Suit No. 66/1915 she claimed possession not only of Survey No. 573 but also of Survey No. 643 contending that there was already a partition between Laxman and Rama, that the suit property belonged to Rama exclusively and that after his death she had inherited the suit property. So far as the claim of Gunabai for the land Survey No. 573 was concerned, the Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs as regards that land but the Court, for some reasons or the other, did not consider the plaintiff's claim to land Survey No. 643 in that suit. A decree was passed in the suit in favour of Gunabai directing Laxman and the present plaintiffs to handover possession of the said portion of the land to her, leaving her right to claim the other land bearing S. No. 643 open. Gunabai filed an application for execution of the said decree which was regular Darkhast No. 364/1917 and in that Darkhast there was a compromise arrived at between the parties. According to the compromise, though Gunabai was entitled as per the decree, to get a portion of land Survey No. 573, she was given, instead, a portion of land admeasuring 2 acres and 20 gunthas from land Survey No. 643. But what is to be noted is that neither in the decree nor in the subsequent compromise there was any restriction placed upon Gunabai, so far as the enjoyment of the property was concerned. It may be mentioned here that so far as the Maintenance Deed (Exh. 51-A) was concerned, it is specifically mentioned in it that what was given by that Maintenance Deed to Gunabai was widow's estate. It is also mentioned that Gunabai was prohibited from making any alienation of the property by way of sale or mortgage etc. But neither the subsequent decree nor the subsequent compromise mentioned above put a restriction upon Gunabai to alienate the property during her lifetime nor did those two instruments in any way provide that what was being granted to Gunabai under the decree or under the compromise was only a limited widow's estate.

4. There is no dispute that the compromise was acted upon and Gunabai got the possession of land Survey No. 643/2-A admeasuring 2 acres and 20 gunthas and continued to be in possession of the same actually or constructively, till 15th Sep., 1943, when she executed a gift deed in favour of her daughter Krishnabai, defendant No. 1 in these proceedings. The plaintiffs, no doubt, contended that in spite of the gift deed Gunabai continued to be in possession of the suit land and that the defendant No. 1 had no right, title and interest in the same. Gunabai died on 17th Nov., 1967. The plaintiffs therefore contended that they got the right of possession of this suit land on the said date of the death of Gunabai. They contended that Krishnabai had no right, title and interest on the property either by virtue of the gift deed or independent of the gift deed. So far as the gift deed was concerned their contention was that the gift deed was void ab initio because there was a restriction upon Gunabai from making any alienation of the property by virtue of the deed of maintenance. So far as the right of the defendant No. 1, independent of the gift deed, was concerned, the plaintiffs' contention was that in the peculiar circumstances of the case Krishnabai could not be said to have become full-fledged owner of the suit land and hence defendant No. 1 could not be said to have inherited the suit land from Gunabai. In the suit defendant No. 2 was impleaded because according to the plaintiffs his name was shown in the record of rights as a tenant. The plaintiffs contended that even if any rights were created in favour of defendant No. 2 by Gunabai, they were extinguished with the death of Gunabai. They therefore contended that they were entitled to actual possession of the land in question from both the defendants.

5. Defendant No. 1 filed her written statement Ex. 18 and contended that the suit land belonged to Rama as his exclusive property. They challenged the validity of the maintenance deed Exhibit 51-A contending that it was a false and fabricated document, brought about only to avoid the share of Gunabai in the property of her husband Rama. Defendant No. 1 contended that the Maintenance Deed was never acted upon. The defendant No. 1 also contended that the gift deed dated 15th Sep., 1943 was fully acted upon and she was in possession of the suit land on the basis of the said gift deed. They contended that Gunabai was an absolute owner of the property and that there was nothing in the decree Exhibit 34 and the compromise Exhibit 47, by virtue of which the land became a limited estate in the hands of Gunabai. They contended that she being a full owner of the property was perfectly competent to execute the gift deed in favour of defendant No. 1 and that hence the gift deed was a valid document.

6. Defendant No. 2 filed his written statement contending that he was a tenant of the land and was in possession of the same for the last 42 to 45 years. He contended that firstly his father was the tenant on the land even before Gunabai had obtained possession of this land. He contended that after his father's death he himself became the tenant of the land. He therefore contended that no decree for possession could be passed against him.

7. On these pleadings the issues were framed by the learned trial Judge. Issue No. 2 was to the effect as to whether the plaintiffs proved that Gunabai was a limited owner in respect of the suit lands. The finding recorded by the learned trial Judge was that they had failed to prove the same. The learned Judge arrived at the conclusion that there was nothing in the decree Exhibit 34, or the compromise Ex. 47, which showed that what was given to Gunabai under the said decree was only a limited estate of a widow. The learned Judge therefore held that Gunabai was an absolute owner of the suit land. Hence the learned Judge held that the gift deed executed by Gunabai in favour of defendant No. 1 was a valid document and that her possession of the suit land as per the said gift deed was a lawful possession.

8. Issue No. 4 framed by the learned trial Judge is of some significance in this appeal. The issue framed by the learned trial Judge is as follows:—

Does defendant No. 2 prove that he is a tenant in the suit land since the time of his father?

After framing this issue the learned trial Judge referred the said issue to the Tenancy Court under S. 85-A of the Bombay Tenancy Act. Initially the Tahsildar made a report that according to the Tenancy Court defendant No. 2 was a tenant in respect of the suit land since the time of his father. But it appears that the present plaintiffs filed an appeal to the Collector and the Appeal Court set aside the order of Tahsildar and remanded the case back to him. After the remand the Sub-Divisional Officer observed that the issue involved the question of title. He held that before deciding the question as to whether defendant No. 2 was a tenant of the land or not, the question of title of the person who let out the land to defendant No. 2 would have to be adjudicated upon. He therefore returned the issue to the Civil Court for decision of the question regarding the title of the person who let out the land to defendant No. 2. Therefore the trial Court was required to decide this issue but since the trial Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs themselves failed to prove their title to the suit land, and that defendant No. 1 proved her title to the same, the plaintiffs' suit for possession had to be dismissed and hence according to the trial Court no separate answer to issue No. 4 was necessary. The trial Court therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with no order as to costs.

9. In appeal the learned Assistant Judge took a different view. According to the learned Judge, what was given to Gunabai as per the decree Ext. 34, as well as, as per Compromise Ex. 47, was nothing but a limited estate. This view was arrived at by him by holding that the decree Ext. 34 was passed with a view to enforce the Deed of Maintenance itself. After taking this view the learned Judge referred to and relied upon the provisions of S. 14 (2) of the Hindu Succession Act and held that Gunabai's right could have been perfected into an absolute ownership under S. 14 (1) of the Hindu Succession Act but he found that Gunabai was not "possessed" of the property at the time of the advent of the Hindu Succession Act within the contemplation of S. 14 (1) of the said Act. He found that the property at that time was in possession of the defendant No. 2. He also referred to provisions of S. 14 (2) of the Act and held that by virtue of the decree Gunabai had got only a limited right in the suit property. He therefore held that even under S. 14 (2) of the Hindu Succession Act Gunabai could not be said to have acquired absolute ownership of the suit property on the date when the Hindu Succession Act came into force. He therefore held that the defendant No. 1 had no title to the suit property after the death of Gunabai. He also held that even assuming that the property was separate property of Rama, the plaintiff being reversionary heirs are entitled to the suit land.

10. So far as defendant No. 2 was concerned the learned Judge noticed the fact that the reference was returned by the Tenancy Court but he did not think it necessary to make the reference afresh. He held that defendant No. 2 was a trespasser because Gunabai could not create a valid legal tenancy in his favour nor could defendant No. 1 create any legal tenancy in his favour. He therefore allowed the appeal and passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs against both the defendants.

11. The present appeal has been filed by the original defendant No. 1 against the said decree for possession. It may be mentioned here that no appeal as such was filed by the defendant No. 2 against the order for delivery of possession of the suit property. Having regard to the view that I am taking in the matter, the fact that the defendant No. 2 has filed no appeal, may be of no legal consequence. However, I might make a few observations in that behalf in the concluding portion of this judgment.

12. Coming to the main question as to whether the plaintiffs have proved their title to the suit lands Mr. Limaye the learned Advocate for the appellant contended before me, with some force, that assuming any right or title enured in favour of Gunabai by virtue of the Maintenance Deed Ex. 51-A, Gunabai had not certainly claimed the right to suit property in Civil Suit No. 66/1915 on the basis of the said Maintenance Deed. In fact Ext. 34 passed in the said suit clearly shows that according to her the document that came to be executed was without her knowledge and she did not agree with the contents of the same at all. In fact she claimed that her husband Rama was not living jointly with his brother Laxman and that both the lands Survey Nos. 573 and 643 were separate property of Rama. She, therefore, filed a suit for possession not only of the said Survey No. 573 but also of Survey No. 643. It is the decree in this suit which is on record. The written statement filed by the defendant in that suit is not on record at all. No doubt the decree goes to provide that Gunabai would be entitled to possession of land Survey No. 573 and the decree does not give anything to Gunabai so far as the land Survey 643 was concerned. But from this fact it cannot be inferred that the decree was one which enforced the maintenance deed. For ought we know, the defendants might have themselves set up the maintenance deed by way of defence and the Court might have passed a decree on admission so far as the Survey No. 573 was concerned. It is significant that the plaintiffs' claim regarding Survey No. 643 was not at all rejected by the Court. It seems that the Court was willing to grant whatever was admitted by the defendant and the disputed claim was left to be adjudicated upon by them in an independent litigation. The point is that the decree nowhere mentions that the land Survey No. 573, the possession of which was to be received by Gunabai from Laxman and his sons, was to be had by her as widow's estate. I will presently discuss the effect of this decree which is an unqualified decree. What I want to point out here is that the learned Judge's plea that the decree created a limited estate in favour of the widow is not justified by the phraseology employed in the decree.

13. We then come to the compromise which was arrived at between the parties in the Darkhast proceedings. I have mentioned above that in the Darkhast the parties arrived at a compromise by virtue of which Survey No. 573 which was to be taken possession of by the widow Gunabai was to be given to Laxman and his sons, whereas a portion admeasuring two acres and twenty gunthas out of Survey No. 643 was given to Gunabai. In a sense it can be legitimately said that this was a grant in favour of Gunabai. As a matter of fact it can be said that the decree created a grant in respect of Survey No. 573, whereas the compromise created a grant in respect of land Survey No. 643, to the extent of 2 acres and 20 gunthas in favour of Gunabai in place of the other land. But the noteworthy feature is that even this compromise makes a grant of this Survey No. 643 in favour of Gunabai in an unqualified manner. The compromise by itself nowhere shows that what was contemplated by the compromise was to grant only widow's estate to Gunabai and not the absolute estate as contemplated by S. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act. Relying upon these facts Mr. Limaye contends that there is nothing in the grant resulting from the decree Ext. 34 and Compromise Ex. 47 to show that Gunabai ever received a grant of widow's estate in respect of the suit land. He therefore contended that there is no basis for the learned Judge's reasoning that because Gunabai was not possessed of the land at the time of the advent of the Hindu Succession Act, she did not become the full owner of the same by virtue of S. 14 (1) of the Act. He contends that under S. 14 (1) of the Act a limited estate can itself ripen into a full absolute estate but neither the effect of S. 14 (1) nor of S. 14 (2) was in any way to affect an estate which was already an absolute estate. He therefore contended that Gunabai's executing a gift deed in favour of her daughter Krishnabai was legal and she was perfectly competent to do the same. He contended that the defendant No. 1 acquired a full title to the suit property by virtue of her right. He contends that neither sub-sec. (1) nor sub-sec. (2) of S. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act had any relevance in the context of the facts of this case.

14. Mr. Abhyankar, the learned Advocate appearing for the plaintiffs on the other hand contended that the decree as well as the compromise must be deemed to have contemplated a grant of widow's estate only in favour of Gunabai. In this connection he relied upon the following observations of their Lordships of Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsool v. Shewukram, (1874-2 Ind App 7) :

"In construing the will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus, with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate." Relying upon these observations Mr. Abhyankar also referred to para 401 of the Commentaries of Mulla on Principles of Hindu Law. In fact the above observations have been culled out from Cl. 2 of the said para 401 only. Relying upon these observations Mr. Abhyankar contended that when the decree Ext. 34 provided that Gunabai was to get possession of S. No. 573, what must be deemed to have been intended is that she was to get a widow's estate in respect of the suit lands. He however contended that so far as the compromise Ext. 47 was concerned all that was done by the latter document was to exchange one land for the other. I am afraid it will not be possible for me to agree with Mr. Abhyankar so far as this legal aspect of the matter is concerned. No doubt the above mentioned observations of the Privy Council do give rise to an inference of presumption in favour of holding that if a decree results in a grant in favour of a widow, the grant is presumed to be of a limited estate. But ought we know much water has been flown through the Ganges since the said P. C. decision was given as early as in the last century in the year 1874, if not even earlier. But as against that decision, I have before me two Authorities of the Supreme Court wherein different view is expressed. The first one is Nathoo Lal v. Durga Prasad, (AIR 1954 SC 355) wherein the Supreme Court observed as follows (at p. 358) :—

"It may be taken to be quite settled that there is no warrant for the proposition of law that when a grant of an immoveable property is made to a Hindu female, she does not get an absolute or alienable interest in such property, unless such power is expressly conferred upon her. If an estate were given to a man without express words of inheritance, it would, in the absence of a conflicting context, carry, by Hindu law, an estate of inheritance. This is the general principle of law which is recognised and embodied in S. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act and unless it is shown that under Hindu law a gift to a female means a limited gift or carries with it the restrictions or disabilities similar to those that exist in a 'widow's estate' there is no justification for departing from this principle. There is certainly no such provision in Hindu law and no text could be supplied in support of the same. The position, therefore, is that to convey an absolute estate to a Hindu female, no express power of alienation need be given; it is enough if words are used of such amplitude as would convey full rights of ownership."

15. It will be thus seen that according to the Supreme Court the tests laid down for construing the words of grant in favour of a male and female under the Hindu law are not different. The words employed for a grant in favour of a male Hindu would connote the same meaning as those employed for the grant in favour of a female Hindu and vice versa. If this is the position, then what is necessary to be seen is as to whether the words of the decree that was passed by the Court in Civil Suit No. 66/1915 would spell a limited estate if the decree was passed in favour of a male plaintiff. Mr. Abhyankar contended that we have to take into account the circumstances in which the decree was passed. But in the first place I am not sure that there is much scope for such construction. There is nothing unequivocal or vague in the decree. The decree has to be read in the context of the law of the land which, as observed by the Supreme Court, is to be found in S. 8 of the T. P. Act. The said S. 8 provides that unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property thereof. Section 8 of the T. P. Act no doubt contemplates the case of transfer inter vivos by the act of parties; but the principle is the same in respect of transfer mortis causa or one which materialises by virtue of any order or decree of a Court. There is no reason to assume that when the decree was passed giving Gunabai title to the suit property she was intended to be given limited estate and not full-fledged estate. I have before me another Authority of the Supreme Court reported in AIR 1951 SC 139, (Ram Gopal v. Nandlal), which lays down the same proposition. In Nathoolal's case (AIR 1954 SC 355) the Supreme Court no doubt observed that there is no warrant for the proposition of law that when a grant of immoveable property is made to a Hindu female, she does not get an absolute or alienable interest in such property unless such power is expressly conferred upon her. The Supreme Court held that the position is that to convey an absolute estate to a Hindu female no express power of alienation need be given; it is enough if words are used of such an amplitude as would convey the full right of ownership. We have only to see here in the decree Ext. 34 as well as the decree compromise Ex. 47 that there is no restriction whatsoever placed upon the rights of Gunabai when she was given initially the grant of land Survey No. 573 and later on the grant of land Survey No. 643/2. The words are of sufficient amplitude to convey an absolute estate, and there is nothing in the decree which in any way restricts Gunabai's property in the suit land to a widow's estate. I may mention here that while making the above observations the Supreme Court in fact considered and examined the effect of the Privy Council's decision in Mahomed Shumsool's case (1874-2 Ind App 7) referred to above and the judgment was given in spite of that case. It can, therefore, be safely said that the judgment in Shumsool's case is no longer good law in view of the above mentioned two Authorities of the Supreme Court.

16. Incidentally, I may also point out that in Ramgopal's case, AIR 1951 SC 139, the property received by a Hindu female was under a gift deed for her maintenance only. But in spite of this position the Supreme Court in that case came to the conclusion that merely because the properties of the gift was to provide for maintenance of the widow it would not mean that the extent of the property was widow's estate only. In the instant case, no doubt it is the case of the plaintiff that what was given to Gunabai was property for the sake of her maintenance. But when the land Survey No. 643 was given in lieu of the property mentioned in the Maintenance Deed it could not be said that what was intended to be given was only a limited estate. It would no doubt be perfectly open for the parties to lead evidence for proving the intention of the transfer while making the grant. But the fact that it was given with a view to facilitate the widow to maintain herself would not by itself given rise to a presumption that only limited estate was purported to be created.

17. In this view of the things, I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Assistant Judge that Gunabai was in possession of the suit land as a limited owner. The inference must be that if she was the owner of the land she had the right of absolute ownership in respect of the same. I may hasten to add that I am expressing this view only strictly in the context of the facts of this case where nothing is brought on record to show that a contrary intention was entertained by both the parties.

18. Having regard to this view that I have taken it is unnecessary to examine the correctness of the learned Judge's final decree against defendant No. 2, directing him to hand over the actual possession of the suit land to the plaintiffs. However I may make a few observations in this behalf. The contention of defendant No. 2 was that he was a tenant on the suit land for nearly 42 to 45 years before the date of the suit and that too even before Gunabai got possession of the land from Laxman and the two present plaintiffs. He contended that it was his father who was tenant of the land and thereafter he became the tenant and that the tenancy subsisted for a period of nearly 42 to 45 years. To my mind the Tenancy Court was not at all right in returning the reference on the ground that a question of title was involved. So far as the question of title was concerned, Gunabai's title from the date of the compromise Ext. 47, till the gift deed of the year 1943 was never in question. The position, therefore, would be that if Gunabai had created the tenancy in her lifetime before the date of gift deed, the tenancy would be perfectly lawful one. It is only if Gunabai did not have an absolute estate, but had only a limited estate and if Gunabai had created a tenancy in favour of defendant No. 2, after the year 1943, that the question as to whether the tenant would be lawful tenant or not would be of some relevance. In the instant case the Tenancy Court actually recorded a finding in the first instance that the defendant No. 2 was a tenant since the time of his father. The impression that is gathered is that the contention of the defendant No. 2 that he was a tenant for nearly 45 years before the date of the suit is accepted by the Tenancy Court. The correctness of this view could no doubt be verified and examined by the Appellate Court but the Tenancy Court had no jurisdiction or justification to send back the matter to the Civil Court. In any event the Civil Court could be said to be having no jurisdiction to pass a decree against the tenant if the tenant was inducted on the land by Gunabai before the year 1943. The view of the learned Assistant Judge that Gunabai had no power to create tenancy appears to be without any basis. No doubt the learned Judge appears to have been influenced by the prohibition contained in the Maintenance Deed Ext. 51-A forbidding Gunabai from alienating the land. But what the learned Judge lost sight of was that Gunabai did not claim her right to the suit lands through the maintenance deed at all. Assuming she got any right flowing from the maintenance deed, the right merged in the decree in the first instance and in the compromise later on. Both those documents did not contain any restriction against any alienation by Gunabai. The learned Judge's view that defendant No. 2 was therefore a trespasser is a finding without jurisdiction. However, having regard to the facts that I have taken viz. that the plaintiffs' suit itself is liable to be dismissed for want of title, it is not necessary for me to pass any separate order in this behalf.

19. I may state that during the pendency of this appeal a stay has been obtained by the appellant defendant No. 1 and by virtue of the stay defendant No. 2 continues to be in possession of the suit property. No doubt by allowing this appeal, in substance I am setting aside the decree passed against the defendant No. 1 only because she alone has filed the appeal. But merely because defendant No. 2 did not file an appeal, I cannot allow the plaintiffs to take possession of the property from defendant No. 2, which property in fact belonged to defendant No. 1.

20. In the result this appeal is allowed. The decree passed by the lower appellate Court is set aside and the one passed by the trial Court is restored. The heirs of respondent No. 1 shall pay the costs of this second appeal and that of the appeal in the lower appellate Court to the present appellant.

Appeal allowed.

(Para 4)

A. P. Inamdar, for Appellants; V. P. Tipnis, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 9 and M. R. Kotwal, Govt. Pleader, as per notice, for Charity Commr.

KANIA, J.:— This is an appeal from the judgment delivered by Mukhi, J.,

LY/LY/F868/81/AKJ

on 7th/8th Jan. 1976, in First Appeal No. 666 of 1973 in this Court. It is the agreed position that, although respondents Nos. 10 to 12 have not been served, as no Bhatta has been paid for serving them, they are not necessary parties for the disposal of this appeal. At the hearing it appeared that the disposal of this appeal might involve a question affecting a public charitable purpose and hence notice should be given to the Charity Commissioner, Bombay, regarding this appeal. Mr. Kotwal, the learned Government Pleader, has taken instructions from the Charity Commissioner and is appearing for the learned Charity Commissioner before us and hence no formal notice need be given to the Charity Commissioner. As there is no dispute regarding the order which should be passed in this appeal, it is necessary to set out only very briefly the relevant facts.

2. On 27th Oct. 1967, Dhanaji Fakira Mokashi, appellant No. 1 herein, filed an application under S. 18 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 (referred to hereinafter as "the said Act") before the Assistant Charity Commissioner, Nasik Region, Nasik for registration of "Koli Gramsevak Samiti, Vitave" (referred to hereinafter as 'the said alleged trust') as a public trust under the said Act. By his order dated 30th Jan. 1969, the Assistant Charity Commissioner ordered that the said alleged trust be registered as a public trust under the said Act and the necessary certificate issued. The said order also determined that the properties mentioned in the application made by appellant No. 1 belonged to the said alleged trust. Respondents 1 to 3, who claim to be the owners of the land bearing survey No. 363, Hissa No. 1/1, being one of the properties held to belong to the said alleged trust, filed a revision application under S. 70 of the said Act before the Charity Commissioner, Bombay. This revisional application was disposed of by the Deputy Charity Commissioner with appellate powers, by his order dated 12th June, 1972. The Deputy Charity Commissioner partially allowed the revision application and set aside the order and findings of the Assistant Charity Commissioner in respect of the land bearing survey No. 363, Hissa No. 1/1, and remanded the matter back for a fresh hearing on the question whether the said land was the property of the said alleged trust. On the other questions the learned Deputy Charity Commissioner confirmed the findings of the learned Assistant Charity Commissioner. Respondents 1 to 9 then filed an appeal by way of a miscellaneous application under S. 72 of the said Act in the Court of the learned District Judge, Thana. This appeal was numbered as Miscellaneous Application No. 156 of 1972 and was disposed of by the learned Assistant Judge, Thana. The learned Assistant Judge held that the appeal or application before him was restricted only to one composite question, viz., whether the said alleged trust really existed and whether it was a public trust within the said Act, and that question had not been decided by the learned Deputy Charity Commissioner. On this footing the learned Assistant Judge held that the appeal or application before him under S. 72 (1) of the said Act was not maintainable. Respondents 1 to 9 preferred the said Appeal No. 666 of 1973 referred to earlier against this order.

3. Mukhi, J. before whom the said appeal came up for hearing, set aside the order and judgment of the learned Assistant Judge, Thana, the order and judgment of the Deputy Charity Commr. in the aforesaid revisional application, as well as the order and judgment of the Assistant Charity Commissioner passed on the application made by appellant No. 1 herein. In the course of his judgment, Mukhi, J., has rightly pointed out that an application, such as the one which was made by appellant No. 1 herein, should not have been disposed of in the somewhat casual manner in which it appears to have been disposed of by the learned Assistant Charity Commissioner. It should be appreciated that very often persons who are interested in properties which are alleged in an application under S. 18 of the said Act to belong to a public trust might not come to know of a public notice issued by way of a newspaper advertisement and hence, even if the application is disposed of without contest, it is desirable that the Assistant Charity Commissioner or the Deputy Charity Commissioner, who disposes of the same, should apply his mind and determine as to whether (1) a trust existed on the date of the application, (2) the said trust was a public trust, and (3) the properties mentioned in the application belonged to the said public trust. On these points none of the Counsel before us has disputed the correctness of the judgment of Mukhi, J.

4. However, it was urged by Mr. Inamdar that Mukhi, J. was in error, when he rejected the request made by the appellants that the matter should be remanded back to the Assistant Charity Commissioner for a fresh enquiry and determination on the basis of the said application dated 27th October, 1967 under S. 18 of the said Act, because if this was not done, and the appellants had to file a fresh application, complications might arise in respect of the intervening transactions. Mr. Tipnis has fairly agreed that this difficulty may arise if the appellants are compelled to make a fresh application under S. 18, if they so think fit. In view of this, we set aside the judgment of Mukhi, J., in so far as he has rejected the application of the appellants for remanding the matter to the learned Assistant Charity Commissioner for disposal afresh of the said application dated 27th Oct., 1967, according to law.

5. In the result, the appeal is allowed only to the aforesaid extent and the matter is remanded to the learned Assistant Charity Commissioner for disposal according to law of the application dated 27th Oct. 1967, made under S. 18 of the said Act. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal as between the appellants and the respondents. The order for costs passed in respect of the other proceedings by Mukhi, J. shall, however, stand. The costs of the learned Charity Commissioner fixed at Rs. 120/- to come out of the funds of the said alleged trust.

6. Mr. Inamdar states that his clients intend to apply for an amendment of the said application dated 27th Oct., 1967, by giving further and better particulars therein. That application for amendment will, of course, have to be decided by the learned Assistant Charity Commissioner according to law. It is agreed between all the parties that the said application dated 27th Oct., 1967, will be heard completely afresh and right from the commencement.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT:— The appellants are the heirs of the original plaintiff whose suit for possession of the suit premises has been dismissed by the City Civil Court. For the sake of convenience the parties will be referred hereinafter as "plaintiff and defendant".

2. The dispute relates to a flat in the building known as "Shalaka" situated at Shivaji Park, Dadar, Bombay-28. Admittedly the plaintiff was the owner of the said flat and after his death his heirs continued to be the owners thereof. Block No. 1 on the ground floor of the said building is the subject matter of the dispute. The said block was let out by the plaintiff to one Sitaram Tribhuvane sometime prior to 1941. Sitaram was living in that block with his wife Sulochana.

Said Sitaram Tribhuvane died in or about the month of Nov. 1949, and after his death Sulochana continued to occupy the said flat. The plaintiff transferred the rent receipt in respect of the suit premises in her favour. Sulochana herself had become very old and more or less helpless. There was no one to look after her in that age. Moreover, she had no wherewithal to maintain herself with. Defendant's wife was Sitaram's niece. It therefore appears that she invited the defendant and his wife to come and stay with her and occupy the premises. By about Jan., 1950, therefore, the defendant and his wife started living in the suit premises along with said Sulochana. It appears that the plaintiff initially resented this fact and she sent a letter Exhibit 8, dt. 11-1-50, calling upon Sulochana to remove the defendant and his wife from the premises. The plaintiff contended that they were her unlawful sub-tenants. To this letter a reply dt. 17th Jan., 1950, was sent by Sulochana through one R. B. Godambe, Advocate, purporting to act on behalf of Sulochana. In the said reply it was stated that the defendant and his wife were staying with Sulochana in order to keep her company and to give her help in her old age. It was denied that they were strangers or that they were sub-tenants. A positive statement was made that the defendant's wife was Sitaram's niece and that she was not a stranger as such. The demand of removal of the defendant and his wife was resented and turned down. No further reply was given by the plaintiff to this letter and there the matter rested till the death of Sulochanabai and for quite sometime even thereafter. Sulochana died on or about 22nd August, 1952. The defendant and his wife continued to stay there after the death of Sulochanabai and for a period of nearly 10 years the plaintiff took no proceedings for recovery of possession from the defendant. As will be presently pointed out, the plaintiff recovered rent from the defendant strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act; sent him notices for payment of permitted increases as required by the Bombay Rent Act; gave him particulars of the various increases and called upon him to pay various taxes recoverable by the landlord from his tenant. It is true that sometime in the year 1954, the plaintiff gave intimation to the Accommodation Controller to the effect that the suit premises had fallen vacant within the meaning of the Bombay Land Requisition Act which was in force at that time in the City of Bombay. It is common ground that pursuant to the said intimation given by the plaintiff an enquiry was made by the office of the Accommodation Controller. But, in the enquiry, it appears, the Accommodation Controller was satisfied that the defendant was not a stranger to the premises and that the premises could not be said to have fallen "vacant" within the meaning of the relevant Act upon the death of Sulochana. The proceedings under the BLR Act were therefore dropped. The fact, however, remains that the exact date when the proceedings were dropped does not appear to be on record. Mr. Suresh the learned Counsel for the defendant was not able to post me with the information in that behalf. The fact however remains that right from the year 1952 till 1962, the plaintiff went on demanding and recovering rent from the defendant and went on giving every indication that he had accepted the defendant himself as tenant. It is true that the rent receipt continued to be in the name of Sulochana. But as will be presently pointed out this was a meaningless gesture.

3. It appears that there was some correspondence between the parties in which, on some occasions, the plaintiff denied the fact that defendant was his tenant. But the fact remains that he described himself as a landlord and went on recovering rent and permitted increases and taxes etc., from the defendant in strict accordance with the Bombay Act which applies only to tenants. Thereafter on 10th May 1961, all of a sudden he gave a notice to the defendant contending that he was a trespasser in the suit premises and called upon him to vacate the same. Since the defendant denied the allegation, the present suit was filed by the plaintiff, for recovery of the possession of suit premises, in the Bombay City Civil Court on 30th March, 1962. The suit is on title and not on the basis of the landlord-tenant relationship between the parties.

4. In the plaint it was contended that the defendant had no right, title and interest in the suit premises and that their occupation of the same was unlawful.

5. The defendant filed his written statement and contended that he was a tenant in respect of the suit premises within the meaning of the B. R. Act and that hence, the City Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the said suit. He contended, in the first instance; that he was a member of the family of Sulochanabai who was admittedly a tenant of the suit premises and contended further that being such a member of the family within the meaning of the B. R. Act, after her death, he had become tenant in respect of the suit premises within the meaning of the said Act. In the alternative he contended that during her lifetime itself, Sulochanabai, had sublet the suit premises to him as a sub-tenant of Sulochanabai which sub-tenancy was validated by the relevant Ordinance of 21st May, 1959. Therefore he had become a lawful sub-tenant of the suit premises and as such a lawful tenant of the plaintiff. In the alternative, he further contended that Sulochana had made a Will and in that Will the tenancy rights in respect of the suit premises had been bequeathed upon the defendant.

6. On these pleadings the issues were framed. The issue No. 2, was as to whether the defendant was a trespasser, Issue No. 3, was as to whether Sulochana had sublet the suit premises to the defendant in Jan. 1950. Issue No. 4 was consequential to issue No. 3 and as per the said issue it was to be examined whether the defendant was entitled to take advantage of the Ordinance dt. 21st May, 1959 so as to be clothed with the capacity of a lawful tenant of the suit premises. Issue No. 5, related to the plea of the defendant that he had acquired tenancy right in respect of the suit premises by virtue of the Will executed by Sulochana in his favour. Issue No. 6 is something regarding which strenuous arguments were sought to be advanced. The issue is as to whether the defendant was entitled to the suit premises as a tenant by virtue of Section 5 (11) (c) of the B. R. Act. In reality this issue is the counterpart of issue No. 2 referred to above. I will presently refer to the agreement advanced in this behalf on behalf of the appellant.

7. On these issues evidence was led by the parties. The learned Judge, examined the entire evidence very carefully and upon examining the evidence he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had himself treated the defendant as his tenant in spite of his frequent intermittent protestations that he was not his tenant. The learned Judge also recorded the finding that the defendant was also treated by Sulochanabai as a member of her family and that at the time of her death defendant, his wife and Sulochana were living as one family. The learned Judge, therefore, held that the defendant was entitled to take advantage of the provisions of S. 5 (11) (c) of the B. R. Act and was justified in contending that he was clothed with the capacity of a tenant by virtue of the said provision. The learned Judge, however, negated the defendant's plea that he was a sub-tenant of Sulochana. He also negated the defendant's plea that the tenancy rights in respect of the suit premises had been bequeathed upon him by Sulochanabai by her last Will. However, in view of the findings recorded by him relating to the abovementioned two questions, namely that the plaintiff had himself treated the defendant to be his tenant and further that the defendant was entitled to claim tenancy by virtue of the provisions of S. 5 (11) (c) of the B. R. Act, he held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief against the defendant in the City Civil Court. The plaintiff's suit was, therefore, dismissed by the learned Judge with costs.

8. So far as the present appeal is concerned I find no reason or justification for finding fault with the decree passed by the learned Judge. So far as the two points, upon which the learned Judge has held that the defendant was entitled to claim benefits available for a tenant, under the B. R. Act are concerned, I find absolutely no reason to find fault with the reasoning of the learned Judge. The learned Judge has held that the entire conduct of the plaintiff shows that even while protesting that the defendant was not his tenant, he had conducted his affairs with him in his capacity as a tenant. As for instance, the learned judge has referred to the letter Exhibit 1, dt. 31-3-1954. The letter is addressed by the plaintiff to the defendant as occupant of the suit premises, in his capacity as "landlord" of the suit premises. He has not stated that he is the "owner" of the suit premises. What he has stated is that he is the "landlord". Hence, it is possible to hold that according to him, qua the defendant, he is a landlord, because the landlord and tenant relationship is after all between two parties; but it must be said that this is more a matter of nomenclature and the circumstance cannot be used all by itself. But if we take this circumstance coupled with the other circumstances no doubt is left that the plaintiff wanted to foist every liability upon the defendant to which liability only a tenant can be subjected. The said letter has been set out in extenso by the learned judge in his judgment. In substance, the letter informs the defendant that the rent that the defendant was paying for the suit premises is increased under the provisions of the B. R. Act. He had increased it to the extent of 7½% from 1st April, 1974. Evidently such a thing could not have been done by him unless, according to him, the defendant was having some kind of relationship with him as that of a tenant.

9. Next, the learned Judge has relied upon the circular Exhibit 2, dt. 26th July, 1958. The said circular is nothing but a letter written by the plaintiff to all the tenants meaning thereby to all the persons who were admittedly his tenants. The significant fact is that this letter was circulated also to the defendant. By the said letter, the defendant was informed that his monthly rent from April, 1958 onwards would be Rupees 27.92 p. It is noteworthy that under the previous letter dt. 31st March, 1954, on the intimation that was given to the defendant was that the rent inclusive of the permissive increase was to be Rs. 27.6.0 whereas the circular letter Exhibit 2, dt. 26th July, 1958 gave an intimation of increase of only a few paise; but even such a paltry increase which could be claimed only from a tenant has been claimed by the defendant (plaintiff?). Even this letter has been set out by the learned Judge in extenso in his judgment.

10. A number of similar letters have been produced by the defendant and have been considered by the learned Judge. It is unnecessary to examine each of them here. It is sufficient to observe that the only inference that could be drawn from these letters is that — (a) the defendant was in occupation of the suit premises exclusively during the time of death of Sulochana; (b) he was in occupation by asserting his right which right was even noted by the plaintiff and, (c) even, according to the plaintiff, the defendant was subject to the liabilities which are imposed by the statute namely the B. R. Act only on tenants. If this is the position, it is futile on the part of the plaintiff to contend that the defendant had no tenancy right in respect of the suit premises. I would like to emphasise that this position emerges by virtue of the unequivocal conduct of the plaintiff. It is independent of the fact that defendant must be deemed to have got the tenancy right through Sulochana. What I mean to say is that even if it was held that the defendant was not entitled to avail of the rights conferred by S. 5 (11) (c) of the B. R. Act, still the above mentioned conduct of the plaintiff and the state of mind of both the parties for the period of about 10 years would itself result in the effect that the defendant's right in the suit premises as a tenant could not be called in question by the plaintiff by the time he filed the suit.

But in addition to this aspect of the defendant's right, the learned Judge has held that the defendant could be justifiably and legitimately considered to be a member of Sulochana's family for some time before her death and since he was admittedly staying with her at the time of her death, the learned Judge was perfectly justified in coming to the conclusion that the defendant had acquired the rights of a tenant contemplated by B. R. Act under S. 5 (11) (c) of the B. R. Act.

11. In this connection it is to be noted that the learned Judge has given very good reasons to hold that the defendant was not a stranger to Sulochanabai. There is evidence on record to show that the defendant's wife was the niece of Sulochana's husband. In this connection reply given on behalf of Sulochanabai to the plaintiff's letter dt. 11th Jan. 1950 is eloquent. In the letter, in the first place, it is specifically stated that the defendant's wife was the niece of the husband of Sulochana. There is no reply given by the plaintiff to that letter denying such relationship. In the second place, most significant aspect of the matter is that in the said letter dt. 11th Jan. 1950 the plaintiff had called upon Sulochana to remove the defendant and his wife from the suit premises, because according to him, they were strangers. Sulochanabai stoutly denied that allegation and refused to oblige the plaintiff by removing the defendant and his wife from the suit premises. No action was taken by the plaintiff against such gesture on the part of Sulochanabai for the full period of 10 years, and, on the other hand, he went on making claim against the defendant which claims could be legitimately made only against a tenant governed by the B. R. Act. If an inference, therefore, was raised that even the plaintiff had reconciled himself to the fact that the defendant was always treated by Sulochana as a member of the family, no fault could be found with such an inference and this is the precise inference raised by the learned Judge and I for one am in full agreement with the conclusion arrived at by him in this behalf.

12. Mr. Walawalkar, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff, however, tried to rely upon the judgment in Langdon v. Horton, (1951) 1 All ER 60. The said authority has been referred by the learned Judge also. It has been held in that case that even a first cousin is not a member of the tenant's family. I will deal with the said Authority presently. But I have no doubt that the other Authority relied upon by the learned Judge in Jones v. Whitehill, (1950) 1 All ER 71, is one which is more apposite. In that case the niece of the tenant's wife went to reside with the tenant. She nursed him and his wife and looked after them till their deaths for a period of about 18 months to two years. In these circumstances it was held that she must be deemed to have been considered and treated as a member of the tenant's family and it was held that she was entitled to inherit the tenancy right in pursuance of the provisions of the B. R. Act. The learned Judge has also analysed the ingredients of the concept of "family". They fall in three categories. A person may be a member of the family by virtue of the relationship resulting from consanguinity or kinship or just heredity, (b) a person may be related by virtue of matrimonial relationship; and (c) there may be special circumstances which bring about ties of a family. The learned Judge noticed the special circumstances bringing about the family tie, viz., the fact that the defendant and his wife were treated by Sulochanabai as members of her family. I have already pointed out above that in reply to the plaintiff's notice dated 17th Jan. 1950, Sulochanabai had herself asserted that the defendant was her husband's cousin and that the defendant and his wife were helping her in her enfeebled health and on that account she had even refused to accede to the plaintiff's demand to remove the defendant and his wife from the suit premises. In addition to this the learned Judge has noticed the fact that Sulochanabai had left a document. If compliance with the technicalities of a will was sufficiently proved, the document could have been proved as a will. But admittedly those requirements which are conditions precedent for proving a will are not complied with. Hence the document Exhibit 9, dt. 7th Aug. 1952, cannot be said to have been proved as a will. That was the reason why the defendant could not succeed in his contention that he had acquired the tenancy rights by virtue of the will executed by Sulochanabai. But the fact remains that Sulochanabai executed a document, the execution of the document by her not as a will but as a document is borne out by the evidence on record and in that document Sulochanabai has clearly stated that the defendant was considered by her as her own son. It is significant that at that time the defendant was staying with Sulochanabai herself or rather Sulochanabai was staying with him because it was he who was maintaining her and he who was defraying all the family expenses including that of Sulochanabai. These certainly are the special circumstances which engender and foster the ties of family.

13. Mr. Walawalkar tried to criticise the view of the learned Judge by referring to the evidence given by the defendant in his cross-examination wherein he has stated as follows:—

"Suman is the daughter of Dwarkanath Hazare who is my father-in-law.

Dwarkanath's mother whose name I do not know had a brother. I do not know the name of this person also, but Sitaram was the son of Dwarkanath's mother's brother. Sitaram and Dwarkanath were therefore cousin brothers. That is why I have been saying that Suman—my wife was the niece of Sitaram".

Mr. Walawalkar contended that this is not an evidence of relationship at all. According to him, if the defendant did not remember the names of his distant-in-laws, it must be held that there existed no relationship at all. He further contended that if at all any such relationship is to be found from the evidence, the relationship is so distant that such relationship could not be invoked for the purpose of spelling the status of the rights (sic) member of the family upon such relation. To my mind, both these criticisms are wholly unjustified. What the defendant has stated in the above mentioned evidence is that he did not remember the name of his wife's relation but that fact did not mean that the relationship itself did not exist. The learned Judge did not find any difficulty in relying upon the evidence of the defendant in spite of the fact that he was not remembering the names of the particular relations, through whom the relationship was claimed. The evidence read as a whole gives a picture of candidness and straightforwardness. The evidence perfectly justifies the conclusion that the defendant's wife was the niece of Sitaram. Even the second contention of Mr. Walawalkar cannot be accepted. What we have to see is not the degree of the relationship but the nearness felt by the tenant for the relationship concerned. As a matter of fact in the instant case the relationship which is proved has got to be considered in conjunction with the special circumstances, namely, that Sulochanabai was a helpless and enfeebled person and it was in that state of condition that she got help from the defendant and his wife, who were her husband's relations. There was possibly an understanding among all the three of them that they would live as members of one family and an easily conceivable implicit understanding was that the defendant would maintain and look after Sulochanabai in her old age and she would allow them to stay with her as members of one family. The totality of all this implicit arrangement that remained at the back of the mind of all the three of them could give rise to the situation that they became one family, and if such was the position which in fact resulted, the provision of S. 5 (11) (c) could be legitimately invoked by the defendant to contend that he had acquired the tenancy right as contemplated by the said provisions. I am therefore of the view that the plaintiff's suit must fail even on this short second ground.

14. This brings us to the examination of the Authorities which were cited before the Lower Court and also relied upon before me. It may be mentioned here that no Indian Authority has been cited. Only the two English Authorities which have been referred by the learned Judge were once again relied upon before me. One reported in (1950) 1 All ER 71, Jones v. Whitehill has been partially discussed by me above. Mr. Walawalkar, however, strongly relied upon Langdon v. Horton, (1951) 1 All ER 60. Reading, apparently, the facts of the case, an impression likely to be conveyed is that two of the first cousins of the deceased tenant who were sisters of each other were not to be held as members of the family of the deceased lady who was the tenant and with whom the two ladies resided for quite a long period. The facts which are to be found from the reported case are as follows:—

One Mrs. Mary Wakefield Prior was a statutory tenant of the premises governed by the Rent Act and her two first cousins — two sisters Miss Horton and Mrs. Selly were residing with her for 29 years, and they stayed with her at the time of her death. The question was whether they were members of the family of the deceased tenant within the meaning of S. 12 (1) (g) of the Rent Act in question. After considering the various aspects of the evidence the High Court came to the conclusion that they could not be considered to be the members of the family, of the deceased tenant, and in the Court of Appeal Sir Singleton and Sir Daneckwerts concurred with the ultimate conclusion arrived at by Sir Raymond Evershed M. R. But what is to be noted is that it was not the view of the Court that in every case the first cousin could not be considered to be the members of the family of the deceased tenant. In this connection the judgment of Sir Evershed M.R. himself, delivered by him in Jones v. Whitehill was examined by them. It was not dissented from. But after considering that judgment and after examining the entire evidence on record in the light of the fact that the High Court had arrived at the conclusion that two sisters did not reside with the deceased as members of the family, they concurred that the conclusion was a finding of fact in the context of the peculiar facts of that case, Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R. while comparing the question with the one which they were dealing with in Brock v. Wollams ((1949) 1 All ER 715) stated as follows:—

"I think, however, that in posing the question, which I have taken from its original formulation in Brock v. Wollams, there may be two distinct and rather different classes of cases. The first is where the only really relevant consideration is that of blood relationship of consanguinity. The second is whether, apart from or in addition to consanguinity, there are special circumstances which require an affirmative answer to the material question."

Thereafter he considered the position that obtained in Jones v. Whitehill ((1950) 1 All ER 71) and with reference to that he stated as follows:—

"An illustration of the second class is Jones v. Whitehill. The claimant there was a niece by marriage of the statutory tenant, but she had by her conduct assumed, as it were, a filial character, and it was in the light of those facts that this court concluded that she qualified within para (g). I am not sure that certain passages in my own judgment may not have suggested a wider extension of this formula than is justified. Accordingly, the judgment should be read as meaning that I was not expressing any view on the general question whether nephews and nieces as such were within the compass of the formula."

After considering the facts Sir Evershed M. R. held as follows:—

"The present case, I venture to think, is of the first class. It must be determined by considering whether first cousins of the same generation, as these two defendants are, of the statutory tenant can be within the intendment of this phrase "the tenant's family". The matter is, perhaps, largely one of first impression, and I think the learned Judge came to the right conclusion, for, if the consanguinity test is satisfied in the present case, it will extend the formula to relations of every degree, and, indeed, would mean that we were substituting for the word "family" in para (g) the word "relations".

It will thus be seen that Sir Raymond Evershed, M. R. was making the distinction between the concept of family and the concept of relations and has implicitly held that every relation does not constitute family. But that is far from saying that only consanguinity brings about family. As a matter of fact, the Court of Appeal was faced also with the question as to whether it was not ultimately a question of fact and this is what they observed in this connection :

"I would add that in one or two of the earlier cases the question was raised whether this is not a question of fact? I am not saying whether or not in the present case or in other cases it is a question of fact. There is much to be said for the view that it is a matter of the construction of the paragraph. On the other hand, where, as here, a county court judge has plainly put to himself the right question, and it is a matter of suggesting the answer that an ordinary man would give to a question put in ordinary conversation, I am disposed to think that this Court should be a little slow to reverse him. If it is the policy of the Act to protect persons in all occupation of their homes, I think it also, in general, is the policy of the Act to leave for the determination of the county court the numerous difficult problems requiring, as has been said in connection with the word "reasonable", the application of a broad, common-sense, man-of-the-world view. On these grounds, therefore, as the question posed by the Judge was right, I should be slow myself to differ on a matter of this kind from his conclusion."

15. It will thus be noticed that in Langdon v. Horton ((1951) 1 All ER 60), the dictum laid down by the Court of Appeal in Jones v. Whitehill ((1950) 1 All ER 71) was not whittled down in the slightest degree. On the other hand, after examining the ratio of that decision, the Court of Appeal compared the findings of facts of that case with the facts with which they were dealing themselves. It is therefore futile to contend that it has been held that as a matter of principle or as a matter of rule of law the first cousin could not constitute a family.

16. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Jones v. Whitehill, is however, on all fours with the case with which I am dealing. The facts of the case are already set out by me above though very briefly. The judgment in that case also was given by Sir Raymond Evershed M.R. The relevant facts which are set out in the judgment are as follows:—

"The defendant, Mrs. Whitehill, was the niece of a Mrs. Bailey, the wife of the tenant of the premises here in suit. Mrs. Bailey died in July, 1948, and her husband some five months later. At the time of his death he had become a statutory tenant of the premises. He died intestate. The defendant went to live with Mr. and Mrs. Bailey early in 1947 to look after them because they were in poor health. No child of their own was at any material time living with them in the house. There is no question that the residence qualification required by S. 12 (1) (g) is satisfied, but there remains the point whether the defendant is fairly and properly to be described as a member of the tenant's family."

While dealing with the question Sir Raymond Evershed M. R. referred to the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Brock v. Wollams, (1949) 1 All ER 715 (717) and the following passage was relied upon by him with approval :

"It has been said in a number of equity cases, relating principally to wills or to settlements under powers of appointment, that the word 'family' is a popular, loose, and flexible expression, and not a technical term. It has been laid down that the primary meaning of the word 'family' is children, but that primary meaning is clearly susceptible of wider interpretation, because the cases decide that the exact scope of the word must depend on the context and the other provisions of the Will or deed in view of the surrounding circumstances I hold that in the section now under consideration the word 'family' includes brothers and sisters of the deceased living with her at the time of her death. I think that that meaning is required by the ordinary acceptance of the word in this connection, and that the legislature has used the word 'family' to introduce a flexible and wide term."

The argument that the word 'family' connoted either only consanguinity which was the narrow view or extended to cover anybody in the household which was the wider view was rejected, one being too narrow and other being too wide. After setting out his reasoning in that behalf he stated as follows:

"I am not suggesting necessarily that all nephews and nieces by marriage should be regarded as members of the tenant's family, but be it observed here that the defendant, a niece of Mrs. Bailey, assumed, out of natural love and affection, the duties and offices peculiarly attributable to members of a family namely, she went to live with her uncle and aunt and looked after them in their declining years. On those facts I think that, if it were asked in an ordinary conversation: Was the defendant a member of Mr. Bailey's family?, an affirmative answer would be given. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the defendant should be regarded as within the protection of Sec. 12 (1) (g), and that this appeal should be allowed." This is the reasoning which has prevailed upon the learned Judge of the Lower Court and I, for one, am in complete agreement with the same.

17. After discussing the above case law, a few words of our own on the concept of 'family' may not be out of place. The concept is not a rigid one. It is and it has always been an elastic one. Its content varies with reference to both time and place, historically as well as geographically. In the Indian Society the concept quite often embraces relations quite substantially remote from the Peter Families. The concept of family consisting exclusively of the Peter Families, his spouse and lineal descendants, is of occidental origin, not oriental. But it was not adhered to very stringently even in the West. Here in India the concept of family is of even wider signification. The variations in the contents of the concept are denoted by various qualifications. Thus we have concept of joint family, coparcenary and family simpliciter. Out of these, the concept of family is of the widest amplitude. In the instant case, Sulochanabai, the defendant and his wife could not be considered to be members of any joint family, they were certainly not coparceners; but there is certainly no reason to hold that they did not live as members of one family. They shared each others weal and woe. They messed together and shared the house-hold expenses together. A bond of family got engendered. Such a bond may not always result by joint residence. A paying guest living with a landlady does not become a member of the family of the landlady and this would be so even if he were a relation of the landlady. There is no family bond in that case, only a strictly business relationship. She gives him shelter, he pays the price. He gets a better or cheaper accommodation, he lives with her; she gets someone who pays more price, she gets rid of him. No family bond. But in the case such as the instant one, price is not the prime consideration. The prime consideration is the mutual bond. This is what converts their joint residence into one of family.

18. In this view of the matter, it is really unnecessary for me to consider the correctness of the view of the learned Judge that the defendant could not be said to be a sub-tenant of Sulochanabai. The learned Judge has no doubt given reasons to come to the conclusion that the kind of evidence led by the defendant would not justify the inference that he was inducted by Sulochanabai as sub-tenant. But I may briefly state that the evidence on record was not insufficient for even coming to the opposite conclusion, namely that Sulochanabai sub-let the suit premises to the defendant. The evidence has been led that from the time when the defendant started living with Sulochanabai he started paying to the landlord the requisite rent. The fact that he in fact paid rent to the plaintiff for and on behalf of Sulochanabai cannot be seriously controverted. The question is whether such conduct on his part could give rise to the inference that the defendant had been constituted as a sub-tenant of the suit premises by Sulochanabai. It was argued that Sulochanabai was staying with the defendant and hence inference of sub-tenancy was impossible. I am not sure about the correctness of this proposition. There are occasions when a tenant becomes landlord and the previous landlord starts living with the erstwhile tenant as his licensee or tenant. For illustration, 'A' may be the owner of the building in which 'B' is the tenant. 'A' might sell the building to 'B' from which date B's tenancy would vanish but 'B' may allow 'A' to occupy the portion of the building, previously occupied by him as owner, as tenant. Likewise in the present case it is not inconceivable that when the defendant came to live with Sulochanabai, at least after sometime when their mutual relations became perfectly smooth, Sulochanabai decided to create a right in favour of the defendant to live in those premises in his own right. Such a carving out of the right would be nothing but a sub-tenancy, and the very fact that the tenant continued to stay along with the sub-tenant who has been permitted to stay in the premises as a matter of right and not as a mere licensee would not mean that sub-tenancy was impossible or inconceivable. There is evidence on record to be found in the above mentioned reply given on behalf of Sulochanabai D/- 17th Jan. 1952, from which it is found that Sulochanabai was in no frame of mind to disturb the right of defendant and his wife who resided in the suit premises. No doubt the defendant himself has not stated all these things in his evidence. But from the very nature of things these are the matters of result which takes place not after deep deliberations. The result materialises in the course of time. It is therefore possible to take the view that the defendant defrayed all the house-hold expenses including those for the maintenance of Sulochanabai and in return Sulochanabai sublet the suit premises to him. The defendant's admission that he did not pay rent to Sulochanabai but paid directly to the landlord plaintiff would not in any way weaken any such reasoning. If instead of paying the amount of rent to Sulochanabai as sub-tenancy which amount was to be paid by Sulochanabai to the plaintiff's landlord, the defendant chose the modus of paying rent directly to the landlord, the effect of sub-tenancy would not, merely on that count, be in any way wiped off.

19. Mr. Walawalkar naturally tried to contest this process of reasoning by relying heavily upon the reply dated 17th Jan., 1952, in which it was stated by Sulochanabai that the defendant was not her sub-tenant. But I am not at all sure that the defendant could be bound down by that statement. At that time sub-tenancy was prohibited. It was validated on 21-5-1959 retrospectively. The very fact that an ordinance had to be promulgated for validation of transactions of such sub-tenancies speaks volumes for the fact that sub-tenancies were being created clandestinely and that they had to be protected, though they were unlawful. But the point is that no tenant was admitting or was likely to admit, before 21-5-1959, that he had created a sub-tenancy. He was creating it clandestinely and was keeping it a closely guarded secret so far as the landlord was concerned. It was only after 21-5-1959 that the tenant or the sub-tenants started admitting openly the sub-tenancy which was previously created clandestinely. It is futile condemning such gestures as acts of dishonesty. The legislature saw dishonesty but decided to protect it and to give bonus to those who indulged in such unlawful transactions. It is futile for the Courts condemn such dishonesties when the legislature thought it fit and proper to protect the same.

20. Moreover, Mr. Walwalkar's argument overlooks the fact that if Sulochanabai had denied the sub-tenancy, the plaintiff had himself asserted the same. If the defendant was to be bound down to Sulochanabai's statement there is no reason why the plaintiff should not be bound and pinned down to his own statement contained in his notice dated 11th Jan., 1952.

21. However I may make it clear that I am only presenting the other side of the picture with a view to show that it is possible to accept even the 3rd contention of the defendant that he was a sub-tenant of Sulochanabai during her lifetime. If this contention was accepted then the fact that he continued to be in possession on 21st May 1959, would mean that he had become lawful sub-tenant of Sulochanabai retrospectively and by virtue of the provisions of S. 14 of the B.R. Act he became direct tenant of the plaintiff landlord. The defendant, therefore, might be entitled to claim protection under the B. R. Act even on this ground. However, I may make it clear that I am confirming the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court merely on the first two grounds upon which the decree dismissing the suit has been passed by the learned Judge.

22. In this view of things, I find no reason to disagree with the final conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge.

The appeal, therefore, fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), O. 41, Rr. 25, 27 — Application for additional evidence — Court cannot set aside entire judgment and decree of trial Court and remand suit for fresh trial — Court must proceed either under R. 25 or R. 27 of O. 41. (Para 4)

S. G. Sheth, for Petitioners; W. S. Devnani, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 6.

ORDER:— This petition by the original defendants is directed against the judgment and order dated 31st Dec. 1977, passed by the learned Extra Assistant Judge, Satara, in Civil Appeal No. 34 of 1977.

2. Original suit by the plaintiffs, being Civil Suit No. 81 of 1972, was filed against the defendants in the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Wai, for possession of the suit premises under the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act. The trial Court struck nine issues, recorded oral and documentary evidence and on consideration thereof was ultimately, however, pleased by its judgment and order dated 24th December, 1976, to dismiss the said suit. The said decision was challenged by the plaintiffs by preferring against the same Civil Appeal No. 34 of 1977 to the District Court, Satara. The learned Extra Assistant Judge, hearing the said appeal set aside the trial Court's judgment and order and remanded the suit with a direction that the same be heard by allowing both the sides to lead additional evidence, if any, in view of the plaintiffs' application exhibit 10 in appeal and to then decide the suit in accordance with law. It is against this appellate order dated 31st Dec. 1977 that the present petition has been filed by the original defendants.

3. Hearing Mr. S. G. Sheth, the learned Advocate for the petitioners-defendants and Mr. W. S. Devnani, the learned Advocate for the respondents-plaintiffs, and going through the impugned judgment and order, I find it difficult to uphold the same. Wholesale remand as of the nature directed by the learned Extra Assistant Judge is, in the facts and circumstances of the present case and considering the relevant provisions of law, one which cannot be successfully sustained.

4. If in an appeal an application is made by either parties to the appeal for additional evidence, the Appellate Court is expected to consider the said application not merely in the abstract as appears to have been done in the present case but in the light of the provisions of R. 25 or R. 27 of O. 41 of the Civil P. C. Only thereafter the Appellate Court may pass appropriate orders on the application for additional evidence. Of course, it would be open to the Appellate Court to reject the application for additional evidence if it finds the said rejection justified. But if the Appellate Court finds that a case for additional evidence has been made out, it should normally then proceed in accordance with either R. 25 or R. 27 of O. 41 of the said Code. The present case was not one governed by R. 23 of O. 41 of the Code because the trial Court had heard and decided the suit not on any preliminary point but on all the issues arising before it for determination. In the instant case, a short and cryptic order is passed by the Appellate Court setting aside the entire judgment and decree of the trial Court and remanding the suit for fresh trial with liberty to both the sides to lead evidence and with direction to the trial Court to decide the suit afresh. Such an order is, in my view, highly unsatisfactory. Even if the Appellate Court was inclined to grant the application exhibit 10, appropriate order consequent thereupon was not to set aside the entire judgment and decree passed by the trial Court but would be one either under and in accordance with R. 25 or R. 27 of O. 41 of the Code.

5. In this view of the matter, this petition is allowed. The impugned judgment and decree dated 31st Dec. 1977 passed by the Appellate Court is set aside and Civil Appeal No. 34 of 1977 is sent back to the Appellate Court. The Appellate Court will now hear the plaintiff-appellants' application exhibit 10 in the said appeal in question and proceed further with the matter in the light of the observations made herein and in accordance with law.

6. As the impugned appellate order now set aside by this judgment has resulted in delaying the proceedings, the Appellate Court shall expedite the proceedings hereafter, giving top priority thereto.

7. Rule earlier issued on this petition is made absolute in terms aforesaid. In the circumstances of the case, however, there will be no order as to costs.

Further order on motion by Mr. W. S. Devnani for the respondents for speaking to the minutes:

8. Heard Mr. S. G. Sheth for the petitioners and W. S. Devnani for the respondents.

9. The Appellate Court has rightly observed that in the interests of justice, it was necessary to allow the plaintiffs to lead evidence in respect of certain contentions mentioned in the application exhibit 10. A case for additional evidence having thus been made out, it is now for the Appellate Court to decide whether the said additional evidence should be taken by itself or whether the trial Court or any other subordinate Court should take such evidence and send it to the Appellate Court vide R. 28 of O. 41 of the Civil Procedure. The provisions of R. 29 of O. 41 of the said Code should also be complied with.

S. C. PRATAP, J.

R. J. Mehta, Petitioner v. His Lordship the Chief Justice, Venkat Shrinivas Deshpande and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 1476 of 1981, D/- 4-2-1982.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Scope of judicial review — Existence of visible setting of specific facts and circumstances is necessary — Mere apprehension that association of Judges with controversial trusts is likely to affect judicial independence is not enough — Judicial independence and public confidence therein cannot be a matter of writ petition.

Shortly stated the writ petitioner averred that in Oct., 1980 a trust, viz., Indira Gandhi Pratibha Pratisthan Trust was set up by Mr. A. R. Antulay, the Ex-Chief Minister of the State of Maharashtra. He is the principal trustee thereof and two sitting Judges of the High Court are two of the other trustees. Though this trust has been "a symbol of political corruption" the two Judges did nothing to disassociate themselves therefrom and "their duties as Judges are likely to conflict with their interest in the said trust as also in the persons who are donors to the trust as also in the Government". The petitioner further averred that there was such a public censure about the transactions of the trust in the press, in Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, that it is considered by the general public as a raging political scandal of the day resulting in tendering of the resignation of the Chief Minister, the principal trustee of the said Trust. A criminal complaint has been filed against the Chief Minister where the two Judges have been cited as witnesses. It is submitted that a Judge should function or be allowed to function or even assigned any work in such a situation is the very negation of all constitutional values viz., the independence of the judiciary,;

Held that howsoever laudable may otherwise be the object of this petition, it reflected at the highest an admirable passion for judicial independence but dehors any specific lis or case. That apart and even otherwise, the circumstances set forth in the petition did not ipso facto lead to the inference loss of confidence in judicial independence.....sought to be so readily drawn therefrom. The advocated anxiety was more conjectural than real. It would be a highly dangerous precedent to lay down by holding as validly subsisting in a Court, power to examine, consider and adjudicate upon a judge's judicial independence. Such a role is plainly beyond the jurisdiction of High Court. Such extraordinary investigation would be an extremely hazardous course to navigate and a wholly unconstitutional exercise of judicial power. AIR 1965 SC 961, AIR 1977 SC 2328, AIR 1982 SC 149, (1969) 1 QB 577, (1970)

26 Law Ed 2d 100 and (1981) 83 Bom LR 251, Referred. (Paras 6, 7)

The principle of high conventions and standards in public offices applies to all the wings of the State but with greater rigour to its judicial wing. If justice must not only be done but must also appear to be done, the effect of controversial trusteeship on the office of judgeship cannot be altogether ignored. Lending one's official prestige and with it albeit sub silentio the high authority and dignity of the High Court to a politically controversial trust cannot but cause great anxiety to all concerned. But these questions are not amenable to judicial process and legal redress. (Paras 17, 18)

Every public question is not capable of constitutional adjudication. Judicial independence and public confidence therein is not and cannot be a matter of writs and injunctions. (Para 18)

In the first instance, grievance to be justiciable should at the minimal be concrete and real. This indeed is the sine qua non, an indispensable condition for judicial review. Basic to judicial adjudication is not a general atmospheric situation, howsoever genuine it be, but an active lis, an actual case in controversy. An issue or a controversy to be amenable to judicial adjudication and redress, as distinguished from academic or theoretical discussion, must have a visible setting of specific facts and circumstances, in the context whereof alone it can be legally considered and judicially determined. Courts do not decide abstract apprehensions. Writs operational judicial instruments are not issued in isolation or in vacuo. There can be no general judicial determination of a hypothetical apprehension. (Para 6)

Though under the recent trend, even a citizen not directly aggrieved may initiate a public interest action, the instant petition in that behalf is not just unusual but also goes too far. It may be that ambition and judicial independence may not happily co-exist. It may also be that continuous close proximity to the powers that be may as well blur the laxman rekha, the vital dividing line of thus far and no further. Even so, however, an individual's right to hold on to his independent thinking cannot be judicially abrogated. Freedom for the thought and action one does not like is one of the basic attributes of an independent people wedded to a democratic way of life. It is equally so not permissible to judicially audit a judge's action dehors or outside his judicial sphere or his reasons for the said action. Stripping a judge of his judicial functions — akin to removing him pro tanto or pro tempore from office — is an unheard of exercise even in a public interest action, (Para 15)

Public confidence in judicial independence does not depend upon whether a judge is or is not associated with a trust. Judicial independence is not an artificial element. It is a live inner force. If liberty lies in the hearts of the people, judicial independence lies in the hearts of the judges. And that of all is its best guarantee. (Para 16)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Assignment of work to Judges by the Chief Justice — Is not justiciable and cannot be judicially reviewed or controlled.

The assignment of work to the Judges is — subject, of course, to the rules of the High Court, — the exclusive right, duty and privilege of the Chief Justice. In a sphere so sensitive and with many a delicate aspect and element entering the field, the norms are best left undefined and best left to the good judgment and discretion of the Chief Justice. A system which has by and large worked well for a century and more is best left undisturbed. Assuming it to be an administrative function, every singular administrative function is not judicially reviewable. Save and except perhaps in a case of a patent and clear breach of the express rules affecting the jurisdiction of the Court, it cannot be held that this function is justiciable and can, therefore, be judicially reviewed, and controlled. To so hold can only open the floodgates for a virtual stalemate and anarchy in administration. (Para 8)

Miss Indira Jaising, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This constitutional action stands in a class by itself. Sui generis, if one may say so. The petitioner, one R. J. Mehta, a trade union leader, has moved this Court by this unusual action under Article 226 of the Constitution. Respondent No. 1, Mr. Justice V. S. Deshpande, is the learned Chief Justice of this High Court and the other two respondents, Mr. Justice B. A. Masodkar and Mr. Justice R. L. Aggarwal, are the learned sitting Judges of this High Court. Arguments advanced by the learned Counsel Miss Indira Jaising in support of this petition were heard in extenso. A speaking order was requested. There being precedents of different Courts on speaking orders at the admission stage, I proceed to give one here.

2. Initially to summarise the averments:

In Oct., 1980 a trust viz., Indira Gandhi Pratibha Pratisthan Trust was set up by Mr. A. R. Antulay, till recently the Chief Minister of Maharashtra. Mr. A. R. Antulay is the principal trustee thereof and Mr. Justice B. A. Masodkar and Mr. Justice R. L. Aggarwal, respondents Nos. 2 and 3 respectively, are two of the other trustees. For this trust, huge sums were collected from various persons. Contributions were obtained by Mr. A. R. Antulay and/or the other trustees from persons who had business with the Government such as grant of cement permits, no objection certificates, liquor permits, etc. In receiving these, favours may have been or would be shown to the donors most of whom were wealthy persons who not only have business with the Government but are also often litigants in this Court — these being the obvious reasons for their contributions. Though this trust has been "..... a symbol of political corruption", respondent Nos. 2 and 3 did nothing to dissociate themselves therefrom. "..... their duties as judges are likely to conflict with their interest in the said trust as also in the persons who are donors to the trust as also in the Government." They have, therefore, ceased to possess the necessary qualifications for being judges and are hence disqualified in that behalf or in any event from entertaining and trying matters in which Mr. A. R. Antulay, the State Government, the ruling party viz., Congress (I) and the donors to the said trust are parties impleaded.

3. Reference is then made to:

"(a) "..... an openly political and partisan conference" viz., The All India Conference of the Intelligentsia held in August 1981 under respondent No. 2's chairmanship of its Reception Committee; (b) certain cases involving the trust and the trustees pending under the constitutional as also the criminal processes of this Court;

(c) resolutions of the Bar Council of India and the Bar Council of Maharashtra expressing disapproval to the continued participation by respondent Nos. 2 and 3 as trustees;

(d) press interview by respondent No. 2 identifying himself with the objective of the said trust and declining to resign therefrom."

4. Submitting that he is associated with several petitions pending in this Court against the State of Maharashtra and is, therefore, vitally concerned and affected by administration of justice in this Court, the petitioner, to quote him verbatim, avers:

"..... for the first time issues of great constitutional significance which involve some issues of judicial functioning in an open society, issues which ultimately have a bearing on the basic structure of the Constitution, have been raised by this petition. The questions are: Whether the highest judicial functionary of the State can still discharge judicial functions when he associates with a trust, the funds of which are collected by means considered questionable by the general public, when there is great public resentment about the mode and manner in which the said funds are collected, the misrepresentation made about the true character of the trust in an official publication of the State and moneys are collected on such misrepresentation. The petitioner says that there is such a public censure about the transactions of the trust in the press, in Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha, that it is considered by the general public as a raging political scandal of the day resulting in tendering of the resignation of the Chief Minister, Shri Abdul Rehman Antulay, the principal trustee of the said Trust. A criminal complaint has been filed against the Chief Minister (Mr. A. R. Antulay) were respondent Nos. 2 and 3 have been cited as witnesses. It is submitted that a Judge should function or be allowed to function or even assigned any work in such a situation is the very negation of all constitutional values viz., the independence of the judiciary. It is submitted that the petition is filed to restore the constitutional values and that to do so is not to show disrespect to the Judges. The petitioner submits that he has the highest respect for the Judges and the present petition is confined only to the constitutional issues arising out of their actions which are inconsistent with their function."

5. Reliefs claimed are mainly to the effect that:

(a) The Court should issue a writ of quo warranto declaring respondents Nos. 2 and 3 disqualified from continuing to hold the office of a Judge in this High Court and that the office they enjoy stand vacated;

(b) Respondent Nos. 2 and 3 should be restrained from acting as Judges in all cases to which the State of Maharashtra, Co-trustees of the said trust, the donors to the said trust including the donors listed in Exhibit A to the said trust (deed) and members of the Congress (I) are parties impleaded;

(c) Alternative relief claimed is injunction restraining respondent No. 1, the learned Chief Justice, not to assign any judicial work to respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

6. It is in this overall context that the learned Counsel, Miss Indira Jaising, expressed serious apprehension in the mind of the petitioner — and several like-minded other citizens — on the question of judicial independence with specific reference to the second and third respondents' association as trustees of the trust in dispute. The important question at the outset, however, is:

Is such apprehension justiciable? Equally important next question being:

Is a writ petition such as this an appropriate remedy at all?

My answer to both these questions is in the negative. In the first instance, grievance to be justiciable should at the minimal be concrete and real. This indeed is the sine qua non, an indispensable condition for judicial review. Basic to judicial adjudication is not a general atmospheric situation, howsoever genuine it be, but an active lis, an actual case in controversy. An issue or a controversy to be amenable to judicial adjudication and redress, as distinguished from academic or theoretical discussion, must have a visible setting of specific facts and circumstances, in the context whereof alone it can be legally considered and judicially determined. Courts do not decide abstract apprehensions. Writs — operational judicial instruments — are not issued in isolation or in vacuo. There can be no general judicial determination of a hypothetical apprehension. Jurisdiction under Art. 226 of the Constitution is not an advisory or consultative jurisdiction. Even the infrequently invoked jurisdiction under Art. 143 of the Constitution has almost always been invoked and exercised in the light initially of one or another concrete setting. Therefore, however laudable may otherwise be the object of this petition, it reflects at the highest an admirable passion for judicial independence but dehors any specific lis or case.

7. That apart and even otherwise, the circumstances set forth in the petition do not ipso facto lead to the inference — loss of confidence in judicial independence — sought to be so readily drawn therefrom. The advocated anxiety is more conjectural than real. The reliefs claimed are also unprecedented. And though a Court need not feel constrained by mere want of precedent, it must nevertheless, when asked to set up one, act with great judicial caution and prudence, restraint and propriety. It would be a highly dangerous precedent to lay down by holding an validly subsisting in a Court, power to examine, consider and adjudicate upon a Judge's judicial independence. Such a role is plainly beyond the jurisdiction of this Court. Such extraordinary investigation would be an extremely hazardous course to navigate and a wholly unconstitutional exercise of judicial power.

8. So far as assignment of work is concerned, it is — subject, of course, to the rules of the High Court, — the exclusive right, duty and privilege of the learned Chief Justice. Contention, however, has been that the time has come to lay down norms in that behalf. But in a sphere so sensitive and with many a delicate aspect and element entering the field, the norms are best left undefined and best left to the good judgment and discretion of the learned Chief Justice. A system which has by and large worked well for a century and more is best left undisturbed. Counsel contends that assignment of work is an administrative function and, therefore, subject to judicial review. Even assuming it to be so, every singular administrative function is not judicially reviewable. Save and except perhaps in a case of a patent and clear breach of the express rules affecting the jurisdiction of the Court, I am not prepared to go to the length of holding that this function is justiciable and can, therefore, be judicially reviewed, and controlled. To so hold can only open the flood-gates for a virtual stalemate and anarchy in administration. Every assignment list — why, every single unpleasant assignment — can then become amenable to a judicial challenge. The wheels of judicial administration may as well come to a grinding halt. In the very nature of things, therefore, implicit confidence in the bona fide exercise of that function by the learned Chief Justice is necessary. Such confidence is all the more warranted when in a given case a request to the learned Chief Justice to look into and consider any reasonable grievance can always be made.

9. Miss Indira Jaising, however, vehemently continued to pursue her contentions. And this — may it be said to the credit of her efforts in that regard — not by way of mere ipse dixit but by reference to authorities. The first of these is the ruling of the Supreme Court in Jyoti Prakash Mitter v. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice H. K. Bose, Chief Justice of the High Court, Calcutta, AIR 1965 SC 961. That matter, however, arose from a concrete case relating to a live dispute on the age of the learned Judge concerned. It was in that context that the observations, to which my attention was invited, were made viz.,

"... If a dispute arises about the age of a Judge, any prudent and wise Chief Justice would naturally think of avoiding unnecessary complications by refusing to assign any work to the sitting Judge, if at the time when the dispute had been raised, it appears that the allegation is that at the relevant time the Judge in question has reached the age of superannuation", it being "... the duty of the Chief Justice to avoid such a complication."

(Vide page 967 of the report.)

The principle of this decision does not help the learned Counsel. The cited observations cannot be delinked from the very specific nature of the dispute which evoked the same.

10. My attention was also invited to the following observations of the learned Chief Justice of India in Union of India v. Sankalchand Himatlal Sheth, AIR 1977 SC 2328.

"It is beyond question that independence of judiciary is one of the foremost concerns of our Constitution."

(Vide page 2328 of the report.)

As also to the following observations of the learned Judge Bhagwati, J. in his recent judgment dated 30th December, 1981 in the Judges' Transfer Case (reported in AIR 1982 SC 149 at p. 196):

"...the principle of independence of the judiciary is not an abstract conception but it is a living faith which must derive its inspiration from the constitutional charter and its nourishment and sustenance from the constitutional values."

As also : (at p. 202)

"The appointment of a Judge of a High Court or the Supreme Court does not depend merely upon the professional or functional suitability of the person concerned in terms of experience or knowledge of law though this requirement is certainly important and vital and ignoring it might result in impairment of the efficiency of administration of Justice, but also on several other considerations such as honesty, integrity and general pattern of behaviour which would ensure dispassionate and objective adjudication with an open mind, free and fearless approach to matters in issue, social acceptability of the person concerned to the high judicial office in terms of current norms and ethos of the society, commitment to democracy and the rule of law, faith in the constitutional objectives indicating his approach towards the Preamble and the Directive Principles of State Policy, sympathy or absence thereof with the constitutional goals and the needs of an activist judicial system."

Now, while dealing with a petition as the present, the context in which the above observations were made cannot be ignored. In cases relating to the scope and ambit of the constitutional power to transfer a High Court Judge from one High Court to another arose the question of the independence of the judiciary from executive interference, untrammelled executive power in that respect said to be undermining the independence of High Court Judges. It is while dealing with this altogether different question that the aforesaid observations came to be made. It is, therefore, difficult to see how these general observations can be availed of in support of the reliefs prayed for here.

11. Yet another case referred to was a ruling of the Court of Appeal in Metropolitan Properties Co. v. Lannon, (1969) 1 QB 577. In the context here, two questions arising there (see page 598) may be referred to viz.,

(a) Was there "direct pecuniary interest"? No; the purported interest in question being held to be too remote, indirect and uncertain and hence not a disqualification.

(b) Was there bias? No; it being observed inter alia that there must appear to be "..... real likelihood of bias. Surmise or conjecture is not enough." In the present case there is not even the remotest indication of direct pecuniary interest nor — apart from sheer surmise and conjecture — of real likelihood of bias. This authority also thus has no application here.

12. Coming to yet another authority viz., that of the United States Supreme Court in Stephen S. Chandler, United States District Judge for the Western District of Oklahoma v. Judicial Council of the Tenth Circuit of the United States, (1970) 26 Law Ed 2d 100. The same turned on altogether different and peculiar facts and distinguishing features. That was a matter where, unlike here, the learned Judge himself viz., Judge Stephen S. Chandler, who was a Judge of the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma, filed in the Supreme Court of the United States a motion for leave to file a petition for a writ of mandamus or prohibition against the Judicial Council of the Tenth Circuit which Council had by various orders deprived him of the assignment of cases filed in the District Court. The Supreme Court by majority (five to two with one not participating) denied the motion. In the majority as also in the dissenting opinions, observations — on which there cannot be two views — have been made on the independence of the judiciary such as e. g.

"... the imperative need for total and absolute independence of Judges in deciding cases or in any phase of the decisional function."

".....An independent judiciary is one of this nation's outstanding characteristic." These observations, unexceptional as these are, do not, however, take the petitioner's case here any further in relation to the reliefs claimed by him. The authority is clearly distinguishable.

13. The last decision referred to by Miss Indira Jaising is a Division Bench ruling (per Mr. Justice Masodkar and Mr. Justice Aggarwal) of this Court in, In Re A Letter Dated 2nd/15th Sept., 1981 of Shrikant V. Bhat, (1981) 83 Bom LR 251. It is a detail speaking order at the admission stage of a proceeding initiated upon an order of the then learned Chief Justice whose attention was invited by an Advocate's letter to a report of the speeches of the (then) Chief Minister Mr. A. R. Antulay and the Sales tax Commissioner Mr. K. Padmanabhaiah. In the context here, the first head note, part of which is actually an extract from Supreme Court's opinion in the matter of Special Reference No 1 of 1964 (reported in AIR 1965 SC 745 at p. 791), runs as follows:—

"..... Wise Judges never forget that the best way to sustain the dignity and status of their office is to deserve respect from the public at large by the quality of their judgments, the fearlessness, fairness and objectivity of their approach, and by the restraint, dignity and decorum which they observe in their judicial conduct."

As in Judge Stephen S. Chandler's case (1970-26 Law Ed 2d 100) (supra), this Court's response to the above Division Bench ruling is also the same. And while there need be no conflicting views on a Judge's role as a Judge, the questions here raised and the reliefs here claimed stand on an altogether different footing and substratum.

14. Miss Indira Jaising then referred to the following from the eminent jurist — who was then the Advocate General of Maharashtra — Mr. H. M. Seervai's Sir Chimanlal Setalvad Lectures on "The Position of the Judiciary under the Constitution of India".

"But if the Judge is unable or unwilling to put an end to this perversion of Justice, the Chief Justice is not without a remedy. The Chief Justice sets the tone of the High Court, and is ultimately responsible for all that happens in it. He assigns work to Judges, constitutes benches and where a High Court sits at two different places in the State, he decides the place at which a Judge is to sit."

And to the following from the same learned jurist's book on "The Emergency, Future Safeguards And The Habeas Corpus Case: A Criticism":

"The present writer is aware that judicial power, like any other power can be abused It appears to him that two simple rules, which have only to be stated to command general acceptance are necessary. First, no Judge should make any public announcement, whether under the guise of a lecture or a seminar or not on any matter, social, political, economic or legal which is likely to come before him as a Judge. This rule does not prevent a Judge from stating the law as it exists. Secondly, ... No Judge should have frequent social contacts with Ministers and members of the executives The two simple rules we have mentioned earlier should be incorporated in the conditions of service of every Judge, if necessary, by a suitable constitutional amendment. And the contravention of those rules should be made a "misbehaviour" within the meaning of Art. 124 (4)." (Vide pages 126 and 127.)

And finally to item: 3 — Avoidance of appearance of impropriety: 24 — Business promotions and solicitations for charity; 26 — Executorships and trusteeships; and 27 — Partisan politics; — from Appendix II, Canons of Judicial Ethics from the book "Legal and Judicial Ethics" (adapted for the Republic of the Philippines) by George A. Malcolm. Now, in regard to all these citations, suffice it to state that the principles expounded therein, however unexceptional these be, constitute at best a code of conduct and conventions, at highest a charter of judicial ethics. The permissible limits envisaged thereunder are at least in this country and as at present a matter of self-realisation and of self-regulation. Not being law nor part of any adopted code here, such ideals and ethics cannot per se constitute the basis of judicial reliefs and constitutional writs.

15. Though under the recent trend, even a citizen not directly aggrieved may initiate a public interest action, the instant petition in that behalf is not just unusual but also goes too far. It may be that ambition and judicial independence may not happily co-exist. It may also be that continuous close proximity to the powers that be, may as well blur the Laxman

Rekha, the vital dividing line of thus far and no further. Even so, however, an individual's right to hold on to his independent thinking cannot be judicially abrogated. Freedom for the thought — and action — one does not like is one of the basic attributes of an independent people wedded to a democratic way of life. It is equally so not permissible to judicially audit a Judge's action dehors or outside his judicial sphere or his reasons for the said action. Stripping a Judge of his judicial functions — akin to removing him pro tanto or pro tempore from office — is an unheard of exercise even in a public interest action. Guarding the guardians is no function of this Court. Such exercise and function this Court will, therefore, decline to perform. The crescendo of public clamour and the irony of events and times — "times that try men's souls" — may not cloud this fundamental issue.

16. This is not to belittle the forceful contentions of the learned Counsel on the importance and purity of the springs of justice. Far from it. An independent judiciary is not an irrelevant appendage but a priceless asset and conscience keeper of a free and democratic people. Though it has no influence over either the sword or the purse, it has behind it the equally important and more lasting power of truth and justice. It also acts as a safety valve and a balance wheel. It often prevents and pre-empted crisis and chaos. An independent judiciary thus becomes an indispensable essence — the very quintessence — of rule of law. That is its true rationale and raison d'être. In the scheme of things, therefore, what is of the highest importance is that a Judge, while on the seat of Justice, is judicially independent and enjoys public confidence in the judicial processes at his hands. The pertinent and relevant question thus is :

Does this public confidence depend upon whether a judge is or is not associated with a trust? I think not.

Judicial independence may not be so easily wished away. It may not so lightly become a forlorn hope. Though a perfect Judge free of human frailties is yet to be born — "Judges are men, not disembodied spirits" — Judges seized of judicial work do not deflect from the path of duty. Those holding the scales of justice do not falter nor fail their sacred oath. Any lesser role would be inappropriate to judgeship itself. Judicial independence is not an artificial element. It is a live inner force. If liberty lies in the hearts of the people, judicial independence lies in the hearts of the Judges. And that of all is its best guarantee. And if it remains there, the flag of a free and independent judiciary should — nay, it will — continue to fly aloft the temples of Justice for the benefit of all wings of the State and all citizens of the country.

17. It has been a painful task hearing this petition against my colleagues and high constitutional dignitaries of the State. Controversy of a political or a quasi-political character should, one very sincerely feels, be out of bounds for a Judge. The principle of high conventions and standards in public offices applies to all the wings of the State but with greater rigour to its judicial wing. Indeed, the political party constituting the executive wing of the State has after the judgment in Writ Petition No. 1165 of 1981 (the cement case) — and irrespective of appeal therefrom — laid down an ennobling example of first honouring the said judgment by calling upon its party leader in the State Legislature to lay down the highest executive office of the State. If justice must not only be done but must also appear to be done, the effect of controversial trusteeship on the office of judgeship cannot be altogether ignored. Lending one's official prestige and with it albeit sub silentio the high authority and dignity of the High Court to a politically controversial trust cannot but cause great anxiety to all concerned. This anxiety grows all the more by the following observations — in the cement case judgment — to which my attention was pointedly invited: —

"..... inescapable inference in this case is that there is a nexus between allotments and donations — and that one was a quid pro quo for the other — Once nexus is established, mala fides must be the natural sequitur — It cannot be said in defence or mitigation that the donations were openly received by cheque and are accounted for by the Trust or that they did not go into the pocket of the 2nd respondent himself. None of this would make any difference. It would even have made no difference had the 2nd respondent not been connected with these Trusts. That he is, makes it worse."

Surely then, as is seriously contended by the learned Counsel, if this be the finding relating to the main or the chief trustee, can the position of co-trustees remain unaffected? A cloudy sky is anathema to a judicial universe. Will not the gathering storm amidst a vast section of lawyers and citizens — as witnessed by public statements and resolutions of Bar Councils and leading Bar Associations referred to by the learned Counsel — ipso facto impair the confidence inspiring quality and atmosphere of an independent judiciary? As observed by Chandrachud, J. as the learned Chief Justice of India then was:

"Respect for law is, in a large measure, dependent upon the esteem in which the society holds those whose duty it is to interpret the law."

(1972-74 Bom LR (Jour) 68 at p. 73 cited by Counsel.)

18. Questions raised in this petition are undoubtedly of considerable public importance. But if I am right in the view I have taken, these questions are not amenable to judicial process and legal redress. Every public question is not capable of constitutional adjudication. Judicial independence and public confidence therein is not and cannot be a matter of writs and injunctions. It is much too sacred to be secured and sustained through such strait-jacket formulae. Therefore, whatever else be the remedy, I for one feel certain that a petition such as this is no solution to the problem posed and the reliefs prayed no answer to the questions raised.

19. This petition thus fails and is rejected.

Petition rejected.

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 12 (1) — Readiness and willingness to pay — Tenant depositing rent in standard rent proceedings though proceedings were dismissed for default — Amount thus deposited covered entire period of arrears and also period subsequent thereto — Factually tenant not in arrears on date of quit notice or date of suit — Held it would be hyper-technical to exclude rent thus paid in ascertaining readiness and willingness of tenant to pay. (Paras 7, 9)

D. S. Marathe, for Petitioner; A. C. Agarwal with Mrs. A. C. Agarwal, and Bhushan Kanade for V. B. Joshi, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This petition arises out of original proceedings instituted by the respondent-plaintiff, inter alia, for possession of the suit premises under the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act.

2. The instant suit for possession was filed in Sept. 1973 on three grounds viz. (a) default in payment of rent, (b) bona fide and reasonable requirement of the suit premises for personal use and occupation and (c) nuisance and annoyance. The trial Court held against the plaintiff on all the said three grounds and dismissed the suit. In plaintiff's appeal against the said dismissal, the appellate Court confirmed the finding of the trial Court on the plaintiff's claim for possession on the ground of bona fide and reasonable requirement as also on the ground of nuisance and annoyance. On the ground of default in the payment of rent, the appellate Court reversed the finding of the trial Court and came to the conclusion that the defendant was liable to be evicted from the suit premises under the provisions of S. 12 (3) (a) of the Rent Act. The appeal was consequently allowed. The trial Court's decree was set aside and instead a decree for possession of the suit premises was passed in favour of the plaintiff. Hence, this petition by the defendant-tenant.

3. In support of the petition, I have heard Mr. D. S. Marathe, learned counsel for the petitioner. The respondent-landlord plaintiff is represented by her learned counsel Mr. A. C. Agarwal.

4. Hearing the rival submissions of the respective Advocates and going through the judgments of the two Courts below as also the record of the case, I find myself unable to sustain the finding of the appellate Court (reversing that of the trial Court) on the question of alleged defaults by the tenant in payment of rent, consequent whereupon he can be said to have rendered himself liable to eviction from the suit premises. Relevant facts in this behalf are as follows:— Long prior to the institution of the present suit and even long prior to the issuance of the quit notice by the plaintiff to the defendant-tenant herein, the defendant-tenant had himself applied in Jan. 1969 by way of Miscellaneous Application 34 of 1969 for determination of standard rent of the suit premises which consisted of only one room. In the said proceedings, application was made by the tenant on the same day for fixation of interim rent. By order dated 13th Jan. 1969 interim rent was fixed at Rs. 4/- per month. In the said standard rent proceedings and after obtaining an order of the Court on the question of interim rent, the tenant deposited in the said proceedings Rs. 76/- on 5th Feb. 1969, Rs. 12/- on 9th Apr. 1969 and Rs. 20/- on 14th July 1969, thus in all, as at this stage, Rs. 108/-. It so happened that this application for fixation of standard rent was dismissed for default on 21st Nov. 1969. However, little knowing that his application was dismissed for default as aforesaid, the tenant continued to deposit in the said proceedings and the Court continued to accept from the tenant further deposits of rent in the said proceedings. These further deposits are Rs. 16/- on 16-12-1969, Rs. 20/- on 24-4-1970 and Rs. 16/- on 22-9-1970 making of all these three items a total of Rs. 52/-. Thus, all the aforesaid six deposits together made up a total of Rs. 160/-.

5. Having come to know that his application for fixation of standard rent was dismissed for default, the tenant filed another application, being Miscellaneous Application No. 739 of 1969, for the same relief of fixation of standard rent of the suit premises. In these proceedings, the tenant made further deposits in all of Rs. 72/-. Ultimately, in lieu of the agreed rent of Rs. 5/- (five) per month, the standard rent was fixed at Rs. 3/- per month. This order of fixation of standard rent was not challenged by either of the parties any further. After the standard rent of the suit premises was fixed as aforesaid at Rs. 3/- per month, it was the tenant himself who through his Advocate sent a notice dated 21st Feb. 1973 to the plaintiff-landlord (respondent herein) intimating to her that he had in all deposited in the standard rent proceedings a total amount of Rs. 232/- i.e., Rs. 160/- in the first standard rent proceedings and Rupees 72/- in the second standard rent proceedings. He further informed the landlord that this total deposit of Rupees 232/- covered the entire arrears of rent at the standard rent of Rs. 3/- per month for the period 1st July 1967 to 30th Apr. 1973. Indeed, the aforesaid deposit even covered future rent up to the period Dec. 1973. The plaintiff-landlord sent her reply to the notice and by this reply she also terminated the tenant's tenancy of the suit premises and asked him to handover possession thereof. The tenant having declined to do so, the landlord filed the instant suit in Sept. 1973.

6. Now, it is relevant to note that in this suit a total claim towards rent was Rs. 210/- which was far less than the amount of Rs. 232 already deposited long back by the tenant in two standard rent proceedings aforesaid. There was, therefore, no question of the tenant being in any arrears as such of rent either at the date of the quit notice or on the date of the suit. The trial Court rightly, therefore, came to the conclusion that this was not a case where any decree for possession of the suit premises could be passed in favour of the landlord under the provisions of S. 12 (3) (a) of the Rent Act. The Appellate Court, unfortunately for the tenant, reversed this finding on the ground that the deposit made by the tenant in the first standard rent proceedings after the said proceedings were dismissed for default cannot come to the aid of the tenant in protecting his possession of the suit premises. In other words, the reasoning was that the deposits made in the first standard rent proceedings after the same were dismissed for default were not valid tenders and, therefore, had to be excluded from consideration while determining the readiness and willingness of the tenant in terms of S. 12 (1) of the Rent Act.

7. It is difficult to accept this reasoning and the ultimate conclusion of the Appellate Court. There is no dispute of the fact of the aforesaid deposits. There is also no dispute of the fact that these deposits covered the entire period of arrears. There is also no dispute of the fact that the deposits in fact covered even payment of advance rent. There is also no dispute of the fact that as at the date of the suit notice issued to the tenant in Mar. 1973, the tenant was factually not in any arrears at all. Nor is there any dispute of the fact that even as at the date of the suit, the tenant was factually not in arrears at all. Whole claim in support of her case for eviction by the plaintiff was that though the tenant had made full deposits and though the tenant was factually not in arrears at the date of the quit notice or at the date of the suit itself, payment made in the standard rent proceedings after the said proceedings stood dismissed for default cannot be termed as valid tenders and, therefore cannot come to the aid of the tenant for protecting his possession of the suit premises. In my view, to accept such a contention would be a hypertechnical approach in a matter relating to eviction of the tenant from the suit premises. In enacting Sec. 12 of the Rent Act, it cannot be said to be the intention of the Legislature to penalise a person such as the tenant herein and visit him with the penalty of eviction even though he has paid the entire arrears in judicial proceedings between the parties and even though he is found factually not to be in any arrears at all either at the date of the quit notice or at the date of the suit itself. Indeed, the intention of the Legislature is, at the outset, clear from the provisions of subsec. (1) of S. 12 of the Rent Act. By virtue of the said provisions, the Legislature has, at the very threshold, put a bar against a landlord's claim for possession by enacting that he shall not be entitled to recovery of possession of any premises so long as the tenant pays, or is ready and willing to pay, the amount of the standard rent and permitted increases. Thus, if the tenant is found to have paid or if the tenant is found to be ready and willing to pay, it is not open to the landlord to recover possession. This readiness and willingness has, of course, been interpreted as being, in a case to which S. 12 (3) (a) may apply, readiness and willingness within a period of one month of the receipt of the notice referred to therein. But even in that light, when we see the facts of the present case, it is clear that much prior to the notice in question and even before receipt of any notice by the landlord to the tenant, the tenant had himself deposited in judicial proceedings between the parties the entire amount of rent which covered not only the entire period of arrears but also period subsequent thereto. Here is, in my view, a case of a tenant who has paid the entire rent long prior to the receipt of the quit notice. On this ground itself, he deserved to be protected in his possession of the suit premises.

8. Even in the alternative, this is a case where the tenant must be held to be one ready and willing to pay. If one were to consider payments made by him in the standard rent proceedings as not (in terms of technicality) a valid tender, the said payments nevertheless constituted a strong circumstance which, in no manner of doubt clinchingly indicated the tenant's readiness and willingness to pay. Even on this latter ground, therefore, the tenant here, on the strong facts in his favour in the present case, was entitled to be protected in his possession of the suit premises.

9. The Appellate Court observes that the payment of Rs. 52/- made in the standard rent proceedings after the said proceedings were disposed of was not a valid tender. Question arising in the mind of the Court in this context would be; Will a payment accepted by a Court in a judicial proceeding between the same parties and credited to the account of the said proceeding be nevertheless termed as not a valid tender? That apart, is a tenant to be blamed and punished with the penalty of eviction if it is a Court which permits him to deposit the amount in the said proceeding, which actually accepts the said amount from him in the said proceeding and which has the said amount credited in the said proceeding? The better view of the matter would be to term the said tender as a valid tender. It was certainly a valid tender so far as the Court was concerned. Having permitted the tenant to deposit and having accepted the said deposit, it would hardly be in consonance with justice for the Court itself to later on term the same as not a valid tender. But apart from the fact whether it was or was not a valid tender, the tender was undisputedly permitted to be made and the tender was undisputedly accepted. Under such circumstances, the tenant surely cannot, by any stretch, be termed or described as one not ready and willing to pay. Indeed, the case is pre-eminently of a tenant who was ready and willing to pay and who in fact did pay. The tenant was thus entitled to be protected in his possession of the suit premises. This was certainly not a case where a mandatory decree of eviction can be said to be warranted under S. 12 (3) (a) of the Rent Act. This, on the contrary, was a case which was covered fairly and squarely by the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 12 of the Rent Act.

10. In this view of the matter that I take, the impugned decree passed by the Appellate Court requires to be set aside and quashed and that passed by the trial Court requires to be restored and confirmed. In the result, this petition succeeds and is allowed. Decree dated 18th Oct. 1977 passed by the Appellate Court in Civil Appeal 329 of 1976 is set aside and quashed and decree dated 12th Apr. 1976 passed by the Court of Small Causes, Poona, in Civil Suit 1803 of 1978 is restored and confirmed. Rule earlier issued on this petition is made absolute. In the circumstances of the case, however, there will be no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

MODY, J.

Yousuf Ali Abdulla Fazalbhoys and others, Petitioners v. M. S. Kasbekar and another, Respondents.

Misc. Petn. No. 274 of 1979, D/- 16-4-1981 and 20-4-1981.

(A) Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act (30 of 1952). S. 24 (2) — Continuance of requisition — Section confines continuance of requisition only to purpose of Union — It does not envisage continuance of requisition for purpose of State.

The 1952 Act empowers the requisitioning of property only for a public purpose which is a purpose of the Union and then proceeds to give powers to the Central Government to release the property from requisition. The preamble clearly shows that the intention is to confine the operation of the Act only to the requisition of the property for the purpose of the Union. Section 24 (2) must, therefore, necessarily be read so as to confine the continuance of requisition only to the purpose of the Union. This interpretation is further fortified by proviso (b) to S. 24 (2) which clearly indicates that the provisions of the earlier Legislation are to continue and any action thereunder would continue only in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of 1952 Act. The test for determining whether there was inconsistency or not is to ascertain whether the property requisitioned could have been requisitioned under the Act of 1952. If the answer is no, such requisitioning would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act of 1952 and cannot be deemed to have been continued under S. 24. Since the Act of 1952 authorises requisitioning only for the purpose of the Union, the requisitioning of the flats in question which was for State purpose, could not have been done under the 1952 Act. It follows that the requisition for the purpose of the State came to an end on the repeal of the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947 which repeal became effective in March 1952. (Para 8)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Res judicata — Applicability of principles to writ petitions — Earlier petition not disposed of on merits but only withdrawn by petitioner — No res judicata. (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11).

The principles of res judicata cannot strictly apply to writ petitions by virtue of any enactment but are to be applied by the Court on the ground of public policy meaning thereby Court's policy. This policy is to see that a litigation is put to an end once and for all and a party should not be permitted to create chaos by repeatedly coming to Court for reliefs in respect of the same subject matter by, taking one ground at a time. However, the principles of res judicata or the principles analogous thereto can apply only when the earlier litigation is finally disposed of on merits. In the present case the earlier petition was not disposed of on merits but was only withdrawn by the petitioners and there is no scope for application of principles analogous to those of res judicata. (Para 11)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 13 — Fundamental rights — Principles of waiver or estoppel not applicable. (Evidence Act (1872), S. 115).

There cannot be an estoppel against exercise of fundamental rights on the same principles as are applicable in the case of waiver thereof. State cannot arrogate to itself a right to commit breach of the fundamental rights of any person by resorting to principles of waiver or estoppel or other similar principles. If there is any continuing action which is violative of fundamental rights of any person that must come to an end. No law or legal principle can prevent a Court from giving remedy for violation of fundamental rights once it is found to exist. AIR 1959 SC 149, Foll.

(D) Bombay Land Requisition Act (33 of 1948), S. 9 — Government Circular No. CRA/1273/52-XV D/- 6-9-1973 — Duty of Government to release requisitioned premises on public purpose coming to end — Effect of not releasing within reasonable time (Obiter).

Section 9 not only authorises the State Government to release any premises from requisition but also casts a duty on it to do so when the public purpose for which the requisition was made came to an end. It necessarily implies that State Government cannot utilize any premises requisitioned for a particular purpose for another purpose, public or otherwise and once it does so, obviously, for the duration the premises are used or allowed to be used for such other purpose, they are not required for the public purpose for which they were requisitioned and so the original order of requisition must be considered to have lapsed. In case of death or retirement of a government servant, if the premises are allowed to be used by the family members or the retired servant, as the case may be, for a reasonable time there can be no lapse. A statute has to be interpreted in a reasonable way and so it is necessary to engraft such a qualification. Thus where three flats were allotted to three Government Servants and they were allowed by the Government to occupy the same even after their retirement for a period of (1) five months, (2) one year and (3) more than one year respectively : held, the flats must be deemed to be free from requisition and the Government was bound to handover possession thereof to the petitioners. A. J. Rana with S. Ganesh, for Petitioners; S. P. Kanuga with Patkar, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER:— The petitioners who are the trustees of a trust owning a building known as "Fazalbhooy House" at New Marine Lines Bombay, are challenging the continued requisition of four flats in the said building, being flats G and H on the 2nd floor and E and H on the 3rd floor.

2. Originally, under the Defence of India Act read with Defence of India Rules, particularly R. 75A, 8 flats were requisitioned on 25-6-1942. They were flats E, F, G and H on the 2nd and the 3rd floors of the said building. The requisition was for housing police personnel. Subsequently flats F and G on the 3rd floor were released in favour of the allottee on the petitioners' consenting to take them as direct tenants, one in or about Feb. 1973 and other in Sept. 1973. In Nov. 1973, the petitioners filed a writ petition being Misc. Petition 1090 of 1973 in respect of the remaining six flats. In or about the end of 1974 or beginning of 1975 a settlement was arrived at between the parties as a result of which flats E and F on the 2nd floor were released by the State of Maharashtra from requisition. In view of the settlement on 22-1-1975 the petition was withdrawn.

3. Mr. Rana for the petitioners began his arguments by challenging the continued requisition of each of the flats relying on the facts peculiar to them, contending that in view of the facts the public purpose came to an end at one time or the other and continued requisition at the date of this petition was invalid. This contention of Mr. Rana applied really only to three flats, namely, 2/H, 2/G and 3/H and Mr. Rana fairly stated that as regards flat 3/E he was not in a position to challenge the continued requisition on facts. However, by way of an amendment which was granted by an order of 5th December, 1980 he challenged the continued requisition of all the flats on the ground that looking to the legislative provisions the requisition had automatically come to an end sometime in the year 1952 and that thereafter continued exercise of control by the Govt. over all the four flats was illegal and also amounted to violation of the fundamental rights of the petitioners conferred under Arts. 19 (1) (f), (g) and 31 of the Constn. As this subsequent point is capable of disposing of the entire petition, I am dealing with the said contention of Mr. Rana first. However, since the petition is argued fully, I propose to deal with all the contentions advanced by Mr. Rana as well as the contentions advanced by Mr. Kanuga in reply to the contentions of Mr. Rana.

4. To appreciate Mr. Rana's contention regarding the cessation of the requisition by statutory non-extension thereof, it is necessary to set out fully the relevant provisions of the legislation existing from time to time. Rule 75A of the Defence of India Rules was as follows :

"Rule 75-A. (1) If in the opinion of the Central Government or the Provincial Government it is necessary or expedient so to do for securing the defence of British India, public safety, the maintenance of public order or efficient prosecution of the war, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community, that Government may by order in writing requisition any property, movable or immovable, and may make such further orders as appear to that Government to be necessary or expedient in connection with the requisitioning.

(2) Where the Central Government or the Provincial Government has requisitioned any property under sub-rule (1) that Government may use or deal with the property in such manner as may appear to it to be expedient, and may acquire it by serving on the owner thereof, or where the owner is not readily traceable or the ownership is in dispute, by publishing in the official Gazette, a notice stating that the Central or Provincial Government, as the case may be, has decided to acquire it in pursuance of this rule."

The premises requisitioned under the Defence of India Rules were continued to be the subject to requisition by Government of India Ordinance 19 of 1946. The relevant provisions thereof were as follows :

"2. Definition:— In this Ordinance, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,

(1) "appropriate Government" means, in relation to any requisitioned land, the Central or Provincial Government by which or under the authority of which the land has been requisitioned.

(2) "Provincial Government" means in relation to a Chief Commissioner's Province, the Chief Commissioner.

(3) "requisitioned land" means immovable property which, when the Defence of India Act, 1939 (XXXV of 1939) expires, is subject to any requisition effected under the rules made under that Act.

"3. Continuance of requisitions:— Notwithstanding the expiration of the Defence of India Act, 1939 (XXXV of 1939) and the rules made thereunder, all requisitioned lands shall continue to be subject to requisition until the expiry of this Ordinance and the appropriate Government may use or deal with any requisitioned land in such manner as may appear to it to be expedient.

Provided that the appropriate Government may at any time release from requisition any requisitioned land". This was followed by the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act XVII of 1947. The relevant provisions are Ss. 2 and 3 which are in same terms as in the Ordinance. Then comes Bombay Ordinance, V of 1947, which gives power to the State Government (then Provincial Government) to requisition premises and provides for continuance of the requisition notwithstanding anything contained in the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947. This provision of Bombay Ordinance (V of 1947) reads as follows :—

"5. Continuance of requisition.— (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947 (XVII of 1947), the Provincial Government may, by order in writing, direct that land which was continued under requisition under the said Act, shall continue to be subject to requisition under the Ordinance when it is released from requisition under the said Act or ceases to be subject to requisition for any reason; and the Provincial Government may use or deal with the land so continued to be subject to requisition in such manner as may appear to it to be expedient.

(2) In respect of the continued subsection of the land to requisition under sub-sec. (1) compensation shall be determined and paid in accordance with the provisions of this Ordinance and of the rules made thereunder;

Provided that all agreements and awards made in relation to the land in respect of the payment of compensation for the period before it was continued to be subject to requisition under sub-sec. (1) shall continue to be in force and shall apply to the payment of compensation for the period of requisition under this Ordinance."

It is to be noticed that this Act was passed after the Bombay Ordinance of 1946 and while it was continuing and was to come to an end about couple of years thereafter but was continued by Act, 9 of 1951 till it was repealed in 1952 by an Act which I will refer presently. Next comes the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948. The relevant provisions of Section 20 of the said Act are as follows :—

"20. (1) The Bombay Land Requisition Ordinance, 1947, is hereby repealed, and it is hereby declared that the provisions of Sections 7 and 25, Bombay General Clauses Act, 1904, shall apply to the repeal as if that Ordinance were an enactment.

(2) Notwithstanding the repeal of the said Ordinance and anything contained in this Act :—

(i) any intimation given under subsection (1) of Section 5 of that Ordinance

nance within a period of seven days prior to the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to have been given under the corresponding provision of this Act;

(ii) any land requisitioned or continued to be subject to requisition under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to be requisitioned or continued to be subject to requisition under this Act."

Reference to sub-section (1) of Sec. (5) appears to be a mistake for sub-s. (1) of S. 3.

5. Then came the Constitution of India under which there was bifurcation of powers to legislate for requisitioning of property. Under List I the Parliament had exclusive power to legislate on the subjects mentioned in the list and the State legislatures could not impinge on this power. Correspondingly List II contained the subjects reserved exclusively to the State legislatures. In this list I under entry 33 the Parliament had exclusive power to legislate in respect of requisition of property for the purpose of Union subject to entry 42 of list III i.e., concurrent list. Similarly under entry 2 in list II the State Legislature had exclusive power to legislate in respect of police and under entry 36, in respect of requisitioning of property for the purpose of the State. Entry 42 in list III contained the provisions only regarding principles on which compensation for property requisitioned is to be determined. By an amendment of the Constitution entries 33 in list I and 36 in list II were deleted and put in the concurrent list by substitution of the original entry 42. However, we are not concerned with this amendment.

6. After the Constitution came into force, the Central Government promulgated the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Ordinance, 1952 which was replaced by the Act with the same name being Act 30 of 1952. The preamble of the said Act reads: "An Act to provide for the requisitioning and acquisition of immovable property for the purposes of the Union." The relevant provisions of the said Act are as follows:—

"3. (1) Where the competent authority is of opinion that any property is needed or likely to be needed for any public purpose, being a purpose of the Union, and that the property should be requisitioned, the competent authority

xx xx xx xx

"24. (1) The Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947, the Delhi Premises (Requisition and Eviction) Act, 1947, and the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Ordinance, 1952 are hereby repealed.

(2) For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that any property which immediately before such repeal was subject to requisition under the provision of either of the said Acts or the said Ordinance shall, on the commencement of this Act, be deemed to be property requisitioned under Section 3 of this Act, and all the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly:

Provided that—

(a) all agreements and awards for the payment of compensation in respect of any such property for any period of requisition before the commencement of this Act and in force immediately before such commencement, shall continue to be in force and shall apply to the payment of compensation in respect of that property for any period of requisition after such commencement;

(b) anything done or any action taken (including any orders, notifications or rules made or issued) in exercise of the powers conferred by or under either of the said Act or the said Ordinance shall in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, be deemed to have been done or taken in the exercise of the powers conferred by or under this Act as if this Act was in force on the day on which such thing was done or action was taken".

7. Analysing the legislative provisions the following position emerges. Under the Defence of India Rules the Central Government as well Provincial Government had power to requisition property. The flats in question were requisitioned by the Commissioner of Police pursuant to the powers vested in him by a notification of the Home Department (Political)-War, No. S.D./N-1742 dt. 29th May 1942. The notification clearly says that the powers are conferred on the Commissioner by the Government of Bombay in exercise of its powers under R. 75A, Defence of India Rules, read with Sec. 2 (5), Defence of India Act, 1939. But for the Ordinance

19 of 1946 followed by Act XVII of 1947 the requisitioning of these 8 flats would have come to an end on the lapsing of Defence of India Act, 1939 on 13-9-1946. The effect of the Ordinance 19 of 1946 read with Act XVII of 1947 is that all the requisitioned premises continued to be subject to requisition and the appropriate Government could use or deal with any requisitioned flat in such manner as may appear to it to be expedient. Therefore, when the requisitioning was for the purpose of the Central Government, Central Government and when the requisitioning was for the purpose of Provincial Government, Provincial Government was entitled to deal with the requisitioned flats and the Government concerned alone had power to derequisition the same. The scheme of the Act shows that it was the appropriate Government which had to make the requisite enquiry before release of the premises from requisition and it is the appropriate Government which had the power to acquire the requisitioned property. The Bombay Ordinance V of 1947 is clearly intended to clothe the Provincial Government with the power of making fresh requisition, which power had come to an end on the Defence of India Rules lapsing. This is apparent also from the statement annexed to the Ordinance. In the interregnum between the lapsing of the Defence of India Rules and the promulgation of this Ordinance the Provincial Government did not have any power to requisition any premises. However, as regards the premises which continued under requisition by virtue of the Central Ordinance of 1946 and the Central Act XVII of 1947 the provisions of Cl. 5 of the Bombay Ordinance V of 1947 set out above require that when any flat was released from requisition under Act XVII of 1947 or ceased to be subject to requisition for any reason, the Provincial Government may by an order in writing direct that any premises which continued to be requisitioned under the said provisions (i. e. Act XVII of 1947) shall continue to be subject to requisition under the said Bombay Ordinance. Mr. Kanuga for the respondents is unable to produce any such order. Moreover, if any such order was passed regarding any flat in particular, it is required to be served individually on the person affected in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure for service of summons. Mr. Rana states that no such written order has been served on the trustees of the trust. It is therefore clear that no such written order has been made. The result is that so far as the former Bombay State is concerned there is no continuance of the requisition made under the Defence of India Rules.

8. Mr. Rana contends that even under the Central Legislation there is no such continuance after 1952, Mr. Kanuga contends to the contrary. Both parties rely for this purpose on the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952 the relevant provisions thereof have been already extracted earlier. Section 24 (1) repeals the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947 and the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Ordinance, 1952. Sub-section (2) of Section 24 declares that any property which immediately before such repeal was subject to requisition under the provisions of either of the said Acts or the said Ordinance shall, on the commencement of this Act, be deemed to be property requisitioned under Section 3 of the Act of 1952. Therefore, ordinarily if the amplitude of this subsection was not to be restricted because of other provisions of the said Act or for some other reason, the properties requisitioned whether for the Central purpose or the Provincial purpose (by then State purpose) continued to be subject to the requisition under the said Act of 1952. The question, however, is whether the scope of sub-sec. (2) of Section 24 is so wide. For this purpose the Act not only must be read as a whole but also in consonance with the powers of the Union. This Act empowers the requisitioning of property only for a public purpose which is a purpose of the Union and then proceeds to give powers to the Central Government to release the property from requisition. The preamble clearly shows that the intention is to confine the operation of the Act only to the requisition of the property for the purpose of the Union. Sub-section (2) of S. 24 must, therefore, necessarily be read so as to confine the continuance of requisition only to the purpose of the Union.

This interpretation is further fortified by proviso (b) to Section 24 (2) which says, inter alia, to the effect that any orders, notifications or rules made or issued in exercise of the powers conferred by Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947 and the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Ordinance, 1952 shall in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act of 1952 be deemed to have been done or taken in the exercise of the powers conferred by or under this Act as if this Act was in force on the day on which such thing was done or action was taken. This also clearly indicates that the provisions of the earlier Legislation are to continue and any action thereunder would continue only in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of 1952 Act. In my view the test for determining whether there was inconsistency or not is to ascertain whether the property requisitioned could have been requisitioned under the Act of 1952. If the answer is no, such requisitioning would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act of 1952 and cannot be deemed to have been continued under Sec. 24. Even under S. 24, General Clauses Act, anything done under the repealed provisions of the legislation will continue only in so far as it is not inconsistent with the new legislation. Since the said Act of 1952 authorises requisitioning only for the purpose of the Union, the requisitioning of the flats in question which was for State purpose, could not have been done under the said Act 1952. Therefore all properties requisitioned for the purpose of the State came to an end on the repeal of the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act, 1947 which repeal became effective in March 1952.

9. Another ground on which the operation of Section 24 of the Act, 1952 must be restricted is that if an interpretation was given to it so as to extend the continuance of requisition even when it was for the State purpose it would clearly be in violation of the power as circumscribed by the aforesaid entries in lists I and II as then existing and this Court may have to go to the extent of holding such continuance void and beyond legislative competence of the Union legislature i. e., parliament. It is well settled principle that the provisions of an enactment should not be so construed as to render them void and as far as possible such interpretation should be given as to make all the legislative enactments valid and if necessary language may be strained to give validity to a Statute. I do not have to go to the length of straining the language because as I have already pointed out, on its true interpretation Section 24 does not extend to the requisitioning done for the purpose of the State. However, if necessary it is not difficult, to confine the operation of Section 24 to the area circumscribed by relevant entry in list 'I' without putting any strain on the language.

10. This being the position the entire exercise of power regarding the allotment of these flats by the State Government after March, 1952, is completely illegal and without power. All the four flats in question as also the flats which were earlier released before the filing of the earlier petition or even thereafter pursuant to the settlement of the petition were held by the State Government illegally.

11. Apart from contending that the position as set out above is not the correct interpretation of the relevant legislative provisions, Mr. Kanuga for the respondents has sought to destroy this contention of Mr. Rana by contending that having filed the earlier petition and withdrawn the same without having a decision on the contentions which are discussed above, the petitioners are now not entitled to urge this contention on the principles analogous to res judicata or in the alternative on the ground of estoppel. I may at the outset point out that the principles of res judicata cannot strictly apply to writ petitions by virtue of any enactment but are to be applied by the Court on the ground of public policy meaning thereby Court's policy. This policy is to see that a litigation is put to an end once and for all and a party should be permitted to create chaos by repeatedly coming to Court for reliefs in respect of the same subject matter by taking one ground at a time. However, the principles of res judicata or the principles analogous thereto can apply only when the earlier litigation is finally disposed of on merits. In the present case the earlier petition was not disposed of on merits but was only withdrawn by the petitioners and there is no scope for application of principles analogous to those of res judicata. As regards the contention of estoppel, Mr. Rana's reply is twofold. He firstly contends that the principle of estoppel is similar to the principle of waiver and that accordingly there cannot be any estoppel against exercise of fundamental rights as it is well established that there cannot be waiver of fundamental rights. According to Mr. Rana the continued occupation of the flats by and on behalf of the State Government is violative of the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution of India. He secondly contends that there cannot be estoppel against law. In my view both these contentions have substance and effectively answer the contention of Mr. Kanuga.

12. In support of his contention that there cannot be waiver of fundamental rights Mr. Rana relied on Basheshar Nath v. I-T. Commr., AIR 1959 SC 149. There is no need to go in the facts of this case but it will be sufficient to reproduce some portions of some of the judgments. S. R. Das, C. J., for himself and Kapur, J., preferred to confine the non-application of the rule of waiver only to Art. 14. I need not, therefore, refer to that judgment for the purpose of this petition. N. H. Bhagwati J. in his separate but concurring judgment has observed as follows (page 161):—

"It is absolutely clear on a perusal of Article 13 (2) of the Constitution that it is a constitutional mandate to the State and no citizen can by any act or conduct relieve the State of the solemn obligation imposed on it by Article 13(2) and no distinction can be made at all between the fundamental rights enacted for the benefit of the individual and those enacted in the public interest or on grounds of public policy."

S. K. Das J. has observed at page 172 as follows :

"The generally accepted connotation is that to constitute "waiver", there must be an intentional relinquishment of a known right or the voluntary relinquishment or abandonment of a known existing legal right, or conduct such as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of a known right or privilege. Waiver differs from estoppel in the sense that it is contractual and is an agreement to release or not to assert a right, estoppel is a rule of evidence. (See Dawson's Bank Ltd v. Nippon Menkwa Kabushiki Kaisha, 62 Ind App 100 at p. 108 : (AIR 1935 PC 79 at p. 82). What is the known legal right which the assessee intentionally relinquished or agreed to release in 1953-1954? He did not know then that any part of the Act was invalid, and I doubt if in the circumstances of this case, a plea of "waiver" can be founded on the maxim of 'ignorance of law is no excuse'. I do not think that the maxim 'ignorance of law is no excuse' can be carried to the extent of saying that every person must be presumed to know that a piece of legislation enacted by a legislature of competent jurisdiction must be held to be invalid, in case it prescribes a differential treatment, and he must, therefore, refuse to submit to it or incur the peril of the bar of waiver being raised against him. I do not think that such prescience is a necessary corollary of the maxim. On the contrary, the presumption, if any, which operated at the relevant time was the presumption that a law passed by a competent legislature is valid, unless declared unconstitutional by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Furthermore, I do not think that any inference of the instalments paid in 1956-57, particularly when the question of refund of the amounts already paid is no longer a live issue before us. It would, I think, be going too far to hold that every unsuspecting submission to a law, subsequently declared to be invalid, must give rise to a plea of waiver : this would make constitutional rights depend for their vitality on the accident of a timely challenge and render them illusory to a very large extent."

K. Subba Rao J., held at page 181 as follows :—

".....I would, therefore, hold that the fundamental rights incorporated in Part III of the Constitution cannot be waived.

(83) It is said that such an inflexible rule would, in certain cases, defeat the very object for which the fundamental rights are created. I have carefully scrutinized the Articles in Part III of the Constitution of India, and they do not, in my view, disclose any such anomaly or create unnecessary hardship to the people for whose benefit the rights are created. Art. 14 embodies the famous principle of equality before the law and equal protection of the laws, and Articles 15 to 18 and Art. 29 (2) relate to particular application of the rule. The principle underlying these Articles is the mainspring of our democratic form of Government and it guarantees to its citizens equal protection in respect of both substantive and procedural laws. If the doctrine of waiver is engrafted to the said fundamental principles, it will mean that a citizen can agree to be discriminated. When one realizes the unequal position occupied by the State and the private citizens, particularly in India where illiteracy is rampant, it is easy to visualize that in a conflict between the State and a citizen, the latter may, by fear of force or hope of preferment, give up his right. It is said that in such a case coercion or influence can be established in a Court of law, but in practice it will be well nigh impossible to do so. The same reasoning will apply to Arts. 15 and 16. Art. 17 illustrates the evil repercussion of the doctrine of waiver in its impact on the fundamental rights. That Article in express terms forbids untouchability; obviously, a person cannot ask the State to treat him as an untouchable. Art. 19 reads :—

"(1) All citizens shall have the right—

- (a) to freedom of speech and expression;
- (b) to assemble peaceably and without arms;
- (c) to form associations or unions;
- (d) to move freely throughout the territory of India;
- (e) to reside and settle in any part of the territory of India;
- (f) to acquire, hold and dispose of property; and
- (g) to practice any profession, or to carry on any occupation, trade or business."

The right to freedom is the essential attribute of a citizen under democratic form of government. The freedoms mentioned in Art. 19 are subject to certain restrictions mentioned in cls. (2) to (6) of that Article. So far as the freedoms narrated in sub-cl. (a) to (g) of Cl. (1) of Art. 19 are concerned, I cannot visualize any contingency where a citizen would be in a worse position than he was if he could not exercise the right of waiver."

13. In my view, therefore, there cannot be an estoppel against exercise of fundamental rights on the same principles as are applicable in the case of waiver thereof. State cannot arrogate to itself a right to commit breach of the fundamental rights of any person by resorting to principles of waiver or estoppel or other similar principles. If there is any continuing action which is violative of fundamental rights of any person that must come to an end. No law or legal principle can prevent a Court from giving remedy for violation of fundamental rights once it is found to exist.

14. This will make it unnecessary for me to go into the question as to whether the requisition order in respect of all or any of the flats have come to an end or lapse because for some period the flats were not used for the purpose for which they were requisitioned. This point was really canvassed before me in December 1980 and the arguments were completed and I had already formed my views in the matter and had indicated them in open Court. It was thereafter that the petition was amended and the point discussed and decided upon above was raised and argued in April, 1981. This being the position and since the matter was fully argued on this point it is necessary that I must express my views in the matter.

15. While interpreting a statute such as the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, one must bear in mind that the provisions thereof seek to deprive a person of his rights to property which till recently were the fundamental rights protected by the Constitution. When the said Act was enacted the property rights were still protected. An exception to the protection of this fundamental rights was made in case public interests so required and the State was therefore given a power to requisition any premises and so continue the requisition of the same strictly in public interest. Section 9 of the said Act not only authorises the State Government to release any premises from requisition but also casts a duty on it to do so when the public purpose for which the requisition was made came to an end. It necessarily implies that State Government cannot utilise any premises requisitioned for a particular purpose for another purpose, public or otherwise and once it does so, obviously, for the duration the premises are used or allowed to be used for such other purpose, they are not required for the public purpose for which they were requisitioned and so the original order of requisition must be considered to have lapsed. It will be the duty of the Government to forthwith derequisition the same as obviously for sometime the premises were not required for the purpose for which they were requisitioned. This interpretation of mine is supported by the recognized principle that when any land is requisitioned for a particular purpose it cannot be utilized for another public purpose. In such a case the State is required first to derequisition the premises and thereafter requisition the same again in accordance with law.

16. Prior to the latest judgment of the Division Bench consisting of Chandurkar and Sawant, JJ. dt. 21-3-1981, in Chhotulal Pandurang Khandvilkar v. State of Maharashtra, in Appeal No. 135 of 1976 in Misc. Petn. No. 49 of 1975, upholding the judgment of Aggarwal, J. and which was strongly relied on by Mr. Kanuga, there were three judgments of this Court on this point, one of a Division Bench in Rangubai Pandurang Joshi v. State of Maharashtra, (1969) 71 Bom LR 624, another of Lentin J., sitting singly in Parmanand Karsandas v. State of Maharashtra, Misc. Petn. No. 535 of 1972, dt. 6-8-74 and an unreported judgment of another Division Bench of this Court consisting of Kantawala, C. J. & Madon, J. dt. 18-1-1978, in Union of India v. Kahan Chand Nayar, Appeal No. 54 of 1973 in Misc. Petn. No. 753 of 1971. I will at some length refer to the facts of all the three decisions to ascertain the ratio and to see whether the decision relied on by Mr. Kanuga lays down any different ratio.

17. In Rangubai Pandurang v. State, the petitioner's husband was the original owner of the building in which the requisitioned flat was situated. On his death on 6-10-1957, the petitioner became the owner thereof. Respondent 3 in the said matter was a Government servant and an allottee of the flat which was requisitioned. On coming to learn that respondent 3 was to retire in 1961, the petitioner applied to have the flat back after derequisitioning to the Collector but the request was rejected on 15-10-1961. Soon thereafter, on 9-11-1961 respondent 3 retired from the Government service, but was allowed by the Government to continue in occupation of the requisitioned premises along with members of his family including respondent 4, his daughter. The fact of making of representation was averred in the petition but was denied by respondent 3. It appeared, however, that respondent 3 had represented to the petitioner that it was on a representation made by him an extension was granted to him to continue his occupation till the end of 1963. By a letter dt. 9-2-1967 the petitioner again approached the Collector of Thana with a request for derequisitioning of the premises. In the letter she had also stated that respondent 3 had retired in or about the month of April 1963 but was yet allowed to continue in the occupation which showed that the Government did not require the premises for its purposes. By an order dt. 16-6-1967, the premises were allotted to respondent 4, who by that time had taken up Government employment. In the meantime, after lengthy correspondence between respondent 3 and the Collector, the Collector passed an order dt. 5th April 1967 directing respondent 3 to vacate the premises. In these circumstances it was submitted by the petitioner that when the requisitioned premises are allotted to a Government servant, his continued occupation after the retirement from Government service is not a public purpose under the Bombay Land Requisition Act and that the fact that for a period of six years the said premises were allowed to be used by the State Government for a purpose other than a public purpose would show that the State Government did not require the said premises for any public purpose and therefore under S. 9 (1), Bombay Land Requisition Act, ought to have released the said premises from requisition. It was further submitted that even though the Government may have failed to derequisition the premises, in the circumstances of the case the said requisition order had ceased to be operative or had lapsed by reason of the State Government not availing itself of it, and the petitioner had become entitled to possession of the said premises and consequently the subsequent allotment order in favour of respondent 4 could not have been passed. Two judgments of the Madras High Court were relied on in support of this contention, namely, Menghraj v. Accommodation Controller, AIR 1966 Mad 172 and Narasinga Rao v. State of Madras, (1967) 2 Mad LJ 622. The relevant portion of the judgment in Menghraj's case which is extracted with approval reads as follows (at p. 173) :

".....If within a reasonable time after the vacating of the premises by a Government servant may be a month or two, the Government allot it to another Government servant or utilise the premises for their own purposes, they would be acting within the statute. But to say that they were ignorant that the Government servant who had been allotted the premises had ceased to be a Government servant and they allowed the premises to be occupied by members of that ex-Government servant's family, and claim that they acted bona fide, passes my comprehension."

Relying on the Madras judgments it is held by this Court in Rangubai's case ((1969) 71 Bom LR 624) as follows (at pp. 627-28) :—

"In our opinion, these two decisions correctly lay down the law. Having regard to the nature of a requisition order, the object for which it is made and the fact that the making and the continuance of a requisition order deprives, or in any event imposes restrictions upon, a citizen's right to hold and enjoy his property, it must follow that unless and until the requisitioned property is required by the Government and used by the Government for a purpose authorised by the relevant statute, the Government is under an obligation and a duty to release the premises from requisition. Thus, if the premises are not used for any public purpose for a length of time, which is unreasonable or are allowed to be used for a purpose other than a public purpose, it would show that the Government does not require the premises for the purpose for which they were requisitioned. In such a case, even if the Government chooses not to derequisition the premises, the order of requisition ceases to be operative and lapses by reason of the Government failing to avail itself of it." It is further held by Madon, J. (p. 628) as follows :

".....The power of the State Government to requisition property arises only under the Bombay Land Requisition Act. The Government is not entitled in law to use the requisitioned premises or to permit its user for any purpose which would not be a public purpose. From this it must follow that if the property is no longer required for such a purpose, the Government is under a duty and an obligation to exercise its powers under S. 9 and to release the property from requisition and to deliver possession to its owner. The failure of the Government to do so cannot entitle it to take advantage of its own breach of duty and to continue to use the property for a purpose which is not a public purpose. In such a case, the Court acting under Art. 226 can compel the Government to carry out its duty."

18. The principles that emerge from the aforesaid judgment are that (a) if the requisitioned premises are not used for an unreasonable length of time or (b) if they are allowed to be used for a purpose other than the public purpose for which they were requisitioned, it can be presumed that the government did not require the premises for the purpose for which they were requisitioned and the order of requisition will without anything further cease to be operative and lapse. So if the requisitioned premises are not used at all for some length of time which can be considered unreasonable or are allowed to be used by a person who never was or has ceased to be a government servant the order of requisition will lapse. I would, however, add a qualification. In case of death or retirement of a government servant, if the premises are allowed to be used by the family members or the retired servant, as the case may be, for a reasonable time there can be no lapse. A statute has to be interpreted in a reasonable way and so it is necessary to engraft such a qualification. The question of such a qualification did not arise in Rangubai's case and so the judgment is silent on that point.

19. Next comes the judgment of Lentin, J. in Parmanand Karsandas v. State of Maharashtra. In that case a flat was requisitioned on 2-6-1953. The allottee retired from the Government service on 15-7-1968. The petitioner came to know about the retirement and addressed through his Attorney a letter dt. 14-7-1969 to the Controller of Accommodation pointing out that respondent 4, the allottee, had retired but continued in occupation of the premises which he was not entitled to, as a result whereof the premises were not being used for a public purpose, and hence should be derequisitioned. On 21-7-1969 an allotment order was issued permitting 4th respondent's son respondent 3 who also was in Government service to occupy the premises. On 4-5-1971 respondent 3 was transferred to Nasik but his father respondent 4 continued to occupy the premises in spite of the fact that respondent 3 was transferred. When the petitioner came to know that respondent 3 was no longer in occupation of the premises, he addressed a letter through his Attorney dt. 1-8-1972 to the Accommodation Officer and filed a petition on 2-8-1972. On 30-9-1972 the State of Maharashtra took possession of the premises from respondent 4. On these facts after referring to the aforesaid judgment in (1969) 71 Bom LR 624, Lentin, J. states that what was held in (1969) 71 Bom LR 624 was that if the premises are not used for the purpose for which they were requisitioned for an unreasonable length of time or are allowed to be used for a purpose other than such public purpose and the Government chose not to derequisition the premises the order of requisition ceased to be operative. The contention which was raised on behalf of the Government and was negatived was that the Government was ignorant of the fact that respondent 3 was no longer in occupation of the premises. Another contention which was raised and negatived was that the impugned order of requisition was not exhausted when respondent 4 retired from service or when respondent 3 was transferred from Bombay. Further contention that was raised and negatived was that the premises were still required for housing Government servants and hence the public purpose survived and that there was a long waiting list of Government servants who can be housed in the premises. The ratio of this judgment is that once the premises are used for any length of time which can be considered unreasonable for a purpose which is not a public purpose for which they were requisitioned the requisition order automatically comes to an end.

20. This brings me to the unreported Division Bench judgment dt. 18-1-1978 consisting of Kantawala, C. J. and Madon, J. in the Union of India v. Kahan Chand Nayar. In that case the flat was requisitioned on 20-10-1956 for a public purpose, namely, "for the office/residential accommodation of a Central Government Officer/Office." It was allotted from time to time to various persons and ultimately to respondent 2 who was a Judicial Member of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. He retired as a Government servant in July 1970. He then requested the Central Government for derequisitioning of the premises to which he received a reply that if the petitioner could make the landlords agree to take him as direct tenant the Government could consider the release of the said flat from requisition. The request for taking respondent 2 as direct tenant was rejected by the landlords by their Attorney's letter dt. 22-9-1971. The petitioners-landlords by their Attorney's letter dt. 30-9-1971 called upon the Central Government to withdraw the requisition order and then filed the petition. The principal ground for the relief was that the premises were not required by the Central Government for the purpose for which they were requisitioned. By an amendment another ground was added, namely, that between Sept. 1970 and April 1972 the Government of India released from requisition about 52 flats pursuant to its declared and settled policy of derequisitioning premises requisitioned or continued under requisition under the Act. While considering the first contention it is held as follows :—

"Respondent 2 was a Judicial Member of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, Bombay. He retired from service on July 2, 1970, but the said flat was continued to be occupied by him notwithstanding his retirement. The short question that we have to consider in this appeal is, does the material on record indicate that the said flat was no longer required by the Government for the purpose for which it was requisitioned? If the facts go to indicate such a conclusion then it will be obligatory or incumbent upon the Government to derequisition the said premises. It is not disputed before us that even though respondent 2 retired from service in July 1970 he continued to occupy the said flat. In fact, by letter dt. Sept. 2, 1970 the then Deputy Director of Estates (P) inter alia informed respondent 2 that if he could make the landlords agree to take him as a direct tenant and accept possession of the flat while the same was in occupation by him the Government could consider the release of the flat to the owner. The contents of this letter therefore clearly show that not only the Government was allowing respondent 2 after he ceased to be a Government servant to occupy the said flat contrary to the purpose for which it was requisitioned, but it was prepared to consider the request of respondent 2 to derequisition the said flat in case the petitioners were prepared to accept him as a direct tenant thereof. This letter, therefore, unmistakably goes to show that on the date when this letter was written the Government was not genuinely in need of the said flat for the purpose for which it was requisitioned.

Other circumstances also go to show that the Government was not really in need of these premises for utilising the same for the public purpose for which they were requisitioned. After the Government realised that the petitioners were not willing to accept respondent 2 as a direct tenant, no prompt and effective steps were taken by the Government for taking possession of this flat from respondent 2 and he continued to occupy the same for an abnormally long period. It appears from the affidavits filed on behalf of respondent 1 that proceedings for eviction of respondent 2 were commenced by issuing a show cause notice on Jan. 16, 1971, but the dilatory manner in which these proceedings were continued by the Estate Officer under the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1958, really goes to show that the Government was not genuinely in need of these premises for the purpose for which they requisitioned the same". This judgment, therefore, clearly shows that if the Government does not take prompt and effective steps to evict a Government servant after retirement for an abnormally long period it would lead to the conclusion that the premises were no longer required for the public purpose for which they were requisitioned. This judgment was not cited before Aggarwal, J. or Chandurkar and Sawant, JJ., and has not been considered by them. This judgment also clearly shows that the use of the premises for the purpose other than the public purpose for which it was requisitioned will amount to cessation of its use for the public purpose for which it was requisitioned and the Government must be compelled to derequisition the same.

21. In the case before Aggarwal, J. and Chandurkar and Sawant, JJ. on appeal, the relevant facts were that one Gadre, Personal Assistant to late Chief Minister Shri M. S. Kannamwar, was allotted the premises in question. Gadre died on 2-2-1966. His widow requested the Government to permit her to occupy the said premises, but as she had her own house somewhere in Irla in Bombay, the request was rejected by the Government and she was called upon to vacate the premises in Aug. 1966. In order to retain her possession the widow filed a declaratory suit in the Small Cause Court in the year 1966 and obtained an injunction against the Government, restraining the Government from evicting her from the premises. This injunction was subsequently vacated. On appeal, the appellate bench restored the order of injunction. Government took the matter to the High Court by filing Special Civil Application and the order of injunction was quashed by the High Court. While quashing the order the Government was directed to evict the widow and her children before 3-8-1973. The petitioners became owners of the premises, in the meantime on or about 30-9-1972, and addressed a letter dt. 20-7-1973 to the Controller of Accommodation drawing his attention to the order passed in the said Special Civil Application and called upon him to evict Mrs. Gadre and her children and derequisition the premises. The Controller of Accommodation by his letter dt. 10-8-1973 rejected the request for derequisitioning. This was followed by a letter dt. 12-8-1974 from the petitioners' Advocate to the Chief Secretary to the Government. Thereafter, the Controller of Accommodation by his letter dt. 2-10-1974 stated that Mrs. Gadre and others would be asked to vacate the premises by the end of 1974 under any circumstances. Ultimately they were not evicted by the end of that year and the petition was filed on 21-1-1975. The possession was taken from Mrs. Gadre only on 15-3-1975 and was allotted to another Government employee on or about 19-3-1975. After mentioning the facts in detail which I have enumerated above briefly, Aggarwal, J. proceeded to consider the judgment in (1969) 71 Bom LR 624 and after extracting a portion of the judgment and agreeing with the same proceeded to consider the facts on which decision (1969) 71 Bom LR 624 was arrived at. He has then held that the facts before Madon, J. were clearly distinguishable inasmuch as in the case before Madon, J. the allottee had retired in 1961 and thereafter was allowed to continue in the requisitioned premises for a period of six years with the consent of the Collector, while in the case before him the facts did not show that there had been an unreasonable length of time during which the premises were allowed to remain in the use and occupation of Mrs. Gadre. The learned Judge, therefore, arrived at the decision only on the facts of the particular case but did not lay down any different law. The Division Bench consisting of Chandurkar and Sawant, JJ. on appeal from the judgment has observed as follows :

".....The Government had tolerated the occupation on purely humanitarian considerations and it was not the intention of the Government to use the premises for the benefit of the said occupants. In this view of the matter, the learned Judge dismissed the petition. Hence, the present appeal.

"Shri Madekar, the learned counsel appearing for the appellant-petitioners, advanced the very same arguments before us as were advanced by him before the learned single Judge. We are in complete agreement with the learned Judge that on the facts and circumstances of the case, it is not possible to hold that the Government had used or allowed the user of the suit premises, deliberately for a purpose other than a public purpose for which the same were requisitioned, viz. to house a Government servant.

"What is argued is that since the Government did not take active steps to evict the occupants after 3-8-1973 till 15-3-1975, the user during the said period was a user allowed by the Government for a purpose other than a public purpose. In this connection, it is relevant to note that admittedly the present petitioners became the owners of the suit premises by a conveyance executed in their favour by the previous landlord on 30-9-1972. The petitioners therefore very well knew, at the time they purchased the suit premises, that they were under requisition. They cannot, therefore, be heard to complain if they did not get the vacant possession of the suit premises or are unable to get the same even now. As regards the occupation allegedly allowed by the Government from 3-8-1973 to 15-3-1975, admittedly there is nothing on record to show that the Government had on its own permitted the occupants to remain in such occupation. All that happened was that in spite of the expiry of the period granted by this Court, Government did not take steps to physically throw out the occupants till 15-3-1975. While examining the alleged inaction on the part of the Government during the period, it should not be forgotten that the Government was faced with the problem of evicting a widow of its former servant with her six children. The Government cannot be said to be unaware of the acute hardship that was going to be caused to the family and hence if the Government did not act hastily and throw out the occupants for a period of about one year and nine months, it cannot be said that the Government had intentionally allowed them the use of the suit premises. It was only if the petitioners had succeeded in showing that the Government had no intention to use the suit premises for the purpose for which they had requisitioned and wanted to use them for the occupation of the said family that the petitioners would have been entitled to the reliefs claimed by them. However, on the facts revealed, it could not be said the Government had abandoned its original intention to use the suit premises for the public purpose."

The learned Judges thereafter proceeded to consider the contention of Shri Madekar for the petitioner that Mrs. Gadre had another residential accommodation available to her at Irla, as follows :

"Had this fact been pointed out at the relevant time, probably the Government would have found no difficulty in using harsh measures at the earliest opportunity and throwing out the occupants from the suit premises earlier than they did. In the circumstances, it cannot be said that the Government delayed the action deliberately."

I may, however, point out that this observation is based on some factual error. I find that Aggarwal, J. has clearly stated in his judgment that in the year 1966 the Government had rejected the application of Mrs. Gadre for permission to continue in occupation specifically on the ground that she had her own house in Irla in Bombay. The Government, therefore, obviously knew that Mrs. Gadre had another premises available. It is quite possible therefore that if this fact was specifically brought to the notice of the Division Bench it may have decided the matter differently. In any event it is clear that the decision turned only on the facts of that case and did not lay down any principle or ratio. This judgment, therefore, cannot help Mr. Kanuga.

22. I must, therefore, apply the principle culled out by me above from Rangubai's case and other judgments and apply the same to each of the four flats in question. The four flats in question are 2G, 2H, 3E and 3H. So far as flat 3E is concerned the person in possession at the relevant time and who is in possession even at the date of the petition is a Government Officer and so this flat 3E is not liable to be derequisitioned by the Government. Mr. Rana has rightly not made any submission in respect of this flat on facts.

23. As regards flat 2G, prior to 30-7-1972 one Fernandes, a Government Officer was an allottee thereof. He died on 30-7-1972 after a short illness. He was in police force for nearly 30 years and had excellent career. After his death his widow Dr. Mrs. Winifred Fernandes by her letter requested the Hon'ble Minister of State for Home Department that the said flat should be released in her favour pointing out various facts. She was allowed to continue to remain in occupation of the said flat till her request was finally considered. By a letter dated 13-8-1973 her request for derequisitioning was rejected and she was granted time of four months to vacate the same. The period of 4 months expired in December 1973. This flat was allotted to another officer on 11-1-1974. Mr. Kanuga for the State has produced before me a circular letter dt. 6-9-1973 No. RSA./1273/52-XV from Home Department to the Inspector Generals of Police and Commissioner of Police. By the said circular letter it is clearly provided that in certain cases four months' time is to be given for purpose of vacating of the premises instead of normal one month. It would appear that practice was being followed, when the officers raised contentions regarding non-payment of dues like gratuity and provident fund, to grant time to vacate till such dues were paid. This circular directed the discontinuance of this practice and provided for maximum vacating time of four months. I am assuming this period of four months to be a reasonable time up to which requisitioned flat may be allowed to be used by a retired government servant or by the family members of a deceased government servant, without deciding whether it is reasonable or not as for the purpose of this petition it is not necessary for me to decide the same. The widow was allowed to remain in the premises for more than a year. In my view it is not permissible to the Government to allow any person to remain in occupation of such premises for such a long time. The very fact that the person is allowed to remain in possession for such a long period of one year indicates the non-requirement by the State Government of that particular premises for the purpose of which it was requisitioned for that period. It was therefore incumbent on the State Government to derequisition the same. The facts clearly fall within the ratio of Rangubai's case and also Kahan Chand Nayar's case. However, the aforesaid facts cannot help the petitioner inasmuch as the petition based on the said facts was already filed and withdrawn. After Dr. Mrs. Fernandes vacated the flat, it was allotted to one B. T. Rele, Assistant Commissioner of Police who occupied the flat from 11-1-1974 and retired from the police force on 1-10-1976 after a long and meritorious service. He was initially allowed a period of 4 months to vacate the flat. This was in accordance with the aforesaid circular letter. However, he requested for extension of time to vacate and was granted time till 1-6-1977. He then vacated the flat on 30-9-1977. It is thus clear that after his retirement he was allowed to occupy the flat by consent of the Government for full one year. The use of the flat by him for this one year cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to be for the public purpose for which the flat was requisitioned. In the circumstances the flat was not being used for the public purpose but was used for some other purpose and the requisition automatically came to an end and the Government became bound to hand over possession thereof to the petitioners.

24. Coming to flat 2H on the 2nd floor, the flat was allotted prior to 1-9-1972 to Mr. Bhesadia, who retired from service from 1-9-1978. At his request he was given 5 months time to vacate the flat. He vacated the flat on 31-1-1979. He was thus allowed to occupy the flat for a period of 5 months. The flat was then allotted to one R. N. Dahate. There is controversy as to whether Dahate occupied the flat immediately or occupied it much after the filing of the petition. However, this being the controversial question of fact requiring oral evidence, I do not intend to go into the controversy. Even considering four months time as reasonable as per circular of respondent 1 itself, I do not see how respondent 4 could have allowed the retired servant to continue for a period of 5 months. This period could not be said to be reasonable period and this flat also must be deemed to have been freed of requisition as the order of requisition lapsed and the possession thereof must be restored to the petitioner. I am aware that there cannot be any strict rule as to what period can be said to be reasonable and what period unreasonable, but in view of the Government's own circular a period of more than 4 months cannot be considered reasonable. If it was Government's own flat obtained by it on ownership or lease or similar basis and not requisitioned, nobody can find fault with the Government allowing its retired employees to continue in occupation for any length of time on ground which is considered reasonable, but looking to the provisions of the Act and the judgments of this Court by which the Government is bound, it cannot allow any person to continue in possession of a requisitioned flat contrary to the intention of the Act.

25. Coming to flat 3H, one M. S. Warty, Assistant Commissioner of Police was an allottee of the flat. He vacated the flat on 15-4-1976 and was occupied by V. N. Samant, Inspector of Police on 16-4-1976. Samant retired on 31-12-1977 and requested that he be allowed to continue to stay in the said flat till May 1978 as his daughters were studying and they should be allowed to complete final examination before he was asked to vacate the flat. Before this request could be considered he addressed a letter dt. 25-1-1978 to the Minister for Home Department for permission to retain the flat and permission was granted to retain the flat up to 31-3-1978 which time was extended to 28-7-1978 at the request of Samant. He then addressed his request to the Chief Minister and was granted time till 3-12-1978. The grounds given by Samant in support of subsequent extensions were non-payment of provident fund and gratuity. These amounts were paid on 30-9-1978. However, on his further request Samant was granted extension up to 3-4-1979. The possession of the said flat was given by Samant on 6-4-1979. The first thing that strikes me is that these extensions were granted on the very grounds on which the extensions were not to be granted under the aforesaid letters addressed by the Home Department to the I. G. Ps. and Commissioners. Even in the absence of the letter such granting of time for such a long period of over one year will show the non-requirement of the flat for the public purpose for which it was requisitioned for that period. In these circumstances this flat must be deemed to be free of requisition and the Government was bound to hand over possession thereof to the petitioner.

26. In the circumstances, if I had to decide whether all or any of the four flats must be deemed to be free of requisition by the reason of the requisition order having lapsed and if the Government is bound to handover possession thereof to the petitioner, I would hold that the Government was bound to handover possession of the three flats, viz., flats G and H on the 2nd floor and flat H on the 3rd floor but not flat 3E. However, in the view that I have taken on the question of law, all the four flats are wrongly continued to be treated by respondent 1 as under requisition and the respondents are bound to handover the possession of all the four flats to the petitioner.

27. In the result, rule is made absolute in terms of prayer (a) as regards all the four flats. Respondent 1 to pay to the petitioner costs of the petition. Looking to the time taken, I quantify the costs at Rs. 1,500/-. The Government is given time up to 31-7-1981 to handover possession.

Order accordingly.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 549 of 1979, D/- 8-4-1981.

(A) Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), S. 10 — Stay of suit — For application under S. 10, mere identity of subject matter of suit is not enough — Court in earlier suit should also have jurisdiction to grant reliefs claimed in subsequent suit.

A suit was filed by A in the Small Cause Court for a declaration that he was a tenant of B in respect of certain premises. Subsequently B filed a suit in City Civil Court for possession on the ground that A was a trespasser and for injunction restraining A from interfering with his possession. The present revision application arose out of a judgment in the City Civil Court staying the said suit under S. 10, C. P. C.

Held, that although the subject matter of both the suits was substantially the same, the subsequent suit viz. City Civil Court suit, could not be stayed since the earlier court viz. Small Cause Court, had no jurisdiction to grant the reliefs which were claimed in the subsequent suit under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882 or the Bombay Rent Act. AIR 1953 Bom 117, Explained. AIR 1954 Bom 100 and AIR 1979 Bom 305, Disting. (Para 6)

S. N. Variava i/b M/s. D. J. Kamdin & Co., for Petitioner; S. H. Kapadia with F. D. Damani, for Respondents.

ORDER.— This revision application arises out of a judgment in the City Civil Court Suit No. 583 of 1975 dated 16-3-1979 staying the said suit under the provisions of S. 10 of the Civil P. C. This stay was granted not on any notice of motion taken out as is usually done but was granted after framing a preliminary issue at the hearing of the suit as to whether the suit should be stayed under the provisions of S. 10 of the Civil P. C. As I am deciding this application on merits I do not propose to go into the question whether such a stay can be granted without a separate application. I must also point out that there is no pleading and so no issue framed as to whether the stay should be granted in exercise of the inherent powers under S. 151 of the Civil P. C. However, as this point has been argued in detail by both sides and without any objection on behalf of the plaintiff as to want of pleadings or issue I will deal with this point also.

2. Sometime in the year 1939 the plaintiff had given to the defendant its business of vulcanizing and battery charging carried on in the name and style of "Kingsway Garage" in Shop No. 2 on the ground floor of a building which was then known as "Kingsway Chambers" and now known as "Kalyan Bhavan" situate at King's Circle on what is described as conducting basis under a written agreement. The agreement between the parties was renewed from time to time by written agreements, the last of such agreements being dated 1-4-1970. It would appear that there was litigation between the present defendant as defendant and Shashikant N. Shah and another as plaintiffs being S. C. Suit No. 56 of 1972 in which a Court receiver was appointed. An application was made by the present plaintiff for possession which was decided by the City Civil Court by a judgment and order dated 8-3-1972. The relevant portion of the said order and judgment reads as follows:—

"Though the applicant has established his title and right to possession to the exclusion of the plaintiffs and the defendant, it is not possible to direct the Court receiver to deliver possession to the applicant because he in fact took possession from the defendant who was carrying on business as applicant's licensee. However, the defendant does not dispute that he is a licensee. He undertakes to return possession to the applicant after he receives it from the Court Receiver. The Court receiver shall deliver possession to the defendant from whom he has taken it. He shall thereafter stand discharged without passing accounts. In view of this, I make no order on the applicant's notice of motion dated 29-2-1972. No order as to costs on the applicant's Notice of Motion and the Notice of Motion of the plaintiffs. Court Receiver to act on certified copy of Roznama."

I am unable to follow why an order for direct possession in favour of the applicant could not have been made when the defendant was consenting to it. I am not aware of any law which prevents the Court from making such an order. This question, however, does not arise in the present case.

3. There is dispute between the parties hereto as to when the defendant delivered possession to the plaintiff in accordance with the said order. The plaintiff contends that it was delivered late, after a lapse of almost a period of about one year and thereafter the defendant took wrongful possession thereof. The defendant contends that it was delivered within one month from the date of the order and the premises were given back by the plaintiff to the defendant again under an oral agreement. After this the present defendant filed a suit in the Small Cause Court at Bombay being R. A. Declaratory Suit No. 1946 of 1973 for a declaration that he was a tenant of the premises and an interim order was sought under which a notice was served on the plaintiff herein. The Small Cause Court suit was dismissed sometime in Nov. 1974 for default of appearance of the defendant, he being the plaintiff in that suit. The plaintiff then filed the present City Civil Court suit. The defendant thereafter got the Small Cause Court suit restored on 2-6-1975 and the writ of summons was served on the plaintiff on or about 25-6-1975. Even after such restoration the defendant again remained absent and the notice for interim order came up for hearing on 7-9-1975 and was dismissed. In the meantime the plaintiff had applied for appointment of receiver and by an order dated 8-7-1975 the City Civil Court appointed the Court Receiver as receiver of the business. An appeal was filed against that order in this Court. On 20-4-1978 by consent of parties a workable arrangement was arrived at as a result of which an order was passed by this Court confirming the appointment of receiver and directing that the Court Receiver should continue and the Court directed the trial Court to dispose of the suit expeditiously. It is further clarified that the arrangement was arrived at without prejudice to the contentions of the defendant that the City Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit.

4. It is after this that the suit reached hearing before the City Civil Court and the present order came to be passed on the preliminary issue as aforesaid.

5. Mr. Variava for the petitioner contends that this order is wrongly passed as on a true construction of S. 10 of the Civil P. C. one of the requirements for passing such an order is that previously instituted suit must be pending in the same or in any other Court in India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit. Mr. Variava does not dispute that the subject matter of both the suits i.e. the City Civil Court suit and the Small Cause Court suit are the same, but he contends that the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to grant the reliefs claimed in the City Civil Court suit. The said reliefs are that it may be declared that the defendants are trespassers in the suit premises as also in respect of the goodwill, tenancy rights and the assets lying in the said premises, for possession on the ground of the defendants being trespassers and for injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's possession and also as the total value of the subject matter of this suit is over Rupees 15,000.

6. In my view the contention of Mr. Variava that it is not enough that there is substantial identity of the subject matter of the suit but that the Court in earlier suit should have jurisdiction to grant the reliefs claimed in the later suit is correct. It is also clear that the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to grant the reliefs which are claimed in the City Civil Court suit, under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882 or the Bombay Rent Act. In the Small Cause Courts Act amendments were carried out in 1976 which are not relevant as both the suits were filed before the said amendments. By virtue of S. 19 of the Small Cause Courts Act 1882 the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction in the suit for the recovery of immovable property, suits to obtain an injunction and suits for declaratory decrees. Small Cause Court has, however, jurisdiction to entertain the suits between the landlord and tenants by virtue of the provisions of the Rent Act and also to decide whether the relationship between the landlord and the tenant existed by virtue of S. 39 of the said Act. However, it is clear that the question of jurisdiction under this Special Act can be assumed only when the suit as filed was on the face of it between landlord and tenant. Once the Small Cause Court came to the conclusion that such a relationship did not exist, admittedly it cannot further decide as to what the relationship between the parties was. It is, therefore, clear that the Small Cause Court does not have jurisdiction to grant reliefs prayed for in the present suit, the plaintiff wherein clearly denies any existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant.

7. In support of his contention Mr. Variava has relied on In the Goods of Mrs. Lilian Singh, AIR 1943 Cal 19. Manu Singh v. Muni Nath Singh, AIR 1954 Pat 314; B. B. Chit Fund v. Ganpat Rai, AIR 1973 Delhi 122, Channabasappa v. Kishan Chand, AIR 1972 Mys 112, As I have independently taken the same view I need not discuss these decisions.

8. Mr. Kapadia for the respondents has strenuously opposed the contentions of Mr. Variava. Mr. Kapadia contends that the principle applicable is that if the decision in the previously instituted suit would become res judicata in the subsequent suit, the provisions of S. 10 are automatically attracted and that the stay must be granted by the Court. He further contends that even when the decision may not be res judicata under S. 11 of the Civil P. C., but can be considered as res judicata by reason of principles analogous to these under S. 11 of the Civil P. C. the provisions of S. 10 will be attracted. He then contends that even if S. 10 of the Civil P. C. does not apply, the Court has inherent jurisdiction to grant such stay under S. 151 of the Civil P. C., and that in the present case this stay should be granted in exercise of such a power in the interest of justice.

9. Mr. Kapadia has strongly relied on the decision in J. H. Iron Mart v. Tulsi-ram, AIR 1953 Bom 117. In that case it is held, inter alia, as follows (at p. 119):

".....Apart from any authority, turning to the section itself, it will be clear that S. 10 does not contemplate an identity of issues between the two suits, nor does it require that the matter in issue in the two suits should be entirely the same or identical. What the section requires is that the matter in issue in the two suits should be directly and substantially the same, and proper effect must be given to the language used by the Legislature in S. 10 that the identity required is a substantial identity. It is true, as the authorities have laid down, that there must be an identity of the subject matter, it is equally true that the field of controversy between the parties in the two suits must also be the same, but the identity contemplated and the field of controversy contemplated should not be identical and the same in every particular, but the identity and the field of controversy must be substantially the same."

Therefore, the principle underlying S. 10 seems to be that the policy of the Legislature is opposed to two Courts with parallel jurisdiction proceeding simultaneously with two suits when there is a possibility of the two Courts coming to different conclusions and thereby resulting in conflict of decisions. If that policy underlying S. 10 is kept in mind, then it would be easier to come to a decision with regard to different cases that arise for decision."

The Court also quoted with approval a portion of another judgment of this Court in Trikamdas Jethabhai v. Shivraj Kalyanji, (1942) 44 Bom LR 699 : (AIR 1942 Bom 314) which inter alia, says (p. 702) :

"If in the earlier suit that issue is decided against the plaintiffs to the Bombay suit it will operate as "res judicata" and the Bombay suit if not earlier determined will necessarily fail. In my opinion it is immaterial that the relief claimed in the earlier suit is of a different character from the relief claimed in the present suit. The real question is whether the matter in issue in the Bombay suit is directly and substantially in issue in the earlier suit."

10. This case, if cursorily read, does tend to give an impression that once the Court comes to the conclusion that the decision in the earlier instituted suit if decided earlier will become res judicata in the subsequent suit or that there is likelihood of conflicting decisions by two Courts, the provisions of S. 10 are attracted. However, the decision in the case has to be viewed in the light of the points canvassed. The only point canvassed in that case was regarding the meaning of subject matter in issue, and the whole controversy turned around the interpretation of that portion of S. 10. It was not canvassed at any time that by reason of later portion of S. 10 the Civil P. C. saying that the Court in which earlier suit was filed must have jurisdiction to grant reliefs claimed in the subsequent suit, did not arise and so was not considered. Indeed such a contention could not have been taken in that case as the earlier suit was filed in Calcutta High Court and the subsequent suit was filed in Bombay High Court and though the reliefs were different in both the suits the Calcutta Court having the same jurisdiction as the Bombay High Court under similar Letter Patent it was not possible to contend that Calcutta High Court had no jurisdiction to grant reliefs claimed in the Bombay suit. It is for this reason that this contention was not taken up in that matter. The effect of this decision therefore is that while considering the identity of the subject matter in issue the Court must bear in mind the provisions of S. 11 of the Civil P. C. and that the two Courts with parallel jurisdiction proceeding simultaneously should not arrive at two conflicting decisions. If the stay was to be granted on this principle even though the earlier Court had no jurisdiction to grant reliefs claimed in the subsequent suit it will have the effect of rendering subsequent portion of S. 10 completely otiose and such an interpretation is not permitted. It should also be noted that one of the principles laid down requires that the two Courts should have parallel jurisdiction and in the present case the two Courts do not have parallel jurisdiction but exclusive jurisdictions. In my view, therefore, this decision does not contain anything contrary to what I have held.

11. It must be further noted that in the judgment cited by Mr. Kapadia the effect of a decision in the Calcutta suit would be that all the material issues in Bombay suit would become res judicata and only question that would remain thereafter for the Bombay High Court would be the granting of suitable reliefs, if any. The question of giving any decision on merits would not have survived after the decision of the Calcutta High Court. This is evident from the said judgment when after observing (at p. 120),

"Whatever reliefs the plaintiffs may seek in the Calcutta suit and whatever may be the reliefs which the respondents may seek in the Bombay suit, these reliefs are incidental to the decision which the Court must come to as to what was the contract between the parties."

".....If once the Calcutta High Court has held what the contract was between the parties and what the terms of the contract were, the Bombay suit would effectively be put an end to because that decision would bind the parties and all that will be required to be done would be to give the necessary reliefs to the respondents in the Bombay suit if they have succeeded and these reliefs will flow from the decisions of the Calcutta High Court and will be consequential upon the decision of the Calcutta suit."

The consequence of the decision of the Calcutta High Court was to put an effective end to the Bombay suit also, whether the decision went one way or the other. As against this in the present case if the Small Cause Court decides that the defendant was a tenant it will put an end to the suit in the Bombay City Civil Court. However, if the decision goes the other way i.e. if it is held by the Small Cause Court that the defendant was not a tenant, the matter will still remain completely open in the City Civil Court, and the City Civil Court will still have to decide on evidence and merits as to whether the defendant has any right or not in respect of the business or the premises and reliefs, if any, to be given will be such as the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to grant.

12. Mr. Kapadia then relied on a decision in Laxman v. Rajaram, AIR 1979 Bom 305. That decision does not deal with the effect of S. 11 of the Civil P. C. in construing S. 10 of Civil P. C. It only says that the general principles of res judicata are applicable even to the cases which are not specifically covered by the provisions of S. 11 of the Civil P. C. Mr. Kapadia then relied on Dhondi v. Dadoo, AIR 1954 Bom 100. That case deals neither with Sec. 10 nor with Section 11 of the Civil P. C. That case arose under S. 85 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act before its amendment authorising the Civil Courts to refer the question to the Mamlatdar. Under that Act the only authority which has a power to decide whether the person is an agricultural tenant or not is the Mamlatdar and the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to give such a decision is barred. A suit was filed in normal Civil Court under which such an issue arose. The question was whether in such circumstances the suit should be dismissed or stayed. In this context an order was passed for staying the suit and not dismissing the same. It was held that in all such cases where the Civil Court cannot entertain the plea and accepts the objection that it has no jurisdiction to try it, it should not proceed to dismiss the suit straightway; the proper procedure to adopt in such cases would be to direct the party who raises such a plea to obtain a decision from the Mamlatdar within a reasonable time. This case has no application in the context of the present case. It is clear that in this case even the City Civil Court has jurisdiction to decide, incidentally, as to whether the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant is that of a landlord and tenant. The only consequence will be that if the relationship is as contended by the defendant, the City Civil Court will have to return the plaint for want of jurisdiction.

13. Mr. Kapadia then contends that even if S. 10 has no application the Court has jurisdiction under S. 151 of the Civil P. C. to grant such a relief. Mr. Kapadia seeks support from the aforesaid decision in Dhondi v. Dadoo, AIR 1954 Bom 100. In my view this decision does not support Mr. Kapadia. The question that arose was not at all of stay of a suit under S. 10 of the Civil P. C. The question was a proper procedure to be followed when the plea of tenancy was taken up. Apart from that there is no reference to S. 151 nor is there any contention raised as to whether the provisions of S. 151 have any application. This case does not say that when S. 10 cannot apply stay can be granted under S. 151. Mr. Kapadia then relies on Gurudial Singh v. Auckland House School, AIR 1977 Him Pra 38. That judgment proceeded on an assumption that S. 151 applies. There nobody contended that S. 151 cannot apply if the matter is not covered by Section 10 of Civil P. C.

14. As against this Mr. Variava has drawn my attention to Manoharlal v. Seth Hiralal, AIR 1962 SC 527.

In that case a suit was filed by the appellant in 1948 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Asansol for recovery of Rs. 1,00,000 on account of share in the capital as well as in the assets of the partnership firm. Subsequent suit was filed by the respondent in the year 1949 in the Court of the District Judge, Indore, for a sum of Rs. 1,90,519-0-6 against the appellant and further interest on the footing of settled accounts and in the alternative for a direction to the appellant to render true and full accounts of the partnership. An application was made to the Court at Asansol for the stay of that suit in exercise of its inherent powers which was rejected holding, inter alia, that there was no scope for acting under S. 151, Civil P. C., as S. 10 of the Code had no application to the suit, it having been instituted earlier than the suit at Indore. This order was confirmed by the Calcutta High Court. In these circumstances an application was made to the Indore Court for restraining the plaintiff from continuing the proceedings in the suit filed by him in the Court at Asansol on the ground that Asansol suit was vexatious. This interim injunction was granted by the District Court and an appeal preferred to the High Court of Judicature at Madhya Bharat was dismissed, holding that the order of injunction could be issued in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court under S. 151 of the Civil P. C. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Supreme Court from this dismissal of appeal. In this context a question arose as to whether the Court had inherent powers to grant injunction under S. 151 when S. 94 and O. 39 of the Civil P. C. specifically provided for granting of injunctions. After considering various decisions it is observed in Para 21 of the judgment at page 533 as follows:—

"These observations clearly mean that the inherent powers are not in any way controlled by the provisions of the Code as has been specifically stated in S. 151 itself. But these powers are not to be exercised when their exercise may be in conflict with what had been expressly provided in the Code or against the intentions of the Legislature. This restriction, for practical purposes, on the exercise of these powers is not because those powers are controlled by the provisions of the Code but because it should be presumed that the procedure specifically provided by the Legislature for orders in certain circumstances is dictated by the interests of justice."

This principle definitely applies to the present case. What Mr. Kapadia canvasses for is the exercise of inherent powers in a field controlled by S. 10 of the Civil P. C. which says that though the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the parties pending in the same or in any other Court in India having jurisdiction to grant the relief, stay can only be granted if the first Court has jurisdiction to grant reliefs claimed before the second court. The exercise of powers under S. 151 of Civil P. C. to grant stay when not all but only some of the conditions laid down in S. 10 exist will clearly be contrary to the intention of the Legislature. Applying the above dictum of the Supreme Court in Aminchand Pyaralal v. Union of India, (1977) 79 Bom LR 1 a specific question whether recourse can be had to S. 151 for staying a suit when the facts did not justify stay under S. 10 was answered in the negative. Not only am I bound by the said judgment but am in respectful agreement with the same.

15. Mr. Variava contends that even if I have powers under S. 151 to grant such stay the facts and circumstances of the cases are such that I should not grant the same. Mr. Kapadia contends to the contrary. Mr. Kapadia says that if the plaintiff was carrying on business as trespasser since 1972 he ought not to have waited for a long period of three years to file the present suit when the defendant had already filed the suit in the Small Cause Court as early as in April 1973. As against this Mr. Variava points out the conduct of the defendants. In the Small Cause Court suit a notice for ad interim injunction was issued sometime in April, 1973. The said notice was, however, not disposed of till Nov. 1974 when the said suit was dismissed for default of appearance. It would appear that the plaintiff came to know about the dismissal and filed the present suit in City Civil Court in Bombay in July 1975. Mr. Variava informs me, and Mr. Kapadia does not deny that in the notice of motion taken out in this suit in the affidavit in support the plaintiff has stated that the Small Cause Court suit was so dismissed. Thereafter the Small Cause Court suit was got restored on 2-6-1975 by the defendant and the writ of a summons was served on the plaintiff on 25-6-1975. On 17-9-1975 the notice for ad interim order came up for hearing in the Small cause Court and was discharged for default of appearance on the part of the defendant. In the meantime receiver was appointed in the present suit. The defendant preferred an appeal from order appointing receiver and the consent order referred to above came to be passed. With the knowledge of the facts, the defendant consented to the expeditious hearing of the City Civil Court suit and when it reached hearing took up the contention of stay under S. 10 but not under S. 151. It is well known that the suits take several years in both, City Civil Court, Small Cause Court even to reach hearing. By virtue of the order of this Court the plaintiff got an opportunity to have his suit in the City Civil Court tried early. When the suit reached hearing early the defendant took the contention of stay after having agreed to the disposal of the suit by City Civil Court on merits subject to the preliminary contention regarding jurisdiction. The only intention of the defendant appears to be to delay the determination of the question of the respective rights of the parties and in the meantime to continue to enjoy possession. The attitude of the defendant regarding the Small Cause Court suit is also lackadaisical. In the circumstances even if I have a power to stay the suit under S. 151, Civil P. C., I would refuse to exercise the same in favour of this defendant.

16. In the circumstances, I make the rule absolute in terms of prayer (a) with no order as to costs and set aside the order dated 16-3-1979. I direct that the City Civil Court will proceed with the disposal of the suit as expeditiously as possible. I am sure that the City Civil Court will take into consideration the fact that this suit had reached hearing in 1979 and see that the suit is not delayed and retains its priority.

Rule made absolute.

ORDER:— The petitioner-landlord filed an application before the Rent Controller, under S. 15 of the Hyderabad Houses (Rent, Eviction and Lease) Control Act, 1954, hereinafter referred to as the Act, for possession of the suit premises on three grounds viz. (1) that the tenant is in wilful default of the payment of rent. (2) that the landlord requires the premises in possession of the tenant as additional accommodation for the purposes of his business and, (3) that the landlord requires the premises for reconstruction of the building. The Deputy Collector and the Rent Controller, Ambejogai, in Beed district vide his order dt. 30th Aug. 1975 came to the conclusion that the tenant is a wilful defaulter in payment of rent and, therefore, ordered eviction of the respondent-tenant. On other two counts he recorded a finding against the landlord.

2. Being aggrieved by this order the respondent-tenant filed an appeal before the learned District and Sessions Judge, Bhir. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the respondent tenant was not a wilful defaulter and, therefore, set aside the order passed by the Rent Controller. The learned District Judge confirmed the finding recorded by the Rent Controller that the landlord does not require the suit premises for the purposes of business which he is carrying on, nor he requires it for reconstruction. Being aggrieved by this appellate order the petitioner-landlord has filed this revision application.

3. It appears from the record that it was contended by the landlord that he wanted additional premises for purposes of carrying on his business in fertilizer and insecticides, which he is carrying on in a rented premises. It is an admitted position that the premises which are in possession of the landlord are not used by him for this business. It is also an admitted position that the business of fertilizer and insecticides is being carried on by him in a separate rented house and not in the premises belonging to him. It is contended by Shri Abhyankar learned counsel appearing for the landlord that in these circumstances he is entitled to claim possession of the suit premises under S. 15 (3) cl. (c) of the Act. He also contended that the tenant was a wilful defaulter because the deposit of rent in the Court of the Rent Controller cannot be equated with the payment of rent or its tender, within the meaning of S. 15 (2) (i) of the Act read with the proviso. It is also not possible for me to accept these contentions.

4. So far as the contention based on S. 15 (2) (i) read with the proviso is concerned, it is an admitted position that the rent was deposited by the tenant in Court of the Rent Controller in the proceeding under S. 9 of the Act for payment to the landlord. The Rent Controller as well as the learned District Judge have rightly come to the conclusion that the rules framed under S. 35 of the Act and particularly R. 4 thereof provide that the tenant can deposit the rent in the office of the Rent Controller. Therefore, such a deposit made under the rules can safely be termed as rent paid within the meaning of S. 15 (1) of the Act. In this context a reference could usefully be made to the decision of the Supreme Court in Sheo Narain v. Sher Singh, AIR 1980 SC 138. Therefore, there is no substance in this contention.

5. So far as the second contention based on construction of S. 15 (3) (a) (iii) and (c) of the Act is concerned, in my opinion there is no substance in this contention also. The relevant provisions which are relied upon by the learned counsel in support of his contention read as under:—

"15.....

(3) (a)

(iii) in case it is any other non-residential house, if the landlord is not occupying for purpose of a business which he is carrying on, a non-residential house in the city, town or village concerned which is his own or to the possession of which he is entitled.

(c) A landlord who is occupying only a part of a house, whether residential or non-residential may notwithstanding anything contained in cl. (a) apply to the Controller for an order directing any tenant occupying the whole or any portion of the remaining part of the house to put the landlord in possession thereof, if he requires additional accommodation for residential purposes or for the purposes of a business which he is carrying on, as the case may be

6. According to Shri Abhyankar, the term and expression used in sub-sec. (iii) "business which he is carrying on" as used in the said sub-section being identical with the term and expression as used in Cl. (c) it must be construed and interpreted to have the same meaning and, therefore, it is not necessary that the additional accommodation should be claimed for the purpose of business which the landlord is carrying on. In support of this contention Shri Abhyankar has placed reliance upon a decision of this Court in Madanlal Ranglal Daga v. Gurunath Laxman Patange, (1968) 70 Bom LR 578.

7. On the other hand it is contended by Shri Chapalgaonkar, learned Counsel appearing for the respondent-tenant that these two sub-sections are mutually exclusive and that the petitioner is not entitled to additional accommodation, unless it is established that he wants accommodation for the purpose of business, which he is carrying on in other part of the premises concerned. In support of this contention Shri Chapalgaonkar has placed reliance upon a decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Pyari Bai v. Tadaka Gowrama, AIR 1971 Andh Pra 411.

8. It cannot be forgotten that S. 15 of the Act deals with eviction of tenant. From the preamble of the Act it is quite clear that this Act was enacted for making provision for the better control of rent of houses and to prevent unreasonable eviction of tenants therefrom and for regulation of leasing of houses etc. This Act has been enacted to protect tenants against unreasonable evictions and therefore it will have to be construed strictly against the landlord so as to cut as little as possible into the protection afforded to the tenant. The Scheme of the Act is to prevent unreasonable eviction of tenants by landlords and to provide for eviction on specified grounds only. As observed by the Supreme Court in Mohammad Shafi v. Addl. District & Sessions, Judge, AIR 1977 SC 836, if any of the sections is susceptible of two interpretations, the interpretation which enlarges the protection of the tenant will have to be preferred rather than the one which restricts it. Therefore, S. 15 (c) of the Act will have to be construed bearing in mind this principle of interpretation. The section provides for grounds for eviction of tenant. It is divided into various sub-sections. Therefore, all these sub-sections will have to be read harmoniously as every sub-section throws light upon another. To seek the legislative intent all the constituent parts of the provisions will have to be construed together, considering every part thereof in the light of general purpose and object of the Act. An effort will have to be made to make every part effective, harmonious and sensible. This is a well settled rule of construction. Section 15 (3) (iii) deals with the requirement of the landlord regarding a non-residential house, if he is not occupying in the city or town any non-residential house for the purpose of business which he is carrying on. Thus the area and field covered by this sub-section is wholly different. This Court in Madanlal v. Gurunath Patange, (1968) 70 Bom LR 578, had an occasion to consider this sub-section only and was not concerned with Cl. (c) which covers different area and the field. Sub-sec. (c) with which we are concerned in this petition deals with the claim of the landlord for additional accommodation, when he is occupying a part of the house, whether residential or non-residential. This clause applies and takes in its import special types of cases i.e. building which is partly occupied by the landlord and partly by tenant and the landlord is in need of additional accommodation. It involves the principle of 'live and let live'. If the landlord is already occupying a part of the house and wants additional accommodation, then sub-sec. (c) enjoins upon him to prove that he requires this additional accommodation for the purpose of business which he is carrying on. Thus from the bare reading of sub-sec. (3) (iii) and (c) it is clear that they are mutually exclusive. A construction cannot be put upon these sub-sections which will make one of them redundant or surplusage, more so as the area and the field covered by these two sub-clauses is distinct and different. It is well settled principle of interpretation of statute that it will have to be presumed that the Legislature enacted different sub-sections with definite purpose and intention and it is the legislative mandate that every part of the statutes should have its own effect. Legislature is deemed not to waste its words or say something in vain. Therefore in my opinion the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Pyari Bai v. Tadaka, AIR 1971 Andh Pra 411, was right in coming to the conclusion that these sub-sections are mutually exclusive and, therefore, Cl. (c) is applicable only when the additional accommodation is required by the landlord for the purpose of business which he is carrying on. In this view of the matter the authorities below were right in coming to the conclusion that the petitioner-landlord had not made out a case under sub-cl. (c) of S. 15 of the Act.

9. So far as the ground based on requirement of reconstruction of the building is concerned, it appears from the order passed by the learned District Judge that it was already given up before him and is also not pressed before me.

10. In the result, therefore, there is no substance in this petition. Hence rule is discharged. However, in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

MODY, J.

Indian Hotel Co. Ltd., Plaintiff v. Mrs. T. Stevenson, Defendant.

Chamber Summons No. 85 of 1981, in Suit No. 179 of 1965, D/- 13-4-1981.

(A) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 5 (8) (b) — Words 'a room or other accommodation in a hotel or lodging house' — Meaning of — Area occupied by hairdressing saloon is a room or accommodation in a hotel — Not being premises — Act does not apply thereto. AIR 1959 SC 1262, Explained.

(Para 12)

(B) Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 5 (4A) — Licensee — Shopowner is not a protected "licensee".

It is now so well known as can be taken judicial notice of, that many hotels give out shops as licensees to various parties for running banks, travel agencies, boutiques, shoe shops, drug stores, hair dressing saloon, book shop etc. The intention of giving accommodation for these purposes is mainly that the clientele of the hotel gets the benefit thereof and can meet its requirements in the very premises of the hotel rather than go out. The clientele of the hotel may not be sufficient to enable the shop owners to run them profitably, and therefore, they are also allowed to cater to the outside market but this does not take away or in any way affect the basic idea and intention of attracting clients and of making the stay more comfortable for the clients who are lodgers. If this is the intention the hotels must necessarily have some control over these shop owners. It is possible that keeping this in mind the initial exemption is granted to room or other accommodation in a hotel or lodging house from it being a premises and exclusion is made while giving protection to the licensees. There was no necessity of excluding a person occupying any accommodation in a hotel while defining licensee, the same having been excluded from the definition of "premises" but this appears to have been done by way of abundant caution. (Para 13)

(C) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 15A — Undertaking given by licensee before enactment of S. 15A to a court to hand over possession on expiry of license — Whether licensee can be relieved of undertaking on ground of public policy.

It lies ill in the mouth of any party to say "though I have given a solemn undertaking which I had given for obtaining concession from the opponent and thought I have now enjoyed the full benefit of the concession, please relieve me of the same because though it is within my power to comply with the undertaking the Legislature has now sought to give me further benefit". The benefit given by the Legislature is a right conferred on the party but it does not take away the power of the party to comply with the undertaking and this by itself cannot be a ground for holding that the party is not bound by the undertaking or for relieving the party from the undertaking. AIR 1981 SC 537, Disting. (1978) 80 Bom LR 196, Rel. on.

In this respect no distinction can be made between an undertaking given to Court to obtain concession from the Court and undertaking given as a part of a compromise between the parties. If it is to be held that the two types of undertakings stand on a different footing several questions would immediately arise. What is the distinction? In what way one has higher sanctity than the other? To what extent is the sanctity higher? Does a breach of one type of undertaking lead to higher punishment than the other? Is the relief from one to be granted for grounds more stringent than the other? Acceptance of such a contention would lead to invidious distinction between the different undertakings given to the Court and to unnecessary legal gymnastics. Undertaking given to Court for whatever reason must always remain an undertaking to the Court and the purpose for which it is given cannot make any difference to its ultimate effect. Judgment of Lentin, J., dt. 21-12-1973 in C. A. No. 120 of 1973 in C. P. No. 170 of 1967 (Bom). Explained. (Para 20)

ORDER :— The present chamber summons is taken out by the defendant for a relief from an undertaking given to this Court contained in the consent terms which disposed of the suit.

2. On 28th March, 1941, the plaintiff who owns the Taj Mahal Hotel in Bombay, entered into lease and hire agreement in writing, registered, with Jacques M. Stevenson in respect of a premises admeasuring about 2,375 sq. ft. The plaintiff was running a hair dressing saloon in the said premises and Jacques Stevenson was to do the same business. The lease was renewed twice, once on 22nd Feb. 1943, and again on 5th March 1946. The defendant joined Jacques M. Stevenson as a partner on 15th Mar., 1944, and then took an assignment of the right, title and interest of Jacques M. Stevenson on 19th September, 1947. There were further registered renewals of lease on 17th Mar., 1949, 1st April, 1952 and 12th February, 1955. A portion of the said premises was surrendered on 4th July, 1952, with a consequent reduction in the rent. On 9th June, 1958, an agreement described as leave and licence agreement was signed between the plaintiff and the defendant with some changes in the terms from those in the previous agreements. According to the defendant, this agreement was surreptitiously and fraudulently got signed by the plaintiff from the defendant on a representation that the terms and conditions were the same as in previous agreements. In Sept., 1958, the defendant got the agreement scrutinized and discovered these changes. From about this time the disputes started between the plaintiff and the defendant resulting in this suit being filed by the plaintiff against the defendant for possession in which the defendant filed her written statement. Ultimately, the suit reached hearing on 15th April, 1969, before Nain J. Consent-Terms were arrived at between the plaintiff and the defendant and a decree was obtained in terms thereof. The relevant terms thereof are as follows:

"1. Ordered that the defendant do vacate the suit premises within one month of the plaintiffs intimating to the defendant to occupy the area admeasuring about 1,100 sq. ft. on the southern side of the Taj Mahal Hotel Building shown bounded in red on the plan annexed hereto".

"2. At the time the defendant vacates the suit premises, she shall hand over to the plaintiffs all the articles and things mentioned in the leave and licence agreement dated 26th Feb., 1964."

"3. Agreed that the plaintiffs will paint the walls and the ceiling of the area shown in the plan hereto annexed and provide flooring windows therein. The plaintiffs will also provide therein electric points and water connections as required by the defendant".

"4. Agreed that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff Rs. 2,850/- per month as compensation for the use and occupation of the said area shown in the plan hereto annexed inclusive of air-conditioning charges. The air-conditioning will be provided by the plaintiff for 10 hours daily only during the defendant's working hours".

"6. The defendant shall occupy the said area shown in the plan hereto annexed as a mere licensee of the plaintiff and on the terms and conditions contained in the agreement dated 26th Feb., 1964, except as modified herein. The license shall be personal to the defendant alone."

"7. The license period shall be for 6 years in the first instance beginning from 15th April, 1969, with an option to the defendant to renew the said license for a further period of 6 years on the same terms and conditions except as to renewal and provided that the defendant observes and performs all the terms and conditions of the leave and license agreement".

"9. The defendant undertakes to this Hon'ble Court that she shall hand over to the plaintiffs quiet and peaceful possession of the said area shown in the plan hereto annexed on the expiration of the period of the said license or the sooner determination thereof under the said agreement of the leave and license".

3. Pursuant to the said consent-terms, the defendant vacated the portion originally in her possession and took possession of the new premises ad-measuring about 1100 sq. ft. on the southern side of the hotel building.

4. The Bombay Rents Hotel & Lodging House Rates (Control) Act, 1947, was amended by the Amending Act XVII of 1973, by which certain rights were conferred on the licensees which till then were not available to them provided the licensees were in possession of the premises under a subsisting agreement on 1st Feb., 1973. After the commencement of the Amending Act, according to the plaintiff, the defendant by her advocate's letter dated 1st April, 1975, exercised her option to renew the license but the defendant denies any exercise of option by her and denies authority of the advocate to exercise such an option and alleges a collusion between the plaintiff and the advocate. Mr. Chagla has stated that for the purpose of this application he does not desire to lead any oral evidence to prove the authority of the advocate. He only points out that this advocate had earlier acted for the defendant and says that he will only rely on the affidavits filed.

5. Based on the amendment of the Rent Act, the defendant contends that she has become a protected licensee and that it being the policy of the Legislature to protect licensees, the Court should relieve her from the undertaking which she has given. Mr. Cooper for the defendant has contended that the portion occupied by the defendant which is admittedly an enclosed portion, and therefore, can be called a 'room' is premises within the meaning of the Bombay Rent Act, and that consequently the Rent Act and the protection given thereby in 1973 is available to the defendant, a licensee thereof. The contention on behalf of the defendant is countered on behalf of the plaintiff on the ground that the saloon is not premises within the meaning of the Bombay Rent Act as it will be "room or other accommodation in a hotel or lodging house" as such specifically excluded from the definition of premises. It is contended in the alternative that the defendant is not a licensee within the meaning of sub-section (4A) of S. 5 of the said Act so not entitled to the protection conferred by the amendment. It is further contended that in any event, in the facts and circumstances of this case, the defendant is not entitled to and should not be relieved from the undertaking solemnly given.

6. Mr. Cooper took me through the scheme of the Rent Act in support of his contention. Section 5 (2) defines hotel or lodging house to mean "a building or part of a building where lodging with or without board or other services by way of business is provided for a monetary consideration". Section 5 (8) defines premises and goes on to say "but does not include a room or other accommodation in the hotel or lodging house". The full title and the preamble of the Act show that the Act is enacted to amend and consolidate the law relating to, inter alia, control of rates of hotels and lodging houses and of evictions and also to control the charges for licence of premises etc. Mr. Cooper then referred to Part II of the Act to show that it deals with the residential and business premises and contended that the business premises would normally include a part of a hotel building given for a shop. This contention of Mr. Cooper is not disputable. Looking to the provisions of Part II it is clear that it does not deal as such with a relationship between the hotels and its lodgers but deals only with the premises let out for residential and business purposes. The relationship between the hotel or lodging house and lodger which is normally not that of landlord and tenant, is clearly dealt with by Part III as pointed out by Mr. Cooper. Section 33 in Part III provides for fixation by the Controller of fair rate to be charged for boarding, lodging or other services in a hotel or lodging house. The Controller may also fix percentage of accommodation of daily and monthly lodgers as also the number of lodgers to be accommodated in each room or specified accommodation. Section 37 prohibits recovery by a hotel of charges in excess of the fair rate. Section 38 prohibits ejectment if fair rate is not paid. According to me it is clear that the provisions of the Rent Act divide themselves into two main parts, one relating to the premises let out for residential or business purposes and the other regulating the relationship between the hotel owners and lodgers. The contention of Mr. Cooper is that the intention of the Legislature in excluding the room or other accommodation from the definition of the premises was to exclude from the operation of Part II, only such portions and relationships as were to be controlled under Part III and no other. I am unable to accept this contention of Mr. Cooper.

7. It is rarely, if at all, that a hotel or a lodging house lets out a room or accommodation to a lodger. Basically the relationship between the hotel and its lodger is that of the licensor and licensee. The definition in the Act was there even before the amendment giving protection to licensees. If the intention of the Legislature, therefore, was to exclude only those rooms or accommodations which are given out to the lodger as licensee, it was not necessary for the Legislature to exclude the room or accommodation as it has done from the definition of "premises". It is contended by Mr. Chagla that when any land or building is given out on lease for running a hotel, the protection of Rent Act is available to the hotel owner as it will be a lease of premises within the meaning of S. 5 (8) and this is not disputed on behalf of the defendant. The question is when the hotel owner in his turn gives a room to a lodger what would be the relationship and what would have been the effect if room or other accommodation in a hotel were not excluded from "premises". In such a case lodger not being a tenant is not protected. In my view the exclusion of room or other accommodation from the premises was not intended to exclude the room and accommodation which were being given out by the hotels to the lodgers in normal way inasmuch as such exclusion was not necessary there being no relationship of landlord and tenant which alone was sought to be protected under Part II. In most of the cases a lodger could not have taken a contention that he is a tenant. In any case, the provisions of Part III which specifically apply as between a hotel and a lodger would be sufficient to destroy any such contention. Therefore, the words "room or other accommodation" must include something else than the portions being given to the lodgers. This being the position, I must consider as to what was intended to be excluded by those words.

8. I felt happy when on behalf of the plaintiff it was pointed out to me that the Supreme Court has already spoken on the subject while interpreting a cognate statute applicable in Delhi in Associated Hotels Ltd. v. R. N. Kapoor, AIR 1959 SC 1262. The happiness that I felt was short lived and was brought to an end when Mr. Cooper contended with considerable force that there are three varying judgments given by the Bench consisting of three Judges and that though the appellant succeeded on the majority views there is no common ratio deducible from these judgments and what binds me is the ratio and not the conclusion on the facts of the case. Though I was hard put to do so I believe I have been able to discern the ratio of the majority decision but after considerable effort and struggle. In this I was also helped by the decision of this Court in Narendra Bachubhai Dave v. Jethalal S. Dave, (1976) 78 BLR 196* wherein it is said "the ratio of the Supreme Court case is that the rooms sublet must be room in a hotel not only in physical sense but in the sense that it is directly or indirectly used by the hotel". Though the ratio as culled out in the said judgment of this Court is binding upon me I think it is necessary to analyse the judgments in the Supreme Court once again to do justice to the forceful contention of Mr. Cooper regarding absence of any ratio and the difficulty I faced in discovering the ratio.

9. In that matter before the Supreme Court, the appellant was the proprietor of a hotel called Imperial Hotel housed in a building on Queens Road New Delhi. One R. N. Kapoor was the proprietor of a business carried on under the name of Madam Janes. Under an agreement with the appellant, he came to occupy certain space in the ladies and gents cloak room of the Imperial Hotel.

paying initially at the rate of Rs. 800/- and subsequently Rs. 700/- per month. The business being carried on was that of a barber shop and lodgers in the hotel as also outsiders were entitled to visit the said shop i. e. the shop was not meant exclusively for the residents of the hotel. The question was whether the relationship was governed by the Rent Control Act applicable in Delhi which excluded from the meaning of the word premises, a room in dharamshala hotel or lodging house. However, the word hotel was not defined in the said Act. The first question that arose was whether the relationship was that of landlord and tenant or licensor and licensee and it was held that the agreement really amounted to a lease and not a license as is apparent from the discussion in the judgment of Subba Rao, J., with which S. K. Das, J., concurred in his separate judgment. As regards the next question as to availability of the protection of the Rent Act, after comparing the proviso of the Act applicable in Delhi and the Bombay Rent Act and noting the absence of definition of hotel and lodging house in the Act under his consideration, it is held by S. K. Das, J.:-

"(5) Passing now from definitions which are apt not to be uniform, the question is whether the partitioned spaces in the two cloak rooms let out to the respondent were rooms in that hotel. In a physical sense they were undoubtedly rooms in that hotel. I am prepared, however, to say that a strictly literal construction may not be justified and the word 'room' in the composite expression 'room in a hotel' must take colour from the context of or the collocation of words in which it has been used; in other words, its meaning should be determined noscitur a sociis. The reason why I think so may be explained by an illustration. Suppose there is a big room inside a hotel; in a physical sense it is a room in a hotel, but let us suppose that it is let out, to take an extreme example, as a timber godown. Will it still be a room in a hotel, though in a physical sense it is a room of the building which is used as a hotel? I think it would be doing violence to the context if the expression 'room' in a hotel' is interpreted in a strictly literal sense. On the view which I take a room in a hotel must fulfil two conditions: (1) it must be part of a hotel in the physical sense and (2) its user must be connected with the general purpose of the hotel of which it is a part. In the case under our consideration the spaces were let out for carrying on the business of a hair dresser. Such a business I consider to be one of the amenities which a modern hotel provides. The circumstances that people not resident in the hotel might also be served by the hair dresser does not alter the position. It is still an amenity for the residents in the hotel to have a hair dressing saloon within the hotel itself. A modern hotel provides many facilities to its residents; some hotels have billiard rooms let out to a private person where residents of the hotel as also non-residents can play billiards on payment of a small fee; other hotels provide post office and banking facilities by letting out rooms in the hotel for that purpose. All these amenities are connected with the hotel business and a barber's shop within the hotel premises is no exception."

Thus, according to S. K. Das, J., to be a room in the hotel, two factors are required to be considered, viz; physical connection with the hotel and the purpose for which it was used.

10. On reading the judgment of Sarkar, J., it did appear on first reading that, as contended by Mr. Cooper he takes a view which is different from the one taken by S. K. Das, J., though he comes to the same conclusion that the room in question was a room in a hotel and so not "premises" and the Rent Act did not apply. However, on close scrutiny the difference between the two judgments disappears and common ratio emerges. After discussing and stating that a lodger in a hotel is a mere licensee and not a tenant, Sarkar J., proceeds to consider to what extent the barber shop can get protection of the Act and for that purpose the meaning of a room in a hotel. First he disagrees with what Khosla, J., held in the High Court viz; that a room must be so intimately connected with the hotel as to be a part and parcel of it. He then says (at Pp. 1266-67 of AIR 1959 SC):-

"I do not appreciate why any room in an hotel is not intimately connected with it, by which apparently is meant, the business of the hotel. The business of the hotel is carried on in the whole building and therefore, in every part of it. It would be difficult to say that one part of the building is more intimately connected with the hotel business than another. Nor do I see any reason why the Act should exempt from its protection a part which is intimately connected as it is said, and which I confess I do not understand, and not a part not so intimately connected. I also do not understand what is meant by saying that a part of an hotel supplies essential amenities. The idea of essentiality of an amenity is so vague as to be unworkable. This test would introduce great uncertainty in the working of the Act which could not have been intended. Nor do I see any reason why the Act should have left out of its protection in a room which is an essential amenity of the hotel and not other rooms in it."

He then disapproves the part of the judgment of Khosla, J., where Khosla, J., says that in order that a room in a hotel may be within the definition, it must be let out for the purpose of the hotel. Sarkar, J., says (at p. 1267 of AIR 1959 SC) :

"By this it is apparently meant that the room must be let out to supply board or give other services to the guests, to do which are the purposes of a hotel. Again I find no justification for the view. There is nothing in the definition about the purposes of the letting out. Nor am I aware that hotel proprietors are in the habit of letting out portions of the hotel premises to others for supplying board and services to the guests in the hotels. It may be that a hotel proprietor grants licenses to contractors to use parts of his premises to provide board and services to the guests in the hotel. This however is a different matter and with such licenses we are not concerned. Again, a proprietor of a different kind of business who lets out a portion of his business premises for the purposes of his business does not get an exemption from the operation of the Act. I am unable to see why the proprietor of a hotel business should have special consideration. The Act no doubt exempts a room in a hotel but it says nothing about the purposes for which the room must be let out to get the exemption. Further, not only a room in a hotel is exempted by the definition but at the same time also a room in a dharamsala. If a room in a hotel within the Act is a room let out for the purposes of the hotel so must therefore be a room in a dharamsala. It would however be difficult to see how a room in a dharamsala can be let out for the purposes of the dharamsala for a dharamsala does not as a rule supply food or give any services, properly so called".

"Having given the matter my best consideration, I have not been able to find any reason why the words used in the definition should not have their plain meaning given to them. I therefore come to the conclusion that a room in a hotel within the definition is any room in a building in the whole of which the business of a hotel is run. So understood, the definition would include the spaces in the cloak rooms of the Imperial Hotel with which we are concerned. These spaces are, in my view, rooms in a hotel and excluded from the operation of the Act. The Rent Controller had no power to fix any standard rent in respect of them".

11. The view of Sarkar, J., appears to me to be that one must first apply the 2nd test laid down by S.K. Das, J., about the purpose for which the entire building or portions thereof is used to find out whether the entire building or only a part thereof is being used for running a hotel and thereafter any room in the building or the part, as the case may be, is to be excluded from the 'premises'. In my view there is not much difference between the tests laid down by the two learned Judges of the Supreme Court and the application of the tests laid down in both the judgments will ultimately give the same result when applied for determining whether a particular room is a room in a hotel. The ratio of the two judgments is that one must ascertain whether the portion in question is part of the same building or definable portion thereof which is used for the purpose of the hotel or the purpose connected therewith directly or indirectly. Whichever of the two judgments are applied in the present case the conclusion must be that the room occupied by the defendant is a room or accommodation in a hotel.

12. If I have had to choose between the ratio of three judgments on the basis that there is no common ratio, I would have preferred to follow the judgment of S. K. Das, J. I am therefore, of the opinion that the area occupied by the hairdressing saloon of the defendant is a room or an accommodation in a hotel and, therefore, not premises within the meaning of the Rent Act and hence Rent Act does not apply thereto. Consequently, even if the protection given to a licensee would have become available in case of the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant, it is not available as that area is not 'premises' to which the Rent Act applies.

13. Mr. Chagla has further contended that assuming that it is such premises as is covered by the definition in the Rent Act, the defendant does not get the protection as a licensee because she is not a licensee within the definition contained in Section 5 (4A) of the said Act. He relies on the following portion of the definitions:

"Licensee, in respect of any premises or part thereof means but does not include..... a person having any accommodation in a hotel, lodging house, hostel, guest house, club, nursing home, hospital, sanatorium, dharmashala, home for widows, orphans or like premises marriage or public hall or like premises or in a place of amusement or entertainment or like institutions..... or a person having accommodation in any premises or part thereof for conducting a canteen, creche, dispensary or other services as amenities by any undertaking or institution."

According to Mr. Chagla either one or the other part of the said portion will cover the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant, and therefore, she will not get the protection of the Rent Act. The words "a person having any accommodation" applies to the accommodation not only in a hotel but also in such other institutions as hospitals, marriage or public halls, or places of amusement or entertainment or like institution. The clear intention is not to confine the exception in respect of a person who is a lodger or an accommodation occupied by a lodger. The words "person" and "accommodation" have a wider meaning and any person who has been given any accommodation (emphasis supplied) in the types of establishments mentioned is excluded from the definition of "licensee". There is no reason to give a narrower meaning to these words. They would, therefore, include any type of accommodation given to any person provided the accommodation has some connection with or nexus to such establishments. It is now so well-known as can be taken judicial notice of, that many hotels give out shops as licensees to various parties for running banks, travel agencies, boutiques, shoe shops, drug stores, hair dressing saloon, book shop, etc. The intention of giving accommodation for these purposes is mainly that the clientele of the hotel gets the benefit thereof and can meet its requirements in the very premises of the hotel rather than go out. The clientele of the hotel may not be sufficient to enable the shop owners to run them profitably, and therefore, they are also allowed to cater to the outside market but this does not take away or in any way affect the basic idea and intention of attracting clients and of making the stay more comfortable for the clients who are lodgers. If this is the intention, the hotels must necessarily have some control over these shop owners. It is quite possible, looking to the business methods, that in a desire to steal a march over competitors, a hotel owner or a group of hotel owners may himself or itself acquire shops through nominees or buy up the shop owners and such shops may be deliberately made to so run as to drive away the clientele. In such cases, it is the reputation of the hotel in which the shops are situated that will suffer. If in respect of a top grade luxury hotel words get around that you cannot get a proper hair cut or hairdressing or that it has a useless book shop or that there are several shops which sell sub-standard goods or are cheating, it will affect the whole hotel. It is possible, that keeping this in mind the initial exemption is granted to room or other accommodation in a hotel or lodging house from it being a premises and exclusion is made while giving protection to the licensees. On the interpretation that I have given to the definition of 'premises' there was no necessity of excluding a person occupying any accommodation in a hotel while defining licensee, the same having been excluded from the definition of 'premises'. However, this appears to have been done by way of abundant caution. The contention of Mr. Chagla that even if the portion occupied by the defendant is 'premises', she is not a licensee who is protected by the 1973 amendment to the Rent Act has to be accepted.

14. Mr. Cooper then contended on the assumption that the defendant is entitled to the protection of the Rent Act, that the defendant should be relieved from the undertaking. Mr. Cooper has very fairly stated that he does not want to contend in the present proceedings that if the defendant has acquired the protection of the Rent Act she ceased to be bound by the undertaking on acquiring such protection but has argued the entire matter on the basis that even if she is protected by the Rent Act, she has to seek relief from the undertaking. In the view that I have taken, it is not necessary to decide this question but since this question was debated fully before me I am expressing my opinion.

15. Mr. Cooper contends as follows. At the time when the undertaking was given, under the law it was the legal obligation of the defendant as a licensee to deliver back possession on the license coming to an end by efflux of time or otherwise and correspondingly there was a legal right in the plaintiff to take possession; however, as the subject matter in respect of which undertaking was given was not part of the subject matter of the suit and consequently in view of legal position then obtainable under O. 23, R. 3, a decree for possession of the licenced premises could not have been passed, while arriving at the agreement for giving licence with option of renewal, this undertaking was given so as to obviate the plaintiff being driven to filing of a fresh suit for possession. According to Mr. Cooper, the undertaking was only a method of ensuring by pressure of courts sanction that the defendant carried out her obligations. He contends that the entire basis viz.; the legal right to obtain possession of the shop has vanished as a result of Legislative enactment and the defendant is now entitled to retain the premises by reason of the protection afforded by the amendment to a licensee. Mr. Cooper says that this granting of protection to licensees being a legislative policy is public policy and the Court must fall in line and relieve the defendant from the undertaking. In support of his contention that such public policy should prevail and Court should act in accordance therewith, he relied on Natraj Studios (P) Ltd. v. Navrang Studios, AIR 1981 SC 537. In that case there was an agreement to refer to arbitration the disputes as may arise between the parties. The Bombay Rent Act applied to the relationship between the parties. The question arose as to whether the matter is referable to arbitration or that because of special jurisdiction conferred on the Small Causes Court, the arbitration agreement cannot be effective. While considering this position, it is observed as follows :

"17. The Bombay Rent Act is a welfare legislation aimed at the definite social objective of protection of tenants against harassment by landlords in various ways. It is a matter of public policy. The scheme of the Act shows that the conferment of exclusive jurisdiction on certain Courts is pursuant to the social objective at which the legislation aims. Public policy requires that contracts to the contrary which nullify the rights conferred on tenants by the Act cannot be permitted. Therefore, public policy requires that parties cannot also be permitted to contract out of the legislative mandate which requires certain kind of disputes to be settled by special Courts constituted by the Act. It follows that arbitration agreements between parties whose rights are regulated by the Bombay Rent Act cannot be recognised by a Court of Law."

16. It is to be noticed that the aid of the public policy, obviously meaning thereby the legislative policy, was taken to interpret the intention of the Legislature in conferring special jurisdiction. Here the question that has arisen is very different. In the present case the conflict, if any, is between the protection afforded by the Legislature and the undertaking given by the defendant. The Legislature has not given protection to the licensees notwithstanding any decree or order of the Court. The intention of the Legislature is clearly not to give protection against the decree or order of the Court. Even though protection of licensees may be a matter of public policy it will on the other hand be dangerous and contrary to public policy to allow a person who has solemnly given an undertaking to Court to commit a breach thereof or grant exemption therefrom to enable him to avail of the protection under the Act. The policy of Legislature cannot be taken to be to allow a person to commit such breach unless it was so specifically indicated by the normal words such as "notwithstanding any decree or order of the Court" which are to be found in other provisions of the Rent Act. For example such words were used while introducing in S. 15, the amendment granting protection to a sub-tenant, in the year 1959. Accordingly, I do not see any substance in the contention of Mr. Cooper that public policy requires granting of exemption from the undertaking. I find support for my view from the judgment of this Court in Narendra v. Jethalal, (1978) 80 Bom LR 196, wherein similar question arose. In that case there was an operative decree for possession with the undertaking that it was not to be executed till a particular time and a corresponding undertaking to hand over possession on the due date. It was contended therein as in the present case that by virtue of the consent decree the defendant therein was a licensee and the defendant being in possession on 1st. Feb. 1973, under a subsisting agreement of license, had acquired protection under the Rent Act. This contention was negated as in that case it was clear that the defendant was not a licensee even under general law. However, it is not possible to say so in the present case and it is agreed on both the sides that the defendant is a licensee within its meaning under general law; the only dispute being whether she is a licensee within the meaning of Rent Act and protected by the provisions of the Rent Act and which question is decided in the negative for reasons already mentioned. After holding that the defendant was not a licensee, the learned Judge proceeded to consider the other contentions also since all the contentions were fully argued before the Court, and therefore, though the remaining portion of the judgment can be said to be obiter will be of very high persuasive value. I need not refer to the various contentions or the facts of that case but it will be sufficient to quote certain portions of the judgment, which relevant portions are as follows :

"In the present case, as we shall presently show, there are no words used in S. 15A of the Bombay Rent Act which in express terms override the effect of any decree for possession passed in favour of a party. Moreover, in that case the rights under the decree were proprietary rights which vested in the State with retrospective effect. The decree, therefore, was executable, in any event, only at the instance of the State and the right of the appellant to be continued in possession of the land as malik makbuza had been recognised by the State itself. The observation in the judgment that the decree had become inexecutable, on which strong reliance has been placed by Mr. Mehta, must be considered in the light of these facts. In the case before us, apart from there being no words in S. 15A of the Bombay Rent Act which express an intention to override any decree, there is no provision which takes away the right of the decree-holder or vests it in the State or any other authority as in the case before the Supreme Court. In these circumstances, it appears to us that the ratio in that decision has no application to the case before us. On the other hand, we find that in Ramdas v. Monica (AIR 1974 Bom 245), it has been held by a Full Bench of this Court that the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act do not apply to appeals pending on the date on which the provisions of Parts II and III of the Act were applied to the premises which were the subject-matter of the proceedings. In that case, the view previously taken, that S. 12 of the Bombay Rent Act is prospective and not retrospective, has been clearly approved. It appears to us that in the light of this decision, there is substance in the submission of Mr. Sorabjee that the appellants are not entitled to claim protection of the provisions of Sec. 12 (1) of the Bombay Rent Act. The provisions of S. 15A are prospective as from Feb. 1, 1973. On the plain terms of S. 15A of the Bombay Rent Act, there is nothing to show that it was intended to override any decree for possession which might have been passed prior to its coming into force".

"In view of these decisions, it appears to us that although certain consequences which may result from a contract might also result from a consent decree, nevertheless a consent decree passed by a Court on the basis of compromise between the parties cannot be equated with a contract, but must be regarded as something more than a contract. In our opinion, the mere use of the word "contract" in the non obstante clause in S. 15A of the Bombay Rent Act is not enough to override a consent decree which provides for possession being handed over".

17. No doubt the words used are in the context of that decree which provide for an executable decree for possession but in my view it will make no difference whether the decree provided for possession or that the right of the plaintiff was sought to be protected by an undertaking. The ultimate object of both the provisions will be to ensure that the plaintiff gets his possession through intervention of Court in case of default. In case of a decree for possession, by execution and in case of an undertaking by forcing a person to give possession under a threat of contempt proceedings, which may result in his imprisonment or imposition of fine. It is not necessary for me to decide whether in case of a breach of an undertaking to give possession as in the present case, a Court on a proper application can make an order for possession also, apart from punishing the person for contempt.

18. Mr. Chagla relied on the judgment of Lentin, J. dated 21st Dec. 1973, in Company Application No. 120 of 1973, in Company Petition No. 170 of 1967 R. N. Bhagat v. Official Liquidator. In that case, on or about 2nd April 1970 Bhagat had given an undertaking to Court in consideration of permission granted to him by the official liquidator to continue to use and occupy the company flat at Kanta Nivas. The undertaking, inter alia, was that in the event of certain contingencies arising, on the Official Liquidator calling upon him to hand over the flat, he and his family members will forthwith remove themselves from the said flat and hand over peaceful possession to the official liquidator without claiming any right or interest therein. Thereafter, the landlords (respondents Nos. 2 to 5 before Lentin, J.) took out a chamber summons against the official liquidator for order and direction against the official liquidator to deliver to them the possession of the said flat. The applicant was not made a party to nor was he given notice of the judge's summons taken out by the landlord. The said Bhagat sought to appear at the hearing of the said judge's summons but was not allowed to appear. The judge's summons taken out by the landlord was made absolute and the official liquidator was directed to get possession from Bhagat and hand over possession to the landlord. Bhagat sought to oppose handing over possession, inter alia, on the ground that he had acquired protection under S. 15A of the Rent Act since Feb. 1973 and that the appellant was relieved of or was discharged from his undertaking by reason thereof. Contentions made on behalf of Bhagat were negatived and certain observations made were relied on by Mr. Chagla. These observations were:

"Does it now behove the applicant to come forth and ask that he be discharged from his undertaking or that the same be modified when on the faith thereof he obtained from the Court, which otherwise he would not have the indulgence and concession to occupy the suit premises? In my opinion, the answer is in the negative. To answer otherwise would be to shake the very foundation of the confidence reposed by the public at large in the solemnity of assurances given to the Court. If the Court were to find itself helpless in such circumstances, the value of such solemn assurances given by a party to the Court, on the faith whereof he obtains a concession, indulgence, or relief from the Court would be nil, and would result in subversion of judicial authority to the detriment of public interest".

"It must be remembered that even prior to S. 15A coming to the statute book, it was open to the applicant if he had not given the undertaking to have claimed a sub-tenancy as he was in exclusive possession of the flat since 1955. It was in order to ensure that he would not make any such claim, that not only was he required to execute the undertaking to that effect on 2nd April 1970, but in addition to make assurance doubly sure, Kantawala, J., as he then was took a further personal undertaking from him to vacate as and when called upon to do by the Court. In view of these undertakings, the applicant could not have successfully set up a claim to tenancy even if Section 15A of the Rent Act had not been enacted. In my opinion, the position is in no way different, and has in no way changed, merely by reason of the enactment of S. 15A. Assuming that under S. 15A he is deemed to be a tenant, the undertakings given by him mean, as they necessarily must, that he will not stake a claim to tenancy but that as a gentleman and in pursuance of the undertaking given by him he would vacate as and when called upon by the Court. In other words, even if under S. 15A of the Rent Act, the applicant is deemed to be a tenant, it is for him to say that in spite thereof, he will carry out the solemn assurance given by him to the Court, and not claim any interest in the property which though in law he might be entitled to do. In re West Devon Great Consols Mine, reported in (1888) 38 Ch D 51, it was held that an undertaking not to appeal is binding even though the right to appeal existed. On the same ratio, even assuming that the applicant is deemed to be a tenant under S. 15A, in view of the personal undertaking given by him to Kantawala, J. as he then was, not to claim any interest in the flat save and except by way of permissive use, he cannot now avail himself of the title, if any endowed upon him by S. 15A of the Rent Act. Greater the reason why the undertakings must be carried out and must be enforced is because the undertakings given by the applicant were not the result of any agreement or compromise between him and any party to the proceedings but were solemn assurances given in order, to obtain and on the faith of which he obtained a relief, indulgence and concession from the Court to continue to occupy the flat. There is no question of the applicant and the Court having arrived at a contract. There can be no contract between a party and the Court¹.

"In my opinion, it does not behove the applicant to contend that he is protested from eviction merely because a status, if any, of a tenant, has been conferred upon him by S. 15A of the Rent Act."

19. In reply Mr. Cooper pointed out some portions of the judgment and contended that an undertaking given to the Court to get a concession from the court stands on a different footing from an undertaking given to court to get concession from a party to the litigation, and therefore, when the defendant in the present case has acquired a right to continue in possession of the property subsequent to giving of an undertaking the defendant who did not obtain any concession from the court but gave the undertaking only as a part of the settlement, should be relieved from the undertaking. The portions relied on by Mr. Cooper read as follows :

"As far as the present summons is concerned, what must be ascertained is, whether by giving his undertaking to the Court, the applicant obtained an indulgence or concession from the Court but for which undertaking he would not have obtained. The answer is obviously in the affirmative. An undertaking given by a party to the Court on the faith whereof he obtains an indulgence or concession from the Court which otherwise he would not have obtained, must necessarily stand on a higher footing than an undertaking given to the Court for a concession or indulgence received by that party from the opposite party. An undertaking to the Court constitutes more than a solemn promise, assurance and guarantee given by a person to the Court in order to obtain a relief or concession from the Court and hence such an undertaking is and must necessarily be more sacrosanct than a mere order of the Court, passed with or without the consent of the other party. While a consent order taken by two parties may merely be a bargain arrived at between them with the imprimatur of the Court, such an imprimatur does not and cannot make the Court itself a party to the bargain embodied in such consent order. However, in the case of an undertaking given by a person to the Court on the faith whereof the Court gives that person relief, indulgence or concession which the Court would not have done but for the solemnity of his assurances, it is not only in the public interest and public policy, but also for the more effective administration of justice that the Court should hold that person to his obligation solemnity given by the undertaking and on the faith of which the Court has acted. To allow the applicant to reprobate his solemn obligation to carry out his undertaking after approbating the indulgence, concession and relief given to him by the Court on the faith of his undertaking, would be an impediment to the smooth administration of justice and an encouragement of breach of faith towards the Court by others like-minded".

"The undertaking given in person by the applicant to Kantawala, J., as he then was and the undertakings executed by him on 2nd April 1970 stand on a higher footing than had he given similar undertakings to the Court to obtain an indulgence, relief, and concession from the opposite party which in this case there was none."

"None of these decisions can be of assistance to the applicant. The facts and circumstances in those cases have not the slightest semblance or bearing to those in the matter before me. There is no decree in the matter before me. There is no opposite party in the matter before me. Before me is a simple undertaking given by the applicant, to the Court on the faith and bona fides whereof an indulgence was given to the applicant by the Court to occupy the premises. To my mind, such an undertaking would not attract the provisions of S. 15A of the Bombay Rent Act or fall within the ratio of the decisions relied on by Mr. Shah".

"Mr. Shah finally contended that this was a fit case where the applicant should be relieved from his undertakings on the following grounds. Firstly, the background and the context in which the earlier undertaking was given was designed merely for preventing the applicant from committing default in the payment of monthly compensation. Secondly, that the object of enforcing the undertaking today was to aid, implement, perpetrate and approve of an illegal compromise or to sanction an illegality. Mr. Shah elaborated that if the landlords were to file a suit against the applicant for recovery of possession such compromise could never be enforced nor could the applicant be evicted for reasons other than those contemplated by the Bombay Rent Act. According to Mr. Shah, through the medium of the Official Liquidator and/or the Court, the landlords are attempting to bypass by provisions of the amended Act and the Court should not give assistance to such landlords by taking advantage of its dominant position qua the applicant."

"Coming to the first ground urged by Mr. Shah, the same can be repelled briefly by stating that the background and the context of the undertaking originally given by the applicant, namely that he would pay the monthly compensation without making any default, can possibly have no relevance to the undertakings executed by him on 2nd April 1970 and the personal undertaking given by him to Kantawala, J., as he then was.

Regarding the second ground urged by Mr. Shah it is difficult to see how the question of any compromise, legal or illegal, arises. It can never be said that by accepting the undertakings of the applicant, there was a "compromise" between the applicant and the Court. The contention that the Court would be sanctioning an illegality must be urged to be rejected. Success or failure by the landlords in eviction proceedings against the applicant in the Court of Small Causes can in no way militate from the undertaking given by the applicant, not by way of any compromise but in order to obtain relief and concession from the Court but for which undertaking such relief or concession would never have been given to him. There is no question of the landlords attempting to bypass S. 15A. The applicant having given his undertakings must stand by them and must hand over possession to the Official Liquidator which the latter was directed to take from the applicant by Nain J. by his order dated 6th July, 1973."

20. The question before Lentin J. was the effect of the undertaking given to the Court to get a concession from the court and while considering certain cases cited several observations are made which create an impression that there is some difference between the two types of undertakings mentioned above. However, on a close reading of the judgment this subtle distinction is not supported. The observations made in the said judgment which tend to draw distinction between the undertaking given to the Court to obtain concession from the Court and the undertaking given to the court whilst settling the disputes between two parties were made only with a view to emphasise the fact that the undertaking was not given pursuant to any contract as there can be no contract between any party and the court, and the learned Judge did not intend to say that the undertaking given to the Court in implementation of a settlement between the parties are on a different footing. In any event, the question before the learned Judge was not whether the undertaking given to Court to obtain concession from the Court stands on different and higher footing than one given as a part of a compromise between the parties. None of the parties were in any way concerned with effect of the latter type of undertaking and obviously no arguments were advanced for or against such a distinction. The judgment then is not an authority for the proposition that the two types of undertakings stand on a different footing. If such a proposition is to be accepted several questions will immediately arise. What is the distinction? In what way one has higher sanctity than the other? To what extent is the sanctity higher? Does a breach of one type of undertaking lead to higher punishment than the other? Is the relief from one to be granted for grounds more stringent than the other? In my view acceptance of such a contention would lead to invidious distinction between the different undertakings given to the Court and to unnecessary legal gymnastics. Undertaking given to Court for whatever reason must always remain an undertaking to the Court and the purpose for which it is given cannot make any difference to its ultimate effect. The principle to be borne in mind in considering the effect of an undertaking is to be found in the very passages in the judgment recited above and which is to the effect that if a person is to be deemed to be discharged or is to be discharged from an undertaking because of such subsequent events as in that case, which are similar to those in the present case, the very foundations of the confidence reposed by the public at large in solemnity of assurances given to the Court will be shaken and would result in subversion of the judicial authority to the detriment of public interest. The observation in the said judgment to the effect that it was in order to ensure that Bhagat would not make any claim in future as he may otherwise be free to make that he was required to execute an undertaking as also was required to give further personal undertaking to vacate and that the position had not in any way changed merely by reason of the enactment of S. 15A even assuming that Bhagat could be deemed to be a tenant under S. 15A, are according to me, equally applicable in case of an undertaking given to the Court whilst settling a matter and arriving at consent-terms between the parties.

21. This being the position I am of the view that it lies ill in the mouth of any party to say "though I have given a solemn undertaking which I had given for obtaining concession from the opponent and though I have now enjoyed the full benefit of the concession, please relieve me of the same because though it is within my power to comply with the undertaking the Legislature has now sought to give me further benefit". The benefit given by the Legislature is a right conferred on the party but it does not take away the power of the party to comply with the undertaking and this by itself cannot be a ground for holding that the party is not bound by the undertaking or for relieving the party from the undertaking.

22. In the present case, in the suit in which the undertaking was given there were disputed claims and counter-claims between the plaintiff and the defendant. Without going into the merits of the case, the parties decided to obtain concession from each other and an undertaking to Court was the basis for such concession. It is possible that the plaintiff would have succeeded in the suit and the defendant would have had to vacate forthwith. It is possible that the plaintiff would have lost the suit and the defendant would have continued in possession as a protected tenant and the plaintiff would have been driven to eviction proceedings if necessary grounds then existed. In this position, the defendant obtained concession from the plaintiff as a result of which she became entitled to continue in possession for a period of 6 years as a licensee in the alternative premises with an option to continue for a further period of six years and the plaintiff ensured to itself (and if Mr. Cooper's contention was to be accepted, unsuccessfully attempted to ensure) that the plaintiff will get possession at the end of 12 years maximum. With a view to see that the plaintiff gave such a concession and to ensure that the plaintiff stuck to and honoured his concession the result of which was that the defendant was able to continue in the portion originally given or in the portion which was to be given alternatively, a mandatory provision in the decree was made and in return with a view to ensure that the defendant vacated the accommodation in her possession the plaintiff required her to give an undertaking to Court and the undertaking was given by her to the Court. Having obtained and fully enjoyed this concession in such a manner and now when it is not possible to restore the benefit obtained by her the defendant has come to the Court for relief from her undertaking. It can hardly lie in the mouth of the defendant to say that it is just and equitable that she should be relieved of her undertaking. The equitable relief to be given to the plaintiff on relieving the defendant from her undertaking would be that both parties should be relegated to the same position as it was obtainable at the time it was given and which is impossible to do today. In the circumstances, it is not just or equitable to relieve the defendant from her undertaking.

23. Apart from the ground of public policy no other grounds are urged for granting such a relief and this I have negatived. However, I must point out certain disturbing aspect of this application and which makes it thoroughly unjustified and dishonest for the defendant to apply for the relief in the manner she has done. In the affidavit-in-support of the chamber summons for relief from undertaking it is stated in paragraph 3 thereof as follows:—

sent decree in the above matter and defendant became entitled to remain in possession of the suit premises as a licensee of the plaintiffs on the terms and conditions contained in the agreement dated 26th February 1964 except as modified by the said consent decree and the said licence was for first instance for six years beginning from 15th April 1969 with an option to the defendant to renew the said licence for a period of further six years on the same terms and conditions provided that the defendant observes and performs all the terms and conditions of the leave and licence as provided in the consent terms and consent decree the defendant was to remain in the possession of the suit premises till 14th April 1981 as the licensee of the plaintiffs on the payment of the monthly compensation as provided therein. Accordingly, the defendant continued to pay such licence fee regularly every month as a compensation for the use and occupation of the area described in the plan annexed to the said consent decree".

It is clear therefore that according to the defendant she was to remain in possession of the suit premises till 14th Apr. 1981. The consent-terms are clear that she was to remain in possession till that date only if she exercised her option, and therefore, this statement clearly implies that she has exercised her option. It is again stated in para 6 towards the end to the effect that the defendant is entitled to remain and to continue in possession notwithstanding the undertaking even after 24th Apr. 1981 (which is admitted to be a mistake for 14th Apr. 1981). It is difficult to see how this date could have been mentioned if the defendant had not exercised the option as she is now suggesting. The plaintiff in its affidavit-in-reply, had relied on a letter from one Mr. Rizvi, advocate, acting on behalf of the defendant, by which the option to renew the licence was exercised. The fact of exercise of option was first mentioned in the affidavit of 19th Feb. 1981. The letter was specifically referred to and annexed to the further affidavit dated 3rd April, 1981. The defendant in her affidavit of 22nd Feb. 1981 has denied the exercise of option completely as follows:

"I deny that I have enjoyed the benefit of the said consent decree and had exercised the option mentioned in the consent decree and has taken out this chamber summons only when the time to vacate the premises mentioned in plan Ex. 'B' to the consent decree is about to reach as alleged. I say that neither I nor my advocates M/s. Pathare & Co. to my knowledge have exercised the option".

At the hearing the defendant has through her counsel specifically denied the authority of Mr. Rizvi to write such a letter. To me this denial appears to be false and dishonest. If she had no knowledge about the option having been exercised she could not have mentioned the date of 14th Apr. 1981 as the date when licence will expire. She has not contended anywhere that there was implied exercise of option. Apart from the above two indications Mr. Cooper appearing for the defendant had on 6th Feb., 1981, applied to me that I should hear this matter urgently on the ground that the licence was to come to an end on 14th Apr. 1981 and that if the defendant continued in occupation thereafter, it may amount to a breach of the undertaking. The denial by the defendant of the exercise of option appears to be a false denial. If it is assumed that there is no exercise of option at all as contended by the defendant the position of defendant becomes worse. In that case the defendant on her own admission is guilty of gross breach of the undertaking as she was bound to hand over possession on the expiration of 6 years as the option was not exercised. She has come to Court over five years after committing breach. It will be highly unjust and inequitable to grant any relief to the defendant who is guilty of either making false denial with a view to obtain relief or is in gross contempt for a number of years.

24. I must point out that if any relief from undertaking is granted to a person who has behaved in this fashion it will be a wrong exercise of power to grant relief from undertaking and the only result will be of complete loss of confidence of the public in undertakings given to the Court and in judicial decrees and orders generally. To the general litigant what is important is not the niceties of law and distinctions between decree and order on one hand and undertaking to Court on the other or the distinctions between executable and non-executable decrees but what is important is that once the dispute is finally put an end to by way of consent terms which are accepted by the parties as binding, the result contemplated by parties must follow. It is the duty of the Court to see that as far as it can help such result as contemplated by parties follows and the confidence of litigant in Court of Law is not shaken.

25. In the result I dismiss the chamber summons with costs. Looking to the time the matter has taken, I quantify the cost at Rs. 1,500/-.

Order accordingly.

ORDER :— This is a civil revision application filed by the original respondents against the order passed by the learned Extra Assistant Judge, Kolhapur dated 10th Mar. 1981 admitting the appeal and holding that it is maintainable.

AZ/AZ/A74/82/VRK/RSK

2. Late Shri Bhau Narsu Choughule, original plaintiff filed a Regular Civil Suit bearing No. 1006 of 1977 in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur against the defendants for a declaration that the resolution dated 24th July, 1976 passed by Shri Ram Shetkari Pani Puravatha Mandal (hereinafter referred to as "the Mandal") is illegal. In the said suit he asked for a further relief claiming a declaration that the cancellation of his membership of the Mandal was also illegal and, therefore, he is entitled to an injunction for restraining the defendants from making any change in the pipe line scheme by which his right of taking water under the Scheme is put in jeopardy. The claim of the plaintiff was contested by the defendants. In this suit an application for temporary injunction was also filed. During the pendency of these proceedings Shri Bhau Narsu Chougule died on 8-12-1980. Therefore present opponents filed an application under O. 22, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure for bringing them on record and adding them as party-applicants, they being the legal representatives of the deceased Bhau Narsu Chougule. This application was opposed by the present petitioners on the ground that the right to sue does not survive, as the right claimed in the suit was a personal right of the deceased Bhau Narsu Chougule based upon his membership of the Mandal. After hearing both the sides the learned Judge of the trial Court came to the conclusion that as right to sue does not survive after the death of original plaintiff, the legal representatives have no right to proceed further with the suit. In this view of the matter, he dismissed the suit as abated.

3. Being aggrieved by this order the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff filed an appeal before the District Court, Kolhapur. In the said appeal a preliminary objection was raised by the respondents, defendants, that the order passed by the trial Court does not amount to a "decree" and therefore the appeal itself is not maintainable. After hearing both sides, the learned Second Extra Assistant Judge, Kolhapur came to the conclusion that by holding that right to sue does not survive, the Court has adjudicated upon and has conclusively determined the right of the appellants and therefore the said order amounted to a 'decree' and hence the appeal was maintainable under O. 41, R. 1 of the Civil P. C. It is against this order dated 10-3-1981 that the present revision application has been filed by the petitioners.

4. Shri Kulkarni, learned counsel appearing for the petitioners—original defendants has contended before me that in view of the definition of the term "decree" in S. 2 (2) of the Civil P. C. it cannot be said that the order passed by the trial Court amounted to a 'decree' against which an appeal could be filed under O. XLI, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In support of his contention Shri Kulkarni has relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Cox and Kings v. Their Workmen, AIR 1977 SC 1666 as well as the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Muhammad Ismail v. Manohar Das, AIR 1922 All 113-114.

5. On the other hand it is contended by Shri Pandit, learned counsel appearing for the respondents, that by holding that the right to sue does not survive after the death of the original plaintiff, the trial Court has finally and conclusively determined, the rights of the legal representatives qua controversy in the suit, which in terms amounts to a 'decree' within the meaning of S. 2 (2) of the Civil P. C. Therefore, the appeal Court was right in coming to the conclusion that the appeal is maintainable under O. 41, R. 1 of the Civil P. C. In support of his contention Shri Pandit has placed a strong reliance upon the following decisions (1) Niranjan Nath v. Afzal Hussain, AIR 1916 Lah 245 (FB), (2) Brij Jivan Lal v. Shiam Lal, AIR 1950 All 57, (3) Rampal Singh v. Abdul Hamid, AIR 1928 Oudh 362 (FB), (4) Arjun v. Balwant, AIR 1954 Madh Bha 45 and (5) Mithu Lal v. Badri Prasad, AIR 1981 Madh Pra 1 (FB) and (6) Maramreddi Ramireddi v. Vallappareddi Ramkrishna Reddi, AIR 1949 Mad 404.

6. With the assistance of the learned counsel appearing for both sides I have gone through the decisions cited before me. So far as the Supreme Court decision in Cox and Kings v. Their Workmen (AIR 1977 SC 1666) on which reliance is placed by Shri Kulkarni, is concerned, in my opinion the said decision is not applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case. The said decision dealt with the scope of the term 'award' as defined in S. 2 (b) of the Industrial Disputes Act, with which we are not concerned in the present Civil Revision Application,

7. This is not a case wherein merely a formal order of abatement of the suit has been passed by the trial Court because the legal representatives of the deceased Bhaū Narsu Chougule had not filed any application for bringing them on record within time or otherwise. As a matter of fact in this case the legal representatives of the deceased-plaintiff had filed an application for bringing them on record. It was not disputed at any stage that they are legal representatives of the deceased. However, a contention was raised that they have no right to proceed with the suit as right to sue does not survive. After hearing both sides the trial Court rejected their application on the ground that the right to sue did not survive and this was the reason why the trial Court dismissed the suit as abated. Thus, in substance the right of the legal representatives to proceed with the suit was wholly adjudicated upon and conclusively determined. This adjudication and final determination of the right of the legal representatives obviously amounts to a decree within the meaning of S. 2 (2) of the Civil P. C. In this view of the matter the learned Judge of the appellate Court was right in coming to the conclusion that the appeal was maintainable under O. 41, R. 1 of the Civil P. C. I am fortified in this view by the following decisions of the various High Courts, viz. (1) Niranjan Nath v. Afzal Hussein, AIR 1916 Lah 245 (FB); (2) Brij Jiwan Lal v. Shiam Lal, AIR 1950 All 57; (3) Rampal Singh v. Abdul Hamid, AIR 1928 Oudh 362 (FB); (4) Arjun v. Balwant, AIR 1954 Madh Bha 45, as well as the decision of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Mithulal v. Badriprasad, AIR 1981 Madh Pra 1 (FB). As in the present case the trial Court has rejected the application filed by the legal representatives because he came to the conclusion that the right to sue does not survive on the death of the sole plaintiff, the order passed is not a formal order of abatement of suit on the death of the plaintiff. Therefore, it is not necessary for me to decide any wider question in this civil revision application. At this stage I am also not concerned with the merits of the controversy and, therefore, it is not necessary to deal with it or to decide it at this stage because by the order dated 10-3-1981, the learned Extra Assistant Judge has only held that the appeal is maintainable and has further directed that the notice of appeal should be issued to the petitioners — original respondents.

8. In the result, therefore, the civil revision application fails and is dismissed. In view of the dismissal of civil revision application, the interlocutory order passed by this Court also stands vacated.

Revision dismissed.

D/- 12-8-1980.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 14, 226 — Educational institutions — Admission — No rules framed — Does not mean that plea of discrimination would not be maintainable as in absence of rules there would be no question of the rules being discriminatory or breach thereof. AIR 1979 SC 1628, Rel. on.

(Para 11)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Test — Admission to University Degree course — Reservation of seats for "Wards of University Employees" — Classification is unreasonable and have no nexus with object to be achieved — (Nagpur University Act (26 of 1974), Ss. 4 (23), 4 (30) and 75).

The principles of equality no doubt allow classification. However, it is well settled that such classification is permissible only if the two conditions exist namely, in the first instance the classification must be based on intelligible differentia which distinguishes the class so formed from others left out of the class. Secondly, the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the rules or the procedure that is being followed.

(Para 11)

In the instant case, 4 seats in the Degree course of Chemical Engineering at Laxminarayan Institute of Technology, Nagpur were reserved for the "Wards of the University Employees".

Held that such reservation contravened Art. 14 of the Constitution. It could not be said that the welfare of the University employees would be a good basis for differentiating them from other persons who are not employees. In the first place while deciding the admission of students to the degree course the object can be (1) imparting education, and (2) selection of appropriate students for the course. Secondly, the welfare of the employees cannot have any relevance while deciding this function of admitting the students to the various courses. The object in running a college or other institution cannot be intermingled with the objects of certain provisions in the Nagpur University Act which are meant for the benefit of the employees. While working in the field of running a college or an institution, the object would be to admit students in a fair and equitable manner. The University cannot introduce the idea of doing benefit to its employees while discharging its duty of running a college or any other institution. Thus the fact that the University wants to bestow some benefits to its employees in the shape of reservation of seats would be a foreign matter and it would not have any direct nexus in the objects of admission of the students to the University college. There is no intelligible differentia while classifying the University employees separately. Case law discussed.

GADGIL, J.— These nine writ petitions can be conveniently decided by a common judgment as in each of them a challenge is made to the validity and correctness of the admissions and the Rules for the admissions for the 4 year B. Tech (Chemical Engineering) Examination Course (hereinafter referred to as the Degree Course) of the Laxminarayan Institute of Technology, Nagpur (hereinafter referred to as the L. I. T.). This L. I. T. is being run by the University of Nagpur.

2. There is no dispute that the minimum qualification for the admission of the degree course is 12th standard higher secondary school certificate or first year B. Sc. or its equivalent. The applicant has to pass in physics, chemistry and mathematics with 50% marks. In addition, he has also to pass in language examination. The L. I. T. admits students to the degree course every year. For the year 1979-80 the L. I. T. issued prospectus for all the courses that are run by the Institute including the degree course in question. In the prospectus it was stated that there would be 60 seats for the degree course and the allocation of those seats would be as follows:

18 seats As per allocation of Government of India.

3 — Jammu and Kashmir

8 — 1 seat for each of the States namely, Rajasthan, Assam, Orissa

Karnataka, Bihar, Gujarat, Kerala and Nagaland,

7 — Unreserved.

Candidates were required to submit their applications not later than 1-7-1979. However, the time was ultimately extended to 20-7-1979. In order to understand the rival contentions of the parties, we would initially state the averments made in Writ Petition No. 2706 of 1979 and the returns of the respective respondents in that petition. If necessary, we would also narrate in brief the contentions raised in the other writ petitions.

3. Prasanna, the petitioner in Writ petition No. 2706/79 has passed the qualifying examination with 215 marks in the three concerned subjects namely, physics, chemistry and mathematics. The percentage of these marks is 71.66 per cent. He filed an application for admission to the degree course with the L. I. T. The Selection Committee prepared the select list in two instalments. Firstly, it was published in the middle of August 1979 and chance calls were also sent to those candidates who had secured up to 80% marks. Prasanna did not receive any such chance call, as his percentage was 71.66. The L.I.T. increased the number of admissions from 60 to about 121. A news item appeared in the Nagpur Times dated 5-9-1979 that the last date for admission to the degree course would be 6-9-1979. Prasanna attended the Office of L. I. T. on 6-9-1979. Similarly, the petitioners in Writ Petitions Nos. 2714/79, 2715/79, 2905/79 and 2906/79 were also present while the petitioners in Writ Petition Nos. 2716/79, 2730/79 and 2854/79 were not present. The grievance of the petitioner Prasanna is that he has been improperly refused admission though he has secured better percentage of marks as compared to some of the students who have been admitted. For example, respondent No. 3 in Writ Petition No. 2706/79 was admitted though his marks in the science subjects were 212. Another grievance is that on 6-9-1979 a peculiarly irregular procedure was followed for admitting the students.

What was done was that the L.I.T. took into account the merits of the students who were present in the office on 6-9-1979 and on the basis of that merit, the admissions were made. The contention of Prasanna is that this procedure is bad inasmuch as there was no publications that the process of admission will be completed by filling the vacancies or amongst those applicants who would be present on 6-9-1979. The applicants were kept in dark and as such the students having better merit than those admitted on 6-9-1979 could not attend the office. Prasanna has described this procedure of admission on 6-9-1979 as 'spot admission' and has stated that this is highly illegal and discriminatory. According to him, the L. I. T. authorities were expected to prepare the select list on the basis of comparative merits of the applicants. The admissions should have been granted with the help of such select list. Some times the selected students might not join the degree course and, therefore, the L.I. T. should have prepared a waiting list which should also have been prepared on the basis of merits and thereafter should have offered admissions to the students mentioned in the waiting list, as per the serial number in the list. Prasanna has contended that the type of admission that was effected on 6-9-1979 is unheard of and it is liable to be quashed as the L. I. T. authorities have used double standard while making admissions namely, (1) the standard of merit in case of some students and (2) the presence on the last date of admission. It is alleged that all this is discriminatory and liable to be struck down. Another contention of Prasanna is that after issue of the prospectus, the L. I. T., authorities decided to reserve four seats for the Wards of the University employees and that on the basis of that reservation, respondents Nos. 3, 6, 7 and 8 have been admitted though they could not have secured admission if the test of merit alone would have been applied. It was contended that the classification of 'wards of the University employees' is not a reasonable classification and that it has no nexus with the related object.

4. When the hearing of these matters began on 10-7-1980, the counsel for the L. I. T. produced before the Court a list of the students admitted for the 'degree course in 1979-80 with the necessary break-up of the various categories or reservations in such admissions. The petitioner Prasanna, therefore, filed Civil Application No. 1537 of 1980 making some additional averments. The list so produced by the respondents showed that in all 121 admissions were effected. The list has given separate categories about reservations and has mentioned the names of the applicants admitted under each category. Prasanna has prepared a statement on the basis of that list and by Civil Application No. 1537 of 1980, he wants that the said statement should be attached as Annexures E and F to the main petition. In Annexure E he was shown that instead of original 60 seats, in all 79 candidates were allotted as per the various categories mentioned in the prospectus. As the seats have been increased, there is consequential increase in some of the categories. For example, 23 admissions were allotted for old Madhya Pradesh instead of 14, while 46 admissions for open competition instead of 28. In Annexure-E Prasanna has thereafter given break-up of the remaining 40 seats as follows:

- 4 Wards of Nagpur University Employees,
- 8 Bombay University,
- 3 Poona University
- 2 Shivaji University
- 3 Marathwada University
- 1 Madras University
- 6 Scheduled Castes
- 4 Scheduled Tribes
- 3 Nomadic Tribes
- 5 Other Backward classes,
- 1 Political Sufferer

Prasanna has also filed Civil Application No. 1548 of 1980 challenging the formation of the above-mentioned Categories and allotment of seats for each of these categories. In Annexure-E (sought to be produced by Civil Application No. 1537 of 1979), Prasanna has stated that these students having marks less than him, have been allotted from Madhya Pradesh and that 4 seats from Jammu and Kashmir were admitted though they had secured marks less than him. There is another statement in Annexure-F that 11 students (as mentioned in that Annexure) from the categories of scheduled caste, scheduled tribes and nomadic tribes were admitted though they had secured marks less than Prasanna. Thus Prasanna has challenged the creation of new categories (including the one meant for the Wards of the University employees). His contention is that the L. I. T. is bound to admit the students as per the categories mentioned in the prospectus and that the said Institution is estopped from altering or adding to the categories to the prejudice of Prasanna. Prasanna has also alleged that on the increase of seats from 60 to 121, there should have been proportionate increase of seats under each of the categories. He wants to state that in the prospectus there were 28 general seats and that they should have been increased to 56. He has also alleged in Civil Application No. 1548 of 1980 that the reservation for the categories as mentioned in the original prospectus and also as subsequently effected is liable to be struck down as it is excessive reservation.

5. With these another (sic) averments Prasanna has challenged the admissions made on 6-9-1979 as 'spot admission' and also the admissions of respondents Nos. 3, 6, 7 and 8. As the petition could not be decided before the completion of the academic year 1979-80, Prasanna has amended the relief clause by praying that he may be ordered to be admitted for the academic year 1980-81.

6. The respondents 1, 2 and 4 have filed their return. They admitted that after the issue of the prospectus, seats have been increased and the last date for admission was fixed as 6-9-1979. A Press Note dated 4-9-1979 has been issued by the Nagpur University. It is at Annexure-B to the return page 49 of the paper book. It reads as follows:

"It is notified for general information of the students, guardians and colleges/institutions affiliated to Nagpur University that the permission shall not be granted for admission/enrolment of students after Thursday, the 6th of September, 1979, under any circumstances."

The respondents contended that no account of reservations for the different categories there could not be a single merit list. As far as the reservation for the Wards of the University employees is concerned, these respondents contended that a representation to that effect was received from the employees, A meeting of the L. I. T. committee was not likely to be held immediately. Hence the report of the Director recommending such reservations was accepted by the Vice Chancellor under S. 11 (4) of the Nagpur University Act, 1974. This was done as an urgent action was necessary. In due course, the meeting of the L.I.T. committee was held on 29-12-1979 and the reservations for the Wards of the University employees had been approved in that meeting. It was denied that this reservation was discriminatory or was in any way bad.

7. The respondents admitted that on the last date i. e., 6-9-1979 there were still some admissions to be granted. On that date a roll call was taken of the applicants who were present in the office and from amongst them those students who had preferential merit were admitted. It was contended that Prasanna was entitled to an admission in the general and not in reserved categories. There were in all 226 students who were having marks between 79.66 percentage to 81.66 percentage from the general category. These students were not admitted. Prasanna, therefore, has no right to claim admission in preference to these students. It was alleged that the petition is bad as these students are not made parties. Prasanna has described the admissions made on 6-9-1979 as 'spot admission'. The respondents contended that there was nothing like 'spot admission' and that this phrase is creation of Prasanna's imagination. At the same time, the averments in paragraphs 9 and 18 of the return do indicate that on 6-9-1979 a general roll call was taken of those applicants who were present and from amongst them admission was granted. The respondents have pleaded that this is general practice and it is good and legal. The respondents further pleaded that the First Year course was practically complete and that Prasanna cannot claim any admission to that course. They also alleged that Prasanna's prayer for admission for the course beginning in 1980-81 is not legal and proper. As far as the two civil applications filed by Prasanna are concerned, these respondents have contended that the list filed on 10-7-1979 was not an authenticated list and it was supplied at the petitioner's request.

There is also a statement in paragraph 1 of the reply that the list was produced as cursory query was made by this Court. However, this statement appears to be an incorrect one. As far as the reservations for Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes, Nomadic Tribes and political sufferers etc., are concerned, the respondents contended that the Government has made resolutions from time to time for such type of reservations and the University has accepted them and as such these resolutions are quite legal. It was then alleged that the L. I. T. is the only Technical Institution in the Maharashtra which provides instructions in Chemical Engineering and that reservation for other States was necessary as these States did not have provisions for such types of course. Respondent No. 4 who is Vice-Chancellor of the University and respondent No. 5, who is the Director of L. I. T., have filed affidavits as to how representation was made for making reservations for the Wards of the University employees and that the Director has recommended such reservation, the Vice Chancellor approved it and later on the L. I. T. committee has approved this action in its meeting dated 29-12-1979. Respondents 7 and 8 are the two students who are admitted in the quota reserved for the Wards of the University employees. They have filed their return. In substance, they contended that the reservation is quite legal and proper.

8. In the remaining writ petitions there are similar challenges for the reservation in favour of the Wards of the University employees. The admission known as 'spot admission' that took place on 6-9-1979 was challenged on similar grounds. These challenges have been disputed by the respondents by raising contentions similar to those in Prasanna's writ petition. Hence it is not necessary to reproduce all these rival contentions in the rest of the petitions. However, there are certain other additional allegations and we would like to state them in brief.

9. Milind is the petitioner in Writ Petition No. 2714 of 1979. He has secured 77 per cent marks i. e. 231 marks out of 300. Ganesh is the petitioner in writ petition No. 2715 of 1979. He has also secured 77 per cent marks. The additional contentions of both these petitioners are also similar. Respondent No. 4 in these petitions is one Ratankumar Shrivastav. He has secured 76.66 per cent marks and he was admitted though Milind and Ganesh were refused admission. These two petitioners have also challenged the admission of respondent No. 3 who has secured admission in the reserved category of the Wards of the University employees. This respondent No. 3 has obtained 74 per cent marks. As far as the 'spot admission' that is admission on 6-9-1979 is concerned, Milind and Ganesh have contended that the two students V. M. Deshpande and S. L. Pandharipande were not present at the L. I. T. office on 6-9-1979 and still they were admitted. According to them, this is also discriminatory. Respondents 1 and 2 have contended that V. M. Deshpande and S. L. Pandharipande were admitted on 6-9-1979 after verification of their marks and after the fees have been paid. There is no specific denial that these two students were not present on 6-9-1979. According to the respondents 1 and 2, respondent No. 3 was properly admitted in the reserved quota for the Wards of the University employees. As far as the admission of respondent No. 4 is concerned, it was alleged that Milind's percentage of marks was 76 per cent and as such respondent No. 4 who has secured 76.6 per cent has been properly admitted on 6-9-1979. The presence of petitioners Milind and Ganesh in the office of the L. I. T. on 6-9-1979 was denied, Milind and Ganesh have filed counter affidavits. Milind has denied that his percentage of marks was 76%. In these two affidavits they have also alleged that those persons who have secured less marks than these petitioners, have been admitted.

9-A. Sarvat Javed is the petitioner in writ petition No. 2716 of 1979. He has secured 75.6% marks. His additional contention is that he belongs to JULAHA community which is declared as 'other backward class'. The respondents had nowhere mentioned or published that some seats were reserved for 'other backward class' and as such Javed could not at any time press his claim in this category of 'other backward class'. Javed, therefore, contended that the selection of some other students as other backward class' in preference to Javed was bad, particularly when Javed has secured more percentage of marks.

10. Vikas is the petitioner in Writ Petition No. 2905 of 1979, while Sanjay has filed writ petition No. 2906 of 1979. Their ground is that respondent No. 3 P. V. Sane whose percentage of marks was 70.33 has been wrongly admitted in preference to Vikas and Sanjay. Their percentage respectively is 70.76 and 74. The respondents contended that as the admissions were to be initially finalised before 20-8-1979 and as respondent No. 3 was the only applicant present on that day, was admitted and that Vikas and Sanjay could have secured admissions on 20-8-1979 had they remained present.

11. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the grievances made by the petitioners are not justiciable on account of any discrimination said to have been in contravention of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. What is contemplated by Art. 14 is that the State shall not deny to any person equality before law or equal protection of law. The argument is that the petitioners have not produced any rules framed for the admission of the students and that they have not contended that there was a breach of such Rules, so as to cause discrimination. The petitioners submitted that the prospectus that have been issued by the University would constitute such Rules and Regulations. In our opinion, the University authorities would not be able to support the discriminative action simply because they have not framed Rules about the admission. Apart from that the scope of Art. 14 cannot be interpreted in a restrictive manner. This aspect has been considered by the Supreme Court in the case of Ramana v. I. A. Authority of India, reported in, AIR 1979 SC 1628. It was a case of grant of right to run a restaurant at the Bombay Airport. We need not refer to the facts in that case. Suffice it to say that the following observations in paragraphs 20, 21 and 34 would show that even an administrative action can be attacked on the ground of discrimination.

"The rule inhibiting arbitrary action by Government which we have discussed above must apply equally where such corporation is dealing with the public, whether by way of giving jobs or entering into contracts or otherwise, and it cannot act arbitrarily and enter into relationship with any person it likes at its sweet will, but its action must be in conformity with some principle which meets the test of reason and relevance."

"The principle of reasonableness and rationality which is legally as well as philosophically an essential element of equality or non-arbitrariness is projected by Article 14 and it must characterise every State action, whether it be under authority of law or in exercise of executive power without making of law. This principle was recognised and applied by a Bench of this Court presided over by Ray, C. J., in Erusian Equipment and Chemicals Ltd. v. State of West Bengal (AIR 1975 SC 266) (supra) where the learned Chief Justice pointed out that the State can carry an executive function by making a law or without making a law. The exercise of such powers and functions in trade by the State is subject to Part III of the Constitution."

"It is, therefore, obvious that both having regard to the constitutional mandate of Article 14 as also "the judicially evolved rule of administrative law, the 1st respondent was not entitled to act arbitrarily in accepting the tender of the 4th respondents, ... The action of the 1st respondent in accepting the tender of the 4th respondents, even though they did not satisfy the prescribed condition of eligibility; was clearly discriminatory since it excluded other persons similarly situate from tendering for the contract and it was also arbitrary and without reason. The acceptance of the tender of the 4th respondents was, in the circumstances invalid as being violative of the equality clause of the Constitution as also of the rule of administrative law inhibiting arbitrary action."

In view of this position of law, it will be very difficult for the respondents to contend that the University authorities have not framed any rules for the admission and that consequently, the petitioners would not be able to urge that any of those rules were discriminatory. It would, therefore, be necessary to consider as to whether the action of the University authorities stands the test of equality.

12. There are two main contentions which are for our decision. We have already observed that on the basis of the representation of the University employees, the Director of the L. I. T., recommended the reservation of four seats for the 'Wards of the University employees' and the Vice-Chancellor under S. 11 (4) of the Nagpur University Act, 1974 has accepted that recommendation. * (It is in this manner that some of the respondents out of respondents Nos. 3, 6, 7 and 8 in writ petition No. 2706 of 1979 were admitted though they had lesser percentage of marks as compared to some of the petitioners. These respondents have respectively secured 70.6%, 74%, 75.3% & 82% of marks.) As against this, percentage of marks of the nine petitioners ranges from 71.66% to 78.33%. The argument on behalf of the petitioners is that the University as also the L. I. T. Committee which functions under the University Ordinance No. 26 were bound by the principles of equality and that while admitting students to the degree course, a discrimination on the basis of any irrational basis is not permissible. The principles of equality no doubt allow classification. However, it is now well settled that such classification is permissible only if the two conditions exist namely, in the first instance the classification must be based on intelligible differentia which distinguishes the class so formed from others left out of the class. Secondly, the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the rules or the procedure that is being followed. It was contended by Shri Holay that a class of 'Wards of the University employees' cannot stand these two tests and hence the reservation in favour of such 'Wards of the University employees' is not permissible. As to which classification is permissible will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The field in which the classification is to operate and the object for which the classification is made will have to be considered in order to find out as to whether such classification disturbs the equality of equal treatment to all. A question about a few types of classifications for admission to the medical and other colleges has arisen before the Supreme Court in a number of cases. It will not be out of place to briefly refer to those cases for the purpose of seeing the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in the respect. In the case of P. Rajendra v. State of Madras, reported in AIR 1968 SC 1012, there was a provision for districtwise allocation of seats in the medical college. Seats were allocated to various districts on the basis of ratio of the population of each district to the total population of the State. This type of reservation or allocation was held to be bad after considering the classification on the basis of the abovementioned two tests. We would like to reproduce the following observations in paragraph 11:

"The fact, however, that the classification by itself is reasonable is not enough to support it unless there is nexus between the classification and the object to be achieved. Therefore, as the object to be achieved in a case of the kind with which we are concerned is to get the best talent for admission to professional colleges, the allocation of seats districtwise has no reasonable relation with the object to be achieved. If anything, such allocation will result 'in many cases in the object being destroyed, and if that is so, the classification, even if reasonable, would result in discrimination, inasmuch as better qualified candidates from one district may be rejected while less qualified candidates from other districts may be admitted from either of the two sources."

13. An argument was advanced before the Supreme Court that the above mentioned classification was necessary as the educational facilities in Madras city were better as compared to other districts of the State and the students from Madras city would have an advantage over the students of other districts. This argument was repelled by the Supreme Court in the following words :

"Further even if we were to accept this contention that would only justify allocation of seats between the city of Madras on one side and the rest of the State on the other and not a districtwise allocation throughout."

14. It is true that the Universitywise reservation for admission to the Medical Colleges has been upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of D. N. Chanchala v. State of Mysore, reported in AIR 1971 SC 1762. In the facts and circumstances in that case, the Supreme Court held that the University classification was reasonable and had a nexus with the objects. There were three Universities in the State of Mysore namely, Mysore University, Bangalore University and Karnataka University and the rules for the admission to the Medical Colleges have provided distribution of seats on the basis of these Universities. The Supreme Court has held that the Government has laid down the criteria for admission to the Colleges and also decided the sources from which the admission should be made and that there was nothing arbitrary in this process. The Supreme Court has held as follows in paragraph 22:

"In our view, there is nothing undesirable in ensuring that those attached to such Universities have their ambitions to have training in specialised subjects, like medicine, satisfied through colleges affiliated to their own Universities. Such a basis for selection has not the disadvantage of districtwise or unitwise selection as any student from any part of the State can pass the qualifying examination in any of the three Universities irrespective of the place of his birth or residence.....".

In that very case there was also a question about the validity of reservation in favour of the wards of the political sufferers. That reservation was upheld in the following words :

"The object of the rules for admission can obviously be to secure a fair and equitable distribution of seats amongst those seeking admission and who are eligible under the University Regulations. Such distribution can be on the principle that admission should be available to the best and the most meritorious. But an equally fair and equitable principle would also be that which secures admission in a just proportion to this who are handicapped and who, but for the preferential treatment given to them, would not stand a chance against those who are not so handicapped and are, therefore, in a superior position. The principle underlying Article 15 (4) is that a preferential treatment can validly be given because the socially and educationally backward classes need it, so that in course of time they stand in equal position with the more advanced sections of the society. It would not in any way be improper if that principle were also to be applied to those who are handicapped but do not fall under Article 15 (4). It is on such a principle that reservation for children of Defence personnel and Ex-Defence personnel appears to have been upheld. The criteria for such reservation is that those serving in the Defence forces or those who had so served are and were at a disadvantage in giving education to their children since they had to live, while discharging their duties, in difficult places where normal facilities available elsewhere are and were not available. In our view it is not unreasonable to extend that principle to the children of political sufferers who in consequence of their participation in the emancipation struggle became unsettled in life....."

The reservation in favour of sons and daughters of the residents of Union territories and of the Central Government servants attached to Foreign Missions has been upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of Chitra Ghosh v. Union of India, reported in AIR 1970 SC 35. The relevant headnote reads as follows (at p. 38):

"The first group of persons for whom seats have been reserved are the sons and daughters of residents of Union territories other than Delhi. These areas are well known to be comparatively backward and with the exception of Himachal Pradesh they do not have any Medical College of their own. It was necessary that persons desirous of receiving medical education from these areas should be provided some facility for doing so. As regards the sons and daughters of Central Government servants posted in India Missions abroad it is equally well known that due to exigencies of their service these persons are faced with lot of difficulties in the matter of education. Apart from the problems of language, it is not easy or always possible to get admission into institutions imparting medical education in foreign countries..... The classification in all these cases is based on intelligible differentia which distinguished them from the group to which the petitioners belonged."

15. This Court in the case of Ram Gopal Mangilal v. Dean, Medical College, Nagpur, reported in ILR 1972 Bom 279, has upheld the reservations for the wards of the employees of the State Government and the Central Government. The relevant headnote reads as follows :

"These two categories stand differently from the rest and in view of the fact that the employees of the State Government are, by the terms of their service, required to go on transfer or on deputation to different places, a provision had to be made for the children and wards of such servants who, in the absence of such a provision, would suffer and their children and wards would be deprived of the facilities of further studies if such a provision was not made and they would so suffer not for their fault but because their parents and guardians are transferred from one place to another by the orders of the Government. Similar is the case with the Central Government servants and these two categories of persons could, therefore, be separately classified and such a classification cannot be said to be unreasonable or arbitrary."

It is thus clear that in the case of admissions in medical and other professional colleges there can be reservation in favour of a particular class. Shri Anthony for the University authorities contended that in this background a classification of 'Wards of the University employees' would be a reasonable classification and that it has a nexus with the relevant objects. He also relied upon the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Shiv Shankar v. State, reported in AIR 1971 Pat 374. There was a Residential School which was in remote corner of the State and the School had a sanctioned strength. A provision was made that the wards of the teachers in the school can be admitted as day-students. This admission would be over and above the sanctioned strength. The said provision was challenged. The challenge was rejected in the following words (at p. 377):

"Without affecting the accommodation of fixed number of seats in each class, and without incurring extra expenditure, Government extended certain facilities to school employees to attract efficient teachers for efficient running of the school which was in a remote corner where facilities for wards of employees even up to secondary standard were not available. It was not a case of increasing seats in school but it was a case of giving special facilities by way of service condition of the employees of school....."

In paragraph 12, it is observed as follows :

"To reserve seats in colleges for the University education and specially in technical lines cannot be equated with giving of facilities for school education to the children of the employees of the school."

It would thus be seen that the facts before the Patna High Court were different and distinguishable and in the peculiar circumstances it was held that there was nothing discriminatory.

16. Shri Holay relied upon another decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Umesh Chandra v. V. N. Singh, reported in AIR 1968 Pat 3 (FB). It was a case of admission to the medical college and under the Rules certain reservations were made in favour of the sons and daughters of the employees of the University receiving salary up to 100 rupees per month. This reservation was on the ground of extreme pecuniary difficulties even though they were not included in the merit list. Second provision was made for the sons and daughters of the employees rendering meritorious service to the University. The Full Bench of the Patna High Court has held that there was no rational nexus between this reservation on the one hand and the admission of the candidates to the medical college on the other. It was found that such a reservation constitutes a concession to the employees and it is discriminatory. The concession to the employees was a part of condition of service and such condition of service cannot have relevance while deciding the question of admission to the students to the medical college.

17. Shri Anthony drew our attention to certain provisions to the Nagpur University Act, 1974 for the purpose of contending that reservation in favour of the 'Wards of the University employees' has direct relevant bearing.

He relied on Ss. 4 and 75 which read as follows :

"4. Subject to such conditions as may be prescribed by or under the provisions of this Act, the University shall have the following powers and perform the following duties, that is to say,—

(30) make arrangement for promoting the health and general welfare of the employees of the University."

"75. The University shall make such provision for the "benefit of its officers, teachers and other employees in matters like insurance, pension and provident fund or other benefits, as it thinks fit, and in the manner and subject to the conditions, if any, prescribed by the Statutes."

The contention is that the University is under the obligation to look after the welfare of its employees and that reserving four seats for the degree course would be an action in the direction of the said welfare. It was contended that the welfare of the employees would be a good basis for differentiating them from other persons who are not employees. In our opinion, this contention cannot be accepted for two reasons. In the first place while deciding the admission of students to the degree course the object can be (1) imparting education, and (2) selection of appropriate students for the course. Secondly, the welfare of the employees cannot have any relevance while deciding this function of admitting the students to the various courses. It may be material to note that the running of courses and the admissions of students thereto would be the power and duty within the category of Sec. 4 (23) which reads as follows:

"4 (23) make the University the centre of social and economic transformation through education as envisaged in the preamble, directive principles and other provisions in the Constitution of India;"

It was rightly urged by Shri Deshpande for some of the petitioners that the object in running a college or other institution cannot be intermingled with the objects of certain provisions which are meant for the benefit of the employees. According to him, the University authorities would have full powers to make provisions for the benefit of its employees. However, those powers cannot form a basis for making a class (Wards of the University Employees) while admitting the students to the educational courses. While working in the field of running a college or an institution, the object would be to admit students in a fair and equitable manner as has been held by the Supreme Court in the case of D. N. Chanchala v. State of Mysore, reported in AIR 1971 SC 1762. It was rightly urged by Shri Deshpande that the University cannot introduce the idea of doing benefit to its employees while discharging its duty of running a college or any other institution. Thus the fact that the University wants to bestow some benefits to its employees in the shape of reservation of seats would be a foreign matter and it would not have any direct nexus in the objects of admission of the students to the University college.

18. Another important factor deserves to be considered. While making a classification there must be some peculiarities which distinguish that class from the rest. For example, the State and Central Government servants can be classified separately, because they are liable to transfer. The staff employed in the foreign Mission would be a separate class as such staff would be experiencing difficulties in the education of their children. Similarly, the wards of the political sufferers would be a different class as such wards on account of the activities of their parents (in the freedom fight) would not have the usual educational facilities which others will get. In the present case, there is no such intelligible differentia while classifying the University employees separately. There is no possibility of such employees being transferred from one place to another. Similarly, the University employees cannot be termed as those who could not arrange for the education of their children on account of any other peculiar difficulties. The 'Wards of the University employees' are thus at par with the Wards of any other employees. Not only that but they are also at par with wards of other persons such as petty traders, businessmen, artisans etc. In view of this discussion, it is clear that by creating four reservations in favour of the 'Wards of the University employees', the University has acted in a discriminatory manner and the principles of equality has not been followed. The discrimination can be seen from the fact that the four students of this category (who are respondents Nos. 3, 6, 7 and 8 in Writ Petition No. 2706/79) were admitted though on merit, they could not have been admitted. Their (except respondent No. 8)* percentage of marks was far below that of many of the petitioners before us.

19. Initially these seats were reserved for the repeaters i.e. those who have failed in the previous year and who would intend to prosecute their studies in the next year. Shri Anthony submitted that the four reservations in question have been carved out from this quota for repeaters and the students seeking admissions from the general quota cannot make any grievance. We do not think that reservation in favour of the 'Wards of the University employees' can be supported on this ground. If the reserved seats for repeaters are not filled in on account of the absence of such repeater students the unfilled number of seats would be available to the students seeking admission from the general quota. It is in this way that the petitioners are entitled to say that the reservation in question is bad. The result, therefore, is that the four reservations in favour of the 'Wards of the University employees' cannot be allowed to stand.

20. It was contended by Shri Deshpande for some of the respondents that the classification of 'Wards of the University employees' would not be permissible in view of the provisions of S. 7 of the Nagpur University Act, 1974. That section reads as follows:—

"7. (1) No person shall be excluded from any office of the University, or from membership of any of its authorities, bodies or committees or from admission to any degree, diploma, certificate or other academic distinction or course of study, on the ground only of sex, race, creed, class, place of birth, religious belief or profession, or political or other opinion."

*underlined portion substituted as per High Court order. See FNR p. 182 ed.

The contention is that the University has created a separate class of 'Wards of University employees' and that that class cannot be differently treated. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the scope of S. 7 of the Nagpur University Act, 1974 should not be interpreted in such a limited manner and the main crux of the matter would be as to whether the classification so made is reasonable one and whether it has a nexus with the objects to be achieved. It was also submitted that the petitioners would not be able to contend that S. 7 prohibits each and every classification for different treatment. However, we need not go into this aspect in details as in view of the above discussion, the classification made by the University is bad.

21. The second important question is as to whether the 'spot admission' effected on 6-9-1979 is in any way illegal or irregular. We have already observed that the last date for admission was initially fixed as 1st of July, 1979. It was later on postponed to 10-7-1979, 27-7-1979 and ultimately to 6-9-1979. The University authorities had issued a Press Note dated 4-9-1979 about this extension to 6-9-1979. We have reproduced that Press Note in paragraph 6 of the judgment. It is on that date that 26 students have been admitted to the degree course. The procedure that was followed for such admission was that a roll call was taken of the applicants who were present in the office and from amongst them, those students who had preferential merits were admitted. The learned advocates appearing on behalf of the petitioners have challenged the 'spot admission' on two grounds, it was contended that such admissions should not be permitted as it has a tendency of discriminating students not on account of merits but only due to the fact as to whether a particular student was or was not present in the office on 6-9-1979. Another contention is that the 'spot admission' if assumed to be permissible, has been effected in such an irregular manner that it is liable to be struck down. As against this, the respondents contended that the 'spot admission' is permissible and that there is nothing irregular in the process of admissions that took place on 6-9-1979.

22. Shri Anthony for the respondents contended that it is necessary that admissions are completed by the end of the last date of admissions and that this could be done only if the procedure that has been adopted by the University authorities is allowed. In our opinion, there would not be any illegality in the 'spot admission' as such. However, the important aspect is as to whether this 'spot admission' suffers from such type of irregular procedure that there is an obvious discrimination as alleged by the petitioners. After hearing the learned advocates on behalf of both the sides, we think that there was such an irregularity.

23. That all the remaining admissions will be effected on the last date of admissions has not been previously published or notified either in the prospectus or in any other manner. The Press Note mentioned in paragraph 6 of the judgment has simply stated that permission shall not be granted for admission of students after 6th of Sept., 1979. This is a general Press Note issued by the University for all types of admissions to various courses and colleges. It nowhere states that on 6th of Sept., 1979, the vacant seats would be filled in and that the students desirous of seeking admissions in these vacant seats should remain present in the office. There is also no publication that the admissions will be completed from amongst the students so present in the office on 6-9-1979. At one stage of the arguments, it was faintly suggested that an individual notice to each of the applicants that the admissions will be completed on 6-9-1979 from amongst the students who were present in the office was necessary. But we think that such an individual notice would not be necessary if in the prospectus and the application form this fact has been properly published and at any rate if a wide publication was given in due course of this procedure. The necessary publication in the prospectus should convey to all the applicants as to how the vacant seats would be filled in on the last date. Even the Press Note dated 4-9-1979 has not been published by the University in the newspapers. It is true that the said Press Note has been sent to the newspapers with a request that the contents of the Press Note should be included in the news item. There would, thus be a discretion to the Editors as to whether the publication should be given or not. Our attention is drawn to the fact that some of the students are from Bhusawal. It will be very difficult to hold that these students could receive the intimation that the last date of admission was 6th of Sept. 1979. Apart from that even that type of intimation would be insufficient as the Press Note did not say that on 6-9-1979 the vacant seats will be filled in on merits from amongst those students who will be present in the office on that date. It will not be for us to lay down the procedure that is to be adopted by the University authorities for effecting admissions on the last date. However, the petitioners are right when they contend that the type of procedure that has been followed in the present case is highly irregular and has caused discrimination and prejudice to the petitioners. During the arguments of these petitions, the respondents have produced a list of the candidates who have been admitted to the degree course. The percentage of marks obtained by each of them is mentioned against their names and in the remarks column, there is also a statement that the particular student is admitted in the 'Reserved Seat' or in the 'General Seats'. A scrutiny of admissions with the help of this list would reveal a position which cannot be ignored. For example, the petitioners in Writ Petitions Nos. 2714/79, 2715/79, 2730/79 and 2761 of 1979 had secured 77%, 77%, 77.66 per cent and 78.33 per cent marks respectively. But the list of the admissions shows that the admitted candidate at serial Nos. 107 and 112 had only secured 75.66 per cent marks. The petitioners in Writ Petitions Nos. 2714/79 and 2715/79 have alleged that by chance they were actually present in the office on 6-9-1979 and even then they have not been admitted. Of course the respondents University authorities have denied this allegation. Even if we left out of consideration the question as to whether these two petitioners were present or not, the position is that they along with the other petitioners could not remain present as obviously the University authorities have not given a proper publication that on the last date of admission the vacant seats cannot (can?) be filled in on merits from amongst those students who would be present in the office on that date. Sarvat Javed who is the petitioner in Writ Petition No. 2716/79 has contended that he belonged to Julaha community which is declared as 'other backward community'. He has secured 75.66% of marks but he was not selected on 6-9-1979. Instead, the selected candidate at serial No. 113 one S. S. Gupta (who is O.B.C.) was selected when he had secured only 75.60% marks. It may be noted that at the time of the arguments of these petitions, the original form of Sarvat Javed was shown to us and it does state that he was seeking selection as a candidate belonging to 'other backward community', but he was not selected. It is true that the contention of the University authorities is that Sarvat Javed was not present on 6-9-1979 and hence he was not admitted. But the absence of this petitioner as also the other petitioners will have to be considered in the background of the fact that the concerned authorities have not at all properly published the necessity of the presence of the students for seeking 'spot admission' in the seats that were vacant on 6-9-1979.

24. In view of the above discussion, we are satisfied that though the 'spot admission' is permissible in a given state of circumstances, still the principles to be adopted in such admissions should be equitable so as not to cause undue discrimination. In the present case the students who by chance remained present on 6-9-1979 were given favourable discriminatory treatment as against the students who could not even imagine that such presence was necessary for seeking 'spot admission'. It is for this reason that the 'spot admission' that has been effected on 6-9-1979 is found by us to be discriminatory. As stated above, it will be for the respondents University authorities to decide as to how the due and wide publication should be given that on the last date of admissions vacant seats would be filled in from amongst those students who would be present on that date. One of the suggestions of the petitioners is that the prospectus as also the application form should contain such a statement.

We are sure that the concerned authority will evolve a good and proper procedure for effecting admissions on the last date of admissions so as not to cause any injustice of discrimination amongst the students. The result is that the petitioners have a just grievance that their claim for admission was not properly considered even on the last date of admission i.e. on 6-9-1979.

25. One more important contention deserves to be considered at this stage. As per the prospectus, 3 seats were reserved for 'Kashmir'. On the first day of admission i.e. on 20-8-1979, the students at serial Nos. 31 and 32 were selected. In addition, two more students at serial Nos. 93 and 94 were admitted as from Kashmir. These students have obtained 57.11% and 52.60% marks. The contention of the petitioners is that the question of reservation could not exist at the time of 'spot admission' and that the seats from the reserved quota would go to general quota if the applicants for that reserved quota do not appear at the time of the initial admissions. This will be a too broad proposition to be accepted inasmuch as there would not be any impropriety if even at the stage of 'spot admission' the principle of reservation has been followed. But the University authorities have admitted four students of Kashmir when the quota was three. Thus the student at serial No. 94 who has secured only 52.60% marks has been wrongly admitted. This wrong admission has a very important bearing particularly when it can be seen that each and every petitioner before us has secured marks more than 52.60 per cent. The net result is that the students who had secured a lesser percentage of marks have been improperly admitted.

26. The select list shows that a number of students have been admitted as Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes etc. in the reserved quota. It was contended that the prospectus does not indicate that there were any reservations for these categories. However, the application form does contain a column which requires the applicant to show whether he belongs to Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes and Nomadic Tribes etc. Not only that, a certificate to that effect is required to be produced. In addition, on page 1 of the application form there is a blank rectangle at the right hand top corner and the above-mentioned caste or tribe has to be written in that rectangular column if he belongs to any such caste or tribe. In the background of this procedure, the petitioners cannot make a grievance that there was no specific mention about these reservations in the prospectus. At the same time, it would be advisable that the prospectus contains the fact about these reservations.

27. There are certain other contentions that have been urged before us at the time of the arguments. For example the select list shows that on 20-8-1979, 23 students from old Madhya Pradesh were admitted from out of 82 students admitted on that date. The original reservation for old Madhya Pradesh is 14. The University authorities have not produced any data to show as to how the number of seats from old Madhya Pradesh has been increased from 14 to 23 after the increase of the total number from 60 to 82 up to 20-8-1979. In Writ Petition No. 2716/79, an allegation was made that two students, V. N. Deshpande and S. L. Pandharipande were admitted on 6-9-1979 though they were not physically present. The return of the University authorities alleges that such physical presence was absolutely essential. It was also submitted before us that two students who belonged to Pune University have been admitted on a wrong basis though they were from Shivaji University. It was further submitted that the selected students at serial Nos. 11, 19 and 24 belonged to 'Maharashtra including Vidarbha', still they were admitted on the basis that they are from old Madhya Pradesh. With respect to this contention it was submitted on behalf of the respondents that these students have produced a domicile certificate that they are from old Madhya Pradesh and as such there is no irregularity. We have already discussed that the four seats were reserved for the 'Wards of the University Employees'. The proposal of the Director of the Institute was approved by the Vice-Chancellor by exercising his powers under S. 11 (4) of the University Act, 1974. That section provides that in case of emergency the Vice-Chancellor can take any decision which any other authority is empowered to take. The decision so taken ultimately goes to the concerned authority for acceptance. The argument of the petitioners is that there was no emergency which required any immediate or urgent action and that the representation of the University employees could have been decided by the concerned authorities in due course. The contentions enumerated in this paragraph, however, need not be gone into in details as the petitioners are entitled to succeed even on the rest of the points which have been discussed and considered by us in this judgment.

28. The net analysis is that the four seats have been improperly admitted as the 'Wards of the University employees', though they have secured lesser percentage of marks as compared with the petitioners. One student at serial No. 94 was admitted in the category of 'Kashmir', though he had less percentage of marks as compared with that of the petitioners. In the process of 'spot admission' certain students who have less percentage of marks as compared to the petitioners in Writ Petitions Nos. 2714/79, 2715/79, 2730/79 and 2761/79 have been admitted. In substance, here is a case where there are at least some instances where the students securing percentage of marks less than each and every petitioner had been wrongly admitted. With this position, it will be necessary to consider as to what just and equitable order should be passed in these petitions.

29. The respondents have contended that the petitions would be bad for non-joinder of parties. Some of the students who are alleged to have been wrongly admitted, are not made parties. This aspect, however, need not detain us as we propose to make it clear that though some of the students have been improperly admitted, still they have completed their studies for one year. In these peculiar circumstances we do not think that their admissions should be cancelled. As far as the petitioners are concerned they have secured more percentage of marks than at least some of the admitted candidates. It is true that the petitioners had initially applied for admission to the degree course which was to begin in July/August 1979. One year of that course is already over. These petitions could not be heard expeditiously and hence this position occurred. The petitioners cannot be said to be at fault. The petitioners have made an alternative prayer that they should be admitted for the course beginning in 1980-81 and in the peculiar circumstances of this case, we think that as the petitioners have lost one year for no fault of them a just order should be passed that the petitioners should be admitted to the degree course beginning in the year 1980-81 if they had preferential claim over the others who were admitted in 1979-80. If improper admissions would not have been made, some of the petitioners might have been admitted. It is not disputed that with the findings that have been recorded by us, the petitioners would have a preferential claim at least over some of the students, admitted in the last year. In usual course, we would have issued a writ or direction that the petitioners' claim should be considered after omitting those admissions which appear to be improper or irregular. In this process some of the petitioners who have preferential claim amongst themselves would get relief by granting admissions in place of those wrongly admitted. Of course as observed above none of the wrongly admitted students should be ordered to discontinue their studies. We may add that during the course of the arguments Shri Sanyal has made a statement that required number of seats will be kept vacant this year or additional seats will be created for this year if the petitioners succeed in the petitions and if the Court would pass any order in favour of the petitioners. In the peculiar circumstances of the case, it would be in the interest of justice that instead of only some petitioners getting admissions depending upon inter se merits, a provision is made for admitting all the petitioners.

30. The result is that the petitions succeed. Rule is made absolute in each of these petitions. The University authorities including the Director of the L. I. T. Institute are directed to admit each of these petitioners to the degree course beginning from the curricular year 1980-81, if necessary, by creating additional seats for the petitioners. Parties to bear their own costs in these petitions.

Rule made absolute.

(A) Khoti Settlement Act (1 of 1880), Section 9 — Transfer of property by occupancy tenant without consent of Khot
— No plea that transferor was occupancy tenant taken and no evidence also in that regard. Held, Section 9 did not apply. (Para 13)

(B) Khoti Settlement Act (1 of 1880), Sections 9 and 6 — Transfer of property by occupancy tenant without Khot's consent — Effect.

Section 6 of Khoti Settlement Act unequivocally provides that if an occupancy right which is not transferable otherwise than by inheritance, has been so transferred, the actual holder of the land shall be deemed to be the tenant thereof, and if he, or his father, or other person from whom he inherits, has occupied or cultivated the land continuously from any particular time provided by that section, he shall have a right of occupancy therein. The words employed by Section 6 are 'actual holder' and the moment the occupancy-tenant transfers the land with possession, the transferee is the actual landlord and not the transferor. If the transfer is without consent of Khot, the only consequence would be that the transferee would become ordinary tenant.
The further legal consequence would be though an occupancy tenant could not have been removed by the Khot, the Khot would be at liberty to remove the ordinary tenant. AIR 1938 Bom 284 Rel.

transferee acquired such occupancy right.

JUDGMENT:— This Second Appeal has got to be allowed on the narrowest possible ground that the decrees passed by the trial Court and confirmed by the lower Appellate Court have been passed without reference to the relevant legal provisions.

2. The facts of the case are as follows:—

It is unnecessary to set out the numbers of the suit lands. The suit lands are eight in number. Land Serial Nos. 1 to 6 and 8 form one parcel of land and land Serial No. 7 forms the second parcel of the land. For the sake of convenience, I will refer the said lands as the lands of first parcel and the lands of second parcel. So far as the lands of the first parcel are concerned, there is no dispute that initially, that is to say, in and before the year 1922, those lands belonged to one Godabai. It is the contention of the present respondents, who were the original defendants Nos. 1 to 8, that Godabai gave those lands to them for vahivat and they had been in vahivat of the same since that year. On 12-1-1928
Godabai executed a gift-deed in respect of the said lands of the first parcel in favour of one Laxman.

Godabai's daughter's name was Aubai and Laxman was the husband of said Aubai, that is to say, the son-in-law of Godabai. Contention of defendants Nos. 1 to 8 is that the said gift-deed is hit by the provisions of the Khoti Settlement Act, 1880. The crux of the question is as to whether this contention has any substance at all.

3. To continue the chronology of events, Godabai died some time in the year 1936. At about the same time, the father of the plaintiff, who is the appellant before me, came to reside in the village in which the lands are situate. I am stating this position because there is no dispute about these facts.

Laxman died some time before 1958.
On 2-1-1948 Aubai executed the sale-deed, Ex. 75, in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the suit lands, parcel No. 1.
The sale-deed purported to have been executed by her as the guardian of her sons. It is, however, common ground in these proceedings:

(a) that she had another step son, that is to say, the son of Laxman from another wife,

(b) that all her sons, including the step son, were major on the date of the sale-deed; and

(c) that the sale-deed did not purport to have been executed by her on behalf of herself as also on behalf of the step son in favour of the plaintiff and defendant No. 9.

It would be inarguable that if the sale-deed, Ex. 75, stood all by itself, it could convey no title whatsoever to the vendees, that is to say, to the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 and the present suit filed by the plaintiff would be devoid of any substance or basis in title. However, as will be presently pointed out, on 25th June, 1971 a document styled as a release-deed was executed by all these sons of Aubai including her step son as well as by herself releasing all their right, title and interest in the suit land parcel No. 1. One of the main questions arising in this appeal is the legal effect of this document. Contention raised by Mr. Abhyankar is that this really amounts to a deed of ratification. I have to examine the correctness of this contention.

4. To revert back to the chronology of events, I may refer to the transaction relating to the suit lands parcel No. 2. The plaintiff contended that he and defendant No. 9 had purchased the said land Parcel No. 2 from one Savitribai, who, according to the plaintiff, was the owner of the lands on that date. The sale-deed is at Ex. 76. The validity of this sale-deed is also challenged by the defendants on the ground that the same is hit by the provisions of the Khoti Settlement Act. I shall have to examine the correctness of the defendants' contention in this behalf.

The plaintiff contends that after the sale-deed he and defendant No. 9 in whose favour both the sale-deeds were executed by the vendors remained in possession of the suit lands. His grievance is that on 5-7-1966 Defendants Nos. 1 to 8, who are respondents Nos. 1 to 8 before me, obstructed the possession of the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 in respect of all the suit lands and hence the present suit, out of which the present appeal arises, was filed by the plaintiff against the defendants for a declaration that the suit properties were of the ownership of himself and defendant No. 9 and also for injunction restraining defendants Nos. 1 to 8 from interfering with their possession of the suit lands.

5. Defendants Nos. 2 to 8 are the sons of defendant No. 1. It may be mentioned that defendants Nos. 2 to 8 remained absent and were, hence, proceeded ex parte. But that fact is really of no consequence because the suit has been defended by defendant No. 1 quite stoutly. His contentions by way of defences were as follows:—

His first contention was that even before the year 1922 Godabai had given the suit lands, parcel No. 1, to defendant No. 1 for his exclusive vahivat. He contended that he was in adverse possession of the the said lands parcel No. 1 till the year 1950 and that he had become owner of the same by adverse possession after the death of Godabai. Secondly he contended that the two sale-deeds executed by the vendors in question in favour of plaintiff No. 1 and defendant No. 9 were void, bad and illegal having regard to the provisions of the Khoti Settlement Act. As a matter of fact it was also contended that even the gift-deed executed by Godabai in the year 1928 had been executed in contravention of the provisions of the said Khoti Settlement Act, in that the consent of the Khot in question was not taken by Godabai for the purpose of gift-deed. The title of plaintiff and defendant No. 9 relating to the land parcel No. 1 was also challenged by the defendants on the ground that the sale-deed purporting to have been executed by Aubai as guardian of her sons, when the sons had already become major on that date was void and of no legal consequence. However, it may be stated that it was the defendants' further contention that the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 on the one hand were defendants Nos. 1 to 8 on the other were jointly cultivating all the suit lands. It will be thus clear that the contesting defendants have not pleaded their adverse possession against the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 as such. No doubt they have contended that defendant No. 1 had been in adverse possession of the suit lands from the year 1922 and that he had become owner of the same by adverse possession after the death of Godabai; but adverse possession against the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 as such was not claimed by defendants Nos. 1 to 8, and as a matter of fact it was specifically stated in the written statement itself that from the year 1950 plaintiff and defendant No. 9 on the one hand and defendant Nos. 1 to 8 on the other had been in joint possession of all the lands ever till the date of the suit.

6. On these pleadings issues were framed and parties went to trial.

After examining the evidence, the learned trial Judge held that plaintiff and defendant No. 9 had not proved their exclusive title to the suit lands nor had they proved their possession of the same. Likewise the plaintiff's contention that defendants Nos. 1 to 8 had taken forcible possession of 20 Gunthas out of the suit land S. No. 8 was negatived by the learned Judge. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that the plaintiff had only a joint title to the suit lands along with defendants Nos. 1 to 8. In para 17 of his judgment he observed that the plaintiff could not be given any relief in the suit and expressed an opinion that it would be better if the plaintiff filed a suit for partition. The learned Judge further observed as follows:

"If defendant No. 1 had cared to place on record the relevant documents from the Survey Deptt. for the period prior to 1956 there would not have been such a mess of the evidence."

He further observed that the defendants do not deserve any sympathy. Though, therefore, he dismissed the suit of the plaintiff holding that the suit for possession on exclusive title was not maintainable, he refused to pass any order of costs in favour of the contesting defendants. The said decree of the trial Court is dated 24-11-1969.

7. The plaintiff filed an appeal to the District Court. The judgment of the District Court is not produced before me but it is common ground, and this fact is evident from the judgment of the trial Court itself, that the decree passed by the trial Court was set aside by the appellate Judge and the entire suit was remanded to the trial Court for disposal according to law.

8. It is after this order of remand that the above mentioned 'release-deed' Ex. 146 dated 25-6-1971, was executed by all the major sons of Godabai including her step son as also by herself stating that Aubai had executed the sale-deed, Ex. 76 on behalf of herself as well as of her sons including her step son, that, inadvertently, the fact that she had executed the sale-deed on her own behalf as well as on behalf of the step son was not mentioned in the sale-deed and that, hence, they were executing the document releasing all their right, title and interest in the suit lands with effect from the date of the sale-deed Ex. 76, itself. As will be presently pointed out, it is Mr. Abhyankar's contention that this document which is styled as a release deed can be really construed as a ratification-deed and the same has the effect of validating the sale-deed, Ex. 75, with retrospective effect. I have to examine the correctness of this contention as well.

9. After the suit was so remanded to the trial Court this document, viz. release-deed Ex. 146, was produced by the plaintiff before the Court in evidence and it was relied upon by the plaintiff as a document completing his title. The learned Judge however, took the view that Godabai herself had no title to the suit lands in view of the fact that the gift-deed executed by Godabai in favour of Laxman was hit by the provisions of S. 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that Aubai could claim her title only through her husband Laxman, who in his turn claimed title on the basis of the gift-deed, Ex. 66. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that since the gift-deed itself was hit by S. 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act neither Laxman nor his wife Aubai could claim right, title and interest in the suit lands, parcel No. 1, which were the subject matter of the said gift-deed. When the release-deed Ex. 146, was relied upon by the plaintiff as completing his title the learned Judge observed that it was not necessary to consider the effect of the said document in view of the fact that neither Aubai nor any of her sons had any title to execute Ex. 75, in favour of the plaintiff and defendant No. 9.

It may be mentioned here that issue No. 5 raised by the learned Judge, after remand related to the plea of adverse possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 8. The issue ran as follows:

"Whether defendant No. 1 has proved that he had become owner of the suit lands or the share proved by the Plaintiff and defendant No. 9 to be of their ownership by adverse possession?"

This issue was, however, not pressed before the learned Judge on behalf of the contesting defendants. In this connection the learned Judge observed in para 11 of judgment as follows:

"This issue has not been pressed by the Advocate for the defendants. This issue was framed in Appeal No. 3 of 1970, by the District Court and hence it was considered. Shri Padhye submitted that defendants were claiming adverse possession as against Godabai and Aubai and therefore this issue need not be considered. Hence this issue does not survive."

The learned Judge also appears to have taken the view that not only the sale-deed Ex. 75 executed by Aubai in favour of the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 was hit by S. 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act but even the sale-deed Ex. 76 executed by Savitribai in their favour was hit by the self-same provisions. Taking this view of the matter, the learned Judge held that the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 had failed to prove their title to the suit lands and hence the suit filed by the plaintiff was dismissed by the trial Judge with no order as to costs.

10. In appeal the view taken by the learned Assistant Judge is of a somewhat bewildering character. The learned Judge seems to have negatived the plea of the contesting defendants relating to the effect of the Khoti Settlement Act on the basis of the amendment effected to the Khoti Settlement Act by Bombay Act No. 29 of 1939 as well as by subsequent amending Acts, Bombay Act No. 27 of 1942 as well as Bombay Act No. 26 of 1946. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that S. 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act as it stood in the year 1928 no doubt rendered the gift-deed Ex. 66 bad in law because the gift was not executed by Godabai in favour of Laxman with the consent of the Khot. The learned Judge, however, took the view that this requirement of the consent of the Khot was done away with by the subsequent amending Act of the year 1939. According to the learned Judge the amendment related back to the date when the original Khoti Settlement Act came into force in the year 1880. In other words, according to the learned Judge, the Khot's consent which was obviated in the year 1939 must be deemed to have been so obviated at all times including in the year 1928 when the gift-deed Ex. 66 was executed by Godabai in favour of Laxman. According to the learned Judge, therefore, the gift-deed must be deemed to have been validated by virtue of the said amending Act with retrospective effect.

11. However, the learned Judge was of the view that the sale-deed, Ex. 75, which was executed by Aubai not on her own behalf but as a guardian of her sons who were already major on the date of the sale-deed, was of no legal consequence. The release-deed, Ex. 146, was relied upon on behalf of the appellants and it was contended that whatever the defect in the original sale-deed Ex. 75, may be, the same must be deemed to have been removed or corrected by virtue of the said release-deed Ex. 146. The plaintiff's contention in this behalf was, however, negatived by the learned Judge holding that the document, Ex. 146, could not have any retrospective effect. Somewhat interesting observations were made by the learned Judge in this connection as follows:

"A belated attempt after remand is made to get a release-deed at Ex. 146 and it is sought to be made out on the basis of the release-deed at Ex. 146 that the original document became valid right from the beginning. I, however do not see any foundation for any such proposition. It is not retrospective legislation whereby a subsequent document would validate the first void document. Therefore, it must be said that when the first document was executed there was no authority in the mother, the sons already having attained majority, to execute the sale-deed on their behalf. Therefore, this sale-deed must be held to be void. Any attempt to make the sale-deed valid as long after as in 1971 after remand vide Ex. 146 is of little avail. At best the document styled release-deed at Ex. 146 would mean that on 25th June, 1971 for the first time the sons ratified the action of their mother. It cannot, however, relate back to the original transaction, It would mean that in year 1971 these sons transferred the land which is not going to help the case of the plaintiff in any manner. They have to prove their title as well as the possession ab initio. Therefore, it would appear that the title-deed Ex. 75 is not going to advance the case of the plaintiff in any manner." With this reasoning the learned Judge negated the plaintiff's plea based upon the said document, Ex. 146.

It may be mentioned here that the learned Judge has made observations in his judgment to the effect that the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 had failed to prove their possession of the suit lands. The learned Judge's finding, however, in this behalf is somewhat intriguing in view of the fact that the plaintiff's joint possession of the suit land was not only admitted but in fact asserted by the contesting defendants themselves. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that the plaintiff was in Bombay at all the relevant times and hence he could not be in possession of the suit land.

Moreover, I do not find from his judgment that he has applied his mind to the right of the plaintiff relating to the land parcel No. 2. So far as the sale-deed Ex. 76 conveying the said land was concerned, the title based upon the sale-deed could not be found fault with by the learned Judge. The trial Court had no doubt found that the sale-deed Ex. 76 was bad because, it was, according to the trial Judge, hit by the provision of Section 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act, but the contention relating to the said bar of the Khoti Settlement Act. was specifically negated by the learned Judge. So far as the said sale-deed, Ex. 76, was concerned it was negated because it was executed by Savitribai on behalf of the major sons. No doubt the contesting defendants had contended in their written statement that Savitribai had no title to the said land. But even this question has not been considered by the learned Judge at all. It appears that, according to the learned Judge, his decision relating to the validity of the sale-deed, Ex. 76, would have equal application to the validity of sale-deed Ex. 76, and it is with such reasoning that the learned Judge thought that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title to the suit lands, parcels Nos. 1 and 2. The appeal filed by the plaintiff was, therefore, dismissed by the learned Judge with costs.

12. In this Second Appeal the question that arises for decision may be formulated as follows:—

The first question is as to what is the effect of the provisions of Section 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act. The second question is as to whether the sale-deeds, Exs. 75 and 76, are bad on account of any other reason. I may state here that if the legal position in this behalf is found against the plaintiff-appellant, nothing could be said in his favour and the appeal shall have to be dismissed. But the opposite position is equally true. If it is found that the view taken by the Courts below relating to the plaintiff's title is correct, it would follow, in the context of the facts and pleadings in the instant case, that the plaintiff's suit shall have to be decreed. I will refer to this legal position after I have discussed the legal position relating to the validity of the sale-deeds, Exs. 75 and 76.

13. As regards the challenge to the plaintiff's title based upon the provisions of the Khoti Settlement Act is concerned, to my mind, the view taken by both the Courts below is so patently erroneous that it smacks of lack of application of mind by the learned Judge to the provisions of the relevant statute with which the Court was concerned, the learned trial Judge seems to have taken the view that Section 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act stands all by itself. Section 9 of the said Act no doubt provides that the occupancy-tenants' right shall be heritable, but shall not be otherwise transferable without the consent of the Khot, except in certain given circumstances. I may state here that the said given circumstances do not obtain in the present case at all and it can be taken for granted that according to Section 9 Godabai, if she was an occupancy-tenant, could not have transferred occupancy tenancy, as such of the suit lands parcel No. 1 to her son-in-law, if she had not taken the Khot's consent. But the points in the instant case, which points are missed by both the Courts below by miles, are that in the first place the defendants have not come forth to the Court with the plea that Godabai was an occupancy-tenant. The first para of Section 9 of the said Act is as follows:

"9. The rights of Khots, dharekaris and quasi dharekaris shall be heritable and transferable."

Not a word has been whispered by any of the contesting defendants either in the written statement or even in the evidence that Godabai was an occupancy-tenant and not a Dharekari or quasi-dharekari. I do not mean to state at all that it is proved by the plaintiff that Godabai was a Dharekari or a quasi-dharekari. The point is that there is no pleading either one way or the other on that question as regards the status of Godabai. Nobody contends that she was or was not a Dharekari or an Occupancy-tenant. In that view of the matter, in first place the prohibitive effect of Section 9 of the said Act does not come into play at all.

Even assuming, however, that Godabai was an occupancy-tenant, what is the effect of transfer made by her? Has the transfer become void and illegal. A casual perusal of Section 6 of the said Act is enough to dispel the view taken by the Courts below in this behalf. The said Section 6 unequivocally provides that if an occupancy right which is not transferable otherwise than by inheritance, has been so transferred, the actual holder of the land shall be deemed to be the tenant thereof, and if he, or his father, or other person from whom he inherits, has occupied or cultivated the land continuously from any particular time provided by that section, he shall have a right of occupancy therein.

The learned Judge has, therefore, to see whether the transferee viz. Laxman, had continued to occupy the suit lands parcel No. 1 continuously from the year 1928 or not. It does not appear from anything in the judgment, of either Courts that they were alive to this legal position. Both the Courts have proceeded upon the basis that if there is any embargo upon the transfer, the transfer becomes illegal. What the Courts lost sight of is that if a consequence is provided in connection with the embargo, no other consequence can be inferred. In the first instance, the only consequence would be that Laxman would become an ordinary tenant. The further legal consequence would be though an occupancy-tenant could not have been removed by the Khot, the khot would be at liberty to remove an ordinary tenant. This means that the khot could have filed a suit against Laxman for recovery of the said land parcel No. 1 and to such a suit Laxman probably would have no defence. But the result is not that Laxman's title to the suit lands even as ordinary tenant was non est.

Mr. Phadkar contended that the person who became an ordinary tenant upon the transfer was not transferee but the transferor. To my mind the contention is wholly devoid of any basis. The words employed by Section 6 are 'actual holder' and the moment the occupancy-tenant transfers the land with possession, the transferee is the actual landlord and not transferor. Moreover the entire tenor of the section militates against any such construction as is suggested by him. In this connection Mr. Abhyankar relied upon a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Ramkrishna v. Bapurao, 40 Bom LR 390 : (AIR 1938 Bom 284). The following observation made by the District Judge, which has been approved by this Court is enough to reinforce the above view:

"The khot could not forfeit the occupancy right and resume the land, because Section 10 did not provide any penalty for the transfer. This position was exhaustively reviewed by Batty, J. in Yesa v. Sakhamam ((1905) 7 Bom LR 941). The result of the review was briefly this. The transferee became an annual tenant of the khot, the transferor continued to be a holder of the occupancy right, the khot could not call in the land and evict the transferor in occupation until the occupancy right determined, and after such determination the khot could evict the transferee by putting an end to his annual tenancy after giving him a notice to quit, under Sec. 84 of the Land Revenue Code."

In this view of the matter, it is futile to contend that the gift-deed executed by Godabai in favour of Laxman was invalid.

14. However, the question does not rest there. Admittedly the legal position was changed by virtue of the amending Act of the year 1939 and the requirement of khot's consent was wholly obviated thereafter. As a matter of fact, relying upon this amendment the learned Assistant Judge has held that the provisions of Section 9 of the said Act do not operate as a bar to the gift-deed. It is not necessary for me to consider the correctness of the reasoning of the learned Judge in that behalf. If it is correct, no fault could be found with Aubai's title at all. But I assume that the reasoning is not correct. The fact, however, remains that if the gift-deed, Ex. 66, was not valid on account of any embargo contained in Section 9 of the said Act, the result would be that the document Ex. 66 would be of no legal consequence. It would be a document just non est. If that was the position, the title of Godabai would continue. Admittedly Aubai was the daughter of Godabai and upon the death of Godabai, Aubai would be her heir. If this is the position, then she was perfectly at liberty to execute the sale-deed Ex. 75 in favour of the plaintiff and defendant No. 9.

Mr. Phadkar, however, contended that it was not open for me to take this view because there has been no pleading on this point. Contention is that the plaintiff had not claimed the title of Aubai by inheritance, and hence, it is not open for me to hold her sale-deed to be valid on the ground that she got the title by inheritance from her mother. To my mind this contention is without any substance. If the plaintiff had not pleaded that Aubai was the heir of Godabai, likewise he has not pleaded any other manner in which Aubai got title to the suit land. The fact that Godabai gifted the lands to Laxman, that Laxman died leaving behind his widow and sons as his heir are all facts which have come in evidence. All that the plaintiff has stated in the plaint is that Aubai executed a sale-deed. It is no doubt found that she had executed a sale-deed not on her own behalf but on behalf of her sons. I have to examine the effect of this position. But from that it cannot be said that want of pleading is an impediment in the way of the plaintiff. Moreover what is required to be pleaded, as per our system of precedural jurisprudence is the fact, not law. To my mind by virtue of what position of law the plaintiff got the title need not have been pleaded. The facts in this behalf are wholly undisputed. In this view of the matter, it cannot be held that Aubai had no title to execute the sale-deed, Ex. 75, in favour of plaintiff and defendant No. 9.

15. What remains to be considered is the effect of release-deed, Ex. 146. The trial Court has found it unnecessary to apply its mind to the same, because, according to it, the provisions of the said Act rendered the sale-deed Ex. 75 invalid. The learned Assistant Judge has taken the view that the document, Ex. 146 could not have retrospective effect. His view is that the document is not legislation. According to him, only a legislation can have retrospective effect and not document. The reasoning no doubt is somewhat humorous, but devoid of legal substance. I fail to see why a document cannot be given a retrospective effect. Mr. Phadkar contended that this document was invalid because it was, in his words, a tailored document. He did not expound this contention. To my question, whether there was any law against tailoring a document his only answer was he did not use the word in literary sense meaning thereby that I understood it in a literary sense. But beyond advancing this cryptic argument, 'take it or leave it' was his attitude. Whatever that may be, I would like to say a few words regarding the legal position in this behalf. The document, Ex. 146, is no doubt executed during the pendency of the litigation. I take it that the document either constituted a document of transfer by itself or it may constitute a deed of ratification, as contended by Mr. Abhyankar. To my mind either way, there is nothing objectionable about this document. If the document was to be regarded as a transfer or a document of fresh transfer, it would be bad only if it was hit by the doctrine of lis pendens. Such a plea is not raised. In this connection it is to be noted that if it was a defence plea in the present case that before or during the pendency of the litigation the defendants had perfected their title to the said lands by adverse possession or otherwise, it could perhaps be argued that the document which was brought into effect during the pendency of the litigation after the title had already passed to defendants Nos. 1 to 8 was hit by the doctrine of lis pendens. But it is not the case of the contesting defendants that they were ever in adverse possession against defendant No. 9 and the plaintiff as such. In fact it has been asserted in the written statement, and with added vigour before me by Mr. Phadkar, that the contesting defendants never wished and did not wish to plead adverse possession against the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 and they have specifically admitted their 1/2 possession of the suit lands. They pleaded adverse possession against Godabai and Aubai; but that plea also was not pressed and was specifically given up. If this is the position it can never lie in their mouth to say that they had perfected their title by adverse possession so far as the suit lands are concerned. By no stretch of imagination the provisions of S. 52 of the T. P. Act can be said to apply and if those provisions do not apply, it is difficult to see on what ground the document, Ex. 146, even if it is taken as a fresh transfer, can be found bad.

But to my mind the document can, in reality, be construed as a ratification deed. The executants in respect of the said document, Ex. 146, have stated in unison that the sale-deed, Ex. 75, was in fact executed by Aubai on their behalf. They have stated that certain technical objections had been raised in regard to the validity of the sale-deed on account of the fact that they had become major on the date of the sale-deed. It is clear that the document, though styled as release-deed, has been executed by them with the sole purpose of owning whatever had been done by Aubai by the sale-deed. The document states that the previous sale-deed was executed by Aubai on behalf of them all. She was acting as the agent of all. If she had no previous authority from them for doing so, all of them could come forth subsequently and own the transaction to be their own, meaning thereby—ratify the same. In these circumstances it is difficult to see why the said document cannot be construed as a deed of ratification. The technical defects that were found by the plaintiff in their way were sought to be removed by another way. In this view of the matter to my mind the objection found by the learned Assistant Judge to the effect of this document Ex. 146 is devoid of any substance.

16. So far as the suit land, parcel No. 2, is concerned, the judgment of the learned Judge is even more vulnerable. He has not even applied his mind to the question as to whether the sale-deed, Ex. 76, suffers from the same defect as Ex. 75 or not. It is nobody's case that Savitribai executed the sale-deed on behalf of her major sons. Only defect alleged in that behalf is that Savitribai had no title to the suit land. To my mind the learned Judge has failed to apply his mind to this aspect of the case entirely and hence it is necessary for me to examine the question myself and once I start embarking upon the enquiry in that behalf, I find that there is no justification whatsoever for the view that the title of Savitribai was not proved. There is no dispute that Savitribai had executed the sale-deed. The sale-deed is a registered document. The plaintiff has examined Krishnaji Keshav Prabhu-Desai, who was the Khot. He has stated that Sakharam Bhavade, husband of Savitribai, had entered into an agreement with the plaintiff in connection with the suit land parcel No. 2. The said agreement is produced at Ex. 136 in these proceedings. The fact that Krishnaji was himself the Khot is not at all disputed. This is clear from the cross-examination of the witness. The significant fact is that the Khot has himself scribed the agreement, Ex. 136, by which the suit land parcel No. 2 was to be sold by Sakharam to the plaintiff and defendant No. 9. The said witness has also attested the agreement. It is, therefore, futile to contend that Sakharam had no title to the suit land. When the Khot in whom the title vested had himself scribed the document in question, it is futile to contend that Sakharam's title was not recognised by the Khot. If this is the position, Savitribai who was the widow of Sakharam must be held to be having title to the suit land parcel No. 2 after the death of Sakharam. The sale-deed, Ex. 76, executed by her in favour of the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 becomes, therefore, unassailable. It is thus clear that so far as the title to the suit land, parcel No. 2, is concerned the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 have proved the same to the hilt.

17. The only question that remains is as to why the plaintiff should be nonsuited, if he has proved his title. If a person proves his title and files a suit for possession on title, the only conceivable defence to the suit on merits is that title was subsequently extinguished by some supervening event such as the adverse possession of the defendants. In the instant case, a plea for adverse possession was raised by way of issue No. 5, but the plea has not been pressed into service and it is contended before me specifically by Mr. Phadkar that he did not want to set up a plea of adverse possession against the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 in this litigation. As a matter of fact it is the contention of the contesting defendants themselves that their possession of the suit lands is joint with the plaintiff and defendant No. 9. A plea of adverse possession is, therefore, wholly misconceived. No other supervening event extinguishing the plaintiff's title is relied upon.

The plea is contained in issue No. 5 which has been framed on the basis of the written statement. But it is explained by stating that adverse possession was claimed against Godabai and not against the plaintiff. But even that plea has been given up. If this is the position, then it is difficult to see how the plaintiff's suit for possession based on title could be dismissed. To my mind, in the context of the facts and pleadings, the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge is wholly unsustainable.

18. It was sought to be contended before me that the contesting defendants have led evidence to show that they were in possession of the suit lands till the year 1950. I may state here that I am not at all satisfied even about this factual position. But I propose to express no opinion in that behalf for the simple reason that the position in that behalf is of no legal consequence. Once it is found that defendants Nos. 1 to 8 have not pressed into service their contention regarding acquisition of title by adverse possession, the entire question relating to their possession becomes wholly academic. The plaintiff and defendant No. 9 have proved their title to the suit land and defendants Nos. 1 to 8 have established none. The result must follow that the plaintiff and defendant No. 9 are entitled to the possession of the suit lands from defendants Nos. 1 to 8.

19. The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decrees passed by both the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit for declaration of title of himself and defendant No. 9 and for injunction in respect of the suit lands mentioned in the plaint and for possession of the rest of the land is hereby decreed. The plaintiff shall be entitled to costs of this litigation in all the Courts.

By consent of the parties, status quo to continue for a period of (one) month from today.

Enquiry as regards future mesne profits according to the provisions of law.

Appeal allowed.

Maharashtra State Co-operative Land Development Bank Ltd. and another, Petitioners v. State of Maharashtra and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 881 of 1980, D/- 10-4-1981.

(A) Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (24 of 1961), S. 69A (3) and (4) — Fund established by State Level Caderisation Committee and not by Apex Society — Demand for contribution from notified society is not sustainable.

The obligation under S. 69A (4), if any, of any notified society is to contribute annually to the 'Fund' established by the Apex Society and not to any Fund. The Apex Society not having established any such Fund till this date, the petitioner notified Society was under no legal obligation to pay or make any contribution to any such Fund. The demand thus being ill-founded is illegal and ineffective and unenforceable against the petitioner. (Para 9)

(B) Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (24 of 1961), S. 69A (4) — Notice to petitioner notified Society demanding contribution to fund — Benefit to petitioner society from cadre and fund found to be too indirect, remote and far-fetched — Demand notice must be quashed. AIR 1980 SC 1008 and AIR 1971 SC 1182, Rel. on — Held, further, that demand notice was also liable to be quashed on ground that fixation of quantum of contribution was arbitrary and irrational. Dr. B. R. Naik with Y. R. Naik, for Petitioners; C. J. Sawant, Addl. Govt. Pleader with D. P. Hegde Asst. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents, Nos. 1 to 3.

DESHPANDE, C. J. :— Of the two petitioners in this writ petition, No. 1 is the Maharashtra State Co-operative Land Development Bank Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as 'the Society') while No. 2 is its Member. Under demand notice dated 12-2-1980 and 3-3-1980 by Respondents Nos. 3 and 2 respectively, the Society is called upon to pay a total sum of Rs. 10 lacs towards its contribution for the years 1977-78 and 1978-79 for "the Co-operative State Cadre Employment Fund" (hereinafter referred to as the Fund) under sub-s. (4) of S. 69A of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act'). The Society is notified by Respondent No. 1 State Government by a notification dated 6-3-1979, as one of the Societies, which, in its opinion, derives benefit directly or indirectly from the services of the Co-operative State Cadre of Secretaries, constituted under sub-s. (1) of S. 69A (hereinafter referred to as 'the Cadre'). Under R. 53A of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Rules, 1961 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Rules') as amended by the First Amendment of 1979, the liability of the society is determined to be Rs. 5 lacs per year in terms of sub-s. (4) of S. 69A. The demand notice cannot be ignored by the society without exposing it to the levy of attachment of the amount by the Registrar under sub-s. (5) of S. 69A of the Act. Both the petitioners challenge the validity of this demand in this petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution.

2. We do not think it necessary to go into the questions of the vires of S. 69A of the Act and Rr. 53A and 53B of the Rules raised by Dr. Naik, learned Advocate for the petitioners, namely (1) whether S. 69A is violative of Articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution and (2) whether Rr. 53A and 53B are ultra vires of the rule making power of the State Government. In our opinion, other three points raised by Dr. Naik are sufficient to quash the impugned demand notices. The first contention of Dr. Naik is that no liability to contribute towards the Fund arises u/s. 69A (4), inasmuch as, no Fund as such 'Co-operative State Cadre Employment Fund' has been in fact established by any Apex Bank as contemplated u/s. 69A (3), till this day. His second contention is that the contribution cannot be claimed by way of tax for want of legislative competence and it cannot be levied as fee, which levy is conditional on benefit to the payer and the Society does not get any benefit whatsoever from the 'Fund' or the 'Cadre' for the maintenance of which the Fund is raised. His third contention is that fixation of the liability at Rs. 5 lakhs is arbitrary, irrational and without any basis whatsoever and therefore legally ineffective.

3. It will be convenient to refer to certain indisputable relevant factors. S. 69A of the Act contemplates constitution of a Cadre of Secretaries for the efficient administration of certain resources and other prescribed Societies specified in S. 69A (1) under the hypothesis that improvement in their working would in turn help implementing the projects in the co-operative sector through other societies at higher level. It seeks to provide, for its recruitment and operation, by certain notified Central Societies and, maintenance from the Fund to be contributed by the said resource societies and certain other notified societies who would derive benefit therefrom. This S. 69A was introduced in the Act on 19-2-1976 by Maharashtra Amendment Act 36 of 1975 while sub-s. (4) thereof as it now stands was introduced therein on 27-12-79 by Maharashtra Amendment Act 30 of 1978. The scheme was introduced even earlier and was sought to be implemented by persuading the societies concerned to amend their bye-laws for its enforcement. Supervisory Unions at taluka level were established for this purpose who would recruit personnel for the secretarial work of the societies. A State Caderisation Fund was established earlier, under the Government Resolution dated 2-8-1974 and managed and operated by a State Level Committee, with a view to improve the tone of the working of the primary co-operative societies of certain categories. A current account in the Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank Ltd. was opened on 14-1-1975 under the name of "The State Level Caderisation Fund" by a Resolution of the said Committee dated 7-11-1974. The committee was to collect contributions from the Co-operative Institutions and Administrative Funds for its working.

4. Sec. 69A and Rr. 53A and 53B were introduced to accord statutory recognition to this scheme enforced already earlier under the Government Resolution dated 2-8-1974. Sub-s. (1) of S. 69A specifies certain categories of primary societies and provides for the establishment of the Cadre, and recruitment thereof by the notified Central Societies. Sub-s. (2) authorises the Central Society to depute such recruited personnel to the societies specified in sub-s. (1) and the said societies are required to take them over. Their emoluments however are liable to be paid from the Fund. Sub-sec. (3) provides for the establishment of the 'Fund' by an Apex Bank to be so notified, to be utilised for the maintenance of the Cadre. Sub-s. (4) enables the State Government to notify the societies which in its opinion are benefited by the Cadre directly or indirectly, and charge them with a statutory liability to make contribution at the rates to be fixed by the State Government by reference to factors enumerated therein. Sub-s. (5) provides for the sanction for the enforcement of such dues.

5. By notification dated 6-3-1979, certain societies including the petitioner No. 1 were declared to be beneficiaries of the Fund u/s. 69A (4) of the Act. R. 53A was inserted on 16-7-1979 while R. 53B was inserted on 3-9-1979 by amending the 1961 Rules under the Act. Under R. 53A, the rates of contributions were fixed by reference to the categories of the societies benefited, while R. 53B indicated the mode of payment of such contributions by the societies so declared to be liable. Sub-r. (1) of R. 53B of the Rules requires the Apex Society, so notified u/s. 69A (3) of the Act, to open an account in the name of the 'Co-operative State Cadre Employment Fund' established by it in the Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank, Bombay and also in every District Central Co-operative Bank excluding the Bombay District Central Co-operative Bank. The other clauses of R. 53B provide for channelizing of the contributions of the notified societies into the said Fund.

6. Now the first contention of Dr. Naik is that liability to make contribution by any notified society u/s. 69A (4) does not arise as the Fund itself is not established. No material is placed by the respondents to show if such 'Fund' is established at all. Entire reliance was placed at the hearing on the affidavit of one Bhatwadekar filed in this writ petition and Writ Petition No. 181 of 1980. Bhatwadekar is an Officer of the Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank Ltd. The affidavit does show that the Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank Ltd. is notified as an Apex society by the State Government for this purpose u/s. 69A (3) of the Act on 17-5-1979. The State Level Caderisation Committee at its meeting held on 13-11-1979 passed a resolution to change the name of the account opened by them on 14-1-1979 in this very Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank Ltd., from 'State Caderisation Fund' to 'Co-operative State Cadre Employment Fund'. The name of the account has accordingly been changed by the Bank in pursuance of the said resolution. The Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank Ltd. now possesses dual capacity of being a Banker and also supposed opener of the account as an Apex Society. This is liable to add to the complexity of the question. The Bank appears to have conveyed its reluctance to operate as an Apex Society. By a resolution dated 27-2-1980 the Government has now put an end to the State level Caderisation Committee. We were informed at the Bar that this work now has been entrusted to a Co-operative Society viz. Maharashtra State Level Caderisation Co-operative Society Ltd. specially registered for that purpose on 1-1-1981.

7. Shri C. J. Sawant, the learned Additional Government Pleader relies only on these facts to show that the Fund contemplated u/s. 69A (3) has been established by the Government and it gives rise to the liability of the petitioner-Society and other notified societies to make contribution. Now sub-s. (3) of S. 69A requires the Apex society to 'establish' a Fund, while R. 53B (1) requires such an Apex society to open an account in the name of the Fund. The facts deposed to by the Bhatwadekar do not refer to the Apex society having done anything, after its being so notified on 17-5-1979, for establishing the Fund or opening of any account of the Fund. There is no other material before us to indicate as to in what manner the said Apex Society can be said to have established this Fund and opened the accounts for its purpose and what acts it has performed in this behalf after 17-5-1979.

8. That the Fund was actually established in this connection long back under the Government Resolution dated 2-8-1974 is no answer to the point raised. The Apex Society was obviously not in the picture when actually the Fund was established and an account was opened. A mere change of the name of the account from the 'State Caderisation Fund' to 'Co-operative State Cadre Employment Fund' by itself does not vest the said Fund in the Apex Society nor does it divest the Caderisation Committee thereof. The Apex Bank does not get any control over the said Fund. The change of the name of the account by itself does not constitute the change in the ownership of the said money lying in the said account of the Bank or furnish an authority to the Apex Society to withdraw money from the said account or the Fund, which still vests in the State Level Caderisation Committee. The Committee has opened the account. It alone can claim to operate it even after the change in its name. What will be the position and what will happen to the authority of the said State Level Caderisation Committee after the formation of the Maharashtra State Co-operative Caderisation Society Ltd. with effect from 1-1-1981 is altogether a different point not relevant for the purpose of this case. These facts may at the most go to show that a Fund i.e. "the Co-operative State Cadre Employment Fund" has been established by the State Level Caderisation Committee. That is a different thing from holding that the Apex Society notified u/s. 69A (3) has established the said Fund.

9. The obligation under sub-s. (4) of S. 69A, if any, of any notified society is to contribute annually to the said 'Fund' and not to any Fund. Dr. Naik and other learned Advocates appearing for the several petitioners in this group of cases appear to us to be right in contending that the Apex Society not having established any such Fund till this date, respondents Nos. 3 and 2 were not competent to call upon the petitioners to make any contribution towards any such non-existing Fund as the petitioners were under no legal obligation to pay or make any contribution to any such Fund. The demand thus being ill-founded is illegal and ineffective and unenforceable against the petitioners on this ground itself.

10. The second contention as to the absence of any benefit of the Fund to the Society raised by Dr. Naik also appears to be well founded. S. 69A (4) casts statutory obligation on the notified societies to contribute to the Fund. Such impost can be justified either as a tax or a fee. No authority can claim any legal sanction under the Constitution to levy any impost without legislative competence and compliance with basic norms. Shri C. J. Sawant, the learned Additional Government Pleader, appearing for the State did not seek to defend this levy as a tax. According to him, the levy is in the nature of a fee. The legislature no doubt is competent to levy any amount by way of a fee to reimburse the administration of the costs required to meet special services to any class of citizens. It is well settled that legislature can authorize any Government agency to charge fees for certain special services to individuals or class of individuals. The question is, if the society can derive or derives any service or benefit at all in lieu of such contributions.

11. It is true that the State Government has notified the petitioner-society as one of the societies which derives benefit from the State Cadre, directly or indirectly, for the maintenance of which contributions are claimed. The petitioners challenge the correctness of this opinion. The opinion formed by the Government unilaterally by itself cannot be conclusive of the petitioners deriving any such benefit, when the petitioners deny the receipt of any direct or indirect benefit from the Cadre. Dr. Naik emphasised two words — 'directly or indirectly' — in the notification and urged that the use of these words displays in-application of mind and uncertainty if the contemplated benefit is direct or indirect. There is much substance in this contention. All the learned Advocates urged that indirect benefit cannot furnish basis for any levy of fees. It is not necessary to decide in this case if indirect benefit can ever justify the levy of the fees and if proof of direct benefit is indispensable for this purpose. Even if it is assumed that indirect benefit also can justify the levy, it is still necessary to know what such indirect benefit is and what correlation between the contributors and the services claimed to have been rendered in fact exists. Without the existence of such correlation, the levy is liable to be struck down as being legally ineffective.

12. Now under sub-s. (3) of S. 69A, the Fund is to be "utilised for meeting the expenses on the salaries, allowances and other emoluments to be paid to the persons appointed to the Co-operative State Cadre and the other expenditure relating to the Cadre." The correlation must be shown between the services rendered by the Cadre for the maintenance of which the Fund is earmarked, and the payer the petitioner-Society by reference to its business activities. Sub-s. (1) of S. 69A contemplates constitution of the Co-operative State Cadre of Secretaries for administering (1) primary agricultural credit societies, (2) multipurpose co-operative societies and (3) service co-operative. The benefit of this Cadre is intended also to be extended to some other classes of societies provided the same are so prescribed'. The Cadre is contemplated to be operated and managed by the 'Central Societies' to be so notified by the State Government as detailed in sub-s. (2) of S. 69A.

13. Admittedly the petitioner-Society is not one of the three societies specified in S. 69A (1) nor the petitioner-Society herein is shown to have been so 'prescribed by any notification' for whose administration and management the 'Cadre' is established. Admittedly no person is deputed or even contemplated to be deputed from the rank of the Cadre to the societies notified u/s. 69A (4) including the petitioner-Society. If this be the factual position, the petitioners cannot be said to be the beneficiary of the Cadre and consequently of the Fund and the opinion formed by the Government to that effect cannot but be held, at any rate prima facie, to be ill founded.

14. Shri C. J. Sawant drew our attention firstly to S. 111 of the Act, enumerating the purpose for which the society i.e. the Petitioner-Bank is established. He also drew our attention to certain passages from the affidavit of Koranne, an Officer in the Agriculture and Co-operation Department, filed by the State in defence of the levy of contribution as fees, to show how the Fund is intended to maintain the Cadre and how services of the Secretaries deputed from the Cadre to the society specified in S. 69A (1) result in the efficient working of the said societies and how improvement in their working ultimately improves the financial prospects of the societies notified u/s. 69A (4) and thereby benefit them. The deponent makes a distinction between long term loans advanced by the petitioner-society to the agriculturists for "land improvement and production purposes" such as "sinking of wells, installation of oil engines and electric motors, purchase of agricultural implements, lift irrigation schemes and so on" and the short terms loans or production loans advanced to them by the primary credit co-operative societies for carrying on the seasonal operations in the lands. According to the deponent, the agriculturists can, exploit to the maximum and derive full advantage and benefit of the assets created from out of the loan granted by the petitioner-Society, only, if they are assured of adequate and timely supply of 'production credit' for seasonal agricultural operations like purchase of seeds, fertilizers, pesticides, weeding etc. by the primary credit co-operative societies at village level for the working of whom the Cadre is established. Thus, the Cadre is alleged to be beneficial to the primary credit co-operative societies and the credit advanced by them to the agriculturists is shown to be beneficial to the petitioner-society by making loans advanced by them more productive and ensuring repayment of loans. According to the deponent, "All this results in ensuring that the agriculturists are assured of adequate and timely supply of production credit, without which not only the seasonal agricultural operations would suffer, but the repayment of their instalment of long term loan granted by the petitioner could also be jeopardised."

15. To sum up the case of the State, the efficient management of such primary credit co-operative societies by the Cadre Secretaries enables the agriculturists to get short term loans and consequently better yields from the land and to exploit the long term loans for improvement of the land and its production capacity and their paying capacity ensuring the refund of the instalments of the petitioner-society. This is how the petitioner-society is claimed to have been indirectly benefited from the Cadre for the maintenance of which the petitioner-society is required to contribute in terms of sub-s. (4) of S. 69A.

16. In support of his contention that even such indirect benefits can justify the levy of fees Shri C. J. Sawant drew our attention to the judgment of the Supreme Court in Kewal Krishan Puri v. State of Punjab reported in AIR 1980 SC 1008 and the other cases referred to therein. Dr. Naik, Shri M. V. Paranjape, Shri Rana, Shri A. V. Savant and Shri Sali appearing for the petitioners in these groups of cases also relied on the very same judgment in support of their contention that such remote, indirect, benefit relied on in this case can never furnish legal basis for any such fees.

17. In our opinion, the contention of Shri C. J. Sawant is misconceived and farfetched. Firstly, the Cadre personnel is also intended to serve three other categories of societies in the multipurpose and service co-operative and other 'prescribed societies'. No attempt is made to show how large chunk of the Fund spent for their Secretaries can benefit any of the class of notified societies. There is no data to suggest that majority of such personnel is deputed to primary credit societies only. Secondly, though it is true that members of the primary credit co-operative societies and the petitioner-society are agriculturists, there is no basis for assumption that all or any members-debtors of the petitioner-society are necessarily the members of primary credit co-operative societies specified in sub-s. (1) of S. 69A, who alone are the real and direct beneficiaries of this Cadre. Reliance by Shri C. J. Sawant on the averment in cl. (c) of para 3 of Koranne's affidavit saying that, "a substantial majority of them — (agriculturist debtors of the petitioner-society) — are also members of the village primary credit societies and hence are receiving benefit of 'short term credit' from these societies" is not of much assistance as the factual basis thereof is denied in the counter-affidavit of the petitioner-society. Even if it is assumed that majority of the debtors of the petitioner-society are in fact the members of the primary credit societies and as such loan holders therefrom, it does not follow therefrom, (a) that all of them secure short term loans from the primary society or, (b) that the said loans actually go to improve the productivity of the land owned by them and (c) that as a result of the improvement in the productivity of land, their capacity to pay the loan instalments is actually improved and (d) that but for such loan assistance from the primary resource society the debtors of the petitioner-society could not have paid the instalments in time. The loans are advanced by the petitioner-society to the agriculturists on the security of the lands, and the dues of the societies, such as the petitioners, get priority in terms of the Ss. 48A and 120 of the Act. Their claims stand on par with Government dues for priority. Thirdly, and more importantly, incorporated societies have independent identity from their members. The supposed benefit to the members cannot be said to be the benefit to the society.

18. To sum up, the Fund is intended to feed the personnel of the Cadre. The Cadre is intended not only for the secretarial work of the primary resource Societies but also for other two categories of the society, payment to whom from the Fund does not at all benefit the Society. Secondly the Cadre may cause benefit to the primary credit societies and not to its share-holders directly. Even if the said members are held to have been benefited indirectly by the Cadre, there is no basis for holding that very same members are members of the petitioner-society. Even if it is assumed that they are such members and consequently the debtors of the petitioner-society are actually benefited indirectly by secretarial services of the primary credit co-operative society, that can never be evidence of the petitioner-society being even indirectly benefited thereby. More importantly, the alleged benefit of improvement in the paying capacity is a nothing but a myth as loans of the petitioner-society are secured and treated statutorily on par with crown dues for priority. The benefit, apart from being too indirect, is too remote and far-fetched and cannot furnish basis for levying any fees and make the petitioner-society liable to contributions. On the basis of the material placed before us, no other conclusion is possible.

19. The question that fell for consideration in Kewal Krishan's case (AIR 1980 SC 1008) (supra) was whether raising of market fee under the provisions of the Punjab Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1961 as applicable to the State of Punjab and Haryana was justified in the facts and circumstances arising therein. The Judges proceeded on the basis that what was sought to be exacted from the dealers was not tax but was fee. A fee, according to the learned Judges, is defined to be a charge for a special service rendered to individuals by some governmental agency. Raising of the fees was found by the Supreme Court to have unwarranted and no correlation was found to exist between additional services sought to be rendered in lieu of the enhanced fees and the payer of fees by reference to the transaction of sales in dispute. On exhaustive examination of the case law the learned Judges of the Supreme Court indicated in para 23 at p. 1023 of the report, tests to determine when the fees could be legal and when the same would not. Cl. (3) emphasises how special benefits claimed to have been conferred on the payer of tax must have "a direct, close and reasonable correlation between the licensees and the transactions". Cl. (5) is illustrative of how remote and indirect benefit to the traders can in no sense be a special benefit to them.

20. In our opinion, the following passage from para 46 of the judgment (Kefal Krishan's case) AIR 1980 SC 1008 is illustrative of how the contention raised by Shri C. J. Sawant before us is thoroughly untenable:

".....Similarly, as pointed out in the Mining Act and the factory cases charge of fee from the mine owners in the area or the factory owners in the factory for the purpose of developing and protecting the mines and the factories is a service to the owners. If one were to push the example of a factory beyond the limit of the conception of fee, one could say that the fee charged from the factory owners can be utilised for pushing and augmenting the output of the raw-materials required in the manufacturing process in the factory, it is also a benefit to the factory. Is it reasonably possible to travel as wide as that?"

The learned Judges answered the question in the negative.

21. We do not think it necessary to refer to other cases relied upon by Dr. Naik and other learned Advocates appearing for the petitioners, excepting to the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Indian Mica and Micanite Industries Ltd. v. State of Bihar reported in AIR 1971 SC 1182. The rule framed by the Board of Revenue under the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, 1915 required every consumer of denatured spirit to obtain a licence for possessing denatured spirit on paying certain amount of fee for such licence. Legality of the fees was challenged in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that, before any levy can be upheld as a fee, a reasonable correlation between the contributions and the services rendered by the Cadre must be proved. In other words, the levy must be proved to be a quid pro quo for the services rendered. The expected correlation is one of a general character and not as of arithmetical exactitude. Services of the Government in the matter of supervising and controlling such intoxicating liquors and supplying the raw materials like moleses and coal to the distilleries at cheap rates for manufacturing the alcohol were relied on to justify the licence fee. The Supreme Court upheld the claim of the petitioners and held that no such correlation existed to justify the validity of the fees.

22. In the facts and circumstances of the case the claim made by the Government stand on a still weaker basis. In terms of sub-s. (3) of Section 69A the Fund to which the contribution is required to be made is intended to be utilised for meeting the expenses on the salaries, allowances and other emoluments of the personnel of the Cadre which is not expected to render any services whatsoever to the petitioner-society. Even if any benefit can be held to have been received by the petitioner society in the manner suggested and discussed earlier, the connection between such contributions and the services rendered by the Cadre through the resource societies to the petitioners is too remote to admit of a finding of the existence of the correlation, which is so essential to justify the validity of the claim according to the ratio of the Supreme Court in Kewal Krishan's case (AIR 1980 SC 1008).

23. Third contention of Dr. Naik is that, the quantum of liability is arbitrary and without any rational basis. R. 53A seeks to fix the quantum of contribution payable by the petitioner-society towards the Fund at Sr. No. 3. The petitioner-society's contribution is quantified at Rs. 5 lacs per year. The rule itself does not indicate the basis or the method by which the figure of Rs. 5 lacs is arrived at. The way the amount is worked out and fixed on the face of it smacks of an arbitrary, irrational and unreasonable approach. It is not possible to know why the amount is fixed at Rs. 5 lacs, not Rs. 10 lacs or Rs. 2 lacs. It was open for the State Government to explain and indicate the basis elaborately. The cl. (d) of para 3 of Koranne's affidavit indicates that the amount of Rs. 5 lacs is "insignificant considering the fact that during both 1977-78 and 1978-79 the petitioner-society has made a net profit of over Rs. 2 crores each year." In the absence of any explanation for making this profit as the basis for this quantum of Rs. 5 lacs and indication of the nexus between the two, the bald statement cannot be accepted to justify the same. There is no indication as to what would happen if there were losses.

24. Shri C. J. Sawant drew our attention to Koranne's affidavit filed in Writ Petition No. 181 of 1980 and the enclosed statement (Ex. 1) therewith. Exhibit 1 does indicate what the total annual expenditure on the caderisation of Secretaries has been from 1977-78 to 1982-83 and how it is sought to be met by collecting contributions from the societies notified to be so beneficiaries thereof. The statement also further indicates as to what amounts are expected, at the rates fixed in the notification dt. 16-7-1979, from each one of the categories of the societies detailed in R. 53A itself. The contribution is levied by reference to the turnover or sale proceeds. Lump sum is levied only for two societies including the petitioner-society. The total expenses seem to have been sought to be apportioned between various categories. There is no explanation for the different basis, rates in different cases, no indication how the quantum of benefit is related to the levy imposed. The lump sum receivable under the said notification from the Maharashtra State Co-operative Bank Ltd. and the Maharashtra State Co-operative Land Development Bank Ltd. (Petitioner society) amounts to Rs. 20 lacs and Rs. 5 lacs per year respectively. According to Shri C. J. Sawant, the amount of contribution due is fixed by the Government in the light of the estimate of its expenses. The costs incurred have been distributed between different categories of societies by reference to turnover etc. without indication of any bars. It is only in respect of two societies that a lump sum amount has been fixed.

25. Section 69 (4) requires the State Government to take into account, (1) the expenditure referred to in sub-sec. (3) viz. total emoluments payable to the personnel of the Cadre; (2) the services likely to be rendered, and (3) the financial condition of the societies or other bodies concerned. There is no explanation how all these factors were actually taken into account. It is a moot point whether the capacity to pay towards fees can be a relevant consideration for fixing the quantum thereof. Certain observations in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Kewal Krishan's case (AIR 1980 SC 1008) do create a doubt in the relevancy of the capacity to pay. Even if this aspect of the matter is ignored, neither the affidavit in this case nor the affidavit in writ petition No. 181 of 1980 nor the material placed before us indicates in what manner the services likely to be rendered by the Cadre to the petitioner-society were measured or taken into account and which financial condition of the petitioner-society was taken into account for the contemplated apportionment of the expenditure amongst several categories of societies. The contention of Dr. Naik, therefore, that the fixation of the quantum of contribution towards the fund is arbitrary, irrational and unreasonable, in our opinion, deserves to be accepted. The petition deserves to be allowed and the demand notice is liable to be quashed.

26. We accordingly allow the petition, make the rule absolute and quash the impugned notice of demand made by the respondents.

27. The petitioners will get their costs from the respondents.

28. The amount deposited by the Petitioner-society on 23-4-1980 pursuant to the directions of this Court dt. 11-4-1980 be refunded to the petitioner-society.

29. Shri C. J. Sawant orally applies for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

P. C. Leave refused.

Operation of the Order stayed for four weeks,

Petition allowed.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 206

KANADE, J.

Kagal Education Society Ltd., Petitioner v. Shrimant Ajitsinhrao Yeshwantrao Ghatge and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1412 of 1977, D/- 12-12-1980.

(A) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), Secs. 43 and 32 — Tenant in possession of land on Tillers' day — He becomes deemed purchaser on that day u/s. 32 and Sec. 43 immediately comes into play — Tenant cannot be said to become purchaser only on payment of entire price and obtaining certificate thereafter u/s. 32-M.

Section 32 of the Tenancy Act, introduced a legal fiction that if the tenant on the land is in possession on April 1, 1957, he will be deemed to be the purchaser or the ownership of the land would stand transferred in favour of the tenant on the tillers' day, free of all encumbrances subsisting thereof on the said day. Sec. 43 comes into play the moment a tenant has become purchaser of the land u/s. 32 or 32F, i. e., it comes into play on tillers' day or on postponed date of purchase of the land u/s. 32F, where the tenant had exercised his right of purchase, as provided u/s. 32F. The view that the tenant becomes a purchaser only on payment of the entire purchase price and obtaining certificate thereafter u/s. 32M is an error apparent on the face of the record. The very legal fiction introduced u/s. 32 will be defeated if it is held that a tenant becomes purchaser on payment of the entire price and obtaining certificate thereafter u/s. 32-M of the Act. If the Legislature had intended to make the tenant absolute owner only on the payment of entire purchase price and obtaining certificate u/s. 32M, then the language of Sec. 43 would have been quite different, the words as found in Sec. 32M would have been inserted. (Paras 10, 12, 13)

(B) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), Secs. 32, 32G, 32M, 32P, 43 and 84C — Tenant purchasing land u/s. 32, and, before paying entire price, transferring it in violation of Sec. 43 — Transfer declared invalid u/s. 84C — In circumstances, held, land would vest in Government u/s. 84C (3) and landlord though entitled to balance price, could not claim restoration of possession since tenants purchase was not declared ineffective either u/s. 32G or u/s. 32M.

The tenant, being in possession of the land on tillers' day, became deemed purchaser of the land u/s. 32. After payment of only five instalments, he gifted away the land and thus the land was transferred by the deemed purchaser. The Tahsildar found that the transfer by the tenant purchaser was in contravention of Sec. 43, and, therefore, the said transfer was declared invalid in terms of Sec. 84C.

Held, since the entire price was not paid by the tenant and the transfer by him had been declared ineffective u/s. 43, the land automatically vested in the Government u/s. 84C (3). The landlords could not claim restoration of possession u/s. 32P since the purchase in favour of the tenant was not declared ineffective either u/s. 32G or u/s. 32M. However, the landlords could recover the balance of the purchase price in view of Section 84C (3). (Para 15)

S. M. Mhamane, for Petitioner; N. D. Hombalkar, for Nos. (1 to 4) and R. V. Naik for, Y. R. Naik (for No. 5) for, Respondents W. N. Yande Addl. Govt. Pleader for the State.

ORDER:— A short question involved in this Special Civil Application filed by the petitioner under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India is as to whether the provisions of Sec. 43 r/w. Sec. 84C or Sec. 32 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 (hereinafter referred to as the "Bombay Tenancy Act") would apply to the facts of the present case.

2. Undisputed facts of this case are that the land R. S. No. 95/1 admeasuring 13 acres 33 gunthas situated at village Kagal, District Kolhapur was owned by respondents Nos. 1 to 4 and the same was in possession of one Gopal Krishna Jadhav as a tenant. In the proceeding started u/s. 32G of the B. T. A. L. Act, Gopal Krishna Jadhav was declared as deemed purchaser and the price of the land was fixed at Rs. 2000/-. It was directed that the said amount should be deposited by the tenant in 20 instalments. It appears that the tenant paid only five instalments and ceased to make any further deposits thereafter.

3. The said tenant Gopal Krishna Jadhav since deceased transferred the land in favour of respondent No. 5 under a registered gift-deed, dt. Nov. 29, 1965. It is, therefore, respondents Nos. 1 to 4 — original owners, who filed Tenancy Case No. 80 of 1968 in the Court of the Tahsildar, Kagal, challenging the validity of the said transfer of the land under the gift-deed. The learned Tahsildar, Kagal started inquiry on the basis of the application made by respondents Nos. 1 to 4 and on consideration of the evidence on record held that the transfer effected by the deceased tenant Gopal Krishna Jadhav was in contravention of the provisions of Sec. 43 of the Bombay

Tenancy Act and therefore the said transaction was declared invalid in terms of Sec. 84C of the said Act. The learned Tahsildar by the judgment and order dt. April, 29, 1969 declared that the transfer of the suit land by gift-deed was invalid and the suit land should be vested in the State Government. He further directed that the disposal of the suit land should be made in accordance with the provisions of sub-sec. (4) of Sec. 84-C of the Tenancy Act. From the record of this case, it appears that appeal was filed by the widow of the deceased Gopal Krishna Jadhav, but the said appeal was dismissed. The transferee-respondent No. 5 did not file any appeal. Similarly, the original owners respondents Nos. 1 to 4 also did not file any appeal against the said order. However, respondent Nos. 1 to 4 made a representation to the District Collector, Kolhapur that the land in dispute should be transferred to them as they are agriculturists. By a letter, dt. Feb. 14, 1976, the District Collector's office informed respondents Nos. 1 to 4 that their application is disposed of and filed and they expressed their regret that the land cannot be restored to the original owners. The original owners respondents Nos. 1 to 4 feeling aggrieved by the decision of the District Collector submitted Revision Application to the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal being No. MRT. KP. 95/76. The said representation made by the original owners was treated as an appeal by the learned Member of the Tribunal without expressing any opinion as to whether the said representation was in the nature of an appeal or otherwise and proceeded with the revision application. Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 in the said revision application inter alia contended that the tenant who was deemed purchaser had not paid the entire purchase price of the land and therefore the sale in favour of the tenant must be declared ineffective and the land must be restored to them under the provisions of Sec. 32P of the Tenancy Act. The landlord's contention seems to have been accepted by the learned Member of the Tribunal. It is observed in the judgment of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal that:

"Now, it is not disputed before me that the proceedings started u/s. 32-G had not been finally concluded. In that the entire price was not recovered with the result that certificate u/s. 32-M remained to be granted. Therefore the suit land cannot be said to have been purchased by the tenant within the meaning of Sec. 43 of the Tenancy Act."

It is further observed that:

"It is again not disputed that the proceedings u/s. 84-C were started on an assumption that the suit land was purchased by the tenant but as we have seen, this was not the case and therefore there was no warrant for taking proceeding u/s. 84-C. In that view of the matter, I hold that the proceedings u/s. 84-C were incompetent and the orders whatever might have come to be passed in that regard are a nullity."

4. In the subsequent para of the judgment the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal further observed that:

"Evidently, the revision application, sought an entirely different redress when they complained against the transfer effected by the tenant. The purport of their complaint obviously was that either the price should be recovered and paid to them failing which action to dispose of the land in accordance with the provisions of Sec. 32-P should be taken. Unfortunately this aspect of the matter was lost sight of. I am therefore constrained to remit the matter to the trial Court for taking suitable action in terms of Sec. 32-K to start with and dispose of the matter according to law."

While making the said observations, the Tribunal was pleased to allow revision application and remitted the case to the trial Court for fresh disposal according to law in the light of the observations made in the judgment with reference to the provisions of Secs. 32K, 32M and 32P of the Act. This order of remand is challenged by the petitioner in this Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constn.

5. It is necessary to mention here that the petitioner is a society by name "Kagal Education Society Ltd." at Kagal to whom the disputed land is allotted, while disposing the same under the provisions of S. 84-C of the Bombay Tenancy Act. The petitioner has constructed some structures on the said land and the society is in actual possession thereof. It is, therefore, the petitioner has challenged the order of remand by the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal.

6. A short question involved in this Special Civil Application is as to whether the provisions of Sec. 43 of the Bombay Tenancy Act would apply to the admitted facts of this case and consequently the provisions of Sec. 84-C would be attracted for disposal of the land. Sec. 43 lays down as under:—

"43. (1) No land purchased by a tenant under Secs. 32, 32F, 32-I, 32-O, 33-C or 43-ID or sold to any person under section 32P or 64 shall be transferred by sale, gift, exchange, mortgage, lease or assignment or partitioned without the previous sanction of the Collector. Such sanction shall be given by the Collector in such circumstances, and subject to such conditions, as may be prescribed by the State Government:—

Provided that, no such sanction shall be necessary where the land is to be mortgaged in favour of Government or a society registered or deemed to be registered under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925, for raising a loan for effecting any improvement of such land.

(2) Any transfer or partition of land in contravention of sub-sec. (1) shall be invalid."

The said section would attract a case where a tenant has purchased the land under the said provisions mentioned in the section. In the instant case, it is not in dispute that Gopal Krishna Jadhav was in actual possession of the disputed land on the Tillers' day i. e. on April 1, 1957 and he became deemed purchaser of the said land on the Tillers' day free of all encumbrances subsisting thereof under the provisions of Sec. 32 of the Tenancy Act. Sec. 32 of the Tenancy Act introduced a legal fiction that if the tenant on the land is in possession on April 1, 1957, he will be deemed to be the purchaser or the ownership of the land would stand transferred in favour of the tenant on the Tillers' day, free of all encumbrances subsisting thereof on the said day. Legally it means effacement of rights of the landlord creating a right of ownership in favour of the tenant. Subsequent provisions of the Tenancy Act such as Sec. 32-G empower the authorities to make an inquiry after due notice to both the landlord and tenant and person interested. Under sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 32-G where any tenant fails to appear or makes a statement that he is not willing to purchase the land, the Tribunal shall by an order in writing declare that such tenant is not willing to purchase the land and that the purchase is ineffective. If the purchase is declared ineffective as provided by Sec. 32-G (3), the authority under the Act is to start the proceeding u/s. 32-P of the Tenancy Act and dispose of the land as provided therein.

7. The provisions of Sec. 32-K of the Tenancy Act further provide that on the determination of the purchase price payable u/s. 32-H, the tenant-purchaser has to deposit the said price in lump sum or such annual instalments not exceeding twelve with simple interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum on or before such dates as may be fixed by the Tribunal and if a tenant-purchaser is unable to deposit with the Tribunal the entire amount of the purchase price in accordance with the order of the Tribunal then certain concessions are provided. S. 32-K (3) provides that if a tenant-purchaser fails to pay the entire amount of the purchase price within the period fixed under the provisions of this section or is in arrears of four instalments where the number of instalments fixed is four or more, and all the instalments in any other case, the amount of the purchase price remaining unpaid and the amount of interest thereon at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum, if any, shall be recoverable by the Tribunal as an arrear of land revenue.

8. Lastly, the provisions of Sec. 32-M of the Tenancy Act provides that the Tribunal shall issue a certificate on depositing the purchase price in lump sum or the last instalment of such price to the tenant in respect of the land and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of purchase. In any event, if a tenant-purchaser fails to pay the purchase price then under sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 32-K of the Tenancy Act, the Tribunal may declare the purchase to be ineffective and the land shall be disposed of by the Tribunal as provided u/s. 32-P of the Act and the amount, if any, deposited by the tenant-purchaser towards the purchase price of the land, shall be refunded to him.

9. The scheme under the Tenancy Act to make the tenant purchaser of the land has been stated in the provisions of Secs. 32 to 32R. The question in this case is as to whether the tenant becomes the purchaser on the Tillers' day or he becomes the purchaser when he deposits the entire purchase price of the land or when he obtains certificate u/s. 32-M of the Tenancy Act.

10. Mr. N. D. Hombalkar, the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 contended that unless the entire purchase price is paid by the tenant-purchaser, he cannot be said to have become the purchaser of the land and therefore the provisions of Sec. 43 of the Tenancy Act would not apply. The submission of Mr. Hombalkar cannot be accepted in view of the clear intent of Sec. 43 of the Tenancy Act. Sec. 43 in terms lays down that no land purchased by a tenant u/s. 32 shall be transferred by sale, gift, exchange, mortgage, lease or assignment or partitioned without the previous sanction of the Collector. If the Legislature had intended to make the tenant absolute owner only on the payment of entire purchase price and obtaining certificate u/s. 32-M, then the language of Sec. 43 would have been quite different, the words as found in Sec. 32M would have been inserted. As stated above, a legal fiction has been introduced u/s. 32 itself that a tenant in possession of the land becomes deemed purchaser of that land with all the rights of owner of the land and further provided that the price of such land so determined under the Act be recovered as land revenue.

11. Section 43 prohibits a transfer of such a land of which the tenant has become purchaser u/s. 32. The purpose and intention of the Legislature as disclosed by Sec. 32 is to transfer the ownership of the land to the tenant on the 'Tillers' day and that he should personally cultivate the land and benefit himself by the produce from the said land. Therefore, a restriction has been imposed not to transfer the said land and if such land is transferred and the provisions of Sec. 43 are contravened, then all his rights are defeated and the land is to be taken back from him and the same is to be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of S. 84-C of the Act.

12. What the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal has held is that the tenant does not become a purchaser till he deposits the entire purchase price. That observation is obviously an error apparent on the face of record having regard to the contents of the provisions of Sec. 32 of the Act. The very legal fiction introduced u/s. 32 will be defeated if it is held that a tenant becomes purchaser on payment of the entire price and obtaining certificate thereafter u/s. 32-M of the Act.

13. Section 43 of the Tenancy Act shall come into play only in a case where a tenant becomes purchaser of the land u/ss. 32, 32-F. It means after April 1, 1957 i.e. on the 'Tillers' day' or on postponed date of purchase of the land u/s. 32-F, where the tenant had exercised his right of purchase, as provided u/s. 32-F.

14. In the instant case, the deceased Gopal Krishna Jadhav became deemed purchaser on April 1, 1957 and on Nov. 29, 1965 after the payment of only five instalments, he gifted away the land in favour of one Maruti Rama Mali and thus the land was transferred by the deemed purchaser. The said transfer was informed by the landlords themselves to the learned Tahsildar, Kagal, who started inquiry u/s. 43 r. w. Sec. 84-C of the Tenancy Act. It is found by the Tahsildar that the said transfer was invalid and final order was passed that the transfer of the said land was invalid and the land should be vested in the Government and the same should be disposed of by the authorities concerned to the petitioner as provided u/s. 84-C of the Act.

15. In the facts and circumstances of the case I am unable to appreciate as to what purpose the order of remand was passed by the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. It is an admitted fact that the purchase of the tenant was not declared ineffective either u/s. 32G or u/s. 32M of the Tenancy Act. If the purchase is not declared ineffective, the provisions of Sec. 32P would not be attracted and the landlord will not be a person entitled to claim restoration of possession of the land. As a matter of fact and law, Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 are only entitled to claim the purchase price because all the rights in respect of the land in dispute are defeated or transferred in favour of the tenant. They cannot claim any right whatsoever in respect of the land except the price thereof. If the entire price is not paid by the tenant and the transfer has been declared ineffective u/s. 43, the land vests in the Government under sub-s. (3) of Sec. 84-C of the Act and under sub-sec. (4) of S. 84-C, the Mamlatdar shall grant the land on new and impartible tenure and on payment of occupancy price equal to the reasonable price determined under sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 84-C in the prescribed manner so mentioned in the order of priority. Sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 84-C also provides that the land shall be deemed to vest in the State Government free from all encumbrances lawfully subsisting on the date of such vesting, and it shall be disposed of in the manner provided in sub-sec. (4) of S. 84C; the encumbrances shall be paid out of the occupancy price in the manner provided by S. 32Q for the payment of encumbrances out of the purchase price of the sale of land but the right of the holder of such encumbrances to proceed against the person liable for the enforcement of his right in any other manner, shall not be affected. Having regard to the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of S. 84C, it is clear that the right of these landlords are safeguarded and they can recover their encumbrances in the manner provided by sub-sec. (3) of S. 84-C. The landlords have only a right to recover the balance of purchase price and they could not claim any right to restoration of possession of the land because the purchase in favour of the tenant u/s. 32 was never made ineffective u/s. 32G or S. 32M of the Tenancy Act. The view taken by the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal does not appear to be consistent with the scheme of the Tenancy Act. There was no question of recovery of remaining instalments from the tenant, because he lost all his rights due to illegal transfer of the land in favour of one Maruti Rama Mali.

16. Mr. S. M. Mhamane, the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner, submitted that the purchase price has been fixed and the petitioner has deposited the purchase price. Out of the said purchase price, the Mamlatdar is supposed to pay to the original owners respondents Nos. 1 to 4 as provided under sub-sec. (3) of S. 84-C of the Tenancy Act. The landlords cannot claim in the facts and circumstances of the case, any right except the right to recover the balance of the purchase price. Thus, the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal committed an error apparent on the face of record in remanding the matter to make fresh inquiry u/ss. 32K, 32M and S. 32P of the Tenancy Act. Therefore, the same order deserves to be quashed.

17. In the result, the order passed by the learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, dated Mar. 31, 1977 in Tenancy Revision No. MRT. KP. 95/76 is set aside and that of the Tahsildar Kagal, dated April 29, 1969 is restored. Thus the rule is made absolute with costs, Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 to pay the costs of the petitioner.

Ordered accordingly.

Special Civil Appln. No. 3138 of 1975, D/- 24-1-1980.

(A) Bombay Prevention of Fragmentation and Consolidation of Holdings Act (62 of 1947), S. 15A — Preparing draft scheme for consolidation — Notice of enquiry not given to concerned landowner before preparation — Scheme is vitiated.

A land belonging to a land owner will not be affected by the scheme unless he is personally given notice of the enquiry. This provision is obviously made with a view to safeguard the interest of the land owner so as to enable him to put before the Consolidation Officer all the necessary information in relation to his land and to know his point of view in respect of land which is likely to be allotted to him. It is difficult to imagine how a scheme concerning land belonging to the land owner to whom no notice has been given can really be said to be a scheme properly made in compliance with the statutory provisions of S. 15A at least in so far as it affects him. S. M. Mhamane, for Petitioner; Bhim-rao N. Naik, (for No. 1) and A. G.
Sabnis, Asst. Govt. Pleader, (for Nos. 2 and 3), for Respondents.

CHANDURKAR, J.:— This petition filed by the original owner of survey No. 145 of village Shedshal, Taluka Shired, District Kolhapur, challenges the action taken by the Settlement Commissioner under S. 32 (1) of the Bombay Prevention of Fragmentation and Consolidation of Holdings Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), where by the original scheme for consolidation which had become final is now sought to be modified by the Settlement Commissioner.

2. In a scheme of consolidation in respect of the village of Mahuli, the petitioner was allotted land bearing revision survey No. 146/1-A and revision survey No. 146/1-B admeasuring 1 hectare 58 ares which constituted Gat No. 622. These fields were originally owned by respondent No. 1 before consolidation. Respondent No. 1 was allotted 1 hectare 56 ares out of revision survey No. 145 which was given Gat No. 23. According to the petitioner, this scheme of consolidation was arrived at on the basis of an agreement between the two parties and this arrangement was, therefore, included in the scheme. The petitioner alleged that a joint statement was made by the parties on 22nd Nov. 1973. The petitioner also claimed that he was put in possession of Gat No. 622 on 31st Mar. 1974.

3. Respondent No. 1 alleging that the petitioner was interfering with his possession of the two survey numbers which, according to the petitioner, were allotted to him under the consolidation scheme, had filed a civil suit for injunction restraining the petitioner from interfering with his possession. No interim injunction was, however, granted to respondent No. 1. He failed to get a relief of injunction even in appeal against the order refusing to grant the injunction. Respondent No. 1 then made an application on 28th May 1974 which is to be found in the record which has been made available to us by the learned Assistant Government Pleader. He has made a grievance in that application against the scheme by which his land was being given to the petitioner and he has stated that no notice was given to him at the time when this arrangement was arrived at. He also further stated that the quality of the land was not taken into account at the time of making the scheme relating to the exchange of the land. He has stated that if an enquiry was made from him about this, he would have given the necessary facts. He further stated that his own land was more fertile and though the area of the land sought to be exchanged between the two parties was the same, he would still be seriously prejudiced because he would lose the land of good quality. According to respondent No. 1, the petitioner was a leader in the village and he was also a panch appointed to help the Consolidation Officer and, therefore, he has managed to take such land for himself as he wanted. It is on this application that the Settlement Commissioner acted after making the necessary enquiry and he has in the exercise of his power under S. 32 (1) of the Act varied the scheme, the effect of this variation being that the land of respondent No. 1 would be restored to him. This variation of the scheme was directed to be published by the Settlement Commissioner on 7th Oct. 1975. The notice dated 7th Oct. 1975 was issued to the Talathi by the Consolidation Officer asking him to publish the variation in the scheme by putting it on the notice board and by beat of drum. One of the reliefs claimed in the present petition is that this notice should be quashed. The petitioner has also prayed that the Settlement Commissioner must be restrained from taking steps for variation of the scheme which was finalised on 19th Mar. 1975.

4. The main challenge to the action taken by the Settlement Commissioner on the application filed by respondent No. 1 is that this action is beyond the powers conferred by S. 32 (1) of the Act. It is contended that merely because respondent No. 1 got land which was less fertile as a result of the scheme and the petitioner was allotted land which is more fertile, the scheme could not be interfered with because such an error is not within the provisions of S. 32 (1) of the Act so as to give jurisdiction to the Settlement Commissioner to exercise his power under that provision.

5. Before we deal with this contention, we may dispose of two other contentions which have been raised before us. One of the contentions raised is that when arriving at the decision to modify the scheme, the petitioner has not been heard and, therefore, the decision of the Settlement Commissioner to modify the scheme is in violation of the principles of natural justice.

6. Now, the only occasion on which under the law a person can raise an objection to the variation of the scheme is after the proposed amendment is published as contemplated by S. 32 (1) of the Act. S. 32 reads as follows:—

“(1) If after a scheme has come into force it appears to the Settlement Commissioner that the scheme is defective on account of an error (other than that referred to in S. 31A), irregularity or informality the Settlement Commissioner shall publish a draft of such variation in the prescribed manner. The draft variation shall state every amendment proposed to be made in the scheme.

(2) Within one month of the date of publication of the draft variation any person affected thereby may communicate in writing any objection to such variation to the Settlement Commissioner.

(3) After receiving the objections under sub-sec. (2) the Settlement Commissioner may, after making such enquiry as he may think fit, make the variation with or without modification or may not make any variation.

(3A) If the scheme is varied under sub-sec. (3), a notification stating that the scheme has been varied shall be published in the Official Gazette and the scheme so varied shall be published in the prescribed manner in the village or villages concerned.

(4) From the date of the notification stating that the scheme has been varied the variation shall take effect as if it were incorporated in the scheme.”

Under sub-sec. (1) it is provided that if it appears to the Settlement Commissioner after the scheme has come into force that the scheme is defective on account of an error other than the error referred to in S. 31A or irregularity or informality, he shall publish a draft of such variation in the prescribed manner and the draft variation has to state every amendment proposed to be made in the scheme. S. 31A deals with the power to correct clerical and arithmetical mistakes in the scheme. The error referred to in S. 32 (1) must, therefore, be different in nature from the clerical or arithmetical mistake or error arising from any accidental slip or omission referred to in S. 31A. Then under Section 31 (2) objection can be raised within one month of the date of publication of the draft variation by any person affected by the proposed amendment. These objections are required to be considered by the Settlement Commissioner and there is power given to the Settlement Commissioner to make such enquiry as he thinks fit and then to decide whether he will make a variation with or without modification or whether he will not make any variation at all.

7. The notice dated 7th Oct. 1975 which is now impugned in this petition is the notice requiring the scheme to be published and inviting objections. The petitioner was, therefore, entitled to object to the proposed variation at that stage alone. However, he has come to this Court even before the expiry of the 30 days' period referred to in S. 32 (2), though the record shows that later on he has filed on 26th Oct. 1975 certain objections which admittedly have not been decided possibly because of the pendency of this petition. The grievance that action has been taken by the Settlement Commissioner without hearing him is, therefore, premature because no final decision as contemplated by Section 32 (3) of the Act has been taken.

8. In the petition an averment has been made that respondent No. 1 is associated with one Mr. Ratnappa Kumbhar who was then a Minister for Civil Supplies and that he had threatened the petitioner that he would use good offices of the Minister to secure possession of Gat No. 622. Apart from this averment we are not able to see any material on record which would justify the grievance that the power under S. 32 (1) was exercised as a result of any outside interference as alleged. Indeed, as will be clear later, the case of respondent No. 1 has throughout been that the petitioner was never officially delivered possession of Gat No. 622 and that respondent No. 1 was never dispossessed and in any case, respondent No. 1 claims never to have taken possession of the substitute land allotted to him in lieu of Gat No. 622.

9. Coming to the main contention whether the Settlement Commissioner was justified in taking action under S. 32 (1) for variation of the scheme, though it was clear that he had not taken any final decision with regard to the proposed variation and really speaking respondent No. 1 was at liberty to canvass the matter before the Settlement Commissioner, since he has already raised objections, what has been urged before us on the authority of a decision of this Court in Devappa Parisa Darure v. Gangubai Satabai Bhau Darure (Special Civil Appln. No. 1592 of 1971 decided on 17th Apr. 1972) is that any difference in quality of the land allotted to different persons as a result of a scheme of consolidation did not furnish a ground for variation of the scheme under S. 32 (1) and, therefore, the entire proceedings must be quashed. The Division Bench of this Court has taken the view in the decision above referred to that mere difference in quality of land exchanged cannot be said to be an error or basis for treating the scheme as defective so as to permit the Settlement Commissioner to vary the scheme in exercise of his powers under S. 32 (1) of the Act. It cannot be disputed that having regard to the decision of the Division Bench, if the ground on which the scheme was being varied was that respondent No. 1 had been allotted land of inferior quality, the proceedings for variation of the scheme could not have been validly taken. What is, however, contended by respondent No. 1 both in his application made to the Settlement Commissioner on 28th May 1974 and in the return filed in this petition is that respondent No. 1 was given no notice as contemplated by S. 15A of the Act. It is also his contention that it was not correct that there was at any stage any agreement between the parties and, according to him, he was never in the picture at all when the draft scheme was made. According to the learned Counsel, the draft scheme itself is vitiated for non-compliance with the mandatory statutory requirements in S. 15A. Since the matter now goes to the root of jurisdiction of the authorities to frame the scheme, we are called upon to decide whether the original scheme itself is such that it was validly brought into being and if it was not validly brought into being, it would be open to the Settlement Commissioner to undo the effect of such a scheme by variation thereof which would only mean that the status quo was being restored.

10. Having gone through the record, we are not satisfied in this case that the original scheme was made and published in compliance with the provisions of the Act. The averment made by the petitioner that the original scheme as a result of which land belonging to respondent No. 1 was allotted to the petitioner with the consent of respondent No. 1 is not only denied by respondent No. 1, but it is negatived by the documents in the original record. The original record relating to this consolidation in question shows that the Consolidation Officer has recorded statements of the villagers. On page 37 of the compilation of the statements among the names of the persons making the statements, at serial No. 4 is the name of respondent No. 1 and at serial No. 3 is the name of the petitioner. These statements state that these persons and the three other persons whose names are recorded therein agree to the formation of the Gat specified in that statement and further agree that these Gats were formed after taking into account the area, land revenue and the production capacity and the quality of the land. It contains a statement that these Gats have thus been made by them and that they are not disadvantageous to anybody and there is no grievance about the fixation of the Gats. The averment made in the petition is that respondent No. 1 is a party to this agreement. The original record, however, shows that while three of the five persons have signed this, respondent No. 1 has not signed. Now, the case of respondent No. 1 is that he was not given notice as required by S. 15A of the Act and that all the proceedings have been taken behind his back.

11. Now, S. 15A of the Act which deals with the procedure for preparation of a scheme and principles to be followed in its preparation reads as follows:—

“(1) The Consolidation Officer shall, after giving due notice to the land owners concerned and the village committee, visit each of the concerned villages, and shall, in consultation with the village committee, proceed to prepare a scheme for the consolidation of holdings which shall include such statements, records and maps as may be prescribed.

(2) In preparing the scheme, the Consolidation Officer shall have regard to the procedure which the State Government may from time to time prescribe in regard to the number of blocks in which the village lands are to be grouped, the manner of allotting new plots to each owner, the recommendations of the village committee and such other matters as may be prescribed."

A bare reading of the provisions of S. 15A will show that the Consolidation Officer must visit each of the concerned villages and he has to proceed to prepare a scheme in consultation with the village committee for the consolidation of holdings. S. 15A further requires that the Consolidation Officer must give due notice to the land owners concerned and the village committee. S. 15A is no doubt a procedural provision, but it casts an obligation on the Consolidation Officer statutorily to give sufficient notice to the land owners before he visits the village. The visit to the village is intended for the Consolidation Officer to personally collect the necessary data. It is implicit in the provisions of S. 15A that before any scheme is made, the villagers have to be heard. A villager is entitled to put his point of view before the Consolidation Officer as to how his field or land should be dealt with and whether it should be included in the one Gat or the other and further whether any land which is intended to be allotted to him compares favourably with the land which is owned by him and which may as a result of a scheme of consolidation be allotted to some other person. The very basis of the scheme, therefore, is to be prepared by the Consolidation Officer after recording the views of the land owner concerned. It is clear from the provisions of S. 15A that the legislature contemplated that a land belonging to a land owner will not be affected by the scheme unless he is personally given notice of the enquiry. This provision is obviously made with a view to safeguard the interest of the land owner so as to enable him to put before the Consolidation Officer all the necessary information in relation to his land and to know his point of view in respect of land which is likely to be allotted to him. It is difficult to imagine how a scheme concerning land belonging to the land owner to whom no notice has been given can really be said to be a scheme properly made in compliance with the statutory provisions of S. 15A at least in so far as it affects him. The pre-conditions, therefore, for preparing a draft scheme is individual notice to the land owner and if such notice has not been given, the scheme so far as he is concerned cannot be said to have been made in compliance with the provisions of law. There is nothing on the record to show that any such personal notice was given to respondent No. 1.

12. It also appears to us on perusal of the record that the publication of the draft scheme has not been made according to law. S. 19 of the Act provides that when a scheme of consolidation is ready for publication, the Consolidation Officer shall publish a draft thereof in the prescribed manner in the village or villages concerned and any person likely to be affected by such a scheme may within 30 days of the date of such publication communicate in writing to the Consolidation Officer any objections relating to the draft scheme.

13. An argument was advanced on behalf of the petitioner by Mr. Mhamane that respondent No. 1 has failed to take advantage of this provision and since he has not objected to the draft scheme, his grievance that there is any error in the draft scheme should be rejected.

14. Now, when we go through of this publication, it presents a rather an unusual look. A notice under Rule 14 Form I in the printed form is on record. That notice is dated 1st Feb. 1974. That notice states that the draft scheme is published at the Chawdi on 2nd Feb. 1974 and any person who has any objection to that scheme should submit it on or before 3rd Feb. 1974. S. 19 statutorily provides for a period of 30 days before the scheme is finalised. The original notice shows that the date 3-3-1974 has been altered to 3-2-1974. When we went through the rest of the record, we found that there were two other true copies of this notice certified to be true signed by the Assistant Consolidation Officer, Shirol, where it has expressly been stated that the date for receipt of objection is 3-2-74. These true copies are also on the printed forms where blanks have been filled up. Now, if this is the state of the record, the only inference that we can draw is that assuming that the scheme was published on 2nd Feb. only one day's time has been granted by the Consolidation Officer for the necessary objections. This is itself in utter violation of the statutory provisions of Section 19. The record, therefore, discloses serious lapses on the part of the Consolidation Officer, which have clearly affected the rights of respondent No. 1. It is not necessary for us to go into the contentions raised by Mr. Naik appearing on behalf of respondent No. 1 that the petitioner was himself a member of the village committee appointed to assist the Consolidation Officer and he has, therefore, so manipulated consolidation that the land of good quality belonging to respondent No. 1 was allotted to himself. The errors in the procedure which we have pointed out above were, in our view, sufficient to create a serious infirmity in the consolidation scheme so far as at least respondent No. 1 was concerned. If in these circumstances the Settlement Commissioner has thought it fit to exercise his powers under Section 32 (1), it is hardly possible to argue that the exercise of the powers is without jurisdiction.

15. In the view which we have taken, we must dismiss the petition. The petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Rule discharged.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 216

DHARMADHIKARI AND

BHONSALE, JJ.

Hindurao Balwant Patil and another, Petitioners v. Krishnarao Parshuram Patil and others, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 1791 and 1574 of 1981, D/- 7-7-1981.

Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960. (24 of 1961), S. 73G (2) — Removal of Chairman or Vice-Chairman by vote of no confidence — In absence of rule or bye-law Managing Committee has no such inherent or implied power — Such power cannot also be claimed under S. 16 of General Clauses Act — Absence of such power cannot be said to be violative of Art. 19 (1) (c) of the Constitution, (General Clauses Act (1897), S. 16; Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (c).)

Section 73 in specific terms lays down the powers and functions which could be exercised by the members of the board of directors. Apart from the powers and the duties conferred or imposed by the Act, rules and the bye-laws as a member of board of directors, a member has no further right or power. Board of directors is itself a creation of statute. An election held to the said board and the right conferred upon the members to elect office bearers is also a creation of the same statute. The statute has created a right and has also imposed restrictions. The Act, rules and the bye-laws do not confer any right upon the members of the Board of Directors to remove the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman by passing a mere vote of no confidence. Therefore it will not be proper to confer such a wider power upon the board of directors by taking recourse to the doctrine of implied or inherent power.

A right to contest the election and the right to move for setting aside an election or right to recall the person already elected are not common law rights. These rights must be conferred by the statute and therefore can be enforced only in accordance with and subject to the conditions laid down therein by the statute concerned. The right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (c) is a fundamental right common to all citizens. It is a right which can be enjoyed by all and everybody. This has no reference to the right conferred or created by a particular statute. (Para 10)

The Co-operative Societies Act has been enacted having regard to the directive principles of the State policy as enshrined in the Constitution of India. Co-operative movement is a socio-economic and moral movement. To say the least it is a part of the scheme of decentralisation and deconcentration of power. Collective power intoxication cannot be equated with co-operation. In the very nature of the said movement it must not be only self-regulated but the constraints and restraints are inherent in the movement itself. The rights conferred or created by the statute are coupled with duty. Fixity of tenure helps proper administration and management of the society. Co-operative movement cannot be permitted to be polluted or choked by internal or individual strike nor it can be permitted to be polluted by party politics. Whenever the legislature thought that a person is not fit to continue as a member of the board, specific provisions are made for his removal. A person is elected as Chairman or Vice-Chairman for a particular term. His office is controlled by the provisions of the Act. It is not an office at will and therefore, to such an office S. 16 of the General Clauses Act cannot apply. AIR 1957 Raj 134 Rel. on. (Para 9)

By importing the doctrine of implied and inherent power or right to recall, the members of the board cannot be permitted to do indirectly what they are not permitted to do directly under any of the provisions of the Act, rules or the bye-laws. Power to recall is not inherent in the electorate. Therefore, in the absence of such a power it was not open to the members of the Board of Directors to remove the Chairman or the Vice-Chairman by passing a mere resolution of vote of no confidence. In W. P. No. 1791 of 1981, Y. R. Naik, for Petitioners; Caveat and V. P. filed by P. M. Pradhan, for Respondents Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6 to 10.

In W. P. No. 1574 of 1981, M. V. Paranjape with P. M. Pradhan, for Petitioners; S. G. Deshmukh Asst. Govt. Pleader (for No. 1), Dr. B. R. Naik with Y. R. Naik. (for No. 2) for Respondents.

DHARMADHIKARI, J.:—As in both these petitions, common questions of law and fact are involved, they were heard together and are being disposed of by this common judgment. Shree Dudhganga Vedganga Sahakari Sakhar Karkhana Limited (hereinafter referred to as the Society) is a registered co-operative society registered under the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). In the year 1973 the said society was declared as the specified society under Sec. 73G of the Act. On 5-11-1976 the bye-laws of the society were amended.

2. In April 1979 the present board of directors was elected and petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 in writ petition No. 1791 of 1981, i.e. Hindurao and Shankarrao, were elected as Chairman and Vice-Chairman respectively. These elections were held as per the procedure prescribed under Chapter XIA of the Act. On 19th of May 1981 a notice was issued by the Managing Director of the Society to convene a meeting of the Board of Directors on 27th of May 1981 for passing a vote of no confidence against the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman. It appears from the record that on 21st of May 1981 petitioner Shankarrao filed a dispute under Sec. 91 of the Act with the Regional Deputy Director of Sugar, Kolhapur, challenging the notice dated 19-5-1981 issued for convening the meeting for passing a vote of no confidence. In the said dispute the authority concerned did not pass any interim orders. Hence on 27th May 1981 a resolution expressing a vote of no confidence was passed by the majority of the members of the board against the Chairman as well as the Vice-Chairman. On 28th May 1981 the petitioners moved the Regional Deputy Director of Sugar for interim relief. But the said application was rejected and, therefore, the dispute itself was withdrawn as it had become infructuous. Thereafter a notice was issued by the Managing Director of the Society for convening a meeting on 6th of June 1981. Petitioner No. 2 Shankarrao filed a second dispute with the Regional Director of Sugar, Pune obviously under Sec. 91 of the Act praying inter alia for an order of prohibition restraining the Board of Directors from electing a new Chairman and Vice-Chairman. The said dispute was referred to the Co-operative Court No. 2 by the Director of Sugar vide order dated 3rd of June 1981. On 4th June 1981 an ad interim injunction was granted by Co-operative Court and it further directed that a notice should be issued to the opponents who had filed caveat returnable on 5th June 1981. Thereafter the case was adjourned for 6th June 1981. In the meantime petitioner Shankarrao approached the Co-operative Appellate Court and obtained an ex parte injunction restraining the respondents from holding the meeting. In view of this appellate order, earlier order passed by the Co-operative Court refusing the injunction was kept in suspension. Thereafter the respondents filed a writ petition before this Court bearing writ petition No. 1574 of 1981 and obtained an ex parte stay order on 8th June 1981. On 12 June 1981 petitioner Shankarrao applied for vacating the interim relief. On the statement made by the learned Counsel for the other side that the elections of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman will not be held, till 16th June, the matter was adjourned. Ultimately when the matter came up before us on 17th June 1981 we admitted the petition and issued rule returnable on 3-7-1981. During the course of the hearing at the admission stage itself both the parties have put in writing the question of law, which is involved in this petition, namely:—

"Whether in the absence of any provision in the Act, rules or the bye-laws of the Society, managing committee can pass a resolution of no confidence against the Chairman and Vice-Chairman before expiry of their term?"

3. The parties also agreed that during the pendency of this petition fresh elections will not be held. Therefore, the only question which requires consideration in these writ petitions is to find out whether in the absence of any provision in the Act, rules or the bye-laws of the Co-operative Society, the managing committee can pass a resolution of no confidence against the Chairman or Vice-Chairman. This is the only question which is argued before us. It is not disputed before us that so far as the present Society is concerned, there is no provision even in the bye-laws which confers a right upon the members of the Managing Committee to pass a no confidence motion against the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman. Dr. Naik, learned Counsel appearing for the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman has contended before us that the Managing Committee is to be elected under Sec. 73G of the Act and under sub-sec. (2) of the said section, the members of the managing committee have a right to hold the office for a period of five years from the date on which the first meeting is held. The term of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman is co-extensive with the term of the members of the committee. Since in this case the elections to the managing committee were held in the year 1976 in the absence of any provision to the contrary, the petitioners viz, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Society have a right to continue in office till expiry of the said term of five years. According to Dr. Naik the bye-laws of the society provide for constitution of the managing committee, including as to how the election of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman is to be held. Though in the model bye-laws framed by the Co-operative department, a provision is made for passing a vote of no confidence against the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman under bye-law No. 34 (d), the said bye-law was not approved by the Registrar, of the Co-operative Societies so far as the present society is concerned. Therefore, apart from the fact that there is no provision in the bye-laws or the Act or the rules to enable the members of the board to pass a resolution of no confidence against the Chairman or Vice-Chairman, in fact so far as the present society is concerned, though the society initially had framed such a bye-law and had submitted it to the Registrar under Sec. 13 of the Act, the said amendment was not approved by the Registrar. The order passed by the Registrar rejecting the said part of the bye-law is final as the said order was not challenged by any member of the society. Shri Naik further contended that in view of the provisions of Sec. 73 of the Act, the bye-laws framed by the society in this behalf have the force of law or in any case are binding upon its members. Therefore, the said bye-laws are also binding upon the respondents. As in the bye-laws no provision is made for passing a resolution of no confidence against the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman the resolution passed on 27th May 1981 is illegal and ultra vires of the powers of the members of the Board and therefore cannot result in removal of the Chairman or the Vice-Chairman. As the said resolution passed in the meeting D/- 27th May 1981 is ab initio void there is no vacancy so far as the offices of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman are concerned, which could be filled in by holding fresh election. In support of his contention, Shri Naik has relied upon the decisions of various High Courts in Lambha Mandali v. Dist. Registrar, Co-op. Societies (1973) 14 Guj LR 786; Kanta Devi v. State of Rajasthan AIR 1957 Raj 134, Jahangir Bhikaji v. Corporation of City of Nagpur, 1960 Nag LJ 99. In substance it is the contention of Shri Naik that in the absence of such a specific provision the members of the Board of Directors have no inherent or implied power to remove the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman by passing a resolution of vote of no confidence.

4. On the other hand, it is contended by Shri Paranjape, learned Counsel appearing for contesting respondents that every citizen has a right to form an association with all the components of this right and the said right with its components is guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India, of course subject to permissible limits. As a necessary consequence of this, after formation of association a citizen has a further right to assemble peaceably under Article 19 (1) (b). After assembling a citizen has a further right to discuss, to express his opinion and pass a resolution which will be collective expression of the opinion or the decision of the members present and participating in the discussion. These members can exercise these rights for practising any profession or for carrying on any occupation, trade or business. Right to form an association does not end with mere formation of association. But as a necessary implication of this right citizens have a further right to manage affairs of the association. According to Shri Paranjape all these rights flow from biological evolution of human species as gregarious animal. Man is a social animal and a social being and, therefore apart from the provisions of the Constitution he has a natural right to assemble and to form an association. Shri Paranjape further contended that any provision made in the enactment for the purposes of regulating any of these rights will have to be construed in the background of this natural right and so construed both the sub-sections of S. 73G as well as bye-law 34 (d) merely lays down outer limit, known as a term of office, which will have to be construed to mean, that the elected body will not continue in office beyond the period of five years and it will not be necessary to hold election or to make appointments earlier. According to Shri Paranjape the term prescribed only prescribes an outer limit and does not control the fundamental right of a citizen guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (a), (b), (c) and (g) of the Constitution. Shri Paranjape also contended that if the said provisions are not read or construed as contended by him, the restriction incorporated in the said provision will be violative of the members' fundamental right and is not saved by any of the clauses of Art. 19. He also contended that all these provisions will have to be construed in the light of the subject matter of the legislation and the object sought to be achieved. Shri Paranjape has also contended that the members of the Board who have power to elect Chairman and the Vice-Chairman have also an implied and inherent power to remove them by passing a resolution of vote of no confidence, because in the very nature of things if these office bearers are to function properly, they must enjoy confidence of the members of the board. The moment they lose this confidence, they must vacate the office. He has also contended that the members of the Board had an implied right to pass such a resolution because they have a right to elect the office bearers. Thus, the board is appointing authority of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman and they have an inherent right to remove them on the basis of the principle incorporated in Sec. 16 of the General Clauses Act. In support of his contentions Shri Paranjape has placed reliance upon the decision of the Supreme Court in M/s. Heckett Engineering Co. v. Their Workmen, AIR 1977 SC 2257; Manton v. Brighton Corporation, (1957) 2 All ER 101 and Damayanti v. Union of India, AIR 1971 SC 966.

5. Shri Sawant, learned Additional Government Pleader appearing for the State has supported the contention of Shri Naik viz, that in absence of any provision conferring a power to pass a vote of no confidence, the board of Directors had no power to pass such a resolution and, therefore, the impugned resolution is illegal and void.

6. For properly appreciating the controversy raised before us, it will be worthwhile if a reference is made to some of the relevant provisions of the Act. From the preamble of the Act it is quite clear that with a view to providing for orderly development of the co-operative movement in the State in accordance with the relevant directive principles of the State policy enunciated in the Constitution of India the said Act was enacted by the State legislature. This Act provides for registration of the Society by making a necessary provision in Chapter II, Sec. 6 of the Act provides for conditions of registration. An application for registration is contemplated by Sec. 8 and then Sec. 9 confers a power upon the Registrar to register the Society together with its bye-laws. Sec. 13 deals with the amendment of the bye-laws. Chapter III deals with the members and their rights and liabilities. Sec. 23 lays down that no society without sufficient cause can refuse admission to a member who is otherwise duly qualified therefor. A right of appeal is also conferred upon an aggrieved person if such an admission is refused and the order of the Registrar in appeal is made final. Sec. 36 deals with incorporation of the society and then in Chapter VII provisions are made for the management of the Societies. Sec. 72 lays down that subject to the provisions of the Act and the Rules, final authority of every society shall vest in the general body of the members. Then comes Sec. 73 which reads as under:—

"73. The management of every society shall vest in a committee, constituted in accordance with the Act, the rules and the bye-laws, which shall exercise such powers and perform such duties as may be conferred or imposed respectively by this Act, the rules and the bye-laws."

Thus it is clear that Supreme Body is the General Body and managing committee can exercise only those powers which are conferred upon it by law.

7. Sec. 73G makes a provision for conduct of elections to the committees, and of officers of specified societies, and the term of office of members of such committees. The said section reads as under:

"73G. (1) The election of the members of the committees and the officers by the committees, of the societies of the categories mentioned below shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XIA and shall be conducted in the manner laid down by or under that Chapter:—

(i) Such Apex Co-operative Institutions which the State Government may by general or special order published in the Official Gazette, from time to time, specify in this behalf, regard being had to the financial position and share capital of such institution;

(ii) all District Central Co-operative Banks;

(iii) all Primary Land Development Banks;

(iv) (a) all District Co-operative sale and purchase organisations;

(b) all Taluka Co-operative sale and purchase organisations;

(v) all co-operative spinning Mills;

(vii) any other societies or class of societies which the State Government may by general or special order published in the Official Gazette, from time to time, specify in this behalf, regard being had to the financial position and share capital of such institutions.

(2) When the election of all the members of the committee of any such society is held at the same time, the members elected to the committee at such general election shall hold office for a period of five years from the date on which the first meeting is held and shall continue in office until immediately before the first meeting of members of new committee.

(3) Notwithstanding anything in the bye-laws of any such society, only the committee of management shall be elected by a general body of members of the society; and all other committees authorised by or under the bye-laws may be constituted only by electing or appointing of persons from among the persons who are members of the committee of management and all such committees shall be sub-committees of the committee of management and shall be subordinate to it."

8. The bye-laws of the Society provide for the procedure for the election of the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman. Therefore, it is quite clear that the Act is a regulatory piece of legislation which deals with the rights, obligations and duties of the members of the Registered society. In this case we are not concerned with the rights of the members of the Society as such, but we are only concerned with the rights of a member of the Board of Directors. The members of the board of directors are elected as per the procedure prescribed by Chap. XIA of the Act which was inserted by Maharashtra Act No. XXVII of 1971. The elections are held under the control of the Collector. The Committee referred to in Chap. XIA of the Act is the same as that of the Board of Directors. Therefore, if the relevant provisions of the Act as well as the bye-laws are read with Sec. 73 of the Act, it is quite clear that the Board of Directors is to be constituted in accordance with the Act, Rules and the bye-laws and the said Board of Directors can exercise such powers and perform such duties as may be conferred or imposed respectively by the Act, Rules or the bye-laws. Bye-law 34 of the present society lays down that the Board of Directors will be entitled to elect Chairman and the Vice-Chairman from amongst themselves in the first meeting of the Board. Bye-law 34 (c) also makes a provision for passing of a resolution of vote of no confidence against the Board of Directors by the general body. As already observed the provision made in the model bye-law regarding passing a vote of no confidence against the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman is not incorporated in the bye-laws of the Society. It is neither disputed nor can it be disputed that these bye-laws are binding on the members of the Society. Sec. 73G (2) lays down that the members elected on the committee viz. the board of directors shall hold office for a period of five years. According to Shri Paranjape the persons who have right to elect the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman have got inherent or implied power to remove them in case of loss of confidence. In this context he has also placed reliance on the provisions of the General Clauses Act. From the bare reading of the provisions of the General Clauses Act, it is quite clear that Sec. 16 of the Act cannot apply to an elective office. Various provisions of the Act do not prohibit a citizen from exercising his right guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (c) of the Constitution, nor it prohibits a citizen from assembling or participating in the discussion. Law merely prescribes conditions which must be observed if he wants to become a member of the Society or the board of Directors. Right to stand as a candidate or contest election is not a common law right. It is a special right created by the statute and can only be exercised on the condition and in the manner laid down or prescribed by the enactment concerned. The Chapter dealing with the fundamental right has no bearing on such a right which is a creation of statute itself. The petitioner has no fundamental right to elect Chairman or Vice-Chairman. That right is a creation of the Act itself. If the right itself is created by the statute, then obviously it is subject to the conditions as laid down by the statute. It is no doubt true that many a time term of the office is prescribed by the statute so as to provide for the outer limit. But at the same time the term of office is also prescribed to give a security of tenure to enable the office bearers to carry on the management of the society effectively and efficiently, in the interest of the society as a whole. If no term is prescribed and the tenure is permitted to be controlled by the whims of the members, then management of the society will become difficult if not impossible. This does not mean that a licence is granted to the office bearers to act in any way they like. Apart from the right to resign from the post, Sec. 78 confers a power coupled with duty, upon the Registrar to remove the committee or its members, if in the opinion of the Registrar the committee of the society or any member of such committee persistently makes a default or is negligent in the performance of his duty or commits any act, which is prejudicial to the interest of the society or disobeys the direction, etc. Section 144-E and R. 58 of the Rules provide for the disqualification for being elected or for being a member of the committee of any specified society. Section 144G also deals with disqualification for failure to lodge accounts of election expenses. This is not the end of the matter. Even bye-law 37 of the bye-laws of the Society provides for the disqualifications for continuing as member of the Board of Directors. A provision is also made by bye-law 34 (c) for passing a vote of no confidence against the whole of the Board of Directors by the general body. Therefore, the legislature in its wisdom has made various provisions for the removal of the members of the Board. Thus, the term of office prescribed by Sec. 73G is not wholly unqualified or unconditional. The legislature has not chosen to make any provision for passing a vote of no confidence against the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman either in the Act or in the Rules. Such a provision could have been made by the society by framing necessary bye-laws. But in the present case such a provision is not made or to be precise, though suggested the said proposal was turned down by the Registrar by a specific order. Even the provision made in this behalf in the model bye-laws if read as a whole, it is quite clear that the right conferred by the said model bye-law is also conditional one. It prescribes for special majority for passing such a resolution. It also lays down time limit within which such a resolution is to be moved as well as the period of notice for such a meeting.

9. As observed by the Full Bench of the Delhi High Court in Suraj Prakash v. State of Punjab, AIR 1968 Delhi 30 (at p. 41):

"Being presumably conscious of the subtle corrupting effect of power, the Legislature has fixed this time limit of three years with a desire to insulate the democratic set-up from power intoxication. History all over the world shows that, again and again, men put in power for temporary periods seek, for some new reasons to retain it. Craving for power is an appetite which grows most with what it feeds upon. It is for this very reason that democracy has in its practical wisdom sought to make its own tenure of power temporary and to hedge its exercise with limitations and restrictions. These elements seem to constitute the essential prerequisites of a true democratic set up. The limitation placed on the life of the members of a municipal Committee seems to be inspired by this democratic instinctive foresight on the part of the legislature."

It cannot be forgotten that the Co-operative Societies Act has been enacted having regard to the directive principles of the State policy as enshrined in the Constitution of India. Co-operative movement is a socio-economic and moral movement. To say the least it is a part of the scheme of decentralisation and deconcentration of power. Collective power intoxication cannot be equated with co-operation. In the very nature of the said movement it must not be only self-regulated but the constraints and restraints are inherent in the movement itself. The rights conferred or created by the statute are coupled with duty. Fixity of tenure helps proper administration and management of the society. Co-operative movement cannot be permitted to be polluted or choked by internal or individual strike nor it can be permitted to be polluted by party politics. Co-operative capitalism despotism is not co-operation. On the other hand co-operation is a substitute for self interest of an individual or a group of individuals for the benefit of whole community. Therefore, if the society itself while framing and adopting its own code of conduct in the form of bye-laws, which are to be duly approved by the Registrar, has not made any provision for removal of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman by passing a vote of no confidence, it cannot be said that the step taken by the Society or Registrar in that behalf is not a regulatory one nor is in the interest of the society or the general public. The so-called mandate theory cannot be pushed to ridiculous extremes to convert co-operative movement into an arena or akhada of power politics. Whenever the legislature thought that a person is not fit to continue as a member of the board, specific provisions are made for his removal. A person is elected as Chairman or Vice-Chairman for a particular term. His office is controlled by the provisions of the Act. It is not an office at will and therefore, to such an office Section 16 of the General Clauses Act cannot apply. It is not necessary to deal with this aspect of the matter in detail in view of the decision of this Court in Jehangir Bhikaji v. Corporation of City of Nagpur, 1960 Nag LJ 99. A similar view seems to have been taken by the Rajasthan High Court in Kanta Devi v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1957 Raj 134.

10. So far as the contentions raised by Shri Paranjape based on the provisions of Art. 19 (1) (c) of the Constitution are concerned, it is not possible for us to accept any of these contentions. In substance it is contended by Shri Paranjape that a person who has a right to form an association and to elect the office-bearers has a component right to remove them in case of loss of confidence. As already observed, the right to contest the election and the right to move for setting aside an election or right to recall the person already elected are not common law rights. These rights must be conferred by the statute and therefore can be enforced only in accordance with and subject to the conditions laid down therein by the statute concerned. The right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (c) is a fundamental right common to all citizens. It is a right which can be enjoyed by all and everybody. This has no reference to the right conferred or created by a particular statute. As already observed S. 73 in specific terms lays down the powers and functions which could be exercised by the members of the board of directors. Apart from the powers and the duties conferred or imposed by the Act, rules and the bye-laws on a member of the board of directors, a member has no further right or power. Board of directors is itself a creation of statute. An election held to the said board and the right conferred upon the member to elect office bearers is also a creation of the same statute. The statute has created a right and has also imposed restrictions. The Act, rules and the bye-laws do not confer any right upon the members of the Board of Directors to remove the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman by passing a mere vote of no confidence. Therefore it will not be proper to confer such a wider power upon the board of directors by taking recourse to the doctrine of implied or inherent power.

11. It is no doubt true that in Manton v. Brighton Corporation, (1951) 2 All Eng. R. 101 it is held that the term prescribed is an outer limit. But it cannot be forgotten that Sec. 73G not only lays down the term of office but also lays down the time from which it commences as well as its outer limit. Apart from the term of five years, it further lays down that the committee shall continue in office until the new incumbents are elected. The decision in M/s. Heckett Engineering Co. v. Their Workmen, AIR 1977 SC 2257 is of little assistance while dealing with the question raised before us, which relates to the elective office created and controlled by the enactment itself.

12. Another decision upon which reliance is placed by Shri Paranjape viz. Damayanti Naranga v. Union of India, AIR 1971 SC 966 is also distinguishable and cannot be applied to the facts and circumstances of the present case. In that case the Supreme Court was concerned with the question of involuntary composition of the association viz. foisting members upon an association. The said decision is subsequently distinguished and explained by the Supreme Court in D. A. College, Jullunder v. State of Punjab, AIR 1971 SC 1737. While distinguishing the said decision the Supreme Court has observed as under (at p. 1747):

"A reference has been made to recent case of Smt. Damayanti Naranga v. Union of India W. P. No. 91 of 1964, D/-23-2-1971: (AIR 1971 SC 966) that a compulsory affiliation by statute would interfere with the right of association. This argument in our view is untenable because in that case Parliament passed a law under entry 63 of List II of Sch. VII to the Constitution under which a Hindi Sammelan was to be constituted which was to consist of the first members of the Hindi Sammelan registered under the Societies Registration Act and all persons who become members thereof in accordance with the rules in that behalf. This statutory Sammelan was constituted as a body corporate the first members of which were to consist of persons who immediately before the appointed day were life members of the society, had been Presidents of the society or were awarded the Mangla Prasad Paritoshik by the Society. There were also other provisions by which the Hindi Sammelan Society, its constitution as well as its property was affected. In these circumstances it was held that the Act in so far as it interferes with the composition of the Society in constituting the sammelan violated the rights of the original members of the society to form an association guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (c). No such thing was intended or effected by Sec. 5 of the Act. At any rate the D. A. V. college Trust and Management Society is not being interfered with by any attempt to form an association with the University. We can see no infringement of Art. 19 (1) (c)." In this context reference can usefully be made to the following decisions:

Kamareddy Suryanarayana v. District Co-operative Officer, AIR 1976 Andh Pra 340 (FB), Peddanaickenpalayam Co-operative Agricultural Bank Ltd. v. Govt. of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1979 Mad 241; Brij Gopal Denga v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 Madh Pra 173 and H. Puttappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1978 Kant 148 (FB).

13. The posts of Chairman and Vice Chairman are creation of the statute. It's election and power and duties are circumscribed or conditioned by the provisions of the Act, rules and bye-laws. The bye-laws lay down a code of conduct or self-discipline adopted by the Society. Therefore, it cannot be said that only because the members themselves have chosen not to make any provisions for passing a vote of no confidence or have resolved by framing bye-laws that the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman shall continue in office for a specified term subject to the other provisions of the Act, rules or the bye-laws it cannot be said that the fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (c) is being violated in any way. The provisions of the Act, rules and the bye-laws are regulatory in nature and amount to reasonable restrictions in the interest of the society as well as general public.

14. The decision reported in N. Venkatratnam Naidu v. District Collector, Nellore, AIR 1972 Andh Pra 349 wherein it was held that there is an inherent right to pass a vote of no confidence, is overruled by the larger Bench of the same High Court in N. Venkata Narayan v. District Deputy Collector, ILR (1975) Andh Pra 242 and in our opinion rightly. Therefore it is not necessary to deal with the said decision in detail.

15. However, it was faintly argued by Shri Paranjape that the local authorities or Corporations created by the statutes stand on a different footing, whereas a co-operative society is a voluntary association and, therefore, the principle applicable to the said authorities is not applicable to a body like a co-operative society. In our opinion this contention is also not well founded. The Act contemplates registration of the society. Registration of the society is subject to fulfilment of certain conditions including framing of the bye-laws. After registration such a society is treated a body corporate under Sec. 36 of the Act. Therefore to some extent the society registered under the Act stands on a different footing than an unregistered or an ordinary organisation.

16. It was then contended by Shri Paranjape that if the managing committee is to function properly, the confidence in the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman is a must and the loss of confidence must result in their eviction from the office. In our opinion this is not the whole truth. Whimsical removal of the office bearers at any time without rhyme or reason is bound to result in uncertainty and if the office bearers have to depend for their tenure solely on the whims of members of the board, then instead of managing the society and its affairs, they will have to spend their whole time in managing the members of the board only. This is hardly in the interest of co-operative movement and, therefore, if for regulating its own affairs by framing necessary bye-laws in its wisdom, the Registrar and the society thought it fit not to make such a provision, then it cannot be said that it is any way bad in law. It is a conscious act of the society as well as the Registrar and is not merely accidental slip or omission. In this context it cannot be forgotten that ultimately the final authority in the matter of management of the society vests in the general body of members and not in the board of directors. By the bye-law 34 (c) the power is conferred upon the general body to pass a vote of no confidence against the board of Directors. There are other provisions in the Act, Rules and the bye-laws dealing with disqualifications and the removal of the members, which are sufficient to protect the society from mismanagement etc.

17. Further an unhampered, unconditional and uncontrolled power to remove office bearers without any rhyme or reason is bound to affect the management and the homogeneity of the society. Therefore, in all modern legislations specific provisions are made for regulating this right to remove the office bearers by passing a vote of no confidence. Such a regulation of rights is also contemplated by the model bye-laws. The amendment to the bye-laws proposed by the society, which was not approved by the Registrar, also provided for a regulatory procedure, including a notice as well as special majority etc. The order passed by the Registrar refusing approval to the proposed amendment to the bye-law has become final and is binding on the respondents who are members of the Society. Now they cannot get over the said finality by importing the doctrine of implied or inherent power though it is open to them to move for the amendment of the bye-laws over again. In the absence of such an amendment they cannot claim any wider, unregulated and uncontrolled right in this behalf. In the absence of any such power in the bye-laws by necessary implication, it will have to be held that the members of the Board are prohibited and debarred from exercising any such right or power.

18. In this context it cannot be forgotten that the Chairman or the Vice Chairman, though ejected by the members of the Board, become office bearers of the society as a whole after their election. They have a right to continue in office for five years which term is co-extensive with the term of the committee or the board of directors. The enactment itself provides for the removal of the members under certain circumstances only. When law has made specific provision in this behalf, it will not be open to adopt some other procedure to achieve the same object. By importing the doctrine of implied and inherent power or right to recall, the members of the board cannot be permitted to do indirectly what they are not permitted to do directly under any of the provisions of the Act, rules or the bye-laws. Power to recall is not inherent in the electorate. Therefore, in the absence of such a power it was not open to the members of the Board of Directors to remove the Chairman or the Vice Chairman by passing a mere resolution of vote of no confidence. In the result, therefore, the resolution of no confidence passed against the petitioners is set aside, it being ultra vires of the power of the members of the Board. As a necessary consequence of this, the Chairman and the Vice Chairman are entitled to continue in office for the unexpired period of their tenure, obviously subject to the other provisions of the Act, rules and the bye-laws.

19. However, before parting with this case, we might observe that this is a case wherein the meeting for passing the vote of no confidence was already held and the resolution is also passed by the majority of the members of the Board. Thus, the petitioners very well knew that they no longer enjoy the confidence of the Board. In these circumstances the petitioners should well consider whether they should resign from the posts. Moreso in view of the well established conventions of public life as well as of the co-operative movement which is based on mutual trust,

20. In the result, therefore, writ petition No. 1791 of 1981 will have to be allowed. Hence the Rule is made absolute in the said petition. As a necessary consequence of this writ petition No. 1574 of 1981 is liable to be dismissed. Hence the Rule is discharged in the said petition. However, in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs in both these writ petitions.

Order accordingly.

MASODKAR AND BHARUCHA, JJ.

The State of Maharashtra, Appellant v. Ganpatrao Amritrao Deshpande (deceased by L. Rs.), Respondent.

First Appeal No. 567 of 1976, D/- 23-2-1982.

Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), Section 23 (1) — Determination of compensation in respect of land used for non-agricultural purposes and held on restricted tenure governed by Sec. 4 (2) of Bombay Pargana and Kulkarni Watans Abolition Act, 1950, and Govt. Resolution D/- 18-8-1953 — Compensation must only be determined by finding out what a willing purchaser will pay, knowing it to bear the restriction. AIR 1972 Guj 189 (Pt. A), Diss. from. Decision of Jahagirdar and Mody, JJ. in Appeal No. 747 of 1973, D/- 15-9-1981 (Bom) Not Followed in view of earlier decisions in Appeal No. 502 of 1969 D/- 2-9-1976 (Bom) by Kantawala, C. J. and Sawant J. AIR 1981 Bom 439 and AIR 1968 SC 1045. (Bombay Pargana and Kulkarni Watans Abolition Act (60 of 1950), Sec. 4 (2).)

Section 23 (1), firstly, of the Act requires that in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land that is acquired its market value at the date of publication of the notification under Sec. 4 shall be taken into consideration. The measure of that market value is what a willing purchaser might reasonably pay for the land. To assess market value resort must be had to well recognised principles of valuation which would be instances of sale of comparable lands situated in the vicinity and the opinions of experts. It is, therefore, not open to the authority determining compensation to reduce the market value of restricted land by some arbitrary proportion arrived at by itself to compensate for the restriction. Nor is it open to the authority determining compensation to fix first the market value of adjoining lands and assess the market value of the restricted land by reducing the market value of the adjoining lands by some arbitrary proportion arrived at by itself. Far less is it open to the authority assessing compensation to find, as the Special Land Acquisition Officer in the present case has done, the market value of the acquired land, to deduct 50% of it for the reason that the respondent had to pay a fine to the government equal to the difference between 50% of its market value and the 'nazarana' already paid because the land was being used for non-agricultural purposes, and to direct that that deducted half should be credited to the government. The function of the Special Land Acquisition Officer is to assess the compensation which, in his opinion, should be allowed for the land acquired it is not to collect 'nazaranas' and fines for the government. (Para 14)

It bears repetition that even for restricted land compensation must only be determined by finding out what a willing purchaser will pay for it, knowing it to bear the restriction. Smt. C. D. Shenoy, for Appellant;
 M. A. Rane, for Respondent.

BHARUCHA, J.:— By a notification under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act (hereinafter called "the said Act") dated 30th November 1961 land admeasuring 6 acres and 68 gunthas and bearing Survey No. 850 of village Nasik in Nasik district was notified for acquisition for the purposes of the Barhe Vibhag Jungale Kamgar Sahakari Sangh Society. In respect of the said acquisition an award was made on 5th June 1973 by the Special Land Acquisition Officer. The Special Land Acquisition Officer took into consideration various instances of sale in the neighbourhood and, after dividing the land into three belts, formed the opinion that the reasonable market value of these belts would be Rs. 500/- per gunta, Rs. 300/- per gunta and Rs. 200/- per guntha respectively. On the basis of this he concluded that the reasonable market value of the land at the relevant time was Rs. 11,000/- per acre. Under the heading 'Inam Land' in the award the Special Land Acquisition Officer noted that the land under acquisition was Inam land of class V which had been regranted in the name of the 'kabjedar (the respondent) who had paid an amount equal to twenty-six times the assessment of the land. Mutation entry No. 6886 dated 13th August 1965 pertaining to the regrant stood certified in the village records. The land was assessed at the rate of Rs. 7.50. Twenty-six times this amount came to Rs. 195/- out of which Rs. 150/- had been paid as regrant. The land had been regranted for agricultural purposes. The said paragraph went on to state "However, it is found that the land is being used for N. A. purposes since 1952-53, i. e., after abolition of the Inam category of the land. In these circumstances the land owner had to pay nazarana equal to the difference between 50% of the market value and the nazarana already paid. In this case the market value of the land comes to Rs. 72,675/- (Seventy-two thousand six hundred seventy-five only). 50% of this comes to Rs. 36,337.50 (Thirty-six thousand three hundred thirty-seven and paise fifty only). After deduction of the amount of nazarana already paid, i. e., Rs. 150/- (One hundred fifty only) the amount to go to Government as Government interest will be Rs. 36,337.50 (Minus 150/-) (36,187.50) (Thirty-six thousand one hundred eighty-seven and paise fifty only). This amount of Rs. 36,187.50 should be credited to Govt. to proper head of account. The holder should be asked to obtain necessary permission for N. A. use of the land." The award stated that there was no question of apportionment, there being only one claimant. It also stated that "after deduction of the amount of Government share, the remaining amount should go to the claimant."

2. The respondent filed a reference for enhancement of the compensation awarded under Sec. 18 of the said Act, which was heard by the Joint Judge, Nasik. By his judgment and order dated 30th April 1976 the learned Joint Judge rejected the respondent's claim for enhancement of compensation but declared that he was entitled to the full value of the land. In Para 16 of the judgment the learned Joint Judge stated: "Next point arises for consideration is about the amount of Rs. 36,187.50P ordered to be credited as Government interest. In para 11 of the award it is stated that the land under acquisition was Inam land of Class V and the same is regranted in the name of Kabjedar. There is no dispute that the land has been regranted on old tenure basis to the claimant. It is not pointed out there was a restriction on alienation of the land. I am not shown any provision on behalf of the opponent by which the Government is entitled to the deduction of 50 per cent of the amount of the price of the land, because the land has been used for non-agricultural purposes and it has been regranted to the claimant after abolition of the Inams. In determining the compensation payable for any land under the Land Acquisition Act, the element of non-transferability of the land cannot enter into consideration. The publication of declaration under Sec. 6 as a result of removing all restrictions on the rights of the owner. By necessary implication, it withdraws Inam land from the purview of the grant and consequently lifts the embargo on its transferability. The Inam land stands on the same footing as any freehold land. In my view, therefore, the claimant is entitled to full value of the market price of the acquired land. He is entitled to claim Rs. 36,187.50P, deducted by the Government."

3. It is against the finding of the learned Joint Judge in para 16 of his judgment that this appeal is filed by the State of Maharashtra.

4. Mrs. Shenoy, the learned Assistant Government Pleader, appearing on behalf of the appellant submitted that the Land Acquisition Officer was justified in concluding that the respondent had to pay the appellants 'nazarana' equal to the difference between 50% of the market value of the said land and the 'nazarana' already paid since the the land was being used for non-agricultural purposes and he was entitled to reduce the market value of the land ascertained by him to this extent, and award only the balance to the respondent. She relied in this behalf upon Sec. 4 of the Bombay Pargana and Kul-karni Watan Abolition Act, 1950, (now referred to as "the said Abolition Act") and upon a Government Resolution of the appellants dated 18th Aug. 1953. Sec. 4 (2) of the said Abolition Act is relevant and provides thus:—

"(2) The occupancy of the land regranted under sub-sec. (1) shall not be transferable or partible by metes and bounds without the previous sanction of the Collector and except on payment of such amount as the State Government may by general or special order determine."

Clause (2) of the said resolution provides that the amount of nazarana to be levied for converting the new tenure of watan lands regranted under the said Sec. 4 into ordinary rayatwari tenure should be equal to 50% of the market value of the land if it was or was intended to be used for a purpose other than agriculture and should be equal to 20 times the assessment if the land was or was intended to be used for agricultural purposes only; provided that if the agricultural use of the land was subsequently changed for a purpose other than agriculture the holder would become liable to pay under Sec. 65 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code a fine equal to the difference between 50% the market value and 20 times the assessable value of the land.

5. The reduction in the market value made by the Collector in the said award would appear to be based upon the said resolution on account of the fact that the land was being used for non-agricultural purposes.

6. Mrs. Shenoy placed reliance upon a judgment of the Supreme Court in Special Land Acquisition and Rehabilitation Officer v. M. S. Seshagiri Rao, AIR 1968 SC 1045, upon a judgment of a Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in Special Land Acquisition Officer v. Sushilaben Chhaganlal Thakkar AIR 1972 Guj 189, and upon an unreported judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Appeal No. 747 of 1973 (decided on 15th September 1981 by Jahagirdar and Mody, JJ.). She also placed reliance upon a judgment of the Privy Council in Corrie v. MacDermott 1914 AC 1056; since that judgment pertains to the resumption of land granted by Government under a deed and to the compensation to be paid to the grantee thereon it does not assist us and we do not propose to consider it further.

7. In M. S. Seshagiri Rao's case lands were granted to the respondents by the Government of Mysore upon the condition that the grantees had to surrender the lands to Government without claiming any compensation in the event of the Government requiring the lands for any reason whatsoever. The lands were thereafter acquired under the said Act. The Supreme Court held that the Government was obliged to pay compensation for the acquisition of the lands under the provisions of the said Act, but in assessing the compensation payable to the grantees the existence of the condition which severely restricted their rights could not be ignored. The grantees were entitled to compensation for the lands of which the ownership was vested in them; the measure of that compensation was the market value of the land at the date of the notification and the measure of that market value was what a willing purchaser might pay for the land subject to the option vested in the Government.

8. In the case before the Gujarat High Court land was acquired under the said Act. There was a tenant upon the land who had become its deemed purchaser under Sec. 32 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948. With regard to the valuation of his interest the Land Acquisition Officer adopted this formula: He valued the land as if it were held on old tenure to which the restrictions engrafted by Sec. 43 (1) of the Tenancy Act were not applicable; thereafter he valued the interest of the tenant at 2/3rd of the valuation on the ground that, so far as the tenant was concerned, his land was held on the new tenure created by Sec. 43 (1) of the Tenancy Act which imposed restrictions with regard to sale, gift, exchange, mortgage, lease, assignment or partition without payment to the State Government of such amount as it may by general or special order determine. The validity of the formula was challenged before the Gujarat High Court. The court held that it would not be right to value the land at a discount merely by reason of the fact that there was a restriction on its alienation but that principle was of no avail when the court was confronted with a question regarding the valuation of land where its transferability depended on an obligation to pay a sum of money to the Government. The court, therefore, did not agree with the submission made by the tenant's counsel that the Land Acquisition Officer was not right in valuing the new tenure land held by the tenant at 2/3rd of the notional valuation of the old tenure land. The court said it would be contrary to principle to value property which is burdened with the obligation to pay a portion of the sale-price to the State at par with a property which did not carry any such obligation and that it was unable to see any principle in awarding to the owner such property a larger amount as compensation if acquired for a public purpose under the said Act than he would be otherwise entitled to if he sold in the open market.

9. In Appeal No. 747 of 1973 a Division Bench of this court (hereinafter referred to as "the later Division Bench") was concerned with land covered by the Maharashtra Revenue Patels (Abolition of Office) Act, 1962. The relevant section of that enactment is substantially similar to the provisions of Sec. 4 of the said Abolition Act read with the said resolution with which we are here concerned. The land was agricultural land but had been put to non-agricultural use for about six years by the State who had requisitioned it. In the award the claimants were given a price of Rs. 1.50 per sq. ft. but it was reduced by 50% in view of the provisions of the Maharashtra Revenue Patels (Abolition of Office) Act, 1962. In the claimant's reference under Sec. 18 the court arrived at the market price of Rs. 3.75 per sq. ft. but reduced it for the same reason to Rs. 1.80 per sq. ft. The claimants filed an appeal seeking enhancement. The later Division Bench came to the conclusion that the price of the land, subject to considering the effect of the enactment, was Rs. 4/- per sq. ft. It went on to say that it was obvious that a purchaser would pay only Rs. 2/- per sq. ft. for the land, if it was being transferred subject to the liability of payment of premium to the State under the enactment, when the prevailing value in respect of neighbouring lands which were free from such restriction was Rs. 4/- per sq. ft. It was held that the market value of the land would have to be calculated at the rate of Rs. 2/- per sq. ft. It stated that what had to be valued was the interest in the land; the interest had to be valued subject to a restriction which was capable of being valued in terms of money, and when the monetary value of the restriction was deducted from the market price of surrounding lands which were free from the restriction, the ultimate figure arrived at would be the market price of the acquired land.

10. Mr. Rane on the other hand contended that the reasoning of the Special Land Acquisition Officer in the award was wrong and that the learned Joint Judge was right in not making any deduction and awarding the full market value to the respondent. He placed reliance upon a judgment of the Division Bench of this court (now referred to as "the earlier Division Bench") in Appeal No. 502 of 1969 (decided on 2nd September 1976 by Kantawala, C. J., and Sawant, J.). Para 6 of that judgment needs to be fully reproduced:—

"That takes us to the cross-appeal filed by the State Government. The questions involved in this cross-appeal by the State Government relate to apportionment of compensation and award of solatium. We will proceed on the assumption that one of the terms in the order of re-grant upon the abolition of Jahagirs was that in case the land was converted to N. A. purposes 50% of the price was to be paid to the Government. However, in the present case at no time prior to the making of the award the land was converted to N. A. use. In fact no application was made at any time by the claimant to the Collector or any other Revenue authorities for conversion of his land for N. A. purposes. The restriction or the obligation imposed under the order of re-grant can only be attracted if the claimant wants voluntarily to convert his land to N. A. purposes. If Government by statutory exercise of powers wants to acquire a claimant's land for using it for non-agricultural purposes like construction of a filter house, it cannot be said that the terms of the re-grant would be attracted in such a case. Government after it becomes the owner of the property can use the property in such manner as it likes, but it could not be said that obligation has arisen in view of the terms of the order of regrant because at no time in respect of any portion of the acquired land was any application made by the claimant for its conversion to N. A. purposes. Thus the trial Court was right in setting aside the apportionment made by the Land Acquisition Officer in respect of the amount of compensation. In fact the claimant was entitled to the whole of the amount awarded as compensation by the Land Acquisition Officer."

11. Reliance was also placed by Mr. Rane upon a judgment delivered by one of us (Masodkar, J.) in State of Maharashtra v. Govindrao Narayanrao Ghorpade, AIR 1981 Bom 439. The land acquired was Inam land covered by the Bombay Merged Territories Miscellaneous Alienations Abolition Act, 1955. Under Sec. 7 (3) of that Act land was not transferable or partible without the previous sanction of the Collector and except on payment of such amount as the State Government by general or special order determined. The Land Acquisition Officer found that the claimant was not entitled to 1/3rd of the market value of the land and made an award accordingly. The claimant filed a reference and the court held that it was improper to deduct that portion of the market value. Against that order an appeal was preferred to this court. It was held that the first and primary consideration in determining compensation was what the market value of the acquired land, whether or not of unrestricted tenure, was. The court said, "If the market value can be fairly determined of such land there is hardly any scope to deduct any amount from that value so as to compensate the restrictions with regard to transferability. In terms of statutory injunction available in Sec. 23 (1) firstly of the Land Acquisition Act, the claimant is entitled to get the market value of the entire acquired land and nothing less than that."

12. The judgment of the Supreme Court in Seshagiri Rao's case (AIR 1968 SC 1045) cited by Mrs. Shenoy does not advance her case; quite the contrary. It was there held that the measure of the compensation which the grantee of restricted land must get is its market value and the measure of that market value is what a willing purchaser will pay for the land subject to the restriction. This, therefore, expressly enjoins upon the authority ascertaining the compensation payable for restricted land which is acquired to determine what a willing purchaser would pay for it and, necessarily, excludes the deduction of any amount from the market value. It contemplates the determination of the market value of restricted land in the manner in which the market value of land which is subject to no restrictions is ascertained.

13. It appears that before the later Division Bench the judgment in Seshagiri Rao's case (AIR 1968 SC 1045), the earlier Division Bench judgment and the judgment in Govindrao's case (AIR 1981 Bom 439) were not cited. In fact, it would appear from the judgment that no decisions were read to it. It had, therefore, no opportunity to read the decision of the earlier Division Bench that the restriction imposed under an order of regrant was attracted only if the claimant voluntarily converted the land to non-agricultural purposes and to appreciate that to the case before it this dictum applied because the claimant before them had not voluntarily converted his land to non-agricultural purposes but this had been done by the State after requisition. Not having before it the judgment in Seshagiri Rao's case it was also not afforded the opportunity to consider the dictum of the Supreme Court that, even in the case of restricted land, its market value had to be assessed for the purposes of determining compensation and that the measure of that market value was what a willing purchaser would pay for it.

14. Sec. 23 (1), firstly, of the Act requires that in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land that is acquired its market value at the date of publication of the notification under Sec. 4 shall be taken into consideration. To use the language of the Supreme Court the measure of that market value is what a willing purchaser might reasonably pay for the land. To assess market value resort must be had to well recognised principles of valuation which, in the cases we are concerned with, would be instances of sale of comparable lands situated in the vicinity and the opinions of experts. It is, therefore, not open to the authority determining compensation to reduce the market value of restricted land by some arbitrary proportion arrived at by itself to compensate for the restriction. Nor is it open to the authority determining compensation to fix first the market value of adjoining lands and assess the market value of the restricted land by reducing the market value of the adjoining lands by some arbitrary proportion arrived at by itself. Far less is it open to the authority assessing compensation to find, as the Special Land Acquisition Officer in the case before us has done, the market value of the acquired land, to deduct 50% of it for the reason that the respondent had to pay a fine to the appellants equal to the difference between 50% of its market value and the nazarana already paid because the land was being used for non-agricultural purposes, and to direct that that deducted half should be credited to the appellants. The function of the Special Land Acquisition Officer is to assess the compensation which, in his opinion, should be allowed for the land acquired; it is not to collect 'nazaranas' and fines for the appellants.

15. It bears repetition that even for restricted land compensation must only be determined by finding out what a willing purchaser will pay for it, knowing it to bear the restriction.

16. It will be obvious from what we have said that we differ very respectfully from the view expressed by the Gujarat High Court in Special Land Acquisition Officer v. Sushilaben Chhaganlal Thakkar (AIR 1972 Guj 189).

17. There is no merit in the appeal. It is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 231

MASODKAR, J.

Smt. Rajeshbai and others, Appellants v. Smt. Shantabai, Respondent.

First Appeal No. 633 of 1972, D/- 28-4-1981.

Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), Sections 5 (i), 11 and 25 — Issue as to validity of marriage arising before Civil Court in suit or other proceeding — Can be decided by that Court — Provisions of Act no bar — So also court can in appropriate cases grant relief of maintenance to woman from estate of her deceased husband even on its finding that marriage was void. (Civil P. C (1908), S. 9).

The object of enacting the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 is to amend and codify the law relating to marriages amongst the Hindus, though no doubt the provisions of that Act provide for the special remedies with regard to specific reliefs through marital courts. It does not follow from the provisions, like S. 11 that when the legality of marriage in any other proceeding is in issue, the same cannot be answered by reference to the provisions of the H. M. Act. On the other hand, as far as the conditions with regard to the Hindu marriages are concerned, S. 5 would be of universal application to all those persons who are subject to it; and with reference to those provisions the validity of any marriage, when in issue, in any collateral proceedings, can well be adjudicated upon. It is only when a special relief of the kind mentioned in S. 11 is being sought so as to annul the marriage solemnised after the commencement of the Act that the special remedial procedure will have to be followed. It will be too narrow a construction to hold that in every case whenever an issue of validity of marriage arises, having reference to the conditions of S. 5, the matter must be referred or the matter must arise only in the special jurisdiction under the H. M. Act. The declaratory parts and the remedial parts of the statute need not be intermixed. It is apparent that some of the provisions of the H. M. Act are definitive and declaratory. These could be applied as and when an occasion arises to apply the same and in any proceedings, Ss. 5, 6 and 7 of the H. M. Act are definitive and declaratory in character and well apply to every marriage amongst the Hindus subject to the Act. Special remedial provisions available in Ss. 9 to 13 of the Act, permitting marital reliefs are not exhaustive nor compulsively universal so as to exclude powers of ordinary civil courts to find out legality of marital relations. When reliefs of the kind mentioned in Ss. 9 to 13 are sought, those provisions are exhaustive and compulsive and exclude the jurisdiction of other courts. Marriage, being a legal relation involving matters of status and title of persons, whenever the same is in issue the definitive provisions will have to be applied. (Para 16)

Section 11 of the H. M. Act itself is in two parts, the first being declaratory while the other remedial in character. It is not a general or universal remedy available to each and everyone related to either of the spouses. Remedial aspect enables either of the spouses to present a petition for declaration and get a decree of nullity with regard to the marriage solemnised in contravention of cls. (i), (iv) and (v) of S. 5. From this, it does not follow that in any other action, the legal validity of marriage cannot be set up. If such a construction is preferred, it would cut down the universal jurisdiction of civil courts to consider matters of civil status and title. If marriage involves matters of civil and legal status and consequent matters of personal and proprietary titles, jurisdiction available to courts cannot be deemed to be excluded. (Para 17)

The effect of the declaratory and definitive provisions in law is that legal results follow provided conditions thereof are satisfied. If the conditions laid down by cls. (i), (iv) and (v) of S. 5 are not satisfied, then, as the first part of S. 11 enacts, the marriage is void ipso jure. The injunctive rule that neither party should have a spouse living at the time of the marriage is enacted to prohibit polygamy and to institute measures of monogamy. Such injunctive character of law can always be set up in any legal proceedings when questions of status and title arise, whether during or after the lifetime of either of the spouses or both. (Para 18)

The competency of Court in such matters being so concluded, the result is inevitable, in that the marriage between Sadashiv (deceased) and Rajeshbai (appellant-defendant) while Sadashiv's first wife Shantabai (respondent-plaintiff) was living at the time of their marriage, is void ipso jure. No doubt, they united by going through the form of marriage as the evidence shows, but mere form does not make it a marriage in law. For the purpose of law, Rajeshbai cannot be treated as "wife" of Sadashiv during his lifetime, nor his "widow" after his death. Both by virtue of status and of law, upon the demise of Sadashiv, Shantabai alone would be "his widow" and as such would succeed to his properties and all interest therein under the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act. (Paras 19, 20)

This conclusion is enough to uphold the decree under appeal, but leave was granted during the course of the hearing of this appeal, which was adjourned from time to time for settlement, to raise the point that under the facts and circumstances of the present case, an absolute decree for possession of the properties left by Sadashiv without providing for the maintenance of Rajeshbai cannot, nor should in fairness, be passed. (Para 21)

About the term 'wife' or 'widow' in the context of Marriage, Succession or Maintenance enactments, the terms undoubtedly are of restrictive legal character. These are by themselves articulate, legal terms and those imply the relation that results from a recognised legal mode of marriage. (Para 26)

But there can be a class of persons who may be called "illegitimate wives or widows" who can be the subject of benefaction of law of maintenance, notwithstanding that eventually their legal status is annulled. Undoubtedly a female spouse united by marriage enters upon a status and is conferred with immediate as well as inchoate rights attached to such status by virtue of her marriage and that is because of the gift and conferment of law. When that status is shaken and found to have no sanction, it does not follow that even the inchoate rights of such person are totally eclipsed. As distinct from succession or inheritance, the right of maintenance can be treated to be a separate one, the first two arising upon the natural or civil death of the husband, while the latter always available during the lifetime and even depending upon the contingent conditions after the death of the husband. Maintenance thus is a personal right. In its character it can be treated to be a secular right recognised by almost all the systems of personal laws in various degrees and under varying conditions. Though, therefore, for the purpose of the Succession Act and the Maintenance Act the terms "wife" and "widow" would have a restricted articulate legal meaning, that by itself would not be the position when the matter arises for the purpose of providing the measures of sustenance on considerations of justice and fair play involved and basic to all human and social relations. (Para 30)

Because of this, whenever issues of maintenance arise, they raise an intensely human problem. In the present case, Rajeshbai, appellant, was undoubtedly married with Sadashiv by the recognised form of marriage in the prime of her youth. She came to be united in person with Sadashiv and cohabited with him till his death. The other wife, Shantabai, was a consenting party to the union by marriage of Rajeshbai and Sadashiv. Upon the facts and circumstances, and particularly when Sadashiv has left the suit properties it cannot be said that she is not entitled to the claim for maintenance. (Para 31)

It is obvious that had the matter arisen during the lifetime of Sadashiv between Sadashiv and Rajeshbai and the matter would have been under S. 11 of the H. M. Act, Rajeshbai would have been entitled to rely on S. 25 of the H. M. Act so as to claim the relief of maintenance, AIR 1976 Bom 433 Foll. (Para 38)

There is no reason why there should be any change in the principle merely because the proceedings are after the death of Sadashiv. If S. 25 of the H. M. Act conferred a right that right could be worked out even in collateral proceedings if it be correct that the declaration of nullity of such a marriage could be rendered in such proceedings. Therefore, it will have to be found that Rajeshbai is entitled to rely on the principles of S. 25 of the H. M. Act and to invoke the powers of the Court for making provision for just and fair maintenance. (Para 38)

M. A. Rane for Appellants; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal heard at some length raises, as is apparent, some intricate questions of law intermixed with problems of justice and fairness, of legality and of humanity, technical as well as of substance. The controversy centres round the human relations that became recognised by ties of marriage, its legal fallibility and consequential possibilities of avoidance of rights personal and of property. These problems arise this way.

2. Respondent Shantabai filed the present suit seeking reliefs of injunction against the defendants, the present appellants, restraining them from disturbing her possession and enjoyment of the properties and, alternatively, also seeking relief of possession of the properties which may not be found to be in her possession. She also prayed for the partition of C. S. No. 372 and possession of one-third share therein.

3. These reliefs were so claimed on the basis that the plaintiff, Shantabai, was the lawfully married wife of deceased Sadashiv and, upon his death, was entitled to inherit all his properties which are described and set out in the schedules attached to the plaint. It is not in dispute that Dagadu and Mahadu (original defendants Nos. 1 and 2), appellants Nos. 2 and 3, are the two brothers of Sadashiv, all being sons of Bayaji.

4. The common defence of these appellants was one of denial of the title of the plaintiff and an assertion to the effect that as per the caste custom applicable to Maratha community of which the parties were members, during the lifetime of Sadashiv, the plaintiff was divorced by him and thereafter, Sadashiv had taken Rajeshbai, appellant No. 1, as his wife, who was till his death residing with him as his lawful wife. As the plaintiff was the divorced wife, she was not entitled to any share or any right of possession to the properties of Sadashiv. According to the defence, Rejeshbai was married according to the Hindu religious rites applicable to the community on Nov. 26, 1963 at Nasik and as she was the only lawfully married wife and as such the widow of Sadashiv, she would be entitled to succeed to all the interest of Sadashiv to the exclusion of the divorced wife.

5. The factum of the custom of divorce, as well as of the validity of the marriage of Rajeshbai in its turn were all denied by the plaintiff, the first wife of Sadashiv.

6. After trying the contentious questions between the parties, the trial Court found, upon evidence, that the custom was not established, that there was no divorce given by Sadashiv to Shantabai, that, therefore, though Rajeshbai went through the form of Hindu marriage, her marriage was void and as a result of this, it was the plaintiff who, as the legally married wife and after her husband's death being his widow, was entitled to succeed to the interest and all the properties of Sadashiv. The trial Court found that the properties were in possession of the defendants and, therefore, made a decree directing the defendants to deliver possession of the properties described at serial Nos. 1 to 4 in the schedule attached to the plaint and further made a decree with regard to the one-third share in the house bearing C. S. No. 372. That decree is under challenge in the present appeal.

7. During the course of the hearing of this appeal, Civil Application No. 1639 of 1981 was filed by the appellants' learned counsel raising alternate plea in defence as far as appellant No. 1 Rajeshbai is concerned and that is to the effect that in any case upon the finding that Rajeshbai having gone through the form of marriage and her marriage because of law being declared null and void and for no fault on her part, she would be entitled to the relief of maintenance against the admitted estate of her husband Sadashiv. That application was allowed as the same was not opposed.

8. Therefore, in the appeal there is an additional issue raised at the behest of the appellants as to whether upon the finding that the marriage between Sadashiv and Rajeshbai was void as the earlier marriage between Sadashiv and Shantabai was subsisting, Rajeshbai would or would not be entitled to the maintenance from and against the estate of Sadashiv.

9. All the contentious questions involved in the present appeal were argued with considerable concern by the learned Counsel having regard to all the principles applicable to the controversy.

10. As far as the evidence and the factual findings, are concerned, it does not admit of any doubt that the parties belong to Maratha Patil community that would form part of the residuary class amongst "the Marathas", the other two being the five families and the 96 families (see S. 630 of the Hindu Law by Mulla). Once this finding is supportable, the residuary class would be more or less governed by the principles of customs applicable as such to the Shudras. There is the preponderance of the evidence spoken to by the witnesses examined for the defendants to the effect that in the community to which the parties belong, there exists a long standing, well accepted and ever acted upon custom of divorce. The evidence of Dagadu (D. W. 1) is categorical on this aspect. His caste consciousness is exhibited as of other witnesses as he asserts that he himself and others are from Maratha Patil community and are governed by customs as such. He states that the community has an extant custom of divorce based on mutual consent to be worked out at Caste Panchayats. The cross-examination of Dagadu does not affect the truth of these assertions. He has attended the caste panchayats for divorce right from 1935. Tanaji (D. W. 2) is of 70 years of age. He is of the same community of Maratha. He too asserts that there is a custom of divorce. Waman (D. W. 3), similarly, states that there exists a custom of divorce in similar terms. Arjun (D. W. 4), who is aged 72 years, speaks of customary divorces in the community in similar terms. Pandit (D. W. 6) has divorced his own wife according to the caste custom. Daulat (D. W. 7) is related to Rajeshbai and is aged about 50 years. He also speaks of the caste custom. Chindha Lala Bachhav (D. W. 8) too in the cross-examination speaks of the custom in the community to have divorce. No doubt, the modality of the divorce spoken to by the witnesses is not uniform, but there is no uncertainty about their evidence on the aspect of existence of custom involving divorces by consent through Caste Panchayats. The custom that is spoken to by all these persons is with regard to the divorce permitted and recognised in the community and they also speak about the instances of the divorces taken by the couples and acted upon and as such recognised in the community. As against this, there is no evidence to show that there does not exist any such custom. Therefore, it is apparent on the basis of the evidence that the findings recorded by the learned trial Judge that there is no custom is unsustainable. The evidence consistently shows that by mutual consent and by calling the panchas customary divorce is extant. Minor variations in the testimony of these witnesses on the aspects of actual working out the customary divorces do not affect the proof of the custom itself.

11. Now, once it is found that in the community to which Sadashiv, Shantabai and Rajeshbai belonged, there could be customary divorce, the more important question is whether actually before Rajeshbai was married with Sadashiv there was in fact a divorce between Sadashiv and Shantabai. The trial Court has given the negative finding on this aspect and the evidence goes to show that finding is well-merited. The evidence does not carry any conviction at all that Shantabai was duly divorced by Sadashiv according to the caste custom. On the other hand, Shantabai's evidence and the photographs produced during the trial, and particularly at Ex. 138, clearly go to show that Shantabai was in the family even after Rajeshbai was married with Sadashiv. The evidence of Shantabai on this aspect is preferable to the contrary evidence coming through the witnesses examined in support of the defence. According to Shantabai, as she was not getting the child, her mother-in-law suggested that Sadashiv should take a second wife and she (Shantabai) agreed to that suggestion. She states that she never was divorced nor did she agree to put her thumb impression on a stamp paper which Sadashiv wanted her to give. She denies that any Caste Panchayat was held. She states that one notice was published by Sadashiv in "Gavkari" newspaper, but as soon as the notice came to her knowledge, she sent a reply through her lawyer, Mr. Kotnis, and also published the same in newspaper, asserting that there was no divorce. Sadashiv thereafter came and took her to his own house and they were all living together till he died. The photograph at Ex. 138 shows that she is sitting near the head of the dead body of Sadashiv and Rajeshbai is sitting behind her. According to her, Rajeshbai was just brought 2-3 years before his death and was not married at all. The undisputed and proved facts go to show that there is no writing that evidences any divorce. The evidence of the so-called panchas alleged to have been called for the purpose of giving divorce is far from satisfactory. As far as the documentary evidence shows, it is inconsistent with the fact of divorce. As soon as Sadashiv published the notice in the "Gavkari" newspaper, Shantabai denied the fact of divorce. Not only that, but thereafter at the time of the death of Sadashiv, she is very much seen sitting by the side of the head of the deceased Sadashiv. Her evidence on this aspect deserves to be accepted.

12. The evidence on record is indicative that though there is a caste custom under which the consenting parties can take a divorce, it does not go further to establish that actually Shantabai consented to or was actually divorced by Sadashiv. Her marriage with Sadashiv, being not in dispute, continued till he died.

13. The evidence of Rajeshbai goes to show that she was taken in marriage by Sadashiv and all the forms and the rituals necessary for the marriage were gone through. So is the evidence of Daulat who states that Rajeshbai is his sister's daughter. He speaks about the marriage that was performed in the temple of Kala Ram by the Brahmin priest. He speaks about the sacrament of Saptapadi and Homa. This evidence can hardly be doubted. In fact, Rajeshbai is seen also in the photograph on which reliance is placed by the plaintiff herself. The plaintiff's assertion that she was brought without marriage does not appear to be true nor consistent. Thus, during the lifetime and before the death of Sadashiv, he had married by going through the form of Hindu Marriage with Rajeshbai and till his death, Rajeshbai was residing with him.

14. Under the provisions of the Hindu Marriage Act, which was applicable to the marriage of Rajeshbai, it is obvious that in view of the first subsisting marriage of Sadashiv with Shantabai, the marriage of Sadashiv with Rajeshbai would be void, being in breach of S. 5 (i) of that Act. Such marriage, S. 11 of the H. M. Act declares to be null and void.

15. Two questions were argued by the contesting Counsel in this appeal with regard to the application of Section 5 (i) of the H. M. Act read with S. 11 thereof so as to find out the entitlement of Shantabai to succeed and to possess the property of Sadashiv. It was contended that S. 11 is a remedial section and, therefore, in a suit of the present kind, no declaration can be entered against the marriage of Sadashiv with Rajeshbai, particularly when it is admittedly shown that the plaintiff must have been the consenting party to such a marriage. It is submitted that it is only in special proceedings under the H. M. Act and at the behest of the parties to the marriage that such an issue can arise and can be adjudicated upon. Because there was no annulment of the marriage under S. 11 of the Act, it is contended that Rajeshbai would continue to be "the widow" of Sadashiv and as such entitled to succeed and inherit his properties and she cannot be excluded from possession at the behest of a co-widow.

16. It is difficult to accept any of these propositions. The object of enacting the H. M. Act is to amend and codify the law relating to marriages amongst the Hindus, though no doubt the provisions of that Act provide for the special remedies with regard to specific reliefs through marital courts. It does not follow from the provisions, like S. 11, that when the legality of marriage in any other proceeding is in issue, the same cannot be answered by reference to the provisions of the H. M. Act. On the other hand, as far as the conditions with regard to the Hindu Marriages are concerned, S. 5 would be of universal application to all those persons who are subject to it, and with reference to those provisions the validity of any marriage, when in issue, in any collateral proceedings, can well be adjudicated upon. It is only when a special relief of the kind mentioned in S. 11 is being sought so as to annul the marriage solemnised after the commencement of the Act that the special remedial procedure will have to be followed. It will be too narrow a construction to hold that in every case whenever an issue of validity of marriage arises, having reference to the conditions of S. 5, the matter must be referred or the matter must arise only in the special jurisdiction under the H. M. Act. The declaratory parts and the remedial parts of the statute need not be intermixed. It is apparent that some of the provisions of the H. M. Act are definitive and declaratory. These could be applied as and when an occasion arises to apply the same and in any proceedings. As far as the marriage is concerned, S. 5 enacts the conditions of the legal Hindu Marriage. S. 6 deals with guardianship in marriage matters and S. 7 deals with ceremonies necessary for performance of a Hindu marriage. All these three sections are definitive and declaratory in character and well apply to every marriage amongst the Hindus subject to the Act. Special remedial provisions available in Ss. 9 to 13 of the Act, permitting marital reliefs, are not exhaustive nor compulsively universal so as to exclude powers of ordinary civil courts to find out legality of marital relations. When reliefs of the kind mentioned in Ss. 9 to 13 are sought, those provisions are exhaustive and compulsive and exclude the jurisdiction of other courts. Marriage, being a legal relation involving matters of status and title of persons, whenever the same is in issue the definitive provisions will have to be applied.

17. It follows that it would be competent in any suit of such a kind to consider whether Rajeshbai was legally married or not with Sadashiv and for that purpose, it is not necessary that during the lifetime of Sadashiv any proceedings under S. 11 should have been resorted to. It may be indicated that Section 11 of the H. M. Act itself is in two parts, the first being declaratory while the other remedial in character. It is not a general or universal remedy available to each and everyone related to either of the spouses. Remedial aspect enables either of the spouses to present a petition for declaration and get a decree of nullity with regard to the marriage solemnised in contravention of Cls. (i), (iv) and (v) of S. 5. From this, it does not follow that in any other action, the legal validity of marriage cannot be set up. If such a construction is preferred, it would cut down the universal jurisdiction of civil courts to consider matters of civil status and title. If marriage involves matters of civil and legal status and consequent matters of personal and proprietary titles, jurisdiction available to courts cannot be deemed to be excluded.

18. The effect of the declaratory and definitive provisions in law is that legal results follow provided conditions thereof are satisfied. In matters of marriage amongst Hindus, if the enacted conditions laid down by cls. (i), (iv) and (v) of S. 5 are not satisfied, then, as the first part of S. 11 enacts, the marriage is void ipso jure. Marriage, no doubt, is a voluntary union of one man with one woman to the exclusion of all others. Alien it is not to law, in public and social interest, to enact compulsive conditions for such a union. The three statutory conditions enacted by S. 5 are of that compulsive nature and unless satisfied do not confer legal validity upon such union of persons by marriage. Such union by marriage even though voluntary but in breach of these conditions is not marriage in the eye of law. It would be null and void from its inception. The injunctive rule that neither party should have a spouse living at the time of the marriage is enacted to prohibit polygamy and to institute measures of monogamy. Enquiry on this aspect cannot ensue on mere ethical notions but has to be strictly legal, that represents public and social interest. Such injunctive character of law can always be set up in any legal proceedings when questions of status and title arise, whether during or after the lifetime of either of the spouses or both. I do not find any impediment either because of any principle or policy not to permit such issues being raised and adjudicated upon after the death of either or both of the spouses to such a marriage.

19. The competency of Court in such matters being so concluded, the result is inevitable, in that the marriage between Sadashiv and Rajeshbai while Sadashiv's first wife Shantabai was living at the time of their marriage, is void ipso jure. No doubt, they united by going through the form of marriage as the evidence shows, but mere form does not make it a marriage in law. For the purpose of law, Rajeshbai cannot be treated as "wife" of Sadashiv during his lifetime, nor his "widow" after his death. 'Wife' denotes a legal and juridical relation resulting from a valid and legal marriage, while "widow" a state after the death of the husband till such person remains unmarried. It is possible to state in the context of the law that the term 'wife' is connotative of the legal as well as the legitimate status. There may be cases where that status is not available to a woman because of injunctive process of law. Though such woman, therefore, might have undergone the formal process of marriage, her status would be that of illegitimate wife. For the purpose of distinction, she can be so termed as "illegitimate wife". Such wife is not conferred with status which is available to a legitimate wife nor has any entitlement as the lawful heir of her husband to take the property under the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act.

20. Both by virtue of status and of law, upon the demise of Sadashiv, Shantabai alone would be "his widow" and as such would succeed to his properties and all interest therein under the provisions of the H. S. Act.

21. This conclusion is enough to uphold the decree under appeal, but, as stated above, leave was granted during the course of the hearing of this appeal, which was adjourned from time to time for settlement, to raise the point that under the facts and circumstances of the present case, an absolute decree for possession of the properties left by Sadashiv without providing for the maintenance of Rajeshbai cannot, nor should in fairness, be passed. Rajeshbai has filed an affidavit seeking to assert that she should be given a place of residence in

4 gunthas of land and a sum of Rs. 300 per month be provided towards other amenities. At the hearing, Shantabai personally appeared along with her Counsel. She showed her willingness to deposit or pay to Rajeshbai a sum of Rs. 20,000/- in full and final settlement of her claim for maintenance against the estate of Sadashiv.

22. Before the orders in this regard are finally made, it is necessary once to advert briefly to the legal position in regard to women who become affected because of such legal declarations about their marriages otherwise solemnly gone through and are left without any succour or help. Indeed, laws' premises in this filed are not adequate nor clear. It may be that advisedly the results are left to the fair discretion of courts.

23. Now, fundamentally in the scheme of Hindu Law and even under the provisions of the codified H. M. Act, the marriage is not a mere matter of contract. Its breach or its failure one may or the other, either because of law or because of the act of the parties, would not, therefore, ordinarily give rise to the claims on the principles available and applicable upon breach of contract. A reference to the legislative history leading to codification of different branches of Hindu Law would show that apart from passing the H. M. Act, Parliament undertook the codification of the H. S. Act, 1956, the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956 as well as the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956. All these independent Acts deal with different subjects and the objectives of these will have to be gathered independently though as part of the same system of Hindu Law. Interpretative approach should of necessity be uniform. Words having reference to legal relations and titles cannot be treated to have different meanings.

24. The first question that arises for consideration is that a person of the type like Rajeshbai, who came to be united with Sadashiv by going through the form of marriage that was later found to be void de jure, could at all be considered as having entitlement to inherit or to succeed under any of the provisions of the H. S. Act. The provisions of that Act are made to effectuate legal relations. The order of succession and priorities therein open upon the death of a Hindu male and are governed by special statutory rules. Consequences, where a Hindu dies and is survived by a female relative specified in Class I of the Schedule, are the part of enacting provisions. The word "widow" in that Class I or in any other part of such law, as is placed in juxtaposition of the other relatives, clearly intends to imply a spouse who was legally married and at the time of the death of her husband was having the same subsisting legal status. A female, whose marriage is void de jure and surviving the death of the husband would not be covered by the term "widow" either in Class I of the Schedule or anywhere such reference occurs. The term "widow", though not defined in express terms, clearly means and implies a female who was united in marriage recognised by law and who survives the husband without remarriage. Dilation by debate of this statutory sense of the word "widow" is neither possible nor permissible nor furthers the object of the Act.

25. Similar and identical phraseology is employed by the H. A. and M. Act and we have words "wife" and "widow" in several places in sections that make Chap. III dealing with the matters of maintenance. It must be observed that S. 21 is not exhaustive of categories of dependants needing measures of maintenance. That is statutory categorisation of dependants for the purpose of application of the Act and enforcement of rights thereunder. In that context cl. (iii) speaks of "his widow" as the dependent of the deceased and qualifies by saying so long as "she does not remarry". That word connotes legitimacy or lawful title to widowhood. That Act does not recognise a relation by marriage which is void de jure and such surviving female, upon the death of her spouse, would not be a relative that can be characterised as "a widow" for the purpose of S. 21 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 To be a dependant widow within the meaning of that section, a surviving female upon the death of the husband must be shown to have had lawful status of widowhood. Significant it is, that other entries in S. 21 show that illegitimate issues have been included in the categories of dependants. "Illegitimate wife" in the sense I have chosen to use this term to indicate the female who has been married but whose marriage is found void cannot be conferred with the status of widowhood. Nor, she can be covered by any other entry in that section as "dependant widow" so as to confer entitlement to have rights of maintenance under the provisions of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956.

26. About the term 'wife' or 'widow' in the context of Marriage, Succession or Maintenance enactments, the terms undoubtedly are of restrictive legal character. These are by themselves articulate, legal terms and those imply the relation that results from a recognised legal mode of marriage.

27. No doubt, in the context of penal statute, a term like "wife" was treated to include a mistress, (see Banwari Lal v. Emperor, AIR 1914 Lah 455) while it was explained in the context of the Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869), that the word used in S. 29 of that Act meant "a woman whose husband has died and who has not been married to any other man". (See Abdul Halim v. Raja Saadat Ali, AIR 1928 Oudh 155). There, the issue arose in a different context so as to what happens upon the re-marriage of a Mahomedan widow and what would be the legal effects of her entitlement to succeed to the property of the Mahomedan husband. While considering the provisions of S. 29, which used the phrase "widow," the Court observed that the word "widow" indicated a woman who is a widow, that is, whose husband has died and who has not married to any other man. It was further pointed out that the dictionary meaning of the word "widow" is a woman who has lost her husband by death and has not married again. The argument that the expression should also include a woman who was once a widow was repelled. The first case, in my view, does not render any assistance. In fact, being the matter of penal statute, I would hesitate to enlarge upon the scope of the words in such a statute. The second, however, indicates the accepted principle that the word "widow" has to be interpreted in the context of given law.

28. In Inland Revenue Commrs. v. Gaunt, (1941) 1 KB 706, the appeal Court was called upon to consider whether the word "wife" used in S. 38 of the English Finance Act of 1938 should extend to the case of a widow and in the context of the provisions of law, the learned Scott L. J., whose view has received concurrence by other Lords, observed that it was wrong to limit the word "wife" as excluding "the widow" and in the context of the section the word "wife" should extend to the case of a widow. The learned Lords made it clear that in the context of law the word "wife" would include "a widow." This is all indicative as to how once legal status of "wife" is available, the same gets impressed in understanding the word "widow" both being matters of legal status.

29. Then, there are two decisions, one under the provisions of the Madras Hindu Bigamy Prevention and Divorce Act and the other under the provisions of the Hindu Marriage Act. In the case of Sivakami Ammal v. Bangaruswami Reddi, AIR 1954 Mad 1039, the Court found that the word "wife" in Sec. 5 (7) would mean a person who would have been the wife but for the decree of divorce or dissolution passed in the trial Court. In the case of Govindrao v. Anandibai, AIR 1976 Bom 433, the learned single Judge of this Court upheld the claim of a wife, whose marriage was declared null and void by making a decree of nullity, for the maintenance under Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act. There, the marriage was found void de jure and consequent decree followed under Sec. 11 of the Act. The learned Judge found that Sec. 25 of that Act not only provides for a remedy but also confers a right upon such "a wife" and refused to give literal meaning to the word "wife" or "husband" used by that section. In his view:—

"The words 'wife' and 'husband' used in sub-s. (1) of S. 25 of the Act would include within their scope a woman and a man professing the Hindu faith who have gone through a ceremony of marriage which would, in law, have conferred the status of a wife or husband on them but for the provisions of Sec. 11 read with Cls. (i), (iv) and (v) of Sec. 5 of the Act."

30. These decisions are authorities for the proposition that the term "wife" is a juridical term and so also the term "widow." In the context of the given law, the meaning thereof has to be gathered keeping the object of law in view. Primarily, therefore, it would not be permissible to include in the term "wife" or "widow" that relation which is not recognised by law. However, it is implicit in the judgment of this Court in Govindrao's case (supra) that there can be class of persons who, as I propose to call, are "illegitimate wives or widows" who can be the subject of benefaction of law of maintenance, notwithstanding that eventually their legal status is annulled. Undoubtedly a female spouse united by marriage enters upon a status and is conferred with immediate as well as inchoate rights attached to such status by virtue of her marriage and that is because of the gift and conferment of law. When that status is shaken and found to have no sanction, it does not follow that even the inchoate rights of such person are totally eclipsed. As distinct from succession or inheritance, the right of maintenance can be treated to be a separate one, the first two arising upon the natural or civil death of the husband, while the latter always available during the lifetime and even depending upon the contingent conditions after the death of the husband. Maintenance thus is a personal right. In its character it can be treated to be a secular right recognised by almost all the systems of personal laws in various degrees and under varying conditions. Though, therefore, for the purpose of the Succession Act and the Maintenance Act the terms "wife and widow" would have a restricted articulate legal meaning, that by itself would not be the position when the matter arises for the purpose of providing the measures of sustenance on considerations of justice and fair play involved and basic to all human and social relations.

31. Because of this, whenever issues of maintenance arise, they raise an intensely human problem. In the present case, Rajeshbai, appellant No. 1, was undoubtedly married with Sadashiv by the recognised form of marriage in the prime of her youth. She came to be united in person with Sadashiv and cohabited with him till his death. There is clear evidence that the other wife, Shantabai, was a consenting party to the union by marriage of Rajeshbai and Sadashiv. It is equally true that consent does not cure the defect of law, nor can it operate as an estoppel against Shantabai. However, the question is whether having found that Rajeshbai was an illegitimate wife, who had gone through the form of marriage which is found to be void de jure, is she, upon the facts and circumstances, and particularly when Sadashiv has left the suit properties, not entitled to the claim for maintenance? Is it conceivable that although had the matter been under Section 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act she would be entitled to such a maintenance, no such relief can be given by the Court whose aid is sought to recover the properties on the basis that the marriage of Rajeshbai is void de jure? Is the Court not possessed of powers to do justice to the parties placed in such situation acting upon the similar principles underlying the provisions of Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act? Is that such a person who has done everything and surrendered her prime of the youth to be at the mercy of the cold dictates of law and to remain ever unprovided and suffer the pangs of destitution?

32. In the Book by Derrett, "Introduction to Modern Hindu Law," on the analogy of contractual relationship, it is suggested in paras 671 and 672 that upon the failure of such a marriage an award of compensation or damage on the principle that there is a breach of implied warranty assured by the husband should be made and should be treated to be available to Court exercising jurisdiction with regard to marriages. Reading of these paras suggests that this view is mostly impressed by two factors, firstly, of the implied warranty involved in the act of a man who takes a woman as his wife by going through the form of a marriage, which eventually is adjudged as invalid and, secondly, by extension of principles of English Law enunciated by Lord Denning in Shaw v. Shaw, (1954) 3 WLR 265, to the effect that this implied involved warranty in the relation of husband and wife could be given effect to by awarding due damages to the wife upon failure of marriage. In that case, the learned Lord was dealing with the cause where the husband and wife lived for 14 years and where, after the death of the husband, it was found that their marriage was not legal because the husband's real wife was alive when the marriage took place. The Court put the matter on the implied term of warranty undertaken by such a husband as binding on successor. Lord Denning observed:—

"The most important breach of all was at the moment of his death, because when he died she was not his widow as she thought she was That is the breach for which, in my judgment, damages can be recovered."

33. I am afraid that the principles of English Law which treat the marriage as a matter of contract can hardly have applicative force where the legal system regards it not as a contract but as a sacrament. Under Hindu system, right from its Shastric origin, legal marriage upon solemnisation results in the union of two spouses. In such union hardly there is any scope to read a warranty of the kind which could arise when juridically duality of persons is maintained. Historically as well as sociologically, institution of marriage is not on identical par amongst Hindus and other communities.

34. However, that, in my view, cannot be the end result of such cases where the finding is recorded by the competent Court that the marriage is void de jure. Firstly, the provisions of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 are not the provisions which can be treated to be exhaustive of matters for awarding maintenance. To the extent the provisions are made there, the same would apply or be operative, but there would arise cases where the matter may arise under the general principles of law regarding the maintenance and the Court would be in a position to grant the same.

35. The measures for maintenance by themselves are secular and social in character. Those aim at avoiding immorality and destitution. Maintenance for juridical purposes has its own pragmatics having relation to the need and necessity to make provisions for securing reasonable bioeconomic as well as biocultural requirements for persons, such as shelter, food, garment and health. In the tenets of Hindu Shastric Law, two principles subserve this need to provide reliefs of maintenance and those emanated firstly from social ethics and secondly because of personal economics. The persons related to each other and dependant as such, could look for such relief by reason of law both on the moral and secular grounds. Subject to conditions, it was a personal obligation and where there was estate, the rights in maintenance could be worked against the estate; nay, was a charge upon it. The moral or pious obligations mostly arose as personal liabilities, while those against property could be classed as economic or secular ones.

36. The principles of Hindu personal Law have developed in an evolutionary way out of concern for all those subject to it so as to make fair provision against the destitution. There is clear evidence to indicate that the law of maintenance stems out of the secular desire and so as to achieve the social objectives for making bare minimum provision to sustain the members of relatively smaller social groups. Organically and originally the law itself is irreligious. Its fountain spring is humanistic. In its operational field all through, it lays down the permissible categories under its benefaction, which are so entitled either because of the tenets supported by clear public policy or because of the need to subserve the social and individual morality measures for maintenance.

37. Further, it must be kept in view that the institution of property amongst the Hindus is a fine admixture of rights and duties, obligations and liabilities. In fact, it is an intermixture of corpus that is the object and the capacity that is the right or entitlement to it. A Hindu may possess the property and yet it would be limited by moral and civic obligations. One of such recognised obligations inscribed into the property of a Hindu was that of maintenance of dependants. There is no reason to hold that by codification of the laws, this basic concept for providing a sort of social security and having general insurance in favour of dependants has been completely taken away or abrogated by passing of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956. Necessity to provide even now may arise out of the premises of that Act and will have to be so worked out.

38. On parity of the principle that prevailed with this Court in Govindrao v. Anandibai, AIR 1976 Bom 433, it can be said that even after the Court rendered a decree of nullity under S. 11 of the Hindu Marriage Act, the wife related by such marriage was treated to be entitled under Sec. 25 of that Act to possess a right to have alimony and maintenance. Thus it is obvious that had the matter arisen during the lifetime of Sadashiv between Sadashiv and Rajeshbai and the matter would have been under S. 11, Rajeshbai would have been entitled to rely on Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act so as to claim the relief of maintenance. I do not think that only by reason of the fact that the proceedings are after the death of Sadashiv, there should be any change in the principle. If Sec. 25, as has been found by the above decision conferred a right that right could be worked out even in collateral proceedings if it be correct that the declaration of nullity of such a marriage could be rendered in such proceedings. Therefore, it will have to be found that Rajeshbai is entitled to rely on the principles of Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act and to invoke the powers of the Court for making provisions for just and fair maintenance.

39. Even apart from Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act, I would think that in such matter the Court possesses the inherent power to make such orders in matters of maintenance as may be necessary so as to meet the ends of justice. The principles underlying Sec. 151 of the Civil P. C. are no more in doubt. Where the need and the circumstances to do justice require, the power to act ex debito justitiae exists and can be invoked. That power as is observed by the Supreme Court in Manoharlal v. Seth Hiralal, AIR 1962 SC 527, is not conferred on the Court but is inherent in the Court "by virtue of its duty to do justice between the parties before it." The power will not be exercised when there is any express prohibition enacted by any statute nor would it be exercised when the operational field is covered by the terms of the statute or the terms of the Code. It would always be exercised undoubtedly and unfailingly to reach out a just and fair dispensation of justice to the parties before the Court.

40. When Laws' terms are inadequate and lead to loose ends in unfair tracts, the Court can rely on its inherent power to do justice. With changing complexity of human relations and times, everything cannot be provided by enacted statutes and unfailing as well as just results can be left to be worked out by the Courts possessing such a power. This power has been exercised so as to grant maintenance pendente lite in partition suits. (See Sushilabai v. Ramcharan, 1976 Mah LJ 82). Along with this is the holding of the principles enunciated by this Court that under Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act, the wife whose marriage is void would be entitled as of right to the relief of permanent maintenance once the marriage is annulled by a decree of nullity under Sec. 11. There is no reason to deny similar relief on pari materia principle, though strictly the decree is not passed having reference to Sec. 11 of the Hindu Marriage Act. The right recognised by Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act can clearly be worked out in any civil proceeding subject to consideration of facts and circumstances so as to meet ends of justice by resort to the inherent powers conferred upon the Court by Sec. 151 of the Civil P. C. The statutory references do not indicate that there is any prohibition or any specific provision in this regard. On the other hand, the principle is statutorily recognised that upon a decree being passed for nullifying the marriage as void de jure, the Court is possessed with ample power to make orders as to alimony and maintenance. What could, therefore, be available in special proceedings cannot be said to be not available when the same issue is involved collaterally in competent civil proceedings. Strictly, the statutory entitlement of the Court may not apply but having the recognised right and necessity to enforce it, the Court can, in exercise of its inherent powers reach out justice by giving remedial and such salutary reliefs. Justice after all is another name of fairness. It cannot be blind to the facts in a given case and should reach out in its mercy those results which would be necessary to avoid ruinous consequences like economic or moral destitution. Ultimately, having based the relief on Sec. 151 of the C. P. C. with the aid of inherent powers and drawing upon the principles underlying Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act, it is implicit that before maintenance is granted, the need to grant such must exist as well as the grantee must fulfil the ordinary conditions, like that of chastity, not being married to any other person and further of not being in a position to maintain herself.

41. Relying on the pari materia provisions of Sec. 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act and relying on the inherent powers of the Court to make orders so as to meet the ends of justice, I think, an appropriate order for maintenance in favour of Rajeshbai can be made, though it has to be concluded that in her appeal on other aspects, she cannot but fail.

42. Fairly, Shantabai has come out with an offer to pay Rs. 20,000/- exclusively in full and final settlement of claims for maintenance of Rajeshbai. As stated above, Rajeshbai wants a house to reside and an award of Rs. 300/- per month. The parties are the residents of Malegaon and appear to belong to a middle class agricultural family. The amount of Rs. 20,000/- which is given without any condition, would subserve the need for securing a reasonable accommodation and a reasonable return, which will be enough to provide other amenities.

43. Taking this view, the decree made by the trial Court, though confirmed, is made conditional, in that upon the deposit of Rs. 20,000/- to be paid in a lump sum in full and final settlement of claim for maintenance of Rajeshbai, the plaintiff would recover possession of the properties as are described in the decree made by the trial Court. It is made clear that it is only upon the deposit of Rs. 20,000/- and from that date onwards, if at all the plaintiff wishes to recover any mesne profits, that cause of action for that would arise in her favour. This clarification was necessitated because there had not been any decree nor any cross-objections filed, but the apprehension was expressed that the parties may litigate unnecessarily in that regard.

44. There will be no order as to costs throughout in view of the findings herein.

Ordered accordingly.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 243DESHPANDE, C. J. AND REGE, J.

Rajendra Kumar Sabharwal, Appellant v. Smt. Lila K. Jagtiani and others, Respondents.

Appeal No. 358 of 1979, (In Misc. Petn. No. 1919 of 1979), D/- 16-2-1981.

Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (24 of 1961), Sec. 91 — Proceedings by disputant member for eviction of non-disputant occupier of flat — Society whether has cause of action against occupant of flat — Whether relationship of landlord and tenant exists between society and non-member occupant or between member and non-member occupant. (Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 28).

If it is found that the Society as a co-disputant is interested in taking possession of the flat from the non-disputant and see to it that it remains in possession of its own member, the disputant, then the dispute becomes not only between a member and the licensee but also between the Society and its member, on the one side, and the non-disputant member inducted in the flat by disputant member, on the other. These facts found are sufficient to meet the challenge of lack of jurisdiction under S. 91 of the Act. (Para 6)

If the by-laws contemplate that ordinarily the flat should be in possession of its member and if the Society is a party to the proceedings for eviction against such non-tenant for the sake of making the said flat available for the occupation of its member, the Society cannot be said to have no cause of action against the actual occupant of the flat.

(Para 7)

It is well-settled that the members of the Society in such cases are entitled to personal possession of the flats as such members of the Society, and they can claim to remain in possession only in accordance with the by-laws of the Society. Once the co-disputant Society is not claimed to be the landlord by the non-disputant, the question of his being a tenant of the said Society cannot arise. His claim to be a tenant even of disputant member cannot arise as long as the said tenancy is not shown to be with the permission of the Society.

(Para 10)

D. R. Dhanuka with I. S. Khemani. for Appellant; V. K. Punwani with K. N. Mirchandani and A. N. Mirchandani, for Respondents No. 1 and 2.

DESHPANDE C. J.:— The petitioner-appellant is the original non-disputant. A flat in a building belonging to disputant No. 2-Co-operative Society, was held as a member by disputant No. 1. The same was given on leave and licence basis on 1st Oct. 1962. A joint application was made to the Society by disputant No. 1 and the non-disputant for making the latter a nominal member of the Society. By-laws 66, 67 and 68 of the Society prevented a member from leasing out the flat or giving the same on leave and licence basis to any person who is not enrolled first as a nominal member and previous permission for such tenancy or leave and licence agreement is not taken from the Managing Committee of the Society. It is pursuant to these by-laws that the non-disputant appears to have been enrolled as a nominal member of the Society on the joint application of disputant No. 1 and the non-disputant. It is also not in dispute that the Managing Committee did pass a resolution according its permission to allow the disputant No. 1 to enter into a leave and licence agreement with the non-disputant.

2. The present proceedings were initiated by disputant No. 1 in the month of April 1969 against the non-disputant claiming his eviction from the flat and arrears of compensation unpaid till that date and future compensation till the date of vacating the said flat. In the written statement the non-disputant claimed to be a tenant of the said flat and denied his liability to vacate the same. He also contended that the tenancy was created with the permission of the said Society and he was enrolled as a nominal member of the said Society with that view.

3. By his order dated 22nd Aug. 1978 the learned Judge of the 1st Co-operative Court, Bombay, passed an award in favour of the disputants and directed the non-disputant to deliver possession of the said flat to the disputants and also pay arrears of compensation and future compensation till the date of vacating it. The claim also was decreed with costs.

4. Before the award was passed on 22nd Aug. 1978, disputant No. 2-Cooperative Society, also was impleaded as a co-disputant and for that purpose the plaint raising a dispute was amended with the leave of the Court. An application to that effect was made on 29th Nov. 1973 and the order allowing the same was passed on 22nd Feb. 1974. It also appears that during the pendency of the dispute before the Co-operative Court, by-law 68 (a) was amended. In addition to becoming a nominal member it also became necessary for a licensee nominal member to pay a sum of Rs. 500/- by way of security deposit. According to Mr. Punwani, the learned Advocate appearing for respondents Nos. 1 and 2 the non-disputant was not called upon to pay the said amount of Rs. 500/-, but the 'B' share money was converted into cash and the non-disputant continued to be a nominal member because of his having paid Re. 1/- initially. It is unnecessary to go into this question as the decision thereon does not appear to us to be relevant to the point raised in this case.

5. Against the award of the Co-operative Court, the non-disputant preferred an appeal to the Maharashtra State Co-operative Appellate Court, Bombay. The said appeal was dismissed by the order dated 30th Aug. 1979. The validity of this judgment of the Appellate Court was challenged before a single Judge of this Court in a writ petition on the Original side of this Court. The same was dismissed summarily by the learned single Judge. Hence this appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

6. We are unable to see any force in this appeal. The contention of Mr. Dhanuka, the learned Advocate for the appellant, is that notwithstanding the amendment of the plaint during the pendency of the dispute before the Co-operative Court in the year 1973 and notwithstanding the impleading of the Co-operative Society as disputant No. 2, the Society has not indicated any interest in the proceedings initiated by disputant No. 1 against the non-disputant or in the possession of the flat for which the proceedings were initiated. Mr. Dhanuka, therefore, contends that the Society being in the circumstances merely an idle party, the dispute essentially remains between member-licensor and the licensee and is not cognizable by the authorities contemplated under Sec. 91 of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960. Both the trial Court as well as the Appellate Court have held that the said Society became a co-disputant to ensure possession of the flat for its member as occupation by member alone is contemplated under the by-laws of the said Society. It is pertinent to note that the amended plaint indicated how the Society also was interested in evicting the non-disputant and ensure possession of the flat for the occupation by its member. Admittedly, the non-disputant-appellant did not even care to file a written statement and challenge the averments made in that regard. Both the Courts below have accepted the disputants' case to that effect. If it is found that the Society as a co-disputant is interested in taking possession of the flat from the non-disputant and see to it that it remains in possession of its own member, disputant No. 1, then the dispute becomes not only between a member and the licensee but also between the Society and its member, on the one side, and the non-disputant, who admittedly was inducted in the flat by disputant No. 1, on the other. These facts found are sufficient to meet the challenge of lack of jurisdiction under Sec. 91 of the above Act.

7. The contention of Mr. Dhanuka that the Society has no cause of action also is liable to be rejected on the same ground. If the by-laws contemplate that ordinarily the flat should be in possession of its member and if the Society is a party to the proceedings for eviction against such non-tenant for the sake of making the said flat available for the occupation of its member, the Society cannot be said to have no cause of action against the actual occupant of the flat. This contention is, therefore, devoid of any substance.

8. Mr. Dhanuka then contends that the non-disputant continued to occupy the said flat with the previous permission of the Society, and as long as breach of the by-laws is not alleged, the Society or the member cannot claim eviction of the non-disputant-appellant. The underlying assumption that no breach of the by-laws is alleged is based on the contention that the Society has accorded its sanction or permission for inducting the non-disputant as the licensee in the said flat. The assumption is ill-founded. Unfortunately, this point does not seem to have argued before the fact finding Courts below at all, but the same was sought to be argued before us. There is, however, no dispute about the facts in the present case. There does exist a resolution of the Managing Committee of the Society according to its sanction to disputant No. 1 to enter into leave and licence agreement with the non-disputant. Mr. Dhanuka is right in contending that the said resolution does not contemplate fixing any period during which the leave and licence agreement was to remain effective. It is, however, not in dispute that the first leave and licence agreement was for eleven months. It is open to the fact finding Courts to construe the said resolution of the Managing Committee in the light of the contemporaneous leave and licence agreement and hold that permission was intended to be for the period during which that leave and licence agreement was to operate. Looked at from this point of view, the possession of the non-disputant must be deemed to have been without permission after the expiry of the first eleven months and consequently in breach of by-laws 66 and 67 of the Society the Society was entitled to the possession of the flat on this ground also.

9. It is true that this ground is not spelt out in so many words in the pleadings. Unfortunately, the non-disputant has not cared to file any written statement after the pleadings were amended on impleading the Society as a co-disputant. The case of the Society that it wants possession of the said flat for the occupation of its own member implies also the claim that the person actually in possession such as the non-disputant was remaining in possession in breach of the by-laws.

10. Mr. Dhanuka then strenuously argued that the fact-finding Courts have not applied the test laid down by the Supreme Court to determine the true relationship between the non-disputant-appellant and the disputants-respondents Nos. 1 and 2. We do not think it necessary to go into the larger question as to when the lease agreement can be said to have come into existence and when the agreement turned out to be one of mere leave and licence. Suffice it to note that admittedly the building belongs to a Co-operative Society as also the flat in dispute therein. The non-disputant does not claim to be a tenant of the Society nor does he claim the Society as his landlord. It is well-settled that the members of the Society in such cases are entitled to personal possession of the flats as such members of the Society, and they can claim to remain in possession only in accordance with the by-laws of the Society. Once the co-disputant Society is not claimed to be the landlord by the non-disputant, the question of his being a tenant of the said Society cannot arise. His claim to be a tenant even of disputant No. 1 cannot arise as long as the said tenancy is not shown to be with the permission of the Society. We have already seen how even the leave and licence agreement lacked previous sanction of the Society subsequent to the expiry of the first leave and licence agreement.

11. There is thus no merit in this appeal and the same is dismissed with costs.

12. Mr. Dhanuka applies for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. Leave refused.

Appeal dismissed.

M. A. Rane, for Petitioners; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondents.

ORDER:— The petitioners, in this case, claim to be the tenants in respect of the suit premises and have tried to make good their claim in a manner which has turned out to be rather quaint.

2. The facts giving rise to this petition are simple. The suit premises consist of a shop in House No. 255 at Bhavani Peth, Satara, admeasuring 20 ft. x 10 ft. For the sake of convenience the parties are referred to by me hereinafter as plaintiff or defendant No. 1 or 2 or 3 as the case may be, that is to say, with reference to their position in the trial Court.

3. Defendant No. 1 was the tenant in respect of the suit premises even before the year 1959. The house in which the suit premises are situate was purchased by the plaintiff on 25-6-1959. He purchased it for Rs. 25,000/-. It is contended that he spent a further sum of Rupees 45,000/- for the repairs of the same.

4. On 5-9-1966 the plaintiff executed a rent note in favour of defendant No. 1 Ramchandra Narayan Deshmukh. The exact period of the rent note is not known, but that fact is not even germane for the purposes of this petition. Admittedly defendant No. 1 was carrying on business in the suit premises.

5. On 4-6-1967, defendant No. 1 took defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the partnership and conducted his business in the said partnership. On 1-1-1969 plaintiff executed another rent note in favour of defendant No. 1. That was to be for a period of 11 months and the agreed rent was Rs. 50/- per month. The noteworthy thing is that there is a specific prohibition, prohibiting defendant No. 1 from subletting or assigning the suit premises to anyone else.

6. As mentioned above the rent note was only for a period of 11 months, meaning thereby that the period of contractual tenancy contemplated by the same expired at the end of 30th Nov. 1969. During the subsistence of the said tenancy, defendant No. 1 carried on business in partnership with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the suit premises and there is no dispute that even after the expiry of the said period continued to carry on the said business in partnership till 15-11-1970.

7. On 15-11-1970 a document was executed by the partners and the same has been loosely described as a deed of dissolution. On a careful examination of the document, however, it can be readily seen that the transaction envisaged by the said document was nothing but that of retirement of defendant No. 1 from the partnership. From that day defendant No. 1 took certain consideration (Rs. 1488) from defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and walked out of the partnership. What is mentioned in cl. (4) of the said document is rather significant. It is stated there as follows:—

“The premises in which our partnership business is going on belong to Shri Javahar Lalchand Katariya resident of Satara. The lease-deed in respect of the suit premises is in the name of Shri Deshmukh; but since the time Shri Deshmukh came in our partnership, the tenancy rights have come to the partners and the receipt in the name of Shri Deshmukh is in the name of Deshmukh as partner of the firm. Hence from the day of the retirement of Shri Deshmukh the said rent is to be paid to Shri Katariya by the remaining two partners and they are bound to obtain receipts. Shri Deshmukh should give co-operation in this behalf and he has to tell Shri Katariya to give rent receipts and to execute the lease-deed in the name of the partners.”

It is, therefore, crystal clear from this statement in the said document, which, incidentally, is styled as Karapatra, that the document by itself does not even purport to transfer the tenancy rights of defendant No. 1 either incidentally or substantively in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Rather, the document assumes that the partnership comprising of the three partners, which came into being on 4-5-1967, ipso facto brought in its wake the transfer of the tenancy right in respect of the suit premises from defendant No. 1 to the partnership of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Evidently the document assumes the position of transfer as a fait accompli. There is not a suggestion in the said document that the document is instrumental to the transfer of the tenancy. The document only assumes an already existing transfer and only records the said fact. The document further expresses a pious hope that defendant No. 1 will give co-operation to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 so as to persuade the plaintiff to pass the rent receipt and execute a lease-deed in favour of the continuing partners.

8. It was in these circumstances that on 9-1-1971 the plaintiff terminated the tenancy of defendant No. 1 and called upon him to hand over possession of the said premises to the plaintiff by a notice of termination. Exh. 102. The plaintiff also called upon defendant No. 1 to pay all the arrears of rent which amounted to more than six months on the date of the notice.

9. It is not disputed that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 tried to send the money orders of the arrears of rent to the plaintiff before the expiry of one month from the receipt of the said notice, Ex. 102. But again it is common ground that they tried to send the amount of rent in their own right and not on behalf of defendant No. 1 as such. In other words it was their contention that they themselves were tenants in respect of the suit premises and that the plaintiff was duly bound to accept them as tenants and to receive the rent from them as such.

10. The plaintiff refused to accept the rent from defendants Nos. 2 and 3 contending that there was no jural relationship whatsoever between himself and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Thereafter the suit out of which the present proceedings arise was filed by the plaintiff against all the defendants for recovery of possession of the suit premises.

11. The suit was based upon various grounds contemplated by the provisions of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates (Control) Act 1947 (hereinafter 'the Bombay Rent Act'). However, we are concerned here only with four grounds, (i) unlawful subletting or assignment of the suit premises by defendant No. 1 to defendants Nos. 2 and 3; (ii) bona fide requirement of the landlord (iii) the non-user of the suit premises by defendant No. 1 for a period exceeding six months without any reasonable cause and (iv) default for a period exceeding six months in the matter of payment of rent. I have stated that these are the only relevant grounds because the trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit on the above four grounds. The trial Court held (a) that the plaintiff required the suit premises bona fide and reasonably for his personal requirement as claimed by him; (b) that defendant No. 1 was liable for eviction from the suit premises on account of unlawful subletting of the suit premises by him in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3; (c) that defendant No. 1 had incurred liability for eviction on account of non-user of the suit premises by him for a period exceeding six months (d) and that defendant No. 1 had committed default in the matter of payment of rent for a period exceeding six months.

12. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed an appeal to the District Court. The District Court held that the finding regarding unlawful subletting was not correct but had held that defendant No. 1 was guilty of unlawful assignment of the suit premises. Findings regarding plaintiff's bona fide requirement of the suit premises for his personal use as also regarding default committed by defendant No. 1 for a period exceeding six months were confirmed by the appellate Court. Hence the decree for eviction passed by the trial Court against the defendants was confirmed by the appellate Court. It is against this decree by the Courts below that the present Writ Petition had been filed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

13. Mr. Rane the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners advanced three arguments in support of his contention that the decree passed by the Courts below was unsustainable. Firstly, he contended that there was a transfer of business by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the present petitioners, as a going concern along with the transfer of the tenancy rights as envisaged by the notification issued by the Government under S. 15 of the Rent Act, He, therefore, contended that there was a valid assignment of the tenancy rights in favour of the present petitioners. Secondly, he contended that the tenancy of the original defendant No. 1, even after the expiry of the period of lease of 11 months from 1-1-1969, was not a statutory tenancy but was contractual tenancy. Thirdly, he contended that though there was a prohibition in the said rent note dt. 1-1-1969 prohibiting defendant No. 1 from assigning his tenancy rights under the rent note to any other person without the consent of the landlord, still that prohibition was overridden by the proviso which permitted the assignments of the tenancy rights if the assignment took place together with the business as a going concern etc. Mr. Rane contended that the provisions of law had an overriding effect over the contractual obligations and stipulations.

14. To my mind each of the contentions of Mr. Rane must fail even if taken separately; but the entire petition is being capable of being disposed of with reference to Mr. Rane's first contention on the short point that in fact there was no transfer or assignment by defendant No. 1 of his tenancy rights in respect of the suit premises, whether contractual or statutory, in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 whether by virtue of deed of dissolution, Ex. 159, dt. 15-11-1970 or otherwise. A glance at the said deed of dissolution would show that there is not even an intention to transfer the tenancy rights, whether incidentally or substantively by the retiring partner, defendant No. 1, in favour of the continuing partners, defendants Nos. 2 and 3. I have already extracted the relevant portion of the deed of dissolution and it shows that the deed of dissolution proceeded upon the assumption that the tenancy rights had already come to the two remaining partners. It is difficult to see on what basis the assumption is made. Further, there is not one word in the said deed of dissolution by which defendant No. 1 can be said to have intended to transfer those tenancy rights in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Even otherwise it is impossible to hold that there was any assignment by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 of the business as a going concern, the goodwill and the tenancy rights as incidental to the assignment by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. So far as the tenancy rights were concerned, it is nobody's case that they ever belonged to the partnership as a whole. What defendant No. 1 has done by the deed of dissolution is that he has retired from the partnership. Retirement from the partnership by one partner may result in the fact that the business vests in the continuing partners exclusively and it does result in fact that the retiring partner ceases to have any right, title and interest in the business as such; but that does not mean that the retiring partner has 'assigned' the business with the stock-in-trade and goodwill thereof in favour of the remaining partners. The kind of deed executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 cannot be said to be a deed of assignment as contemplated by the notification issued by the Government under S. 15 of the Rent Act. Moreover, if the tenancy rights were to be transferred they could be so transferred only by a registered document. Admittedly no such registered document has been executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the purpose of alleged assignment. It is, therefore, impossible to hold that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are lawful assignees in respect of the tenancy rights within the contemplation of S. 15 of the Rent Act. If there was any ambiguity about the fact that defendant No. 1 did not purport to transfer the tenancy rights in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the position is made clear by defendant No. 2 himself. In Para. 13 of her deposition she has stated in clear terms as follows:—

"We have not got transferred the leasehold interest of defendant No. 1 in our favour till to-day by separate deed." This aspect of the case is considered by the learned trial Judge in para. 11 of his judgment. There he has discussed the entire evidence led on behalf of the defendants.

15. From the discussion it will be seen that the contention of defendants was that there was an agreement by defendant No. 1 to assign or transfer the leasehold rights in favour of the partnership, but it was not so done till the dissolution of the partnership. The deed of dissolution proceeds on the assumption that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were already tenants in respect of the suit premises, whereas defendant No. 2 has admitted in so many words that there was no separate deed executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the purpose of such transfer. This is apart from the position that no such transfer could have been effected by a separate deed. If at all transfer of the tenancy is to be made by any tenant in favour of a stranger it could be done along with the assignment of the business as a going concern together with the stock-in-trade and good will etc. It, therefore, follows that so far as defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are concerned they have not a tittle of right, title and interest in the suit premises. It is equally clear that defendant No. 1 had ceased to have the possession of the suit premises. There was, therefore, no question of his being entitled to any protection under the Rent Act. If he was not entitled to any protection of the Rent Act, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 could be having no legal status whatsoever either under the provisions of the Rent Act or under the provisions of the general law. None of them was, therefore, entitled to any legitimate defence to a suit for possession by the landlord.

16. In reply to this position Mr. Rane faintly suggested two replies. Firstly, he contended that if there was no unlawful subletting or unlawful assignment in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, no decree could be passed against defendant No. 1 for possession under S. 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act. Secondly, he contended that in that event defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the present petitioners, were just trespassers. No decree, therefore, could be passed against them by the Court in these proceedings which were instituted under the provisions of the Rent Act.

17. I will firstly dispose of the second line of the argument of Mr. Rane. In this behalf, the contention of Mr. Rane is no longer res integra. As early as in the year 1953 the Supreme Court has held that where the decree is passed against a tenant under the provisions of the Rent Act the same can be executed against all the persons claiming through the tenant, including the unlawful sub-tenants or assignees. In the present case defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not become lawful assignees. In any event they claimed through defendant No. 1. There is, therefore, absolutely no reason why decree could not be passed or executed against them. This position could be further clarified by taking an illustration. Supposing the plaintiff had not impleaded defendants Nos. 2 and 3 at all and had obtained a decree against defendant No. 1 alone. When he got a decree against de-fedant No. 1, he would try to execute a decree against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who would be in possession. They would raise obstruction and would contend that they were claiming either through defendant No. 1 or that they were rank trespassers. In both the cases the obstructionist would have no answer in law to the execution. The obstruction would have to be removed by the executing Court. Now, the position of the petitioner by joining defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the suit could not be worse than what it would be if defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were not impleaded in the suit. I am mentioning this only as an illustration to show that it is perfectly within the jurisdiction of the Rent Court to pass a decree not only against an ex-tenant but also against persons, who claim through him.

18. As regards the first line of argument of Mr. Rane mentioned above, it is amenable to number of answers. The first simple answer is that even assuming that no decree could be passed against defendant No. 1 under S. 13 (1) (e) because there was no effective assignment made by him in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of the tenancy rights, decree could be passed and in fact has been passed against him, with perfect justification, under S. 12 (3) (a) as also under S. 13 (1) (g) of the Rent Act. That decree is equally binding upon defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the reasons mentioned above. Secondly, as from the date of expiration of the rent note dt. 1-1-1969, Ex. 127, defendant No. 1 had become only a statutory tenant in respect of the suit premises. It is well known that all that a statutory tenant continues to have as 'interest' in the premises of which he was previously a contractual tenant is the right to have his possession protected. His 'interest' is confined only to the possession of the premises. When, therefore, a statutory tenant parts even with his possession of the premises in favour of a stranger, he can be and must be said to have transferred 'in any other manner his interest therein.' The transfer may not amount to subletting within the meaning of S. 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act or it may not amount to assignment within the meaning of S. 15 of the Rent Act, but it will amount to transfer in any other manners his interest in the suit premises within the meaning of S. 13 (1) (e) and since defendant No. 1 had admittedly parted with the possession of the suit premises in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, he must be deemed to have incurred the liability of eviction under the said S. 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act,

19. In this connection it is useful to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas Pvt. Ltd. v. Anandji Kalyanji's Pedhi, AIR 1965 SC 414. The relevant portion of the report reads as follows (at p. 422):—

"A person remaining in occupation of the premises let to him after the determination of or expiry of the period of the tenancy is commonly, though in law not accurately called a statutory tenant. Such a person is not a tenant at all; he has no estate or interest in the premises occupied by him. He has merely the protection of the statute in that he cannot be turned out so long as he pays the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy. His right to remain in possession after the determination of the contractual tenancy is personal, it is not capable of being transferred or assigned, and devolves on his death only in the manner provided by the statute."

It has been further held by the Supreme Court in Hiralal v. Kasturbhai, AIR 1967 SC 1853, that even after the determination of a lease of a contractual tenant, the sub-tenant who becomes a statutory tenant does continue to have some kind of interest subsisting in his favour. That interest is the right to remain in possession. It is on this basis that it was held in that case that a notice terminating the tenancy of a contractual tenant did not ipso facto result in determining the entirety of tenant's interest in the suit premises.

20. Reading the above two decisions together one can safely attribute an intention to the legislature, while enacting S. 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act read with S. 15 of the same, to proscribe every kind of transfer of rights of the tenant, except that which is specifically permitted. Transfer of possession is one kind of interest, which is proscribed. Unpermitted transfer of possession by the tenant must, therefore, inevitably result in the tenant being exposed to the liability for eviction under the said S. 13 (1) (e) irrespective of the question whether the tenant is a contractual tenant or a statutory tenant.

21. I am alive to the fact that while dealing with the question whether a statutory tenant had a right to assign business premises held by him, the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) (supra) has made an observation that the word 'tenant' finding place in S. 13 (1) (e) means a contractual tenant. However, it cannot be said to be the intention of the Supreme Court to hold that S. 13 (1) (e) did not apply to a statutory tenant. That would lead to an anomalous result that a contractual tenant who had all the rights in respect of the suit premises including possessory right could not assign or sublet the premises let out to him, whereas a statutory tenant who had no other right except the right of protection of his possession could assign or sublet the suit premises with impunity. This argument of Mr. Rane must, therefore, fail.

22. Moreover, to my mind this distinction between statutory tenant and contractual tenant and the view that S. 12 applies to former whereas S. 13 (1) applied to the latter needs a second look having regard to the law recently declared by the Supreme Court in V. Dhana-pal Chettiar v. Yesodai Ammal AIR 1979 SC 1745. There it has been held by a Bench of Seven Judges of the Court that a notice of termination of tenancy under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is not at all indispensable pre-requisite for a suit for eviction. Now, the following factual and legal position in the urban places to which the Bombay Rent Act applies is well recognised and well settled and is that:—

(1) The preponderating number of tenancies governed by that Act are monthly tenancies;

(2) The tenancies were initially brought about by the Contract between the landlord and the tenant which was the reason why they were called 'contractual tenancies';

(3) The contractual tenancy of such monthly tenancy could be terminated by the landlord at any time by giving a notice of its termination as per the provisions of S. 106 of the T. P. Act;

(4) By virtue of such notice of termination the status of the contractual tenant stood converted into that of a mere statutory tenant;

(5) The view of law taken by our High Court and shared by various other High Courts, as also, at one time, by the Supreme Court, was that unless the contractual tenancy of the tenant was terminated or stood terminated, no suit for the tenant's eviction could be filed on any of the grounds mentioned in the Rent Act.

As an inescapable corollary to the last mentioned proposition, suit for possession, whatever may be the ground for it, could be filed only against a statutory tenant. This is the result of inexorable logic or ratiocination. No suit could be filed without termination of tenancy and termination of tenancy inevitably made the tenant a statutory tenant. Could it be then said that when Supreme Court observed in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) (supra) that S. 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act contemplated a contractual tenant, did it mean that suit under S. 13 (1) (e) could be filed against the tenant without a notice of termination of the tenancy of the contractual tenant? On the interpretation of the law as it then stood, this was inconceivable. As per the interpretation of this branch of law which held the field at that time, unless the lease stood determined by efflux of time or by virtue of operation of some forfeiture clause, no eviction suit could have been filed even under said S. 13 (1) (e) unless notice of termination of the tenancy was duly given to the tenant. And the moment the said notice was complete, the tenant became a statutory tenant. Where, then, remained any field in which said S. 13 (1) (e) could operate?

22-A. But whatever may be the position before Dhanpal's case (AIR 1979 SC 1745) (supra), the position is materially and significantly changed by the said decision of the Supreme Court because the most relevant context in which the Anand Nivas case was decided has itself vanished or at least changed. Take for instance the position under S. 12 (1) of the Rent Act. The majority view in Anand Nivas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) prima facie appears to be that S. 12 (1) contemplates a suit against a statutory tenant only. This observation was evidently made because such a suit had to be preceded by a notice terminating the tenancy which made the tenancy a statutory tenancy. But what happens now after the pronouncement of the correct law by the Supreme Court in Dhanpal's case (AIR 1979 SC 1745)? No landlord need give notice under Sec. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, as a precursor to the suit. No such notice before the suit means no conversion of the contractual tenancy into a statutory tenancy. If what is apparently the majority view in Anand Nivas' case (AIR 1965 SC 414), viz. that S. 12 (1) (and consequently entire Sec. 12) contemplates a suit only against a statutory tenant is correct, no suit under Sec. 12 without notice under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act as a precursor to it would be competent at all. This is something which flies in the face of the law declared by the Supreme Court in Dhanpal's case (supra). What all this means is that the difference between contractual and statutory tenancy is rendered more academic than real by virtue of the pronouncement of law in Dhanpal's case. Suit could be filed against contractual tenant as well as a statutory tenant. But it could be filed only on the grounds mentioned in Ss. 12 and 13 of the Rent Act. And if the grounds existed and were proved, the suit would culminate in a decree against the tenant irrespective of the question whether the defendant tenant was contractual tenant or a statutory tenant.

23. I have given the illustration of S. 12 of the Rent Act advisedly. It shows that after the final pronouncement of law by the Supreme Court it must be held that the so-called difference between contractual tenancy and statutory tenancy corpus juris of our Rent legislation is more academic than real. If this is so with reference to S. 12 of our Rent Act, it is difficult to see how it is not so with reference to S. 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act. It, therefore, follows that S. 13 (1) (e) contemplates the liability as much of a statutory tenant as of a contractual tenant. In this view of things it is really unnecessary to examine whether defendant No. 1 was a contractual tenant or statutory tenant on the date when he parted with possession of the suit premises. He, therefore, fully divested himself of the protection of the Rent Act. There being no lawful assignment in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, they never became transferees for the protection either under any particular provision of the Act or under the general scheme of the Act. The decree for possession passed against them is, therefore, unassailable.

24. While taking this view as regards the effect of Dhanpal's case (AIR 1979 SC 1745) I am alive to the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court dated 13th September 1979 in Spl. C. A. No. 2447 of 1974: (reported in AIR 1980 Bom 341) my attention to which was invited by Mr. Rane in a slightly different context. As stated above, it was his first contention that there was an assignment of tenancy rights of defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but if defendant No. 1 himself had only a statutory tenant with him, his act of assignment of that tenancy was nothing short of futility because statutory tenancy, as per the said judgment of the Division Bench was per se non-transferable. It was in this context that Mr. Rane invited my attention to this ruling which, he conceded demolished one limb of his client's argument. But the view that I have taken regarding the effect of Dhanpal's case is bound to necessitate a second look at the question that arose before the Division Bench. In this connection I must hasten to add that with great respect, I am in full agreement with the reasoning on which the judgment is based. If the judgment in Dhanpal's case (AIR 1979 SC 1745) was not before me, it would be difficult to find fault with the Division Bench judgment. The judgment in Anand Nivas' case (AIR 1965 SC 414), assuming it was of two learned Judges of the Supreme Court was relied upon with approval by a Bench of 4 learned Judges of the Court in Jai Singh Murarji v. Sovani (P) Ltd., AIR 1973 SC 772. Hence there was no escape from the conclusion which was arrived at by the Division Bench. But evidently the judgment in Dhanpal's case, though delivered on 23-8-1979, was not and could not be brought to the notice of the Division Bench while giving decision dated 13th September 1979. The Dhanpal's case was first reported in October 1979 in the AIR series. As discussed above, the said judgment changes the entire complexion of the question involved.

25. All the same, if I was required to go into the question whether statutory tenancy was per se non-transferable, I would have certainly referred this matter to a Division Bench for considering the effect of the judgment in Dhanpal's case (AIR 1979 SC 1745) on this branch of law. But in view of my finding that in fact there was no transfer or assignment of any character by defendant No. 1 of his tenancy rights in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, I think it to be wholly unnecessary to do so.

26. In view of this position to my mind, there is hardly any substance in the petition filed by the original defendants Nos. 2 and 3. If defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have no right either under the Transfer of Property Act or under the Rent Act, it is difficult to see how they can resist the decree for possession passed against them. Once it is accepted that the said two defendants have not a tittle of right, title and interest in the suit premises either under the general law or under the special statute, it is impossible to hold that the decree passed by the lower Court against defendant No. 1 on the ground of default in payment of rent for a period exceeding six months as also on the ground that the premises are bona fide required by the respondent-landlord for his own occupation became assailable by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. In a way defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in that case would have no locus standi to file the petition. I may mention here that in this view of things, Mr. Rane has not even challenged the finding of the lower Court or even touched the finding recorded by the lower Court in connection with the respondent's plea of bona fide requirement and defendant No. 1's default in the payment of rent. No argument was advanced before me by Mr. Rane to contend that the decision of the lower Court on the ground of bona fide requirement was in any way erroneous nor was it contended by him that the decree against defendant No. 1 could not be passed on the ground that he had committed default in payment of rent for a period exceeding six months.

27. This disposes of the first contention of Mr. Rane and together with it, in fact, the entire petition. However, I propose to deal also with the remaining two propositions urged by Mr. Rane. Mr. Rane urged that the petitioners were not statutory tenants even after the expiry of the period of rent note of 11 months from 1-1-1969. Evidently this contention was urged by him in order to surmount the above mentioned Division Bench ruling that a statutory tenancy was per se non-transferable. Coming to the first of these contentions raised by Mr. Rane that the petitioners were the contractual tenants, Mr. Rane's said contention is based only upon the notice given by the landlord-respondent No. 1 on 9-1-1971, Ex. 102, in these proceedings. In the said notice the landlord had mentioned that the tenancy of defendant No. 1 was being put to an end by him with effect from the end of 31-1-1971. From this, Mr. Rane contended that respondent No. 1 had recognised the tenancy of defendant No. 1 till 31-1-1971.

28. If we carefully go through the notice, we find that what respondent No. 1 has in fact done is that he has terminated the statutory tenancy of defendant No. 1. It may be that termination of such tenancy is not necessary having regard to the provisions of law. Rightly or wrongly what respondent No. 1 has sought to do is to determine the statutory tenancy. This is clear from the fact that he has given three reasons for terminating the tenancy. Firstly, he contends that the premises are required by him for his personal occupation and that is the reason why he has determined the occupation of defendant No. 1 as tenant with effect from the end of 31-1-1971. Secondly, he has mentioned that defendant No. 1 has not paid rent as required by the rent note and that is the reason why he has terminated the tenancy from the end of 31-1-1971. The third ground is that the defendant No. 1 has let the suit premises without the permission of respondent No. 1. It will be thus seen that the landlord has relied mainly on the provisions of the statute for the purpose of determining the tenancy of defendant No. 1. Now, it is well-known that so far as the tenancy under the Transfer of Property Act is concerned, no reasons are required to be assigned at all for the termination of the tenancy if the termination is to be made under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. A notice simpliciter terminating the tenancy in the manner prescribed by law is enough for the purpose of termination. No reasons or grounds as such are required to be furnished for the termination of the tenancy. In fact mention of the grounds would not validate the notice if the same was otherwise invalid and non-mention of the same would not invalidate it if it was otherwise valid. Statutory tenancy, on the other hand is determined by the decree passed by the Court only on the grounds in question. The landlord is evidently not conversant with subtleties and niceties of this distinction, but he knows that the tenant continues to be tenant for all practical purposes. Evidently this is the reason that propelled him to serve this notice. Evidently, this is done by way of abundant caution. To my mind, it would be eminently unjust and unfair to allow the defendants to make capital of the landlord's ignorance of the law. Moreover, this contention is being raised before me for the first time. At no time in either of the courts below has any of the defendants contended that a new contractual tenancy was either created or evidenced by the said notice. No issue is got framed for that contention. A number of explanations could have been given by the plaintiff if any issue in that behalf was sought. The very fact that the termination is based upon those particular grounds, which are recognised by the Rent Act, shows that the respondent No. 1 was aware that defendant No. 1 was entitled to the protection of the statute, meaning thereby that he was a statutory tenant, and, hence, that he was advised that that tenancy should be terminated. It is not a notice of termination of tenancy as required by 106 of the T. P. Act at all. The notice proceeds upon the assumption that the tenant is entitled to the protection of the Rent Act and by the notice the tenant is informed that he is no more entitled for protection of the Rent Act, in view of the grounds stated in the notice. It cannot be, therefore, said that respondent No. 1 had treated defendant No. 1 as his contractual tenant even after the expiry of the period of the rent note dated 1-1-1969.

29. Assuming, however, that I am wrong on this point and assuming that defendant No. 1 was a contractual tenant on 9-1-1971, still it is to be noted that the rent note incorporates a specific prohibition against assignment. Mr. Rane contends that the notification issued by the Government authorising the assignment of tenancy under the proviso to S. 15 (1) of the Act has an overriding effect over the contractual prohibition. He contends that the assignment made in pursuance of or in accordance with the said notification will be lawful despite the contractual prohibition.

30. I am afraid this contention is basically erroneous. There is nothing in the proviso to S. 15 (1) nor is there anything in the notification issued under the same which has an effect of giving the proviso or the notification an overriding effect over the contractual prohibition against assignment. Whenever the contract sought to be overridden by the statutory provision is intended, specific provision in that behalf is made by the statute. As for instance in sub-sec. (2) of S. 15 of the Rent Act which came on the statute book with effect from 21st May 1959, a condition in the deed of lease prohibiting sublease or assignment was overridden by the said sub-section (2) of S. 15. This is what the relevant provision of the said sub-section (2) states:

"....., and accordingly, notwithstanding in any contract or in the judgment, decree or order of a Court, any such sublease, assignment or transfer or any such purported sublease, assignment or transfer in favour of any person who has entered into possession shall be deemed to be valid and effectual for all purposes....."

Juxtaposing this provision against the notification issued by the Government under the proviso to S. 15 (1), it will be found that the assignment which is permitted by the notification is not subject to any such non obstante clause. It is not provided therein that notwithstanding anything provided in any contract, the assignment effected as per the notification would be valid and lawful. On the plain reading of the notification, therefore, it cannot be said that there is any overriding effect given to the notification over the contractual prohibition against subletting or assigning.

31. Moreover, even the abovementioned Division Bench ruling of this Court in Spl. C. A. No. 2447/74 clearly brings out the position that if the tenancy per se is not transferable then the notification authorising the assignment would be of no avail to the assignee. It was held in that case that the statutory tenancy was not per se non-assignable having regard to the provisions of S. 12 (1) of the Rent Act and, hence, it was held that the notification would not give any added right to the transferee, if the tenancy was per se non-transferable. A tenancy can be said to be per se non-transferable on various grounds. One of such grounds is that there is a condition in the lease-deed itself that the tenancy could not be transferred. Such a condition would be a perfectly valid condition and it would be an organic part of the totality of the rights known as tenancy rights. The tenancy in such a case would be per se not transferable. This being the position the contention of Mr. Rane in this behalf must fail.

32. In the result the petition fails and is dismissed.

33. Rule earlier issued is discharged. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

CHANDURKAR AND MEHTA, JJ.

Smt. Chandra Srinivasan and others, Petitioners v. D. M. Sukhtankar and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 1492 with Appeal No.
487 of 1981, D/- 5-12-1981.

Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 69 (c) Proviso — Scope and object — Approval of Standing Committee to the proposal of Municipal Commissioner — Approval not granted within 15 days from date it was put on the agenda of the meeting — Effect — Whether Standing Committee can substitute proposal — Amendment destructive of main motion whether can be considered as amendment — Requirements of revocation of earlier decision. (Meeting — Amendment of motion and revocation of decision).

The requirement of S. 69 (c) is that the approval of the Standing Committee is to be sought by the Municipal Commissioner for a particular contract. Primarily, the power to enter into a contract is the power of the Commissioner under the Act. On this power, there is a restriction. In case the contract involves expenditure exceeding one lakh of rupees, the Commissioner has to seek the previous approval of the Standing Committee. What the Standing Committee is expected to do is also specified in the proviso. The Committee is expected to consider and dispose of the proposal made by the Commissioner. There is no power in the Standing Committee to substitute its own proposal for the proposal made by the Municipal Commissioner. The provisions of S. 69 are very clear and leave no one in doubt that the proposal has to be initiated and made by the Commissioner himself and there is no jurisdiction or power of the Standing Committee to substitute its own proposal for the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner. (Para 18)

The object of the Proviso introduced in S. 69 by an amendment in 1973 was not to by-pass the Standing Committee or deprive it of its legitimate function or power under the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, but to see that the Standing Committee disposed of the proposal before it within the specified period of time as expeditiously as possible. However, for some reason or the other if the Standing Committee was not able to dispose of the proposal seeking approval, then the statute stepped in and approval was taken to have been given by the Standing Committee and the fetter on the power of the Municipal Commissioner to get positive approval of the Standing Committee was removed. On the expiry of fifteen days, the Municipal Commissioner was free to proceed with the proposal even if the Standing Committee either did not dispose it of or they continued to discuss it. Having regard to the mandatory provisions in the proviso, any discussion of the proposal beyond the period of fifteen days from the time when the proposal was first put on the agenda of a meeting of the Standing Committee would be wholly an exercise in futility and the legal effect in the form of deemed permission could not be prevented by any further discussion by the Standing Committee at any point of time beyond the period of fifteen days specified in the proviso.

There can be no amendment which negatives or which is substantially destructive of the main Motion which is before the meeting or Committee for consideration. To substitute another proposal for the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner is a thing which is wholly impermissible to be done by the Standing Committee.

(Para 19)

A revocation of an earlier decision must expressly be a decision taken consciously with the express and sole intention of revoking the earlier action. There can never be an implied revocation of something which is the effect of a statutory provision, apart from the fact that the statutory effect of a provision like the proviso to S. 69 (c) cannot be undone by any resolution of the Standing Committee.

(Para 22)

D. R. Dhanuka with A. R. Rana and L. A. Kasturay, for Petitioners (Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 in the Appeal); K. K. Singhvi with R. L. Dalal and N. V. Kamat for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3 (the Appellants in Appeal); Bhimrao Naik with G. S. Bhatt, for Respondent No. 2 (Respondent No. 5 in Appeal); Mahabaleshwar Morje, for Respondent No. 4 (Respondent No. 6 in Appeal); Subhash N. Parikh, for Respondent No. 5 (Respondent No. 7 in Appeal).

CHANDURKAR, J.:— This is a joint petition filed by one social worker in Municipal Ward No. 48 (Petitioner No. 1) a Municipal Councillor in Ward No. 104 (Petitioner No. 2), the District President of the Janata Party, North Central Bombay (Petitioner No. 3) and the Secretary of the Samajwadi Mahila Sabha of Maharashtra State (Petitioner No. 4) and it is substantially directed at the action of the Municipal Commissioner (Respondent No. 1) in accepting the tender given by Respondent No. 2 M/s. Degremont International, on the footing that the Standing Committee of the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay must be deemed to have approved the Commissioner's proposal made to the Standing Committee recommending that the tender of M/s. Degremont International (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent No. 2") should be accepted.

2. The facts which have given rise to this petition are not in dispute. Sealed tenders for the supply, delivery, erection and commissioning of the water supply plant at Panjrapur were invited by the Consultants of the Municipal Corporation. The works included the following:—

(i) Filtration of the clarified water by means of rapid gravity filters; and

(ii) Storage and application of the Chlorine to the raw and/or settled water and to the filtered water.

Global tenders were invited as per the International Competitive Bidding Procedure by public advertisements. In pursuance of these advertisements, which were published not only in the Indian newspapers, but also abroad by issuing Circular letters to the Consultants of Foreign Embassies and to the Contractors on the Mailing List, 15 firms sent the tender documents. Out of these 15 firms, 7 tendered for the work on the due date i. e. 2nd April 1981. In view of the controversy in the petition, it is necessary to refer to the tenders of only two firms. The amounts quoted by them were as follows:—

(i) M/s. Candy Filters (India) Ltd., Rs. 2,88,10,000/-

(ii) M/s. Degremont International
Rs. 3,09,27,594/-

3. The tenders of the seven firms were scrutinised and evaluated by M/s. Tata Consulting Engineers in association with M/s. Binnie and Partners (India) Ltd., who were the Consultants of the Municipi-pal Corporation, and an Officer of the Municipal Corporation specially deputed for this purpose. It is really not necessary for the purpose of this petition to refer to the merits and demerits of each of the tenders as evaluated by the Consultants and it is enough to mention that the tenders of four Firms were outright rejected by the Consultants on several grounds, one of the grounds being that in some cases their bids were not competitive with the remaining bids. The Consultants laid down that in the contract specifications, each tenderer must fulfil four mandatory conditions, which were as follows:—

(a) Variable declining rate filtration,
(b) The feed back system of inlet level control,

(c) The level difference of 3 metres between the inlet to the filters and Chlorine Contact Tank Weir, and

(d) The pressure conduit system between the filters and Chlorine Contact Tank.

On a consideration of the tender of M/s. Candy Filters (India) Ltd., Respondent No. 5 in the petition, the Consultants came to the conclusion that they were unable to recommend the offer of M/s. Candy Filters primarily because of its basic technical deficiencies. With regard to the other firm viz. M/s. Geo Miller and Co. Pvt. Ltd., the Consultants found that the entire system which the firm intended to use for the first time had never been tested, nor had it been used by them in any of their works and this made the tender of M/s. Geo Miller and Co. Pvt. Ltd. unacceptable. In respect of the other firm viz. M/s. V. M. Jog and Co., the Consultants found that on assessment, their technical capability for the type and size of the work required by the Corporation was not satisfactory and their offer was higher than the offer of M/s. Degremont International. The Consultants found that the offer of M/s. Degremont International was the only offer which was based on a proven design and its reliability as regards performance could, therefore, be taken as assured.

4. In views of this recommendation of the Consultants the Municipal Commissioner sent a proposal to the Standing Committee of the Municipal Corporation on 14th August 1981, Ex. B, giving details of the evaluation of the different tenders by the Consultants and the operative part of the letter seeking approval reads as follows:—

"I now seek the approval of the Standing Committee under S. 69 (c) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act to enter into a contract with M/s. Degremont International for supply, delivery, erection and commissioning of filtration and chlorine plant at Panjrapur at the rates and on the terms and conditions of their tender with modifications referred to above, at which the total cost of the work including municipal supervision, contingencies (physical and cost), Import duties costs to Rs. 5,24,72,000/- as detailed below..." The letter seeking approval mentioned that the requisite sanction of the Government of India and the World Bank would be obtained before work order was placed. It may be mentioned at this stage that the expenses for this project which is intended for the supply of filtered water to the people of Bombay are to be incurred out of a loan given to the Municipal Corporation by the World Bank. The last paragraph of the letter of the Municipal Commissioner reads as follows:—

"The tender of M/s. Degremont International is valid for acceptance up to 29th August 1981. This may, therefore, be treated as URGENT BUSINESS".

5. Now, this item with regard to the approval sought by the Municipal Commissioner was put on the agenda of the Standing Committee of the Municipal Corporation for the meeting to be held on 19th Aug. 1981 and on the agenda it was Item No. 45. Meetings of the Standing Committee were held on the 19th, 20th, 25th Aug. and 1st Sept. 1981, but admittedly there was no discussion on Item No. 45. It appears to have been taken up for discussion on 9th Sept. 1981 when the discussion remained inconclusive and it was, therefore, taken up again on 16th Sept. 1981. The Commissioner was present at both these meetings.

6. Some reference is required to be made to the proceedings of the Standing Committee on 16th Sept. 1981. It appears that the Resolution before the Standing Committee on 16th Sept. 1981 was as follows:—

"That the Commissioner's proposal contained in para 10 of his letter, be approved and the applicant's letter, dated 21st Aug. 1981, on the subject, be recorded"

The reference to the applicant's letter is in the context of a letter said to have been addressed by M/s. Geo Miller & Co.

Pvt. Ltd. to the Standing Committee. The contents of that letter are nowhere on record, nor does that letter appear to have been relied on by anybody. The proceedings record the fact that an amendment was proposed by Shri S. R. Rao, and seconded by Shri Ramesh Sanghvi. The amendment read as follows:—

"That approval be given, under S. 69 (c) of the B. M. C. Act to a contract being entered into by the Commissioner with M/s. Candy Filters (India) Ltd. for supply, delivery, erection and commissioning of Filtration and Chlorination Plant at Panjrapur etc. at the cost and on the terms and conditions of their tender instead of with M/s. Degremont International as proposed by the Commissioner and the applicant's letters, dated 21st Aug. 1981, be recorded".

This purported amendment was put to vote and was carried by 7 votes to 6. But when it was put to vote as a substantive proposition, the votes were equal, 7 and 7, for and against, and the Chairman gave his casting vote against the substantive proposition and declared it lost.

7. At this stage, a Member of the Standing Committee proposed an amendment, which reads as follows:—

"That approval be given, under S. 69 (c) of the B. M. C. Act to a contract being entered into by the Commissioner with M/s. Geo Miller & Co. Pvt. Ltd. for supply, delivery, erection and commissioning of Filtration and Chlorination Plant at Panjrapur etc. at the cost and on the terms and conditions of their tender instead of with M/s. Degremont International as proposed by the Commissioner and the applicant's letters, dated 21st Aug. 1981, on the subject, be recorded".

When Shri Sharad Rao desired to second this amendment, the Chairman pointed out that he had moved the earlier amendment and, therefore, he could not second this amendment, upon which the amendment was seconded by Shri R. T. Kadam. A point of Order was raised objecting to the amendment on the ground that the member could not move an amendment at that stage after the earlier amendment was put to vote as a substantive proposition which was lost, and that the amendment should have been moved before the earlier amendment was put to vote as a substantive proposition. The Chairman of the Standing Committee adjourned the meeting because, according to him, the Point of Order involved legal implications and he would reserve his ruling.

8. The next meeting of the Standing Committee was held on 30th Sept., 1981. The Chairman of the Committee upheld the Point of Order and ruled that "nothing remained before the Committee for consideration so far as Item No. 45 was concerned in view of what he had stated earlier" and added that "since there was nothing before the Committee in respect of the said Item No. 45 of 19th August, 1981 the Commissioner should bring a fresh proposal before the Committee in the matter." The proceedings are reproduced by us from the extracts of the Minutes filed along with the Petition.

9. Now, after the earlier meeting of the Standing Committee was adjourned on 16th Sept., 1981, a letter came to be addressed by the Chief Engineer, Water Supply Projects, to the Respondent No. 2 on 21st Sept. 1981, stating therein:—

"... the Municipal Commissioner has, in pursuance of the provisions of the proviso to S. 69 (c) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, accepted your tender on behalf of the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay, subject only to the formal approval of the World Bank which is awaited, for the execution of the work of supply, delivery, erection and commissioning of Filtration and Chlorination Plant at Panjrapur, at the rates and on the terms and conditions of your tender with modifications referred to below"

The letter also specified that in accordance with the terms of the tender, Respondent No. 2 should execute the contract agreement and furnish the performance guarantees within one month from the receipt of that letter. It is not in dispute now that consequent upon this letter, a contract has been duly executed on the 19th October, 1981 with Respondent No. 2 granting it the contract to carry out the project.

10. The petitioners originally filed this petition on 15th October, 1981. There is some discrepancy about the reliefs which the petitioners are asking if we go strictly by the prayer clause. But there is no dispute that the petitioners feel aggrieved by the letter, dated 21st Sept., 1981, the effect of which was that the Commissioner treated the approval as having been granted in view of the provisions in the proviso to S. 69 (c) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. The main grievance made in petition as originally filed was that Item No. 45, which dealt with the proposal made by the Municipal Commissioner and to which the Municipal Commissioner sought approval, was finally disposed of by the Standing Committee and the fact that an amendment was moved to the effect that the contract of the work should be given to Messrs Candy Filters showed that there was no proposal to grant the contract to Respondent No. 2, to which the provisions of the proviso to Section 69 (c) would be attracted. The petition proceeds on the footing that no proposal having been approved in respect of Respondent No. 2, the Municipal Commissioner was not entitled to proceed with the proposal of granting the contract to Respondent No. 2. The petition originally seems to have come up for admission on 16th Oct., 1981 when no order was made either with regard to the admission or any interim relief. It came up for admission then after the Diwali Vacation and was admitted and the learned single Judge made an order of interim stay in terms of prayer (c) (i) of the petition. Prayer (c) (i) of the petition asked for a relief that pending the hearing and final disposal of the petition "the operation of the letter/order dated 21st Sept., 1981 (Ex. 'E') hereto be stayed". Now, strictly there is no letter on record issued by the Municipal Commissioner on the 21st Sept., 1981. Ex. E is really an intimation given by the Municipal Commissioner to the Standing Committee on 29th Sept., 1981 in which he intimated to the Standing Committee that he had issued a letter to Respondent No. 2 on 21st Sept., 1981 that he had accepted their tender on behalf of the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay. The Commissioner of the Municipal Corporation filed an Appeal against this order of the learned single Judge, being Appeal No. 487 of 1981, which was admitted on 5-11-1981 and an interim order was made by us staying the impugned Stay Order, but we gave directions that no additional moneys be paid to Respondent No. 2 pending the appeal. The appeal was directed to be heard peremptorily on 30th Nov., 1981. However, since any decision in the appeal would really have disposed of the petition itself, the parties agreed that it would be advisable to have the petition itself heard by the Bench and after obtaining appropriate orders of the learned Chief Justice, the petition was placed before us for hearing yesterday afternoon.

11. When the petition was taken up, Mr. Dhanuka appearing on behalf of the petitioners applied for an amendment of the Petition. The amendment sought to raise what are considered to be strictly questions of law and the new grounds of attack introduced by the amendment were:

(1) Respondent No. 2 having extended the due date of acceptance of the tender to 15th Oct., 1981, the original proposal made by the Municipal Commissioner on 14th Aug. 1981 was varied and the varied proposal not having been put on the agenda afresh, the 15 days' period under the proviso to S. 69 (c) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act was not attracted;

(2) The Municipal Commissioner in view of his conduct consisting of attending the meetings of the Standing Committee and taking part in the discussion of Item No. 45 should not have proceeded to award the contract to Respondent No. 2 in the face of the decision of the Standing Committee to amend the original proposal in favour of Messrs Candy Filters;

(3) The Municipal Commissioner did not act in good faith and his action smacks of mala fides, arbitrariness, unreasonableness and an attempt to disregard totally the view of the elected Corporators.

12. We shall now take up the arguments advanced before us by Mr. Dhanuka. But before we do that, it is necessary to reproduce the provisions of S. 69 (c) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. S. 69 reads as follows:—

"With respect to the making of contracts under or for any purpose of this Act, the following provisions shall have effect, namely:—

(a) every such contract shall be made on behalf of the corporation by the Commissioner;

(b) no such contract, for any purpose which in accordance with any provision of this Act, the Commissioner may not carry out without the approval or sanction of some other municipal authority, shall be made by him until or unless such approval or sanction has first of all been duly given;

(c) no contract, other than a contract relating to the acquisition of immovable property or any interest therein or any right thereto, which will involve an expenditure exceeding one lakh rupees, shall be made by the Commissioner unless the same is previously approved by the Standing Committee or in case the expenditure is to be incurred for the purposes of Cl. (g) of S. 61 by the Education Committee:

Provided that, where the previous approval of the Standing Committee is sought by the Commissioner for any contract for the purposes of Chapter IX or X, the Standing Committee shall consider and dispose of the proposal made by the Commissioner in that behalf, within fifteen days from date on which the item is first included in the agenda of any meeting of that Committee, failing which, the previous approval to such contract shall be deemed to have been given by the Committee, and a report to that effect shall be made by the Commissioner to the Corporation"

The provisions of S. 69 are clear that where a contract under or for any purpose of Bombay Municipal Corporation Act is to be made, every such contract has to be made on behalf of the Corporation by the Commissioner. Further, a contract other than a contract relating to the acquisition of immovable property or any interest therein or any right thereto, if it involved an expenditure exceeding one lakh of rupees, cannot be made by the Commissioner unless the same is previously approved by the Standing Committee. Then there is a proviso and under the proviso it is provided that where the previous approval of the Standing Committee is sought by the Commissioner for any contract for the purposes of Chapter IX or X and there is no dispute that the present contract is covered by Chapter X — it is obligatory on the Standing Committee to "consider and dispose of the proposal made by the Commissioner within fifteen days from date on which the item is first included in the agenda of any meeting of that Committee." The consequence of failure of the Standing Committee to consider and dispose of the item within the specified period of fifteen days is that "the previous approval to such contract shall be deemed to have been given by the Committee". In cases where the proviso operates, the Commissioner has to make a report to the Corporation.

13. The proviso, therefore, introduces a fiction if the Standing Committee does not consider and dispose of the proposal made by the Commissioner within the period statutorily fixed by the proviso. The only circumstance on which the fiction comes into operation is the expiry of fifteen days from the date on which the item is first included in the agenda of a meeting of the Standing Committee without disposal of the proposal. It is clear that the legislature contemplated that it was obligatory on the part of the Standing Committee to dispose of the proposal of the Commissioner within a period of fifteen days.

14. The proviso itself was introduced in S. 69 by an amendment in 1973 by Act No. 34 of 1973. The original Bill which deals with several amendments of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act dealt with this amendment in the form of an addition of a proviso to S. 69, Cl. (c) in Cl. 2 of the Bill. It would be permissible to refer to the reasons which prompted the legislature to introduce the proviso in S. 69 (c) as well as some other provisions in the Act. The Statement of Objects and Reasons refers to the fact that the water supply system and the drainage system, which were about hundred years old, were now inadequate having regard to the increased population of Greater Bombay and, therefore, it became imperative for the Corporation to take immediate steps to improve these services in the interest of public health, sanitation etc. The Corporation, therefore, decided to undertake heavy capital works expenditure programmes to be spread over a period of eight years, with the help of the World Bank to improve the water supply and sewerage system in Greater Bombay. The World Bank had approved the projects and it was found necessary "with a view to obtaining the loan from the World Bank in time and completing these works within the prescribed time-limit" to make certain amendments to the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act to enable the Commissioner to execute these works as expeditiously as possible. When this proviso was debated in the legislature, suggestions were made that in place of the proposed period of seven days, the period should be four weeks and another suggestion was that it should be fifteen days. When the provision was finally passed, the period of seven days was changed to fifteen days and the proviso was put on the statute book. It is clear, therefore, that the object of this proviso was not to by-pass the Standing Committee or deprive it of its legitimate function or power under the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, but to see that the Standing Committee disposed of the proposal before it within the specified period of time as expeditiously as possible. However, for some reason or the other if the Standing Committee was not able to dispose of the proposal seeking approval, then the statute stepped in and approval was taken to have been given by the Standing Committee and the fetter on the power of the Municipal Commissioner to get positive approval of the Standing Committee was removed. On the expiry of fifteen days, the Municipal Commissioner was free to proceed with the proposal even if the Standing Committee either did not dispose of it or they continued to discuss it. Having regard to the mandatory provisions in the proviso, it appears to us clear that any discussion of the proposal beyond the period of fifteen days from the time when the proposal was first put on the agenda of a meeting of the Standing Committee would be wholly an exercise in futility and the legal effect in the form of deemed permission could not be prevented by any further discussion by the Standing Committee at any point of time beyond the period of fifteen days specified in the proviso.

15. Having thus considered the scope of the proviso, we will now take up the first contention advanced before us by Mr. Dhanuka that the proposal having stated in the last paragraph, which we have reproduced above, that the tender of Respondent No. 2 was valid for acceptance up to 29th Aug., 1981 and this period having expired prior to 3rd Sept., 1981, i. e. before the expiry of fifteen days' period from 19-8-1981 when the proposal was first put on the agenda of the meeting of the Standing Committee for that day, there was in fact no proposal in existence on 3rd Sept., 1981. The argument is that the time fixed by the tenderer viz. Respondent No. 2 for acceptance of its tender was an essential term of the offer or tender and since no fresh proposal was made after 29th Aug., 1981, there was no proposal in respect of which deemed approval under the proviso could be invoked by the Municipal Commissioner. It is not now in dispute in this case that the date for acceptance was extended by Respondent No. 2 to 15th Oct., 1981 and this information was supplied to the Standing Committee on 16th Sept., 1981. It is difficult for us to appreciate how the information conveyed by the Municipal Commissioner to the Standing Committee that the tender was valid for acceptance up to 29th Aug., 1981 can be said to be a part of the proposal contemplated by S. 69 (c). The effective part of the proposal, which we have reproduced above, would show that in substance the proposal of the Commissioner was that the Consultants of the Corporation had recommended the tender of Respondent No. 2 for acceptance having considered the merits and demerits of each of the tenderers. The terms of the tender of Respondent No. 2 were set out in the proposal. When the Municipal Commissioner informed the Standing Committee in Para 16 of his letter, reproduced earlier, that the tender was open for acceptance up to 29th Aug., 1981, it was clearly intended to give notice to the Standing Committee that the matter required to be urgently decided and indeed, this is expressly made clear by the Municipal Commissioner when he stated in the letter communicating the proposal that "This may, therefore, be treated as Urgent Business". It is unfortunate that in spite of the urgency made out by the Commissioner, the matter was not treated as urgent by the Standing Committee, with the result that the Commissioner became entitled to invoke the proviso to S. 69 (c).

16. It can hardly be disputed that when Respondent No. 2 kept its tender for acceptance up to 29th Aug., 1981, that was a term for its own benefit and nothing prevented Respondent No. 2 from extending this date. As a matter of fact, the letter produced before us, D/- 21-8-1981, addressed by Respondent No. 2 to M/s. Tata Consulting Engineers, with a copy to the Bombay Municipal Corporation and the London Consultants, categorically stated :

"As desired by Bombay Municipal Corporation we hereby extend our Tender Validity up to 15th Oct, 1981".

It is not, therefore, possible to accept the contention that there was no proposal subsisting on 3rd Sept., 1981, the date having been extended by Respondent

No. 2 itself up to 15th Oct., 1981. Till that date the tender was open for acceptance.

17. It is then alternatively contended by Mr. Dhanuka that the proviso merely provided for an enabling power of the Municipal Commissioner to proceed with a proposal on the basis of deemed approval and since it was not obligatory on the Municipal Commissioner to proceed with the proposal on the basis of deemed approval, he need not have sent the letter of acceptance of the tender to Respondent No. 2 on 19th Oct., 1981 when the Standing Committee had clearly debated the matter on 9th, 16th and 21st Sept., 1981 at which the Municipal Commissioner was himself present. The argument appears to be that the theory of deemed approval is an afterthought after the Commissioner found that there was an express disapproval, inasmuch as the Standing Committee had at its meeting on 16th Sept., 1981 declined its approval to grant the contract to Respondent No. 2. Another limb of the same argument is that the power under the proviso was exercised by the Municipal Commissioner in the teeth of indications to the contrary by the Standing Committee, in so far as the proposal to accept the tender of Respondent No. 2 was concerned. It is urged that the very fact that till 19th Oct., 1981 no agreement was executed showed that there was in fact no urgency and the action of the Municipal Commissioner amounted to abuse of power. This contention necessitates the scrutiny of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on 16th Sept., 1981. We have already reproduced above the extracts from the Minutes of the proceedings of that meeting. The resolution before the Standing Committee on that day was that the Commissioner's proposal contained in para 10 of his letter be approved. This must be taken to be the main Resolution which was before the Standing Committee. Now, what was sought to be done when this subject was taken up was that what purported to be an amendment was sought to be moved and the amendment was that approval under S. 69 (c) be given to a contract being entered into by the Commissioner with Messrs. Candy Filters (India) Ltd. (Respondent No. 5). As already pointed out, this amendment was said to have been carried, but when put to vote as a substantive proposition, it was lost as a result of the casting vote of the Chairman of the Standing Committee. Now, if we merely go by what really happened at the meeting of the Standing Committee, there cannot be any doubt that the proposal made by the Commissioner that the contract was to be given to Respondent No. 2 was not approved. A Section of the Members of the Standing Committee seemed to be in favour of considering whether the contract should be given to Messrs. Candy Filters. But when even that proposal was put to vote, the proposal was lost by the casting vote of the Chairman. We are, not however, concerned as to whether the Standing Committee desired or did not desire to grant the contract to Messrs. Candy Filters. We are only concerned in this petition with the limited question as to whether having regard to the proceedings of the Standing Committee at its meeting of 16th Sept., 1981, the Standing Committee can legally be said to have decided that it was not granting its approval and whether it was permissible for the Standing Committee to consider this question at its meeting of 16th Sept., 1981. As we have earlier pointed out, the moment fifteen days had expired, there was a statutory bar to the consideration of the proposal in the sense that the proposal could no longer be discussed as it must be deemed to have been approved in view of the provisions of the proviso to S. 69 (c).

18. Apart from this, it is impossible for us to appreciate how what was suggested as an amendment could really be, in the legal sense of the terms, an amendment of the Resolution which was properly before the Standing Committee. Once again going back to the provisions of S. 69 (c), the requirement thereof is that the approval of the Standing Committee is to be sought by the Municipal Commissioner for a particular contract. Primarily, the power to enter into a contract is the power of the Commissioner under the Act. On this power, there is a restriction. In case the contract involves expenditure exceeding one lakh of rupees, the Commissioner has to seek the previous approval of the Standing Committee. What the Standing Committee is expected to do is also specified in the proviso. The Committee is expected to consider and dispose of the proposal made by the Commissioner. There is no power in the Standing Committee to substitute its own proposal for the proposal made by the Municipal Commissioner. The provisions of S. 69 are very clear and leave no one in doubt that the proposal has to be initiated and made by the Commissioner himself and there is no jurisdiction or power of the Standing Committee to substitute its own proposal for the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner.

19. Apart from this legal infirmity in the proceedings of 16th Sept., 1981, there is another infirmity, inasmuch as what was suggested as a purported amendment could really not be an amendment at all. It is well known that there can be no amendment which negatives or which is substantially destructive of the main Motion which is before the meeting of Committee for consideration. The position is well set out by Shackleton in his Treatise on "The Law and Practice of Meetings", 6th Edition, at page 100 as follows:—

"An amendment is a proposed alteration in the terms of a motion (or of an amendment already before the meeting) by those whose views would not be met by either the acceptance or rejection of the motion or amendment as moved. It should take the form of omitting, substituting or inserting certain words in the original motion (or amendment). The alteration should not be such as to constitute a direct negative of the motion, for the same result could be achieved by an adverse vote; neither should it be beyond the scope of the original motion".

Thus, what was really sought to be done in the form or guise of an amendment of the Resolution, which was before the Standing Committee viz. that the Commissioner's proposal should be approved, was not to amend the substantive motion, but to substitute another proposal for the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner, a thing which was wholly impermissible to be done by the Standing Committee. As a matter of fact, what purported to be an amendment was not an amendment at all. Therefore, notwithstanding the fact that the Minutes did record that according to some members the contract had to be given to Messrs. Candy Filters, the legal effect is that at the meeting of 16th Sept, 1981 the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner was not disposed of by the Standing Committee and indeed the whole debate was futile in view of the statutory provision in the Proviso to S. 69 (c) of the Act.

20. It is also difficult for us to appreciate the argument that the Municipal Commissioner should not have acted on the basis of deemed approval in view of the indication to the contrary by the Standing Committee. We are in this petition concerned with the exercise of the statutory power by the Municipal Commissioner, and if the pre-condition to the exercise of the statutory power exists, no fault can be found with the Municipal Commissioner if he has taken the view that the proviso to S. 69 (c) has operated in respect of the proposal made by him. Indeed it appears to us that it was obligatory on him to act in the manner he has done and if he had not given effect to the proviso, he would have really failed in his duty to act according to the statutory provisions. The circumstance that he was present at the meeting of 16th Sept., 1981 and intimated to the Standing Committee that the date was extended up to 15th Oct., 1981 by Respondent No. 2 had no relevance in so far as the statutory effect of the proviso to S. 69 (c) was concerned. Its operation does not depend on the conduct of any person and it is not within the power of either the Commissioner or the Standing Committee to prevent the statutory effect of the proviso to S. 69 (c).

21. Once the proviso to S. 69 (c) had come into operation, the circumstance that the Commissioner did not write to Respondent No. 2 earlier has also no relevance.

22. An argument was also advanced that if specific approval was given by the Standing Committee to the Municipal Commissioner's proposal, that approval could have been revoked by the Standing Committee in the appropriate manner and, therefore, a deemed approval, which is a creation of the statute, could also be withdrawn by a Resolution of revocation and the further argument was that the decision of the Standing Committee at its meeting of 16th Sept., 1981 expressing its views against granting of the contract to Respondent No. 2 must be considered as an implied revocation. The argument of implied revocation must be rejected outright. Whether the approval expressly granted could be revoked or not is not relevant for the purpose of this case, but it cannot be disputed that a revocation of an earlier decision must expressly be a decision taken consciously with the express and sole intention of revoking the earlier action. There can never be an implied revocation of something which is the effect of a statutory provision, apart from the fact that it does not appear to us that the statutory effect of a provision like the proviso to S. 69 (c) can be undone by any resolution of the Standing Committee.

23. It was faintly argued that the Municipal Commissioner has not acted in good faith and that his action smacks of mala fides, arbitrariness, unreasonableness and an attempt to disregard totally the views of the elected Corporators. Beyond making the averment and the further averment that the Municipal Commissioner has obviously acted at the dictates of someone to the prejudice of the Corporation, there is no material on record which necessitates our consideration of this contention on its merits. However, it is obvious to us that the fact remains that the Standing Committee was not able to make up its mind within the prescribed period when the matter was discussed by it. It was discussed in utter disregard of the legal provisions in the proviso to S. 69 (c) when the discussion was a futile exercise and if under these circumstances the Municipal Commissioner has given effect to the law contained in the proviso to S. 69 (c), it cannot be challenged merely because some Members of the Standing Committee did not want the contract to be given to Respondent No. 2. On a consideration of the arguments before us, it is obvious that the whole petition is misconceived and must fail.

24. So far as the Appeal is concerned, having regard to the fact that we have found no substance in the petition, it is not necessary to decide the Appeal on merits and the appeal has now become infructuous.

25. In the result, the petition is dismissed. However, in the circumstances of the case, we do not think that it is necessary to make any order as to costs. We, therefore, make no order as to costs. Rule discharged.

Order accordingly.

V. S. KOTWAL, J.

Kranti Mohan Guruprasad Mehra and another, Appellants v. Fatehchand Vasuram Behal, Respondent.

A. F. O. No. 546 of 1980, D/- 27-3-1981.

Civil P. C. (5 of 1908). Section 9A (as inserted by Maharashtra Act 25 of 1970) — Objection to jurisdiction of Court — Issue to be tried as preliminary issue — Determination of such issue and question relating to interim relief — Distinction in procedure.

The scheme of Section 9A unmistakably indicates that the Court is expected to determine the objection to jurisdiction as an issue in the suit which should be treated as a preliminary issue and having regard to the concept of the pleading, the issues arising therefrom and the determination of such issues on evidence and on the avvil of procedure as prescribed under the Code, it would be clear that the determination of such an issue even at that stage would be on the consideration of all aspects in which the issue is enveloped; secondly, it would be after giving the parties a full opportunity to lead all the necessary material and the evidence as they would have done when the issue was framed at the trial and lastly the determination of such an issue even at that stage would get a label of finality in so far as that proceeding and the suit is concerned. That means it is not as if that the same issue need be re-heard in the second round, when the other issues are heard at the trial, and it is equally not as if that the first round being only a prima facie, superficial view on a tentative objection while the second round being a full-fledged, final decision or adjudication on all aspects of the merits transforming the said objection into a regular issue. It is this depth that is in contrast with the thinner one of the interim application for an interim relief which is to be decided essentially on the prima facie view without probing deeper in the finer shades and aspects. One tends to touch the root whereas the other remains on the surface. This difference would equally be alive even if both the matters are heard at one and the same time. Therefore, permissibility and desirability of such a feature of composite hearing are two separable features and the course to be adopted can well be left to the presiding Judge in the context of the facts and circumstances of each case. If it is decided to consider only the preliminary issue and to keep back for the time being the interim application, then the possibility of any irreparable harm being caused to either side can well be avoided as Clause (2) of Section 9A takes care of such a situation under which even during this interim period till the adjudication of the preliminary issue, the Court is empowered to grant the interim relief purely on interim basis. Section 9A, therefore, opens an umbrella under which exists a self-contained scheme with a definite object. AIR 1974 Bom 288 and AIR 1977 Bom 35, Rel. on.

V. H. Gumaste with Mrs. Usha V. Madhabhavi for Appellants; C. K. Jaisinghani, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— For some reason or the other, the partners of a partnership firm had fallen out, and it is on account of the subsequent events that this proceeding has come into existence. The plaintiff who is the respondent herein was one of the partners along with the 1st appellant, that is the 1st defendant in the suit along with certain other persons in a partnership firm which was dealing in textiles and the concern was known in the mercantile world as Bhuvaneshwari Silk Mills. This partnership firm came to be dissolved on Aug. 25, 1977 by a deed of dissolution with the net result that under the settlement, the plaintiff had become the owner of the powerlooms 16 in number which were initially a part of the partnership property. First in all 25 looms were put in operation by the partnership firm and 8 looms had been entrusted to the 1st defendant under the said settlement.

2. On Oct. 5, 1977, the plaintiff and the 1st defendant recorded a separate agreement of hire purchase in respect of 8 out of the said looms with the consideration fixed at Rs. 1,20,000/- under a stipulation that the same should be discharged by payment of monthly instalments of Rs. 2500/- with interest at 18 per cent on the unpaid amount. The monthly instalments were to be paid on or before the 10th day of every month, and it was to commence from Nov. 10, 1977. The agreement contains several other clauses which are normally incorporated in a hire purchase agreement. Under Cl. 5, the plaintiff had a right to terminate the agreement with or without notice and to retake and resume the possession of the looms, if there is a default of payment for 3 instalments, and further it gave a right to the plaintiff even to construct or erect a brick wall in the shed where the looms were installed right from the beginning in such a manner so that the said 8 looms could be separated from the other looms belonging to the 1st defendant. The agreement also contained several other clauses, the consideration of which need not detain us in this proceeding.

3. On the date of the agreement, a cheque for Rs. 2500/- towards the initial payment under the agreement was given, and it is claimed that the said cheque bounced and was dishonoured, and no further payments towards instalments have ever been paid meaning thereby that in spite of this specific agreement executed between the parties, it had not been honoured by one party who had taken the looms on hire, and thereby committed the breach, and according to the plaintiff's contention, he was vested with the rights ex facie to proceed against the defendants for the purpose of resuming the property. The agreement also stipulated that in case the contract had to be terminated on account of lapse on the part of the defendants, then a certain amount of damages was required to be paid as contained in the condition in Cl. 6 under which the hirer was obliged to pay to the owner the stipulated hire including interest up to the date of such determination including the apportioned hire for any broken period of the month and 40 per cent of the balance of total unpaid hire as mentioned in Cl. 3 as compensation for extra depreciation in the value of the said looms.

4. In view of the lapse committed by the defendants, the plaintiff filed Suit No. 596 of 1979 in the City Civil Court for Gr. Bombay canvassing all these contentions and ultimately claiming various reliefs. The first was regarding the declaration to the effect that the said agreement had been validly terminated or determined and that the plaintiff is the owner of the said looms in question who was the 1st defendant be declared to have no concern whatsoever with the same. Rendering of the accounts of the business carried by the 1st defendant on the basis of the said looms as from Aug. 1, 1977 was the subject-matter of the other relief. The plaintiff also asked for a decree for the profits which have been earned by the defendant from the said date and for which purpose, the accounts were sought to be taken. A decree for damages was also asked for. The other important relief claimed was that the 1st defendant himself or through his servants and agents be restrained permanently from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of the said 8 looms and also from preventing the plaintiff from erecting a brick wall in the said shed. Interim reliefs were also claimed to the effect of asking for an interim injunction on the same lines and also asking for the appointment of Receiver with further stipulation that either of the parties may be permitted to function the looms as an agent of the Receiver. The suit came to be filed on Feb. 5, 1979.

5. A notice of motion was taken out by the plaintiff for claiming interim relief on the lines suggested earlier. It is important to note that no ad interim relief was granted, but the learned Judge felt the necessity of issuing notice to the other side and the question was deferred till then, except appointment of Receiver and the incidental relief, though the more prominent relief of injunction was not granted.

6. After the service of the notice, both the defendants put in their affidavits and resisted the said notice on all counts. It was inter alia contended that no cause of action accrued in favour of the plaintiff for initiating the said proceeding. A point of substantial importance which is also of primary significance was canvassed on behalf of the defendants in terms that the City Civil Court had no jurisdiction and also the suit as framed is not maintainable in view of the insufficiency of the Court-fee stamp. It was also submitted that on merits, no prima facie case has been made out by the plaintiff nor is there any right existing in his favour much less there is any injury to any such right and lastly the balance of convenience was entirely in favour of the defendants. It was further submitted that the accounts of the partnership at the relevant time were really not settled, and in reality quite a substantial amount to the tune of about Rs. 3,00,000/- was due to the 1st defendant from the plaintiff as it was canvassed in that behalf that at the time of the dissolution of the partnership and the settlement of accounts, apart from the looms and certain bales of cloth, the substantial part of the assets of the partnership, though being the subject-matter of the accounting, had remained to be undecided, and it was further contended on the basis of various writings which were available that the plaintiff had held certain assets which ultimately should have gone to the share of the 1st defendant, and that is how, the plaintiff was under a liability and obligation to pay such a large amount to the defendants and before it could be settled the plaintiff devised this mode in a mood to short-circuit the said process. The further submission flows out of this on behalf of the defendants is that in reality it would be the defendants who would be required to recover certain amounts from the plaintiff, and as such that would be an additional ground for not granting an equitable relief in favour of the plaintiff.

7. In spite of the vigorous controversy that was apparently reflected through the documents and the arguments, the order in contrast reflects on unsatisfactory picture and I am constrained to observe that there is no detailed discussion as such on such an important matter and the question of jurisdiction has practically been dealt with almost in a summary manner. Apart from this, the more disturbing feature is that when a specific plea was raised on behalf of the defendants vis-a-vis lack of jurisdiction in the said court with a further application and a motion to decide that question of jurisdiction at the threshold, the learned Judge declined to uphold that contention and felt that he could well decide the said question along with the notice of motion on its own merits simultaneously. That is how both these questions were bundled up in one order, and both were answered in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judge felt that he had pecuniary jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and he also felt that in substance, the suit was not one for possession. He also negated the defendants' contention that the court-fee of Rs. 30/- was insufficient as essentially it was a suit for recovery of possession and the value of the property on the showing of the plaintiff himself was worth Rs. 1,20,000/- and the further contention is that even on the basis of the stipulations in the agreement vis-a-vis the quantum of damages and the amounts payable to the plaintiff, it would still exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the said court. On merits, the learned Judge held that in view of the agreement coupled with the fact that no instalment has been paid by the defendants, a prima facie case has been made out by the plaintiff; that the plaintiff had a legal right covered under the agreement vis-a-vis the property in question as the property in goods had never been transferred to the defendants and there was an obvious injury to the said legal rights inasmuch as the defendants were utilising the said looms and earning profits adverse to the interest of the plaintiff. As regards the balance of convenience, the learned Judge felt that it tilted in favour of the plaintiff. In keeping with these findings, the learned Judge granted the notice of motion and passed the order containing several clauses. Thus, the appointment of the Court Receiver was made vis-a-vis the said looms. An option was however given to the defendants when it was directed that the Receiver shall not take possession of the looms if the 1st defendant would deposit Rs. 60,000/- within one month, an additional sum of Rs. 15,000/-, each for 3 months and Rs. 2500/- per month thereafter till completing the initial consideration of Rs. 1,20,000/- and the 1st defendant was also given an option along with this to give an undertaking for the interim period till the payment of the said amounts not to deal, alienate or dispose of the property in question. On the 1st defendant declining to exercise the option, the Court Receiver was to take possession of the looms in question immediately. It was further stipulated that since then, that is, from the date of the order, the 1st defendant be deemed to be functioning as the Receiver's agent and the 1st defendant was also restrained from dealing with the looms to the prejudice of the plaintiff. This order which was recorded on Dec. 1, 1980 is being impugned in this proceeding on behalf of the defendants.

8. The learned counsel on both the sides have agitated more or less the same points, though in more details, since the matter deserves a detailed investigation and consideration. Mr. Gumaste the learned counsel on behalf of the appellants made a strenuous grievance about the manner in which the impugned order has been scribed and an equal grievance was made about the learned Judge's order in negating the defendants' contention about deciding the question of jurisdiction first. The learned counsel submits that in reality this is nothing but a suit for possession as there is a liberal user of the terminology in that sense conveying the meaning that the physical possession of the property had passed on to the 1st defendant though the property in goods may remain with the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was seeking to recover possession from the defendants. Several clauses in the agreement, several features in the plaint and several recitals in the documents are relied upon for that purpose. The corollary of this submission that flows or emits out of the first is to the effect that even in reality, this is a suit for recovery of possession of the property, the value of which on the ascertainment of the plaintiff himself is to the tune of Rs. 1,20,000/-, then obviously it would fall beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the City Civil Court, and therefore, apart from lack of jurisdiction in the City Civil Court, it would also follow that a suit has been filed on the wrong forum when it ought to have been filed in this Court. In addition to this reference to the property and its value vis-a-vis, the claim for possession, it was further contended that there is an apparent garb created by the plaintiff to cover up the real nature of the transaction and also to save the court-fees and also to justify filing of a suit on the wrong forum, and if this garb is torn out, then it would be clear that apart from the question of possession, there is no question of rendering of the accounts and further there is no question of the quantum of damages remaining unascertained, as according to the learned Counsel, different clauses in the agreement take care of these features in no uncertain terms on the basis of which the total sum which could be payable by the plaintiff to the 1st defendant would never remain in any nebulous form and in that event even that amount would exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the City Civil Court and consequently not paying the court fees on the said ascertained amount would again be fetter to the suit. Several aspects were canvassed on the merits of the matter, one of which relating to a large and substantial amount being due to the 1st defendant from the plaintiff. A grievance was also made as regards the rigour in the final order passed by the learned Judge and lastly the grievance was made that no sufficient time was given for the defendants even to move this Court. All these submissions were preceded by another serious grievance that no fair opportunity was given to the defendants to agitate all the points and the learned counsel who appeared in the trial court was also not heard fully.

9. Mr. Jaisinghani the learned counsel for the respondents/plaintiff has sought to repel all these contentions on merits. According to him, there is no question of user of any garb or a pretext inasmuch as under the various clauses of the agreement and in the nature of the hire purchase agreement and in the nature of the transaction, the plaintiff never lost possession apart from not losing the title or the property in goods and what was sought to be done was merely to resume that possession with there being no discontinuity as such. The learned counsel further submit that by asking for a relief of restraining the defendants from not interfering with his right to erect the brick wall and to deal with the property in question, the plaintiff has in reality not asked for possession of the property as such, but since the possession continued with him, he had merely asked for a mandate of non-interference to that right from the defendants. It was further submitted that in view of this position, the City Civil Court would obviously be vested with the requisite jurisdiction, and as regard the quantum of amount payable to the plaintiff, the said obviously could not be ascertained unless the accounts are taken as the looms were being run and operated by the defendant No. 1 adverse to the plaintiff's interest. The learned Counsel submits that since the year 1977, that is from the date of the agreement, no amount has been paid towards either of the instalments. The contention about the substantial amount being due from the plaintiff to the defendant No. 1 is also denied. As regard the question of jurisdiction and the so called procedural lapse committed by the learned trial Judge, Mr. Jaisinghani the learned Counsel submits that it squarely falls under the provisions contained in S. 9A of the Civil P. C.

10. I have already indicated the skeleton of the contentions raised on behalf of both the sides, even on merits. However, this proceeding can be disposed of on a short premise without expressing any opinion on the merits or any aspect, though I may hasten to add that the aspects sought to be propogated by both the sides are not such which can be disposed of almost in a summary manner and the same requires a deeper investigation and probe on the anvil of ratio of the various judicial pronouncements which are sought to be cited in this proceeding.

11. Section 9A of the Code, which is the product of the amendment by the Code of Civil Procedure (Maharashtra Amendment) Act, 1970 under Maharashtra Act No. XXV of 1970 when the said Section has been inserted, consists of two parts. The first sub-clause envisages that if at the hearing of an application for granting or setting aside an order granting any interim relief, including injunction and appointment of receiver made in a suit, an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit is taken by any of the parties, then the Court shall proceed to determine at the hearing of such an application the issue about the jurisdiction as preliminary issue before granting or setting aside the order already granted for interim relief. Sub-cl. (2) provides that in spite of the provisions contained in sub-cl. (1), pending the determination of such an application vis-a-vis the claim of jurisdiction, an interim relief can be granted,

12. The combined reading of these two clauses of the said provisions would entail into projecting certain logical and inescapable deductions, is contemplated that in the first instance, after filing of the suit, there comes into existence an application for interim relief. Such a prospective interim relief can be in different shape and thus can be by way of injunction, appointment of receiver or otherwise, and this last residuary clause would include other interim reliefs. Either of the two situations in that behalf can be visualised. It may be that an interim injunction or any interim relief would be granted in a notice of motion till the service of the said notice on the other side or that this interim relief may also be postponed till that time. The contesting party, therefore, on its appearance or any time thereafter ask for setting aside the interim relief, if so granted earlier or oppose the granting of any such interim relief if not granted so far, and it is in that context that the provision contemplates an application either for granting or for setting aside an order granting any interim reliefs. If a motion or an application vis-a-vis the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit itself is made by the other contesting party, then it must be attended to immediately. This is obviously in consonance with the legislative intent in inserting this provision that a suit which is capable of being disposed of on the basic premise of jurisdiction, then it should be done so before any further proceeding is taken or the suit is allowed to linger and secondly, if the very foundation of the jurisdiction is brought under controversy, and if it is spelt and if the said plea is ultimately upheld, then the Court would obviously have no jurisdiction even to grant an interim relief. Such a motion can be made even at the inception, and need not be necessarily at a later stage. However, the same can be made even at the time of granting of the interim relief, and it can equally be made at the time of setting aside such an interim relief, if already granted. Once such an application or a motion is initiated by one of the parties, then the necessary obligation ipso facto devolves on the court with the resultant consequence that the question of interim relief has got to be shelved in the background, though temporarily, and to bring on the fore-front the main motion about the jurisdiction. The Court is further enjoined to proceed to hear such an application or a motion and determine the same. For that purpose, it is prescribed that the same should be treated as a preliminary issue in the suit, and it is further prescribed that this has to be done before granting of the said interim relief or if any relief is so granted, then before setting it aside. The application for interim relief has got to be heard and disposed of expeditiously and a further qualification is cast that in view of the objection to the jurisdiction, the matter need not be adjourned to the hearing of the suit. This and the other aspect indicated earlier manifestly suggest the legislative intent that in the first instance the objection to jurisdiction itself should be dealt with expeditiously and obviously before granting the interim relief; that it should not be responsible for lingering of the suit, and that is why it should be treated as a preliminary issue and thirdly the decision of such a preliminary issue need not be postponed to the full dressed trial on merits on other issues, and thus its hearing and adjudication is brought in advance and lastly the application for interim relief also need not be postponed to the final hearing of the suit.

13. When sub-cl. (2) comes into operation, it is not as if that the entire field for the interim relief is re-opened, but what is contemplated by that provision is that if the exigencies of the situation impress the Court that either of the sides should be protected without wasting any time, howsoever short it may be, which may be consumed for determining the said preliminary issue, then the Court may on merits grant such an interim relief as it thinks proper. There are obviously two qualifications annexed by this provision. The first is that such an interim relief, even for such an interim period is to be given only if the court is satisfied that some protection is necessary even during the short span of time during the pendency of the application taking objection to the jurisdiction. And such concession can be bestowed in favour of the party even at the time of the motion made by the other side regarding the jurisdiction of the court, but certainly before its determination.

Lastly, there is a qualification or a limitation about the tenure of such an interim relief, viz., that if such an interim relief is granted, then it shall hold good and be in force only up to the moment when the application or motion vis-a-vis the jurisdiction is heard and finally decided on merits treating the same as a preliminary issue.

14. It is true that it may be permissible for the Court to adopt a composite hearing of the said preliminary issue and the interim relief and even to determine the preliminary issue at such hearing and it may even be conceivable in certain circumstances to make such determination on both counts by a composite order, however the governing clause remaining intact would enunciate that the adjudication of the preliminary issue would precede the decision of the interim application, the applicability of which would be insisted upon equally in such a composite hearing or even in a composite order recorded on both counts, which principle is obviously founded on the sound premise that it is only the finding or decision on the preliminary issue of jurisdiction would govern the further jurisdiction of the Court to grant the interim relief. However, in that event it cannot be underestimated that though existing in the same proceeding, both matters would run on different tracks, though parallel to each other and further more the depth of the field of either of these two items would be distinct with clear gradation. Thus, it cannot be over-looked that the scheme of the said provision unmistakably indicates that the court is expected to determine the objection to jurisdiction as an issue in the suit which should be treated as a preliminary issue and having regard to the concept of the pleading, the issues arising therefrom and the determination of such issues on evidence and on the anvil of procedure as prescribed under the Code, it would be clear that the determination of such an issue even at that stage would be on the consideration of all aspects in which the said issue is enveloped; secondly, it would be after giving the parties a full opportunity to lead all the necessary material and the evidence as they would have done when the issue was framed at the trial and lastly the determination of such an issue even at that stage would get a label of finality in so far as that proceeding and the suit is concerned. That means it is not as if that the same issue need be re-heard in the second round, when the other issues are heard at the trial, and it is equally not as if that the first round being only a prima facie, superficial view on a tentative objection while the second round being a full-fledged, final decision or adjudication on all aspects of the merits transforming the said objection into a regular issue. The user of certain phraseology cannot be without any purpose or significance. It is this depth that is in contrast with the thinner one of the interim application for an interim relief which is to be decided essentially on the prima facie view without probing deeper in the finer shades and aspects. One tends to touch the root whereas the other remains on the surface. This difference would equally be alive even if both the matters are heard at one and the same time. Therefore, permissibility and desirability of such a feature of composite hearing are two separable features and the course to be adopted can well be left to the presiding Judge in the context of the facts and circumstances of each case. If it is decided to consider only the said preliminary issue and to keep back for the time being the interim application, then the possibility of any irreparable harm being caused to either side can well be avoided as cl. (2) takes care of such a situation under which even during this interim period till the adjudication of the preliminary issue, the Court is empowered to grant the interim relief purely on interim basis.

15. Section 9A of the Code, therefore, opens an umbrella under which exists a self-contained scheme with a definite object. I am fortified in this view by ratio of two decisions of this Court in Porbunderwala v. Gulam Hussein, AIR 1974 Bom 288 and Radhakishin v. Sheila Govind Mirchandani, 1976 Mah LJ 456 : (AIR 1977 Bom 35).

16. The learned trial Judge has no doubt observed in his order that according to him, the provisions of S. 9A of the Code do not make it necessary for a split hearing of the motion into two distinct stages and does not prevent the court from hearing the motion on merits unless it has heard and decided the point relating to the jurisdiction and it is in keeping with this view that the learned Judge appears to have directed both the learned Counsel to address him simultaneously on the question of jurisdiction as well as on the merits of the motion. Mr. Gumaste the learned Counsel for the appellants makes a grievance that even assuming that such a course is permissible, yet in the first instance no adequate opportunity was given to the parties and especially to the defendants to substantiate their contention about lack of jurisdiction with the court and secondly the learned Judge has not considered all the aspects and has practically decided that issue also in the same manner in which the notice of motion was heard and decided on merits. This submission cannot be said to be without any substance. The main contention of the defendants is that there is no pecuniary jurisdiction vested in the said Court having regard to the real nature of the transaction and the valuation of the property and especially when the gist of the relief sought for and the tenor of the pleading expressly indicates that the plaintiff was asking for possession of the property. It is true that the learned Judge was of the opinion that the plaintiff had never lost possession inasmuch as the custody or physical possession by the defendants was that of a bailee. The learned Judge relied on some of the conditions and in particular condition No. 4 in Clause 6 of the agreement. The learned Judge, therefore, was of the opinion that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to value his claim on the basis of the price of the goods, and therefore, the valuation as made by the plaintiff on his claim was proper and justified. It is apparent that this is the only discussion by the learned Judge on this aspect which has got to be examined in the context of the contentions raised on behalf of the 1st defendant. Mr. Jaisinghani the learned counsel for the respondent/plaintiff adopting the reasons assigned by the learned Judge further submitted that this is a peculiar kind of transaction under which not only the property in goods is not transferred from the owner, but it can be held that even the possession would continue to remain with the owner till all the instalments are paid, which submission is disputed on behalf of the appellants, and Mr. Gumaste sought to rely on several statements in the plaint in support of his submission that on the showing of the plaintiff himself, he had lost possession and that he was asking to get back the possession. Reliance was placed on some decisions on either side and a grievance was equally made on behalf of the appellants that all these aspects which were argued before the learned trial Judge have not been considered at all, and this point has been disposed of only in one short para. It is the further contention of the defendants that it was futile for the plaintiff to suggest that the damages and other amounts payable to him could not be assessed inasmuch as the same can be easily ascertained even on the basis of certain stipulations in the agreement in that behalf and when so assessed, the same would equally be beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the court and it is with that object that the plaint has been purposely kept vague and Mr. Gumaste submits that the learned trial Judge has not applied his mind to this aspect at all. In my opinion, the contentions deserve a serious consideration and having regard to the nature of the controversy, it would have been better in the fitness of things if there was a detailed discussion at least trying to meet various points raised on behalf of both the parties, particularly when, as stated earlier the learned Judge was actually deciding the preliminary issue on jurisdiction not for the interim period and was not viewing the matter on the surface as could be done while granting or refusing to grant the interim application, but was required to go deeper as the decision of that issue had a capacity of finality in so far as the suit is concerned. This, however, may not be confused as if the said finding is being upset on merits inasmuch as under the circumstances, it is not desirable as also not necessary to express any view and finding either way as the matter requires further investigation, and if need the appellants/defendants would be required to be given an adequate opportunity to substantiate their contentions by producing any further material. It is submitted with some justification that since the interim application was being disposed of, it may be that all the relevant material necessary for the proper adjudication of the preliminary issue could not have been produced, which could have been so produced if the learned Judge had decided to try that issue separately or independently. It was also contended that some aspects were not allowed to be elaborated while in respect of many there has been utter non-application of mind and the proceeding has been disposed of in a too summary manner. In view of this position, it is desirable to afford a reasonable opportunity to the defendants in that behalf.

17. On merits also, the discussion by the learned trial Judge is not in detail and the said aspect equally suffers from an identical deficiency. No doubt there is an agreement, apparently in favour of the plaintiff, the execution of which is not seriously disputed by the 1st defendant, who however has several contentions in that behalf as reflected in the affidavit. According to him, a partnership earlier was in existence between himself and one Mehra and after the retirement of Mehra, the plaintiff and one Khanna as also one Madan were taken as partners. He has contended that the plaintiff's activities were against the interest of the partnership on account of which he was obliged to file a complaint with the police. The said partnership came to be dissolved by a deed of dissolution on March 25, 1977. According to him further that the accounts were not settled and the large amount was due from the plaintiff to him over the sale of certain quantity of saris and grey cloth. He has also indicated the real nature of the transaction. The learned trial Judge no doubt was impressed by the existence of the said agreement along with the conditions therein as also the conduct of the 1st defendant in giving a cheque for Rs. 2500/- on October 15, 1977, which was the day of execution of the agreement and which cheque bounced back. The learned Judge also felt that there was something inherently improbable in the 1st defendant's case of the plaintiff being indebted to him. As regards the non-settlement of accounts, the learned Judge realised that one letter was addressed by the plaintiff to the bankers of the dissolved firm which was in consonance with the defendants' case and the learned Judge has observed: "there appears to be some truth in what the 1st defendant says". Along with this, Mr. Gumaste the learned Counsel submits that two important features, apart from the contention of the defendant No. 1 are not properly considered. Thus, even though the agreement pertains to an amount of Rs. 1,20,000/- still the amount of monthly instalment was fixed at Rs. 2,500/- only when the looms were to be operated by the 1st defendant, which would mean that the entire amount under the agreement would be satisfied after several years. It was also submitted that the agreement was executed on October, 15, 1977 and the cheque for Rs. 2,500/- towards the 1st instalment was issued on the same day and the plaintiff must have realised soon thereafter that it was dishonoured and even according to the plaintiff, nothing has been paid thereafter by the defendants to the plaintiff, meaning thereby that till the filing of the suit there was absolutely no payment made by the defendants. This would mean that the plaintiff must have realised long back about the intention of the defendants to dishonour the agreement and to grab the property whereby the plaintiff was loser all along and under the terms of the agreement, the plaintiff was entitled to terminate the agreement immediately and also got a right to recover the balance of the amount with damages. The learned Counsel submits that in spite of this, the suit came to be filed as late as on February 5, 1979. The learned trial Judge does not appear to have considered all the facets of the matter in proper perspective, and therefore, it is yet another ground for having hearing of the matter on merits afresh.

18. In this view of the matter, the only course open is either to send back the matter to the trial Court for a fresh hearing or to hear it on merits in this proceeding itself. However, it is well settled that normally a matter should be decided on merits by the Court of the first instance who has an advantage of considering all the material on facts and whose decision would provide some assistance while dealing with the matter in appeal. In view of this, it is deemed proper to send back the matter to the trial Court for being heard on merits afresh on the preliminary issue of jurisdiction as also on merits regarding the notice of motion so that both the parties would get an adequate opportunity to ventilate their grievances. It is true that it may consume some time in view of this remand. However, it is in this situation that the provisions contained in cl. (2) can be brought effectively in operation. Mr. Jaisinghani the learned Counsel submits that some protection should be afforded to his client as prima facie the agreement is in his favour and the looms are in the custody of the defendant No. 1, and the learned Counsel further submits that status quo be maintained which plea is opposed by Mr. Gumaste on behalf of the defendants.

19. On considering the pros and cons of the matter and examining the rival contentions, in my opinion, it may not be a proper exercise of discretion to allow the status quo in its entirety is (sic) maintained as under which the appellants/defendants have deposited so far cash amount to the tune of Rupees 45,000/-, and have also furnished a bank guarantee to the tune of Rupees 52,500/- in addition to giving an undertaking not to alienate, transfer, dispose of or to deal with the property in question. However, since the attack on behalf of the defendants is at the very root of the matter and when entire field of merits on both the counts is left open and when even the notice of motion is to be heard afresh on merits, it would not be proper to retain all the said conditions. The two items viz., the payment of cash amount and furnishing of bank guarantee will have to be lifted as those would not be in consonance with the view that I am taking in this matter and especially when the entire matter is yet to be agitated afresh on all aspects including the question of jurisdiction and the merits. However, the item of the undertaking already given by the appellants/defendants deserves to be retained as affording adequate protection even for the interim period and in addition thereto, in my opinion, it would be just and proper to bind down the 1st defendant to furnish solvent security to the tune of Rs. 35,000/- to the satisfaction of the Registrar, City Civil Court, Bombay, which amount is calculated on the basis that it will accrue and become due on the date of the suit under the agreement and under the stipulation of payment by instalments. It is however made clear that both these conditions viz., about the undertaking and furnishing of the security shall remain in force only as an interim relief till the final disposal of the motion or the application of the 1st defendant challenging the jurisdiction of the City Civil Court and would continue to be in force till the disposal of the interim application for the interim relief under the notice of motion in the event the issue of jurisdiction is decided against the defendants and in the event of the notice of motion and the preliminary issue are disposed of at one and the same time by a common order, then the said undertaking and security shall remain in force till the passing of that order.

20. Nothing hereinabove observed shall be taken as an expression of opinion so as to fetter the discretion of the learned Judge while dealing with the matter on merits afresh. The learned trial Judge shall decide the matter in light of the observations hereinabove giving full opportunity to both the sides to canvass their contentions and to place all the relevant material in both the categories including the preliminary issue about the jurisdiction and the said material can be in the shape of affidavits, documents or even in the form of leading evidence, if so desired by the parties. The decisions on the said preliminary issue would obviously govern the further course in the proceeding before the learned trial Judge. At the composite request of both the sides and having regard to the urgency of the matter, the learned trial Judge shall endeavour to decide the proceeding in question expeditiously and as far as possible and feasible under the circumstances by the end of July, 1981.

21. Before parting, I may incidentally refer to a rather disturbing development in the trial Court. After the impugned order was passed, the learned Counsel for the defendant No. 1 applied for the stay of the order for a period of two weeks to enable him to approach this Court to get interim and urgent orders. This motion was rejected, though on the ground that since the receiver was not to take possession of a certain period, no prejudice would be caused to the defendants. However, the rigour of the order was not wiped out, since while rejecting the motion itself the learned Judge observed and stipulated that if the 1st defendant did not give an undertaking as prescribed within one week, then it would be taken to mean that he did not wish to avail of the concession of the payment offered to him under the order. The inevitable implication of this order is that if such an undertaking was not given within one week, then it would convey to the court the reluctance of the defendants to exercise the option. The further necessary consequence would obviously be serious in the receiver getting a clear direction thereby to take charge of the property without waiting for any further period. If that be so, then denying a short period of two weeks for the defendants to move this Court appears to be rather harsh and certainly unjustified apart from being not quite fair. It cannot be underestimated that it is the privilege of a Court to pass an order one way or the other on merits, in accordance with law, yet a laudable principle is implicit in the system to give a fair deal to each of the litigants who knocks the door of the Court and implicit therein is a further laudable principle that every litigant who is aggrieved by the order of the Court of the first instance has a legitimate right to move the higher Court to ask for redress, and therefore, a reasonable opportunity should normally be given in that behalf to all the litigants, provided of course the prayer on the face of it does not appear to be frivolous or vexatious. This principle is essential to be preserved so as to instil a sense of confidence in the system of administration of justice.

22. In the result, the appeal is allowed. The impugned order dated December 1, 1980, recorded by the learned Judge of the City Civil Court, Bombay in notice of motion No. 550 of 1979 in Suit No. 596 of 1979 is set aside.

The proceedings are sent back to the City Civil Court, Bombay for disposal of the matter afresh on merits expeditiously in the light of the observations hereinabove.

The undertaking given by the 1st defendant not to transfer, alienate, dispose of or deal with in any manner the property in question viz., 8 powerlooms installed in the shed in question shall remain in force not only till the disposal of the application or the motion raising the question of jurisdiction but also would continue to be in force till the disposal of the notice of motion on merits, if such an occasion arises, and in the event of the notice of motion and the preliminary issue are disposed of at one and the same time by a common order, then the said undertaking shall remain in force till the passing of that order. In addition thereto the 1st defendant shall furnish a solvent security to the tune of Rs. 35,000/- to the satisfaction of the Registrar of City Civil Court, Bombay which security shall remain in force till the disposal of the application about the jurisdiction of the said Court as raised by the 1st defendant, and in case the issue is decided in favour of the plaintiff, then the said security shall continue to be in force till the final disposal of the notice of motion, and in the event of the notice of motion and the preliminary issue are disposed of at one and the same time by a common order, then the said security shall remain in force till the passing of that order.

The order directing the 1st defendant about payment of cash amount and also furnishing bank guarantee is rescinded with the result that the 1st defendant is at liberty to withdraw the cash amount of Rs. 45,000/- so far deposited by him in the trial court and the bank guarantee furnished by him also stands lifted. It is, however, directed and made clear that the 1st defendant shall get the liberty to withdraw the said amount of Rs. 54,000/- so far deposited by him only after furnishing the solvent security for Rs. 35,000/-, as stipulated earlier. There will be no order as to costs.

In view of the above order and direction, the civil application does not survive.

Order accordingly.

C. A. Phadkar with S. V. Vaidya, for Plaintiffs; S. N. Variava and D. S. Devitre, for Defendants.

ORDER:— This suit concerns the partition of immovable property situate at Mahim, Bombay, belonging to a joint family. One Laxman, who died long back, left behind 3 sons. Mahadeo, one of his sons, died in 1970 and left behind the first plaintiff, a son. The second plaintiff is the first plaintiff's wife and the third and fourth plaintiffs are their daughters. A second son, Moreshwar, died in 1962 leaving behind four sons and a widow. The widow died during the pendency of the suit. The sons and their families are defendants, represented by Mr. Variava, learned counsel. Moreshwar also left behind four daughters, who are defendants 14, 15, 16 and 17. Defendant 17 has not chosen to appear though she is represented. Against defendants 14, 15 and 16 the suit was dismissed upon the application of Mr. Phadkar, learned counsel for the plaintiffs. A third son of Laxman, Kesharinarath, died in 1945 leaving behind a widow and son. The widow, the son and the son's wife are defendants, represented by Mr. Devitre, learned counsel.

2. The joint family is admitted. It is admitted that the suit property is joint family property. There is no dispute that the joint family owns property other than the suit property.

3. In para 5 of the plaint the plaintiffs claim a partition of the suit property and their 1/3rd share therein. It is there averred that the suit property cannot be divided by metes and bounds, and it is submitted that it should be sold and the net sale proceeds divided amongst the branches in accordance with their respective shares. By prayer (a) of the plaint a declaration is sought, "if necessary", that the plaintiffs, as representing the branch of Mahadeo, have a 1/3rd share in the joint Hindu family. By prayer (b) the plaintiffs ask "that the suit property be sold by and under the directions of this Hon'ble Court, with liberty to the plaintiffs to bid at sale and that 1/3rd of the net sale proceeds may be handed over to the plaintiffs....."

4. The plaint makes allegations of the defalcation of the income of the suit property and of the payment by the plaintiffs of an antecedent debt. Mr. Phadkar has not pressed these allegations.

5. In the written statement it is contended that the suit is not maintainable for want of necessary parties. The sale of the suit property is opposed. It is denied that it cannot be divided by metes and bounds. In the supplementary written statements it is contended that the plaintiffs have no right to buy the share of the defendants in the suit property. It is also contended that the suit property should be divided by metes and bounds in accordance with the report of the Commissioner appointed by the court, to which reference shall immediately be made.

6. On the notices of motion taken out by the parties the court appointed, by consent, R. L. Chawla, Architect, "Commissioner to inspect the property and to evaluate and to report on the valuation of the property and also as to whether the property is capable of partition by metes and bounds in three equal or nearly equal shares". Chawla made a report on 31st March 1973. He stated that "the property in the present condition is not capable of being divided strictly according to B.M.C. D.C. (Bombay Municipal Corporation Development Control) Rules but I have tried to divide it into nearly three equal parts at various boundaries of structure. This division will not be approved by Bombay Municipal Corporation strictly under the rules, but it may be considered as a family partition, the parties agree (sic) to develop the individual portions strictly according to D.C. Rules regarding open spaces and floor space index prevalent in the locality and do not ask any concession under pretext of hardship."

7. Issues have been framed upon the basis of the pleadings. The parties have led no oral evidence.

8. It is common ground that this is not a suit under the Partition Act. Mr. Phadkar, learned counsel for the plaintiffs, submitted that the suit property should be sold by public auction. He submitted that the court had inherent power to order the sale, dehors the provisions of the Partition Act. In support of the submission he referred to the judgment of a Division Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Ramaprasada Rao v. Subbaramaiah, AIR 1958 Andh Pra 647. The point before the court was whether it had power dehors the provisions of the Partition Act to direct the sale of joint family property and divide the proceeds between the members. The court observed, ... "But many contingencies may be visualised when in practice the division by metes and bounds of every item of joint family property is not possible. A property might have to be allotted to one of the sharers and the others have to be compensated with money; this was called owelty. A court might be confronted with a situation where a property was not capable of physical partition or was such that, if divided, would lose its intrinsic worth. In such a case, that property was allotted to one sharer and compensation in money value is given to the others" and, if such a course is not possible, it is sold outright and the sale proceeds divided between the joint owners. All the aforesaid and similar other methods are adopted by courts in making an equitable partition of the joint properties either with the consent of the parties or, where such consent is not forthcoming, in exercise of its own discretion.

9. The provisions of the Partition Act do not, in any way, entrench upon the undoubted power of the court to effectuate a partition between co-owners in one or other of the methods suggested above.

10. Mr. Variava, on the other hand, drew my attention to the judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nitya Gopal v. Pran Krishna, AIR 1952 Cal 893. The court considered the law as it stood and came to the conclusion that earlier cases did not support the position that the court had an inherent power of sale in case it found that the property could not be conveniently partitioned or that partition would affect its intrinsic value. The cases showed, in fact, that there was so inherent right to sell the property. The court then considered the provisions of the Partition Act and concluded that it conferred on the court, in a suit for partition, a power of sale in certain specified cases. No general power of sale could be spelt out from its provisions. The court then made reference to cases dealing with Ss. 2 and 3 of the Partition Act and found that there was no current of decisions which compelled it to hold that there was an inherent power in the court to direct a sale in lieu of partition. The court held that there was no power in the court to order a sale in a partition suit if it was not covered by the provisions of the Partition Act.

11. Mr. Variava also made reference to the Supreme Court's judgment in R. Ramamurthi v. V. Rajeswararao, AIR 1973 SC 643. The principal question before the Supreme Court concerned the interpretation of Ss. 2 and 3 of the Partition Act. In para 8 of the judgment the following observations were made:—

"..... It would appear from the Objects and Reasons for the enactment of the Partition Act that as the law stood the court was bound to give a share to each of the parties and could not direct a sale or division of the proceeds. There could be, instances where there were insuperable practical difficulties in the way of making an equal division and the court was either powerless to give effect to its decree or was driven to all kinds of shifts and expedients in order to do so. The court was, therefore, given a discretionary authority to direct a sale where a partition could not reasonably be made and the sale would, in the opinion of the court, be more beneficial to the parties. But having regard to the strong attachment of the people in this country to their landed possessions the consent of the parties interested at least to the extent of a moiety in the property was made a condition precedent to the exercise by the court of the new power. At the same time in order to prevent any oppressive exercise of this privilege those shareholders who did not desire a sale were given a right to buy the others out at a valuation to be determined by the Court".

12. When the Andhra Pradesh judgment was cited by Mr. Phadkar, I was, with respect, not inclined to follow it. The view I tentatively expressed then was fortified by the said decision of the Calcutta High Court with which I respectfully concur. The observations of the Supreme Court put the matter beyond controversy. The court has no power, other than the power conferred under the Partition Act to order sale of property in a partition suit. The suit property cannot, therefore, be ordered to be sold, whether by public auction or by an auction between the parties to the suit,

13. Mr. Phadkar contended that if I would not order sale of the suit property I should partition it as proposed by the report of Chawla with the qualification that the plaintiffs should be allotted, out of the three portions, demarcated by Chawla, one of the two portions which had a frontage on the Caddel Road. The extract from Chawla's report which I have quoted earlier shows that the suit property is not capable of being divided according to the Municipality's Development Control Rules and that the division which is contemplated by the report could operate only as a family arrangement. It is thus clear that the suit property cannot be divided by metes and bounds. For that to be done, the divisions would have to be made separate and distinct for all purposes and their respective owners would have to be made completely independent of and not reliant upon each other. The court cannot, in the circumstances, order the division of the suit property upon the basis of Chawla's report, with or without qualification. This could only have been done by consent and consent is not forthcoming.

14. It was contended by Mr. Variava that the suit as it was framed was not a suit for partition but for sale and that of only one of the joint family properties. He submitted that if I hold, as I do, that the suit property could not be sold, then I must order the suit to be dismissed. He placed reliance upon the judgment of a learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Khanta Kali v. Radha Rani Debi, (1966) 72 Cal WN 837. The learned Judge expressed the view that in cases not contemplated under the Partition Act the court had inherent power to direct a sale. He said, however, that he was bound by the decision in Nitya Gopal's case (AIR 1952 Cal 893) (ibid) and so could not in the case before him order sale. He had asked plaintiff's counsel whether he would agree to a partition if the other parties paid him the value of the share at a valuation fixed by the Court but this was not acceptable. The other parties to the suit, who were the holders of a 2/3rd share, were already in possession of the property. A sale by public auction to a stranger might not only disintegrate the family but would render it homeless. Thus, even assuming that he had inherent jurisdiction to direct sale of the property by public auction, it was not a fit and proper case to do so. As the plaintiff had asked for no other relief, the application had to be dismissed with costs.

15. It was Mr. Variava's submission, in the alternative, that if I concluded that the suit was a partition suit, I should order a valuation of the 1/3rd interest of the plaintiffs in the suit property and require the defendants to pay the amount of that valuation to the plaintiffs. Mr. Devitre adopted this, as he adopted the other of Mr. Variava's submissions.

16. The sale of the suit property not being permissible, I have the difficult task of deciding whether I should direct valuation of the 1/3rd share of the plaintiffs in the suit property and payment thereof by the defendants to the plaintiffs and/or whether I should dismiss the suit.

17. Upon a construction of the plaint, it is not a suit for partition in the true sense. The relevant prayer of the plaint (prayer b) and the relevant paragraph of the plaint (para 5) make it clear, that all that the plaintiffs seek is a sale of the suit property. This being impermissible, the suit, as I think, must be dismissed.

18. There is another, though not entirely legal, reason for following this course. The plaintiffs reside in a part of the suit property. Were I to order partition by payment by the defendants to the plaintiffs of the plaintiffs' share in the suit property upon a valuation to be made, the plaintiffs would be required to surrender possession of the part of the suit property which is in their possession. I cannot be blind to the fact that obtaining satisfactory alternative accommodation in this city would then become for the plaintiffs a virtually impossible task.

19. Mr. Variava submitted that the suit should also be dismissed because it had been dismissed against defendants 14, 15 and 16, who were necessary parties. Mr. Phadkar contended that these ladies were not necessary parties inasmuch as they were married and had lost their right to claim maintenance thereout. Coming as I do to the conclusion that the suit must be dismissed on merits, I do not find it necessary to decide this preliminary issue.

I answer the issues thus:—

1. Not necessary.
2. In the negative, it cannot be divided by metes and bounds.
3. In the negative.
4. Not pressed, inasmuch as it is common ground that the suit is not under the Partition Act.
5. In the negative.
6. Does not arise.
7. to 10: Not pressed.
20. In the result, the suit is dismissed. The defendants do not press for costs; there shall, therefore, be no order as to costs.

21. Upon Mr. Phadkar's request, the Court Receiver do continue in possession of the suit property until 12th April 1982. The Court Receiver then do hand-over (a) possession of the suit property to the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 9 and 11 to 13 and (b) to their advocates all recoveries made from the suit property after deducting his costs, charges and expenses. The Court Receiver do thereupon stand discharged without passing accounts.

Suit dismissed.

MASODKAR AND BHARUCHA, JJ.

The Oriental Fire & General Insurance Co. Ltd., Appellants v. Balkrishna Ramchandra Nayan and others, Respondents.

First Appeal No. 535 of 1979, D/- 4-3-1982.

Motor Vehicles Act (4 of 1939), Sections 110-E, 110B, 96 (4) and 110F — Powers of tribunal under Section 110E — Has power to issue certificates of recovery of moneys payable by insured to insurer under award, where insurer has paid in excess of his liability — Even under Rule 294, Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules, tribunal can adopt procedure under Section 110E to order recovery of moneys that becomes due as and by way of restitution. (Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules (1959), Rule 294).

While making an award under Section 110B, the tribunal is required to specify the amount to be paid under the award by the insurer, the owner and the driver of the vehicle involved. Apportionment of liability between them is a function of the tribunal and the apportionment is a part of the award. The recovery of the amount paid in excess of its liability by one opposite party from another opposite party is, then, the recovery of moneys due under an award and Section 110E is attracted. It must also be noted in this connection that Section 110E refers to moneys due from any person under an award. It is therefore, not correct to say that the tribunal does not have the power to issue a certificate under Section 110E to recover moneys due by one opposite party from another opposite party. The contention that the Act does not contemplate payment of an amount larger than that found to be the liability of a party and it, therefore, does not provide for the recovery of the excess is without force. The tribunal has, as the last words of Section 110B show, the power to make joint and several awards and Section 96 (4) contemplates a situation where the insurer makes a payment under the award larger than his limited liability.

(Paras 15, 16)

Reference must also be made to Section 110F whereunder the jurisdiction of the civil courts is barred in respect of "any question relating to any claim for compensation which may be adjudicated upon by the claims tribunal." It is necessary to lay stress on the words "any question relating to any claim for compensation." The determination of the liability of a party and, therefore, the determination and recovery of the excess thereon paid by him under an award is such question, and its seizure by a civil court is barred.

(Para 17)

Under Rule 294 of the Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules the tribunal is empowered to exercise all the powers vested in a civil court under the provisions of Section 144 of the C. P. C. 1908. The tribunal is, therefore, empowered to order recovery of moneys that become due as and by way of restitution. It may do so by adopting the procedure under Section 110E.

(Paras 18, 19)

In the instant case, the tribunal made an award for the sum of about Rs. one lakh and forty thousand without apportioning the liability between the insurer and the insured. The Insurance Company paid the entire amount due under the award. Later, on an application by the insurer to the tribunal for apportionment of liability between the insurer and insured, the tribunal declared that the liability of the insurer was limited to Rs. 20,000/- only. Thereupon the insurer filed an application before the tribunal to recover from the insured, the excess amount paid by the insurer under the award. The tribunal declaring that it was not empowered under Section 110E to issue a certificate of recovery in respect of moneys payable by the owner of a vehicle to its insurer, rejected the application and directed the insurer to file a civil suit against the insured for reimbursement of the excess amount.

Held, there was no reason why the order by which the liability of the insurer under the award was restricted to Rs. 20,000/- could not be said to be a variation of the award, for, under the provisions of Section 144 Civil P. C., the variation did not have to be only in appeal or revision but could be in any other proceedings also. Looked at even as restitution, the tribunal could and should have exercised powers under Section 110E upon the application of the insurer. The tribunal erred in referring the insurer to a civil suit to recover the excess amount. (Paras 17, 19)

V. H. Gumaste with S. M. Mhamane, for Appellants; A. P. Vaze (for No. 1) and S. T. Tijoriwala i/b Nalin Parekh and G. S. Bhat (for Nos. 2 and 3), for Respondents.

BHARUCHA, J.:— This is an appeal against an order of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal for Greater Bombay rejecting the application of the appellants to direct by an award the owners of the vehicle concerned, the opposite parties to the application and the respondents 2 and 3 before us, to pay to the appellants the sum of Rs. 1,88,125/- with interest thereon at the rate of 6% per annum from 20th March, 1978 till payment.

2. On 14th April 1969 an accident took place at Bombay involving a vehicle owned by the respondents. One Dr. Balkrishna Nayan (respondent 1) was injured in the accident. He filed before the tribunal application No. 727 of 1969 against the respondents 2 and 3 for compensation. The appellants were joined as insurers of the vehicle. On 12th December, 1974, the tribunal made an award directing the respondents 2 and 3 and the appellants to pay to Dr. Nayan the sum of Rs. 1,43,400/- with interest thereon at the rate of 6% per annum from the date of the filing of the claim till payment and costs in the sum of Rupees 1,000/-. Against the award an appeal was filed in this court (being First Appeal No. 449 of 1975) by the respondents 2 and 3 and the appellants. On 23rd March, 1976, the appeal was dismissed. The court then passed, inter alia, the following orders:—

"(2) The award passed by the tribunal is confirmed but the appellant-insurance company is given liberty to apply on depositing Rs. 20,000/- with interest as ordered in the award from the date of the application to the date of the deposit, for not issuing a certificate, against the insurance company under Section 110E for the balance of the amount awarded on the ground that the liability of the insurance company is limited to Rs. 20,000/- under Section 95 (2) or the amount for which the insurance company has issued the policy, whichever is higher.

(3) The tribunal to decide the question of the liability of the insurance company on its application for the said purpose under Section 110E after giving an opportunity to all the parties."

3. The matter was carried in appeal to the Supreme Court by the respondents. On 26th January, 1972, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal. Dr. Nayan then filed before the Supreme Court Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1347 of 1978 in the appeal. In that petition the Supreme Court on 3rd February, 1979 passed the following order:—

"Heard learned counsel for all the three parties, namely the claimant, the insurers, as also the insured. In our opinion, reading the judgment of the High Court and of this Court passed in appeal as well as in the review matter, it is clear that the award made by the Tribunal for the amount of about Rs. one lakh and forty thousand casting a joint and several liability on the insured and the insurers has remained intact. It has not been affected in any way by any direction given by the High Court as affirmed by this Court. In other words, it is open to the claimant to claim the whole of that amount from the insurer or the insured in accordance with the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939.

The Tribunal, however, as directed by the High Court, and the said direction having not been interfered with by this Court, may proceed to determine the liability of the insurer, if the insurance company has carried out the condition for determination of that liability, namely, deposit of Rs. 20,000/- with interest. But it is made clear that the determination of this liability will be only for the purpose of apportioning the liability between the insured and the insurer as between themselves. It will not affect the joint and several award made against them in favour of the claimant and will not affect or delay his right at all for the realisation of the amount. If the insurer is made to pay an amount in excess of the amount of liability determined by the Tribunal in pursuance of the direction of the High Court it will be open to the insurer to proceed against the insured in accordance with law for reimbursement of the said amount. We, therefore, direct the Tribunal to proceed in this matter in the light of this order."

4. On 20th March, 1978, the appellants paid the entire amount due under the award.

5. In the meantime, on 10th May, 1976, pursuant to the said directions of this court in the appeal, the appellants made an application to the tribunal to apportion the liability under the award between themselves and the respondents 2 & 3. On 9th November, 1978, the tribunal declared that the said liability of the appellants was limited to Rs. 20,000/- only. On 15th November, 1978, the appellants filed the present application before the tribunal to recover from the respondents 2 and 3 the excess amount paid by the appellants under the award.

6. The tribunal by the order under appeal, dt. 20th Feb. 1979, came to the conclusion that Section 110E of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Act") did not empower the tribunal to issue a certificate of recovery in respect of moneys payable by the owner of a vehicle to its insurer. In its view, an award of the tribunal could not settle a claim between the owner and the insurer and could not direct the owner to pay moneys to the insurer. It held that the appellants would have to proceed against the respondents 2 and 3 in a suit in civil Court for reimbursement of the excess amount. The tribunal rejected the application.

7. Against that order this appeal is filed.

8. It was contended by Mr. Gumaste, learned counsel for the appellants, that it was clear from the said directions of this court in the appeal and of the Supreme Court that the tribunal was to decide the question of the appellants' liability under Section 110E of the Act. That provision empowered the tribunal to issue a certificate in respect of moneys due under an award to the Collector whereupon the Collector had to proceed to recover the moneys due in the same manner as arrears of land revenue. In Mr. Gumaste's submission it was incumbent upon the tribunal to proceed to carry out these directions regardless of its own interpretation of its powers. He submitted that it was not open to the respondents 2 and 3 to challenge before the tribunal its power in the application; they should have challenged the applicability of Section 110E of the Act before this Court when it gave the directions of 23rd March, 1976 or before the Supreme Court when it affirmed the same. Mr. Gumaste submitted that there was, in any case, power vested in the tribunal to issue a certificate to recover amounts due by one opposite party to another under an award. To substantiate this contention Mr. Gumaste took us through the scheme of Chap. VIII of the Act and showed us that under the Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules the tribunal was vested with the powers exercisable by a civil court under S. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

9. Mr. Tijoriwala, learned counsel for the respondents 2 and 3 submitted that no appeal lay against the order passed by the tribunal rejecting the application, for it was not an award. He also contended that the tribunal had no power to issue a certificate under Section 110E against one opposite party to recover moneys due to another opposite party. In his submission, by the order dated 9th November, 1978, the tribunal had only determined the amount of the liability of the appellants as the insurers and this was not tantamount to an award to which the provisions of Section 110E would apply.

10. In view of the fact that we have permitted the appellants to challenge the said order also under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution, the point as to the maintainability of the appeal need not be considered.

11. This court in the appeal gave by its said directions liberty to the appellants to apply to the tribunal for the balance of the amount awarded on the ground that its liability was limited. It expressly directed the tribunal to decide the question of the appellants' liability for the said purpose under Section 110E. Section 110E reads thus:

"Where any money is due from any person under an award, the Claims Tribunal may, on an application made to it by the person entitled to the money, issue a certificate for the amount to the Collector and the Collector shall proceed to recover the same in the same manner as an arrear of land revenue."

From the phraseology used there can be no doubt that this Court intended and directed that the provisions of Sec. 110E be put into effect upon the appellants' application for determination of their liability, which meant that the Tribunal was directed to issue a certificate u/s. 110E for recovery from the respondents 2 and 3 of such excess amount as had been paid by the appellants under the award.

12. The Supreme Court by the order dt. 3rd February 1979 ordered the Tribunal "as directed by the High Court, and the said direction having not been interfered with by this court" to proceed to determine the liability of the appellants. The Supreme Court thus made it clear that this Court's order in its fullest amplitude remained operative and the Tribunal was directed to comply with it. The further statement in the order that it would be open to the appellants to proceed against the respondents 2 and 3 in accordance with law for reimbursement of the excess amount after the excess amount was determined by the Tribunal pursuant to this Court's directions only affirms that this Court's directions were fully effective. It does not exclude, as was sought to be suggested by Mr. Tijoriwala, the operation of S. 110E as a method of recovery of the excess amount.

13. In our view, upon an interpretation of the said directions of this court in the appeal and of the Supreme Court, the Tribunal was obliged to determine the liability of the appellants and to employ the provisions of S. 110E to recover the excess amount paid by the appellants under the award from the respondents 2 and 3. Any quarrel with the employment of these provisions for this purpose should have been raised by the respondents 2 and 3, not before the Tribunal, but before this Court in the appeal or before the Supreme Court when it endorsed this court's directions. This is sufficient to allow the appeal.

14. Since, however, the question of the power of the Tribunal to issue the certificate u/s. 110E has been canvassed, we propose to discuss our findings thereon. S. 110B and S. 110D must be first set out:

"110B. On receipt of an application for compensation made under Section 110A, the Claims Tribunal shall, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, hold an inquiry into the claim and may make an award determining the amount of compensation which appears to it to be just and specifying the person or persons to whom compensation shall be paid, and in making the award the Claims Tribunal shall specify the amount which shall be paid by the insurer or owner or driver of the vehicle involved in the accident or by all or any of them, as the case may be."

"110D. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), any person aggrieved by an award of a Claims Tribunal may, within ninety days from the date of the award, prefer an appeal to the High Court:

Provided that the High Court may entertain the appeal after the expiry of the said period of ninety days, if it is satisfied that the appellant was prevented by sufficient cause from preferring the appeal in time.

(2) No appeal shall lie against any award of a Claims Tribunal, if the amount in dispute in appeal is less than two thousand rupees."

15. It will be observed that the Tribunal is required in making the award to specify the amount to be paid thereunder by the insurer, the owner and the driver of the vehicle involved. Apportionment of liability between them is a function of the tribunal and the apportionment is a part of the award. The recovery of the amount paid in excess of its liability by one opposite party from another opposite party is, then, the recovery of moneys due under an award and S. 110E is attracted. It must also be noted in this connection that S. 110E refers to moneys due from any person under an award. It is, therefore, not correct to say, as the Tribunal did, that the Tribunal does not have the power to issue a certificate u/s. 110E to recover moneys due by one opposite party from another opposite party.

16. Mr. Tijoriwala placed reliance upon the fact that the appellants had not raised the plea that their liability was limited before the Tribunal. He submitted that, had they done so, as they should have done, the Tribunal would have had to apportion liability and would have given an award under which the liability of the respondents 2 and 3 and the appellants was several, in which case the appellants could not have been made to pay under the award an amount larger than the amount of their liability and no question of recovering the excess would have arisen. The fact, he urged, did not contemplate payment of an amount larger than that found to be the liability of a party and it, therefore, did not provide for the recovery of the excess. We do not see the force of this argument. The Tribunal has, as the last words of S. 110B show, the power to make joint and several awards and S. 96 (4) contemplates a situation where the insurer makes a payment under the award larger than his limited liability.

17. Reference must also be made to S. 110F whereunder the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is barred in respect of "any question relating to any claim for compensation which may be adjudicated upon by the Claims Tribunal." It is necessary to lay stress on the words "any question relating to any claim for compensation." The determination of the liability of a party and, therefore, the determination and recovery of the excess thereon paid by him under an award is such question, and its seizure by a Civil Court is barred. The impugned order is erroneous insofar as it refers the appellants to a civil suit to recover the excess amount.

18. Under S. 111A of the Act the State Government is empowered to make rules to provide, inter alia, what powers vested in a civil Court may be exercised by the Tribunal. Under R. 294 of the Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules the Tribunal is empowered to exercise all the powers vested in a civil Court under the provisions of S. 144 of the C.P.C., 1908. The relevant portion of S. 144 provides as follows:

"(1) Where and in so far as a decree or an order is varied or reversed in any appeal, revision or other proceeding or is set aside or modified in any suit instituted for the purpose, the court which passed the decree or order shall on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or order or such part thereof as has been varied, reversed, set aside or modified, and for this purpose, the court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits, which are properly consequential on such variation, reversal, setting aside or modification of the decree or order."

19. The Tribunal is, therefore, empowered to order recovery of moneys that become due as and by way of restitution. It may do so by adopting the procedure u/s. 110E. There seems to us to be no reason why the order by which the liability of the appellants under the award was restricted to Rs. 20,000 may not be said to be a variation of the award for, under the provisions of S. 144, the variation need not be only in appeal or revision but may be in any other proceedings also. Looked at even as restitution, the Tribunal could and should have exercised powers u/s. 110E upon the application of the appellants.

20. In the premises, the appeal must be allowed. The order of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal dt. 20th Feb. 1979 is set aside. The Tribunal is directed to issue a certificate u/s. 110E certifying that the sum of Rs. 1,88,125 with interest thereon at the rate of 6% per annum from today till payment is recoverable by the appellants from the respondents 2 and 3.

21. The respondents 2 and 3 shall pay to the appellants the costs of the appeal.
Appeal allowed.

BHARUCHA J.— A dispute between the parties regarding a claim arising out of a contract was referred to sole arbitration. On 25th February 1976 the arbitrator made an award in favour of the appellant in the sum of Rs. 59,500/-. He prescribed "that this amount shall be paid to Shri K. C. Agarwal (the appellant) not later than 31st May, '76 and for any delay beyond this date, the money in Award will carry a simple interest at the rate of 6% per annum." The arbitrator applied to the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Pune, for a decree in terms of the award. The respondents contended before the court that the arbitrator had no power to award interest after 31st May, 1976. The court accepted the contention and passed a decree in terms of the award excluding the direction for payment of interest. It directed that the amount of Rs. 59,500/- deposited by the respondents in the court should be paid over to the appellant without delay. Being aggrieved by this decision, the appellant has preferred this appeal.

2. It was contended before us that the arbitrator had power to direct payment of interest for the period subsequent to the date of the award. In this behalf Mr. Naik, learned counsel for the appellant, cited the judgment of the Supreme Court in Union of India v. Bungo Steel Furniture, AIR 1967 SC 1032. In that case disputes in a suit, including the question of interest, were referred to an arbitrator. The arbitrator awarded interest on the principal amount awarded from the date of the award till the date of the decree. The Supreme Court held that the arbitrator had jurisdiction to do so. A reference in respect of such interest had been made to him. It was an implied term of the reference that the arbitrator would decide the dispute according to existing law and give such relief with regard to interest as a court could give if it decided the dispute. The principle of S. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure could be applied by the arbitrator in a case where a Court in a suit could grant a decree for interest.

3. Power in respect of interest on an award is given by Section 29 of the Arbitration Act, 1940. Thereunder, where an award is for the payment of money, the Court may, in passing a decree on the award, order interest from the date of the decree at such rate as it deems reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged by the award and confirmed by the decree.

4. Where, therefore, as in the instant case, disputes in a suit are not referred to arbitration and there is nothing to indicate that the question of interest subsequent to the date of the award has been referred to the arbitrator, the arbitrator has no power to award interest upon the principal amount he awards subsequent to the date of his award.

5. The appeal has no merit and is dismissed with no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Arvind V. Bandivadekar, for Petitioner;
Bhimrao N. Naik, for Respondents.

ORDER:— In this petition under Article 227 of the Constitution, a question of law has been raised, but I am relieved of entering into a detailed discussion of the same because that has been already decided by authorities which are binding upon me. The petitioner is the tenant of a room forming part of a building bearing C. T. S. No. 2197 situated at Kolhapur and the respondents' father was the original owner of the said house. It is an admitted position that the respondents' father has died and the respondents are some of the legal representatives of the original owner. It has been brought on record that apart from the five respondents, their father left behind him his widow and three daughters. The foundation of the arguments advanced in the two Courts below and repeated before me is this fact that it is not the five respondents alone who are the owners of the suit premises, but their mother and the three sisters are also owners of the same.

2. Regular Civil Suit No. 438 of 1973 was filed by the five respondents for possession of the suit premises on the ground, among others, that the petitioner was in arrears of rent for a period of more than six months and he has not complied with the requirements mentioned in Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, hereinafter referred to as "the Bombay Rent Act". Both the Courts below have upheld the claim of the respondents and decreed the suit for possession. The trial Court passed the decree on 31st of January, 1976, which has been confirmed by the Appeal Court in Civil Appeal No. 172 of 1976 by its judgment and order dated 30th of June 1977. The petitioner has now approached this Court under Article 227 of the Constn.

3. Mr. Bandivadekar, the learned Advocate appearing in support of the petition, has repeated the challenge as to the competence of the respondents to file the suit when the other heirs of the original landlord have not been joined either in giving the notice under Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rent Act or in the suit which was filed for possession. Mr. Bandivadekar has contended that the reliance placed by the learned Assistant Judge on the judgment of this Court in Nishramal Chhogala v. N. B. Patel, (1963) 65 Bom LR 15, is wrong because subsequently this judgment has been distinguished by Bhasme J. in Mohan Sons Pvt. Ltd. v. Sonoo Jamsetji, (1976) 78 Bom LR 195: (AIR 1976 Bom 417). Mr. Bandivadekar has naturally relied upon the later judgment which apparently supports his contention that some only of the owners of a building cannot file a suit for possession under the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act.

4. Much water, however, has flown down the Ganges after the judgment of Bhasme J. was given. In Smt. Kanta Goel v. B. P. Pathak, AIR 1977 SC 1599, a similar question arose and has been answered conclusively. In that case the suit premises had been leased to the tenant by one Pandit Saraswatidas who died in the year 1972 leaving behind him the plaintiff, two other sons and a daughter as his legal representatives. It was the plaintiff alone who filed the application or the suit before the Rent Collector under the provisions of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958. One of the contentions which was taken in the Court below as well as in the higher Courts was that the plaintiff alone could not file a suit for possession of the premises leased to the tenant and in order that the suit should be properly constituted all the legal representatives of the original owner or in other words all the owners of the building at the time of the institution of the suit must necessarily join in the suit. This argument was rejected by the Supreme Court. However, in Kanta Goel's case the other co-owners of the suit premises had been joined as parties at the High Court stage. The contention which was raised on behalf of the tenant was summarised by the Supreme Court in the following words (at p. 1601):—

"The presence of the co-heirs at the High Court level was inconsequential, according to the appellant, and their absence at the trial stage vitiated the order of the Controller."

After examining some other incidental questions which also arose, the Supreme Court proceeded to mention as follows:—

"Equally without force in our view is the plea that one co-lessor cannot sue for eviction even if the other co-lessors have no objection." (Para 6)

5. Thereafter the Supreme Court proceeded to examine the definition of "landlord" contained in the Delhi Act, which is pari materia with the definition of "landlord" contained in the Bombay Rent Act, and after doing so the following law was laid down:— (Para 6)

"The first respondent (the plaintiff), together with the other respondents, constituted the body of landlords and, by consent, implicit or otherwise, one of them representing them all, was collecting rent. In short, he functioned, for all practical purposes as the landlord, and was therefore entitled to institute proceedings qua landlord."

6. Thereafter, referring to an earlier judgment of the Supreme Court in Sri Ram Pasricha v. Jagannath, AIR 1976 SC 2335, the Supreme Court proceeded to hold as follows:—

"That case also was one for eviction under the rent control law of Bengal. The law having been thus put beyond doubt, the contention that the absence of the other co-owners on record disentitled the first respondent from suing for eviction, fails."

7. The judgment of the Supreme Court in Kanta Goel's case has been referred to and naturally followed by Kanade J. in Special Civil Application No. 2554 of 1975 decided on 2nd of July 1980*. There is thus no alternative for me but to dismiss this petition whose main challenge is based on the judgment of Bhasme J. referred to above.

8. Mr. Bandivadekar has referred me to the judgment of a Full Bench of the Gujarat High Court in Nanalal Girdharilal v. Gulamnabi Jamalbhai Motorwala, AIR 1973 Guj 131, which to a great extent supports the petitioner in the instant case. But in view of the judgment of the Supreme Court in Kanta Goel's case (AIR 1977 SC 1599), it is not possible to hold that the question is any longer open to an argument of the type advanced by Mr. Bandivadekar. For the same reason I am left with no alternative but to reject the contention of Mr. Bandivadekar relating to the necessity of all the co-owners joining in a notice u/s. 12 (2) of the Bombay Rent Act. A notice u/s. 12 (2), for similar reasons as mentioned in Kanta Goel's case, can be issued by the Rent Controller or one of the co-heirs.

9. In the result, this petition must fail. Accordingly, rule is discharged with no order as to costs.

10. Mr. Bandivadekar requests for time to vacate the premises. The decree shall not be executed till 30th of Sept. 1981, provided that the petitioner files in this Court an affidavit on or before 30th of March 1981:

(i) giving an undertaking to this Court that he shall give vacant and peaceful possession of the suit premises to the respondent on or before 30th of Sept., 1981 and that in the meantime he shall not induct anyone in the suit premises in any capacity or otherwise pari with the suit premises in any manner whatsoever; and

(ii) that he shall go on depositing the rent of the suit premises for every month by the end of that month.

Petition dismissed.

MADON, J.

Bhausahab Tavnappa Mahajan and others, Appellants v. State of Maharashtra and others, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 909 of 1980, D/-1-9-1981.

(A) Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Act (20 of 1964), S. 3 (1) — Notification under — Requirement as to publication in newspaper is directory — Held, fact that only gist of notification was published in local vernacular newspaper did not make notification invalid. (Interpretation of Statutes — Mandatory or directory provisions). AIR 1974 Bom 181, Rel. on. (Para 5)

(B) Evidence Act (1 of 1872), S. 114 (e) — Presumption under — Publication of Govt. notification — Court called upon to decide whether notification was published in accordance with relevant statutory provisions — Evidence led by Govt. to prove due publication — Held presumption that notifications had been regularly published could not be drawn u/s. 114 (e).

Illustration (e) to S. 114 cannot and does not apply where the point at issue is not whether an official act was properly performed, but the point at issue is whether such an act was in fact performed, and (2) where evidence has been led on behalf of the Government or the concerned authority to prove that a particular official act had been regularly performed and that evidence clearly shows that such performance had not taken place. In either of these cases, there is no place or scope for drawing any presumption u/s. 114. The first point to notice about S. 114 is that it uses the words "may presume" in contradistinction to the words "shall presume".

Under S. 4 of the Act whenever it is provided by that Act that the Court may presume a fact, it may either regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or may call for proof of it, and whenever it is directed by that Act that the Court shall presume a fact, it shall regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved. Therefore, it is open to a Court either to draw or not to draw a presumption u/s. 114. Normally, the Courts would draw such a presumption when the actual performance of the act is not in dispute in order not to waste public time on the leading of formal proof with respect to the regularity of its performance, but the position is entirely different where the very issue which the Court has to decide is as to the performance of that official act itself. Further it must be borne in mind that by the very terms of the section a presumption u/s. 114 is to be drawn in relation to the facts of a particular case, AIR 1945 Bom 368 and AIR 1968 SC 1413, Rel. on. (Paras 7, 8, 9)

Held, when the very issue before the Court was whether the Govt. notifications had been duly published and evidence had been led by the Govt. to prove the point in issue, the question of drawing any presumption u/s. 114 (e) regarding due publication of notifications did not arise. The lower Appellate Court was in error in drawing a presumption u/s. 114 and in holding that the said notification had been duly published as required by the relevant statutory provisions. Further, it was strange that those desiring to prove that the said notification had been properly published did not care to produce any evidence other than two letters. Either no other documentary evidence at all existed, or if it existed and was not produced, the Court was entitled to presume u/s. 114 (g) that such evidence if produced would have been unfavourable to the person withholding it. (Paras 8, 9)

(C) Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Act (20 of 1964), S. 3 (1) last part — Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Rules (1967), R. 3 — Last part of S. 3 (1) dealing with third mode of publication and provisions of R. 3 are mandatory — Held, Notification No. APMC/Kolhapur 67, dt. 3-2-68 issued u/s. 3 was invalid for non-compliance with mandatory provisions — Consequently, Notification No. APMC/Kolhapur/68 dt. 16-5-68 issued u/s. 4 pursuant to notification u/s. 3 was also invalid. (Interpretation of Statutes — Mandatory and directory provisions).

The notification u/s. 3 is issued so as to enable those who may be affected by the declaration of intention were it implemented to submit their objections thereto for the consideration of the prescribed authority. It is also there for those desiring to make suggestions, some of which may be worthwhile, for the prescribed authority to take the suggestions into consideration before issuing a final notification u/s. 4. The said Act is a regulatory statute. It affects the right to carry on trade and business of several persons. It also affects agriculturists. It is, therefore, necessary that the Government's intention to issue a notification u/s. 4 of the said Act should be brought to the notice of all persons concerned, not only the wholesale dealers in the particular agricultural produce but also all agriculturists. Generally, agriculturists are not literate, and even if they can read, they usually do not subscribe to newspapers. They however, often have occasion to visit the offices of Mamlatdars, Tahsildars, Mahalkaris, Naib-Tehsildars and Panchayat Samitis, and when they do so, when any notice is put up on the notice-board there, either they or someone of them who may be able to read it may come to know about it and inform the others. For people of this class the best mode of publication would be by oral proclamation by beat of drums. Bearing all these factors in mind, though S. 3 left it to the discretion of the State Govt. to publish a notification u/s. 3 in such manner as in its opinion was best calculated to bring it to the notice of concerned persons, the State Government, instead of leaving such mode of publication to the individual opinion of different officers, thought it fit to prescribe how such publication should be done, and this it did by making R. 3 of the said Rules. That rule itself also uses the word 'shall'. It uses the word 'shall' because by the terms of S. 3 (1) of the said Act with respect to the third mode of publication the word 'shall' is used. The object underlying this provision would clearly show that what was intended by the Legislature in requiring the State Government to publish a notification in the manner best calculated to bring to the notice of the persons in the area the Government's intention was to make it a mandatory requirement and that it was in order not to leave the compliance of such mandatory requirement to the individual notions of different officers that the State Government made the said R. 3, making the modes of publication specified therein to be mandatory and obligatory. To hold that the provisions in question are directory would be fraught with grave danger, for it would leave it open to executive officers by not complying with any one of them to flout and set at naught the Will of the Legislature and the mandatory requirements imposed upon them by the State Government. The provisions contain procedural safeguards, and procedural safeguards are as important as substantive safeguards. Therefore, the last part of S. 3 (1) dealing with the third mode of publication and the provisions of R. 3 are mandatory and not directory. Held, as the mandatory provisions were not complied with, Notification No. APMC/Kolhapur/67 dt. 3-2-68 issued u/s. 3 was inoperative and invalid. As the said notification u/s. 3 was invalid and inoperative, the condition precedent for the issuing of a notification u/s. 4 was not fulfilled, and, therefore, Notification No. APMC/Kolhapur/68 dt. May, 16, 1968 u/s. 4 was also invalid and inoperative. AIR 1972 SC 892 (893, 895), Rel. on. (Para 12)

(D) Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), S. 11 — Res judicata — Validity of Govt. notifications challenged under Art. 226, Constitution, on ground that they were not duly published — Notifications held to be duly published — Suit filed not by petitioners but by a different party challenging notifications on same ground — Suit is not barred by res judicata.

The plaintiffs were members of an unregistered association known as the Kolhapur Grain Merchants Association and had filed a suit challenging certain notifications issued by the Govt. under the Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Act, 1963 on the ground that the said notifications were not duly published. The very same notifications had been challenged earlier in a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution by three firms doing business in onions. Being an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution, the matter was decided on affidavits. Amongst the various grounds raised to challenge these notifications one ground was that the notification u/s. 3 and, therefore, the notification u/s. 4 was also invalid. An affidavit in reply was filed to that petition by the Under Secretary to the Government, Agriculture and Co-operation Department, in which was set out in detail how the said notifications were published. The Court accepted the statements made in the affidavit of the Under Secretary and held that the notifications had been properly published.

Held, the decision in the writ petition did not operate as res judicata in respect of the subsequent suit. The petitioners were entirely different from the plaintiffs in the suit. Those petitioners were not even members of the Kolhapur Grain Merchants Association on whose behalf the suit was filed. Secondly, that was a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution which was decided on affidavit. Here, there was a suit which had to be decided on evidence and not by accepting implicitly statements made in the written statement of the respondents. Therefore, the question of res judicata did not arise at all. (Para 13)

A. M. Setalvad with G. R. Rege, for Appellants; A. B. Naik, Asstt. Govt. Pleader and K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— The appellants are members of an unregistered association known as the Kolhapur Grain Merchants Association, and had filed the suit, out of which this Second Appeal arises in a representative capacity under R. 8 of O. 1 of the Civil P.C., 1908. The said suit was tried by the Joint Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur. In the suit the Appellants challenged certain notifications issued under the Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Act, 1963, (Maharashtra Act No. XX of 1964). The Appellants' challenge succeeded, and the trial Court declared the said notifications to be null and void, and restrained the Respondents from enforcing the said notifications. The trial Court also directed the parties to bear their own costs of the suit. Though the Appellants' challenge on certain grounds succeeded, their challenge on the ground that these notifications infringed the provisions of Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution of India was negatived. Against the said judgment and decree of the trial Court, not only Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, namely, the State and the Director of Agriculture, Forest and Rural Finance, Government of Maharashtra, filed an appeal but Respondents Nos. 3 to 5, namely, the Kolhapur Agricultural Produce Market Committee and the President and the Secretary of the said Committee, also filed an appeal. The Appellants also appealed against that part of the judgment which negatived their constitutional challenge to the validity of the said notifications. All these appeals were heard together by the Court of the Assistant Judge at Kolhapur, and by a common judgment the lower appellate Court allowed the appeals filed by the Respondents and dismissed the Appellants' appeal. The lower appellate Court directed the Appellants to pay the costs of the suit and the appeals. It is against this appellate decree that the Appellants have preferred this Second Appeal.

2. It will be now convenient to set out in some detail the facts which have given rise to this litigation. By a notification dt. Mar. 1, 1949 issued under the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939 (Bom XXII of 1939), an Agricultural Produce Market Committee was established to regulate the marketing of groundnut (shelled and unshelled) and gur in the area of Karvir, Radhanagari and Bhudargad Talukas and Panhala

Mahal of the Kolhapur District. By another notification dt. Mar. 8, 1959 issued under the said Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act the market area of the said Committee was extended so as to include Shanuwadi Taluka of Kolhapur District, and its operation was also extended to regulate the marketing of groundnut (shelled and unshelled) and gur in the said extended area. By another notification dt. Oct. 6, 1963, also issued under the said 1939 Act, the market area of the said Committee was further extended so as to include the area of 43 villages mentioned in the said notification situate on the north of Vedganga river from Kagal Taluka, and its operation was equally extended to regulate the marketing of groundnut (shelled and unshelled) and gur in the extended area. Thereafter the Director of Agricultural Marketing and Rural Finance, Maharashtra State, intended to extend the market area of the said Committee so as to include in it the area of Gagan-Bawada Mahal of the Kolhapur District as also to extend its operations to regulate the marketing of paddy (husked and unhusked), jowar, bajari, wheat, tobacco, cotton (ginned and unginned), chillies, turmeric, gram, gram-dal, tur, tur-dal, udid, udid-dal, masur, masur-dal, mug, mug-dal, onion, peas, val, chola, kulthi, cattle, sheep and goats in addition to groundnut (shelled and unshelled) and gur in the whole of the market area as extended by the said Committee. There does not appear to be any particular dispute that while groundnut and gur grow in Kolhapur District, the other grain seeds which were intended to be got regulated by the said Committee are brought into Kolhapur from other places. A notification, namely, Notification No. APMC/Kolhapur/67 dt. Feb. 3, 1968 was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette. Part I. Poona, dt. Mar. 14, 1968. The said notification was issued u/s. 3 of the Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Act, 1963 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Act"), which had repealed and replaced the said 1939 Act. By the said notification, objections and suggestions were invited by the Director of Agricultural Marketing and Rural Finance, Maharashtra State, Poona, within a period of one month from the date of the said notification. Accordingly, the said Kolhapur Grain Merchants Association submitted its representation dt. Apr. 11, 1968. By the telegram dt. Apr. 25, 1968 representatives of the said Association were asked to meet the said Director on Apr. 30, 1968. The said meeting took place, and the representatives of the said Association put forward their point of view before the said Director, apparently without any success, because a notification, namely, Notification No. APMC/Kolhapur/68 dt. May 16, 1968, issued by the said Director u/s. 4 of the said Act was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette, Part I, Poona Division, dt. June 13, 1968. It is these two notifications which were challenged by the Appellants in their suit.

3. In order to understand the contentions of the Appellants with respect to the said notifications advanced before me at the hearing of this Second Appeal, it is necessary now to refer to certain provisions of the said Act. Sections 3 and 4 of the said Act provide as follows:

"3. Notification of intention of regulating marketing of agricultural produce in specified area.

(1) The State Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare its intention of regulating the marketing of such agricultural produce, in such area as may be specified in the notification. The notification may also be published in the language of the area in any newspaper circulating therein, and shall also be published in such other manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring to the notice of persons in the area, the intention aforesaid.

(2) The notification shall state that any objections or suggestions which may be received by the State Government within a period of not less than one month to be specified in the notification will be considered by the State Government.

4. Declaration of regulation of marketing of specified agricultural produce in market area.

(1) On the expiry of the period specified in the notification issued under Section 3, the State Government shall consider the objections and suggestions, if any, received before the expiry of such period and may, if it considers necessary, hold an inquiry in the manner prescribed.

Thereafter, the State Government may, by another notification in the Official Gazette, declare that the marketing of the agricultural produce specified in the notification shall be regulated under this Act, in the area, specified in the notification. The area so specified shall be the market area. A notification under this section may also be published in the language of the area in a newspaper circulating therein, and shall also be published in such other manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring to the notice of persons in the area the declaration aforesaid.

(2) On any declaration being made under sub-section (1) no local authority shall thereafter, notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, establish, authorise or continue or allow to be established or continued any place in the market area for the marketing of that agricultural produce.

(3) Subject to the provisions of Section 3, the State Government may, at any time by notification in the Official Gazette, exclude from a market area any area, or include therein an additional area, or may direct that the regulation of the marketing of any agricultural produce in any market area shall cease, or that the marketing of any agricultural produce (hitherto not regulated) shall be regulated in the market area."

Section 58 confers upon the State Government the power to delegate inter alia to the Director of Agricultural marketing all or any of the powers conferred upon it by the said Act. It was in pursuance of such delegated authority that the said Director issued the said two notifications. Section 60 confers upon the State Government the power to make rules for carrying into effect the purposes of the said Act, including prescribing the manner of holding an inquiry. In pursuance of this rule-making power the State Govt. has enacted the Maharashtra Agricultural Produce Marketing (Regulation) Rules, 1967 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Rules"). Rule 3 of the said Rules is important and requires to be reproduced in extenso. It is as follows:

"3. Additional mode of publication of notification under Sections 3 and 4.— A notification under Section 3 declaring the intentions of the State Government of regulating the marketing of any agricultural produce in any area specified in such notification and the notification under Section 4 regulating the marketing of agricultural produce in any area shall, in addition to their publication in any newspaper circulating in any such area as required by that section, also be published by affixing copies thereof at the chavdi of each village included in such area and by exhibiting them on the notice board in the office of the Mamlatdar, Tahsildar, Mahalkari or Naib-Tahsildar and of the Panchayat Samiti within whose jurisdiction such area is situated. The State Government shall also require a revenue officer specified in this behalf to give wide publicity to the notification by beat of drums in any such area."

Rule 4 of the said Rules prescribes the procedure for holding inquiry for considering objections and suggestions. Under that rule the Inquiry Officer is by notice to require the persons making the objections and suggestions to appear before him not earlier than fifteen days from the date of the notice. From the dates set out above, it will be apparent that a much shorter time than the prescribed period of fifteen days was given to the said Association. Since, however, no point has been made with respect thereto before me, I do not propose to express any opinion about it.

4. Before me Mr. Setalvad, learned Counsel for the Appellants, has confined himself to raising two points:

(1) The said Act, having been enacted to regulate the marketing of agricultural produce, can only permit the regulation of the first marketing of the product in question. Once the product is marketed, it enters the stream of commerce and becomes a commercial commodity like any other commercial commodity. The application of the provisions of the said Act to such products is not permissible under the said Act and that in any event is not a reasonable restriction on the fundamental rights of the Appellants to carry on trade and business guaranteed to them by Article 19 (1)(g) of the Constn.

(2) The provisions of Rule 3 of the said Rules relating to the additional modes of publication are mandatory; and they not having been complied with, the said notifications are invalid and inoperative.

5. So far as the first point is concerned, Mr. Setalvad frankly stated that in view of the judgment of the Supreme Court in Ram Chandra Kailash Kumar & Co. v. State of Uttar Pradesh. AIR 1980 SC 1124, it was not open to him to urge this point before me. So far as the second point is concerned, Mr. Setalvad confined his challenge only to the said notification Dt. February 3, 1968, it being an accepted position that the notification under Section 3 of the said Act is a condition precedent to the issuance of a notification under Sec. 4 of the said Act, and that if a notification under Section 3 of the said Act has not been validly or duly published, it would not be operative and would not entitle the State Government to issue a notification under Section 4. The said notification dated February 3, 1968 is expressly stated to be issued under Section 3 of the said Act. Surprisingly enough, though the said notification Dt. May 16, 1968 is also expressly stated to have been issued under Section 3 of the said Act, its entire tenor shows that it was actually issued under Section 4 of the said Act. However, before the trial Court the position was conceded by the Appellants that the said notification dated May 16, 1968 should be treated as having been issued under the said S. 4. Turning now to S. 3, it prescribes three modes of publication :

(1) Publication in the Official Gazette.

(2) Publication in the language of the concerned area in any newspaper circulating in such area.

(3) Publication in such other manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring to the notice of persons in the concerned area the fact that certain agricultural produce specified in the notification are intended to be regulated under the said Act in the said area. There is no dispute, as indeed there cannot be any, that the said notification under S. 3 was published in the Official Gazette.

The word 'may' is used in the opening words of Section 3 not with respect to the publication of a notification under S. 3 in the Official Gazette but with respect to the declaration of Government's intention, because the Government may or may not want to regulate the marketing of certain agricultural produce. So far as the second mode, namely, publication in the language of the concerned area in a newspaper circulating in such area, is concerned, the fact established on the evidence is that the said notification under Section 3 was not at any time published in any vernacular newspaper circulating in the concerned areas, but what had happened was that the gist of the said notifications was published in the 9th March, 1968, issue of a Marathi newspaper 'Satyavadi'. Since, however, the word 'may' is used in Section 3 with reference to this particular mode of publication, prima facie it would be that this requirement is directory. In Yadaorao v. Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Arvi, 1974 Mah LJ 338 : (AIR 1974 Bom 181) a Division Bench of this High Court has held that the publication of a notification under S. 3 of the said Act in the newspaper is not obligatory and the failure of the State Government or of the Director to publish the notification in the newspaper does not vitiate the notification in any way. This judgment is binding upon me, and, therefore, the fact that only the gist of the said notification was published in a local vernacular newspaper cannot in any manner affect its validity. So far as the third mode of publication is concerned, the publication is to be in such manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring to the notice of the persons in the concerned area its intention to regulate the marketing of certain agricultural produce. This part of the section confers power upon the Government to select particular modes in order to meet different situations and local conditions. The State Government has, however, instead of leaving it to the discretion of its executive officers to select such mode as appears to them to be the best in the circumstances of a particular case in which such publication is to be made, itself prescribed the mode. The prescription of this mode is to be found in Rule 3 of the said Rules which has been set out earlier. Under Rule 3 in addition to publication in the newspaper required by Section 3 the notification is also to be published (1) by affixing copies thereof at the chavdi of each village included in the concerned area, (2) by exhibiting copies of the notification on the notice-board in the office of the Mamlatdar, Tahsildar, Mahalkari or Naib-Tehsildar and of the Panchayat Samiti within whose jurisdiction such area is situated, and (3) by requiring a revenue officer specified in that behalf to give wide publicity to the notification by beat of drums in the concerned area. It is the contention of the Appellants that the modes of publication prescribed by the said Rule 3 are mandatory and that in the present case the requirements of Rule 3 have not been complied with. Mr. Naik, learned Counsel for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, submitted that just as in the case of publication in the newspapers, publication in the manner required by the said R. 3 was directory and not mandatory, and if one of the three modes prescribed by the said Rule 3 had not been complied with or not complied with fully, it did not in any manner affect the validity of the notification. Mr. Abhyankar, learned Counsel for Respondents Nos. 3 to 5, conceded that the requirements of the modes of publication as found in the said Rule 3 are mandatory and not directory, but in his submission Illus. (e) to Section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, applied to the case and the Court must, therefore, presume that the publication of the notification being an official act, such act had been regularly performed.

6. Before examining the legal aspects of these contentions it will be convenient to set out the facts which have been established on the record.

Neither the Appellants nor the Respondents led any oral evidence, but both sides produced certain documents which were exhibited. Three out of these documents are relevant for the present purpose. They are :

(1) The copy of the said notification dated February 3, 1968 sent by the Director of Agricultural Marketing and Rural Finance, Maharashtra State, to the Chairman of the Agricultural Produce Market, Kolhapur (Exhibit 133);

(2) a letter in Marathi bearing Number 670 dated March 21, 1968 from the Secretary of the Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Kolhapur, to the Mamlatdar, Taluka Karveer in the District of Kolhapur, (Exhibit 95);

(3) a letter in Marathi dated March 26, 1968 from the Tahsildar, Bhudargad, to the Secretary of the Agricultural Produce Market Committee (Exhibit 96). Apart from the above three documents, there is no other evidence whatever with respect to the publication of the said notification under Sec. 3 in any of the modes prescribed by the said R. 3. The said copy of the notification shows that copies thereof were forwarded to the Manager, Yeraoda Prison Press Poona, for the purpose of publishing the said notification in the Maharashtra Government Gazette. They were also sent to the Chairman of the Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Kolhapur, the Divisional Joint Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Poona, the Regional Publicity Officer, Kolhapur, the Collector of Kolhapur, the Chief Executive Officer, Zilla Parishad, Kolhapur, the President, Municipal Council, Kolhapur, as also to the District Deputy Registrar, Co-operative Societies, Kolhapur, the District Agricultural Officer, Kolhapur, and the Co-operation and Industries Officer, Zilla Parishad, Kolhapur. At the end of this list of officials to whom the copies were to be sent appears an endorsement containing the request to give wide publicity to the said notification as required by Rr. 3 and 4 of the said Rules "by pasting the notification on the market yard as well as in the Village Panchayat office etc." I will take it that though the said endorsement in terms specifically requires that copy of the said notification is to be pasted on the market yard and in the village Panchayat office, the abbreviation 'etc.' refers to the other modes of publication provided for in the said Rule 3. What happened thereafter is shown only by the two letters referred to above. In the said letter dated March 21, 1968 the Secretary of the Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Kolhapur, intimated to the Mamlatdar of Taluka Karveer about the publication of the said notification in the Gazette. He further stated that objections and suggestions had been called for by the said notification and asked the Mamlatdar to affix the copy of the said notification annexed to his said letter on the notice board of his office and publish it. In the margin of the said letter is written in ink in marathi "and give wide publicity by beat of drums". These words do not appear in the body of the said letter, and the trial Court held that they were subsequently interpolated. The lower Appellate Court, however, did not accept this finding, but held that they were contained in the original letter when dispatched. I shall, therefore, proceed upon the basis of this finding of the lower Appellate Court. This letter, however, does not show that a similar request was made by the Secretary of the Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Kolhapur, to any Mamlatdar other than the Mamlatdar of Taluka Karveer. nor does it show that any such similar request was made to any Tahsildar, Mahalkari or Naib-Tehsildar or to any official of any Panchayat Samiti. The letter Dt. March 26, 1968 from the Tahsildar of Bhudargad is, however, a reply to the said letter dated March 21, 1968. It may show that a similar letter had been addressed by the Secretary of the said Committee to the other Mamlatdars and Tahsildars. What is significant about the said letter dt. March 21, 1968 are its contents. The said reply states that the notification sent to the said Tahsildar had been published by affixing it on the notice board. There is no mention whatever about the said notification having been published anywhere by beat of drums. From this it would follow that though in the letter to the Mamlatdar of Taluka Karveer the direction to give publicity to the said notification by beat of drums was mentioned in the margin thereof, no such direction was contained in the letter to the Tahsildar of Bhudargad, and in the absence of any other evidence to show that any such request was made to any other official, it is not possible to assume that such a request had been contained in all the letters written by the Secretary of the said Committee in this behalf. On the contrary, the said reply of the Tahsildar of Bhudargad is a clear indication to the contrary. What is strange is that nowhere on the record is there any compliance report showing that the publication in the modes required by the said R. 3 had been effected.

7. Mr. Abhyankar, learned Counsel for respondents Nos. 3 to 5, however, submitted that even though there may be no evidence with respect to such publication, the Court should proceed to apply the presumption laid down in Illus. (e) to S. 114 of the I. E. Act, 1872, and draw a presumption that the said notification had been regularly published as required by the said S. 3 and the said R 3. It is not possible to accept this submission for two reasons; (1) Illus (e) to S. 114 cannot and does not apply where the point at issue is not whether an official act was properly performed, but the point at issue is whether such an act was in fact performed, and (2) where evidence has been led on behalf of the Government or the concerned authority to prove that a particular official act had been regularly performed and that evidence clearly shows that such performance had not taken place. In either of these cases, there is no place or scope for drawing any presumption u/s. 114.

8. Section 114 of the I. E. Act provides as follows:

"114. The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case."

Then follow certain Illustrations as to the cases in which the Court may draw such a presumption. Illus. (e) being that the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed. The first point to notice about S. 114 is that it uses the words "may presume" in contradistinction to the words "shall presume". Under S. 4 of the I. E. Act whenever it is provided by that Act that the Court may presume a fact, it may either regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or may call for proof of it, and whenever it is directed by that Act that the Court shall presume a fact, it shall regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved. Therefore, it is open to a Court either to draw or not to draw a presumption u/s. 114. Normally, the Courts would draw such a presumption when the actual performance of the act is not in dispute in order not to waste public time on the leading of formal proof with respect to the regularity of its performance, but the position is entirely different where the very issue which the Court has to decide is as to the performance of that official act itself. In Emperor v. Leslie Gwilt, (1945) 47 Bom LR 431: (AIR 1945 Bom 368), a Division Bench of this Court held that the meaning of Illus. (e) to S. 114 is that if an official act is proved to have been done, it would be presumed to have been regularly done, but this Illustration does not raise a presumption that an act was done of which there is no evidence and the proof of which is essential to the case. In this context the observations of the Supreme Court in Gopal Krishna Kelkar v. Mohamed Haji Latif, (1969) 71 Bom LR 48: (AIR 1968 SC 1413), are pertinent. The Court observed (at p. 51): (at pp. 1415, 1416).

"Even if the burden of proof does not lie on a party the Court may draw an adverse inference; if he withholds important documents in his possession which can throw light on the facts at issue, it is not, in our opinion, a sound practice for those desiring to rely upon a certain state of facts to withhold from the Court the best evidence which is in their possession which could throw light upon the issues in controversy and to rely upon the abstract doctrine of onus of proof."

It is strange that those desiring to prove that the said notification had been properly published should not have cared to produce any evidence other than the said two letters referred to above. Either no other documentary evidence at all existed, or if it existed and was not produced, the Court would be entitled to presume that such evidence if produced would have been unfavourable to the person withholding it. This is a presumption which the Court could have legitimately drawn u/s. 114 of the I. E. Act read with Illus. (g) thereto.

9. Further, it must be borne in mind that by the very terms of the section a presumption u/s. 114 is to be drawn in relation to the facts of a particular case. Here the facts which constituted the evidence of the respondents were on record, and the question of drawing any such presumption in relation thereto could not have arisen. I therefore, hold that the lower Appellate Court was in error in drawing a presumption u/s. 114 and in holding that the said notification had been duly published as required by the relevant statutory provisions.

10. The question which now arises is whether by reason of the non-compliance of the statutory provisions the said notification is rendered invalid. The answer to this question depends upon whether the provisions of the last part of S. 3 of the said Act and of the said R. 3 are directory or mandatory. With respect to the other modes of publication, which in the opinion of the State Government are best calculated to bring to the notice of the concerned persons in the area the intention to regulate the marketing of any agricultural produce, the word used in S. 3 (1) is 'shall'. Prima facie, the word 'shall' makes a particular requirement mandatory and not directory. There are authorities which have laid down with reference to other statutory provisions and on the interpretation thereof the word 'shall' should be construed as 'may' and vice versa. It was the contention of Mr. Naik on behalf of the State Government and the Director of Agriculture, Forest and Rural Finance, Government of Maharashtra, that the provisions in question are directory and not mandatory. In State of Uttar Pradesh v. Babu Ram Upadhyaya, AIR 1961 SC 751, the Supreme Court has held that when a statute uses the word 'shall', prima facie it is mandatory, but the court may ascertain the real intention of the legislature by carefully attending to the whole scope of the statute and that for ascertaining the real intention of the legislature the court may consider inter alia the nature and the design of the statute, and the consequences which would flow from construing it one way or the other, the impact of other provisions whereby the necessity of complying with the provisions in question is avoided, the circumstance that the statute provides for a contingency of the non-compliance with the provisions, the fact that the non-compliance with the provision is or is not visited by some penalty, the serious or trivial consequences that flow therefrom, and, above all, whether the object of the legislation will be defeated or furthered.

11. Bearing these observations in mind, let us see the intention underlying the various modes of publication prescribed by the said S. 3 (1) and the said R. 3. The provision with respect to the publication of a notification u/s. 3 in a newspaper published in the local language and of its publication in such other manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring the intention in such other manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring the intention to regulate the marketing of an agricultural produce to the notice of the concerned person in the area is contained in one single section. While the word used with respect to the requirement of publication in a local newspaper is 'may', with respect to the other mode of publication it is 'shall'. This notification is issued so as to enable those who may be affected by the declaration of intention were it implemented to submit their objections thereto for the consideration of the prescribed authority. It is also there for those desiring to make suggestions, some of which may be worthwhile, for the prescribed authority to take the suggestions into consideration before issuing a final notification u/s. 4. The said Act is a regulatory statute. It affects the right to carry on trade and business of several persons. It also affects agriculturists. It is, therefore, necessary that the Government's intention to issue a notification u/s. 4 of the said Act should be brought to the notice of all persons concerned, not only the wholesale dealers in the particular agricultural produce but also all agriculturists. Generally, agriculturists are not literate, and even if they can read, they usually do not subscribe to newspapers. They, however, often have occasion to visit the offices of Mamlatdars, Tahsildars, Mahalkaris, Naib-Tahsildars and Panchayat Samitis, and when they do so, when any notice is put on the notice-board there, either they or someone of them who may be able to read it may come to know about it and inform the others. For people of this class the best mode of publication would be by oral proclamation by beat of drums. Bearing all these factors in mind, though S. 3 left it to the discretion of the State Government to publish a notification u/s. 3 in such manner as in its opinion was best calculated to bring it to the notice of concerned persons, the State Government, instead of leaving such mode of publication to the individual opinion of different officers, thought it fit to prescribe how such publication should be done, and this it did by making R. 3 of the said Rules. That rule itself also uses the word 'shall'. It uses the word 'shall' because by the terms of S. 3 (1) of the said Act with respect to the third mode of publication the word 'shall' is used. In this connection, I may usefully advert again to the decision of this High Court in Yadaorao v. Agricultural Produce Market Committee, Arvi, 1974 Mah LJ 338: (AIR 1974 Bom 181). In that case the Court observed (at p. 348): (at Pp. 187, 188):

"The object of the provisions regarding the publication in Ss. 3 and 5 of the Act is that the notifications under Ss. 3 and 4 must come to the notice of the persons who are going to be affected thereby in the area in which the notifications were to be operative. But it must be noted that in both Ss. 3 and 4 when publication in any newspaper in the area is contemplated, the Legislature has advisedly used the words 'may also be published in the language of the area in any newspaper circulated therein'. In the same provisions while the word 'may' is used while referring to the publication in a newspaper, the Legislature while providing for additional publication in such other manner as in the opinion of the State Government is best calculated to bring to the notice of the persons in the area, has used the word 'shall'."

A little later the Court observed (at p. 349): (at p. 188):

"It is well known that normally a large part of the agricultural population, which is illiterate, does not subscribe or read newspapers. The newspapers cater to a negligible section of the community who are only literate and if the purpose of publication is to bring to the notice of the persons affected by the notifications, then that would be best served by adopting the method of publication by which a large section of the village community can be reached. That is why it appears that it has been made obligatory on the State Government to find out for itself the best manner of publication possible and that is also why the provisions of R. 3 have been made requiring the State Government to have the copies of the notification affixed on the notice boards in the offices of the authorities specified under R. 3, which are many a time visited by the agriculturists. Beat of drums is a known method of publication and that has always been found to carry the matters to be publicised to the villagers positively."

12. The object underlying this provision would clearly show that what was intended by the Legislature in requiring the State Government to publish a notification in the manner best calculated to bring to the notice of the persons in the area the Government's intention was to make it a mandatory requirement and that it was in order not to leave the compliance of such mandatory requirement to the individual notions of different officers that the State Government made the said R. 3, making the modes of publication specified therein to be mandatory and obligatory. As pointed out earlier, the very same provision with respect to one mode of publication, namely, publication in a newspaper, uses the word 'may', while with respect to the additional mode of publication by the State Government it uses the word 'shall'. In Labour Commr., Madhya Pradesh v. Burhanpur Tapti Mills Ltd. AIR 1964 SC 1687, where a provision of the C. P. and Berar Industrial Disputes Settlement Act, 1947, which contained in one place the word 'may' and in another place the word 'shall', fell for consideration of the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court held (at p. 1689 (1)):

"The use of the word 'shall' in connection with the action to be taken on a reference by the State Government and 'may' in connection with the action on an application by others in the same section compel the conclusion that on an application by anybody other than the State Government, the State Industrial Court or a District Industrial Court may also refuse to take action."

In substance what the Supreme Court held was that when in the same provision the words 'shall' and 'may' occur, they have different meanings; the word 'shall' is to be construed as being mandatory while the word 'may' is to be construed as being directory. To hold that these provisions are directory would be fraught with grave danger, for it would leave it open to executive officers by not complying with any one of them to flout and set at naught the will of the Legislature and the mandatory requirements imposed upon them by the State Government. The provisions contain procedural safeguards, and procedural safeguards are as important as substantive safeguards. In this connection, it is worthwhile to bear in mind the following observations of Danckwerts, L. J., in the English Court of Appeals in the case of Bradbury v. Enfield London Borough Council, (1967) 1 WLR 1311 at p. 1325 (C. A.):

".....in cases of this kind, it is imperative that the procedure laid down in the relevant statutes should be properly observed. The provisions of the statutes in this respect are supposed to provide safeguards for Her Majesty's subjects. Public bodies and Ministers must be compelled to observe the law; and it is essential that bureaucracy should be kept in its place."

I, therefore, hold that the provisions in question of S. 3 and of the said R. 3 are mandatory and not directory and that they not having been complied with, the said notification u/s. 3 was inoperative and invalid. As the said notification u/s. 3 is invalid and inoperative, the condition precedent for the issuing of a notification u/s. 4 was not fulfilled, and, therefore, the said notification dt. May 16, 1968 u/s. 4 was also invalid and inoperative. In The Municipal Corporation of Bhopal v. Misbabul Hasan, AIR 1972 SC 892, 893, 895 (2), where the question was whether an amendment to a rule had been duly made, the Supreme Court held that where a condition precedent for the amendment of the rule had not been followed or complied with, the amendment was inoperative and invalid.

13. Only one point now remains to be dealt with. That is a contention raised by Mr. Abhyankar that the question as to whether the said notifications were duly published or not is barred by res judicata by reason of an unreported decision of a Division Bench of this High Court in Special Civil Application No. 2363 of 1969 Bajomal Parchomal Gaijwanj v. State of Maharashtra — decided by Vaidya and Dudhia, JJ., on July 6, 1973. In that case the very same notifications were challenged by three firms doing business in onions in Laxmipuri Market at Kolhapur. This being an application under Art. 226 of the Const., the matter was decided on affidavits. Amongst the various grounds raised to challenge these notifications, one ground was that the notification u/s. 3 and, therefore, the notification u/s. 4 was also invalid. An affidavit in reply was filed to that petition by the Under Secretary to the Government, Agriculture and Co-operation Department, in which was set out in detail how the said notifications were published. The Court accepted the statements made in the affidavit of the Under Secretary and held that the notifications had been properly published. It is very difficult to understand how this judgment can ever operate as res judicata or what relevance it has to the question which I have to decide. The petitioners there were entirely different from the Appellants here. Those petitioners were not even members of the Kolhapur Grain Merchants Association on whose behalf the suit out of which this Second Appeal arises was filed. Secondly, as mentioned earlier, that was a petition under Art. 226 of the Const. which was decided on affidavit. Here, there was a suit which had to be decided on evidence and not by accepting implicitly statements made in the written statement of the Respondents. Thirdly, if the said Under Secretary had set out in the said affidavit the different modes in which the notifications were published, one wonders what prevented the State Government and the concerned authorities from leading that evidence before the trial Court. I, therefore, find no substance in this contention raised by Mr. Abhyakar.

14. For the reasons set out above, this Second Appeal must succeed, and I accordingly allow this Second Appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the trial Court. The Respondents will pay to the Appellants the cost throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Writ Petn. No. 39 of 1981, D/- 15-6-1981.

DZ/DZ/B634/82/HR/RSK

(A) Bombay Village Panchayats Act, 1958 (3 of 1959), S. 36. r/w. proviso — Disqualification of Sarpanch — Failure of Sarpanch to hold meetings for some months — He is liable to be disqualified. Decision in Spl. Civil Appln. Nos. 2274 of 1965 and 11 of 1966, D/- 13-6-66 (Bom), Rel. on. (Para 6)

(B) Bombay Village Panchayats Act, 1958 (3 of 1959), Sections 36 and 39 — Order of disqualification — Whether amounts to removal — Sarpanch not convening meetings for some months asked to show cause why he should not be disqualified — Finding by Collector that explanation given did not constitute sufficient cause for not convening meetings — Held, order of disqualification passed in pursuance of such finding did not amount to removal but merely to a declaration of disqualification.

The disqualification from continuing as a Sarpanch for not convening the meeting of the panchayat as per the rules without a sufficient cause is automatic. The matter as to whether the disqualification has been incurred, if in doubt or dispute or whether there was sufficient cause for failure to convene the meeting without sufficient cause, then such a question has to be decided or adjudged by the Collector. This declaration cannot be equated with the removal of Sarpanch under Section 39 of the Act. The order passed by the Collector merely amounts to a declaration of disqualification. Section 39 of the Act deals with the removal of any member or Sarpanch or Upa-Sarpanch of the Panchyat. This removal is contemplated for the misconduct in the discharge of his duties or disgraceful conduct or incapacity to perform his duty, etc. The area and field covered by Section 39 is distinct and different from the one covered by Section 36. Disqualification is laid down by Section 36 itself. Once the facts constituting disqualification are proved and sufficient cause is not shown, then the disqualification to continue as Sarpanch comes into operation. The section does not contemplate any further order of removal as is contemplated by S. 39. (Para 7)

(C) Bombay Village Panchayats Act, 1958 (3 of 1959), Section 36 — Bombay Village Panchayats (Meeting) Rules (1959). Rr. 3, 13, 15, 23, 29, 39, 40. — Failure to hold meeting — Sufficient cause for — Circulating memos issued by Sarpanch do not constitute sufficient cause for failure to convene meeting.

Village Panchayat is a body corporate having a perpetual succession etc. Now, any act of an individual separately or independently done, is not an act of a body corporate. A body corporate is not a human being and therefore can act through resolutions only. These resolutions can be adopted in a duly convened meeting. Section 36 read with rules enjoins a duty upon the Sarpanch or Upa-Sarpanch to convene the meeting as per the rules prescribed. The proviso makes this position further clear because it provides for a penalty for not convening meeting as per rules. The proviso therefore makes it very clear that the substantive part of the section is mandatory. If Rr. 3, 13, 15, 23, 29, 39 and 40 of the Rules are read together and harmoniously, it is quite clear that decision by circulation is wholly ruled out and is not contemplated. To say the least such a method is prohibited by necessary implication. In substance it will amount to negation of the object of S. 36 itself as well as rules framed thereunder. In these circumstances a thing which is prohibited by the statute itself cannot be pleaded as sufficient cause for failure to convene the meeting. A thing or act, which is either prohibited or not provided for or is inconsistent with the method prescribed, cannot be done even indirectly. The Legislature in its wisdom has used the word "Meeting" in Section 36 of the Act. In the very nature of things meeting contemplates coming together of more than one person for certain purposes. It is a meeting of minds. The object of meeting is to take collective decision which is to be expressed in the form of resolution. This active participation of the members of the panchayat is not possible by following circulation method. AIR 1978 Bom 28, Rel. on. (Paras 8, 9)

Held, the Collector was right in declaring that the circulating memos issued by the petitioner could not be accepted as sufficient cause for his failure to convene the meetings of the panchayat. The Collector had considered the cause shown by the petitioner and had also come to the conclusion that the circulating memos were issued by the Sarpanch for very trifling and non-urgent matter which could not be treated as substitute for the meeting.

C. A. Phadkar, for Petitioner; C. J. Sawant with N. D. Bhatkar, for Respondents.

DHARMADHIKARI, J.:— The petitioner who is a Sarpanch of village Panchayat of Bodwad, has challenged in this writ petition the order passed by the Collector, Jalgaon Dt, 31st December, 1980 holding that the Petitioner stands disqualified as a Sarpanch under Section 36 of the Bombay Village Panchayats Act, 1958.

2. It appears from record that the Block Development Officer, Panchayat Samiti, Bhusawal submitted a report to the Collector on 17th September, 1980, bringing to his notice that the monthly meetings of the panchayat for the months April 1979, May 1979, July 1979, October 1979, Dec. 1979, Feb. 1980, Mar. 1980, April 1980, June and July 1980 were not convened by the Petitioner-Sarpanch and, therefore he is disqualified under Section 36 of the Bombay Village Panchayats Act from continuing as a Sarpanch of the Village Panchayat. After getting this report from the Block Development Officer, a show cause notice was served on the petitioner by the Collector on 17th October 1980. The Petitioner submitted his reply on 3rd November 1980, showing the cause as to why he should not be disqualified. According to the Petitioner the circulating memos were issued during these months and as these circulating memos served the purpose of the meetings, it was not necessary to convene the meetings of the village panchayat. The Collector however, came to the conclusion that this is not a sufficient cause for failure to convene the meetings as contemplated by Section 36 read with rules framed thereunder and, therefore, ultimately declared that the Petitioner is disqualified to continue as a Sarpanch.

3. It was neither disputed in the written reply submitted by the petitioner nor it is disputed in this petition, that in the months referred to hereinbefore the meetings of the panchayat were not convened by him.

4. Shri Phadkar the learned Counsel appearing for the petitioner contended before us that under Section 36 read with the proviso, failure to call meetings in a financial year only can result in disqualification and an omission of not calling meetings for some months will not amount to failure to convene meetings of the panchayat in a financial year. According to Shri Phadkar in the present case the petitioner had not called meetings for about 10 months which period is spread over in two financial years and therefore it cannot be said that no meeting was called in a financial year as contemplated by the proviso to Section 36 of the Act, and therefore, the order passed by the Collector is wholly illegal.

5. It is not possible for us to accept this contention. It is not necessary to deal with this aspect of the matter in detail in view of the Division Bench decision of this Court in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 2274 of 1965 with Spl. Civil Appln. No. 11 of 1966 decided on 13th June 1966. The Division Bench of this Court consisting of K. K. Desai and Chandrachud, JJ. after making a detailed reference to S. 36 as well as rules framed thereunder has held as under :

"Now, it is clear on a reading of Rule 3 that it casts compulsory obligation in connection with holding of at least one meeting of the panchayat in every month. This provision indicates and appears to have been made because the due administration of the affairs of a village panchayat needs that it should be duly looked after and attended to by meeting of the Panchayat once in every month. The meeting of the panchayat under the above rule could be convened only by "the Sarpanch". The obligation under the rule could, therefore, be carried out and completed only by the action of convening the meeting of the panchayat that must be taken by "the Sarpanch" and in his absence by "the Upa-Sarpanch". The phrase "according to the rules prescribed in that behalf", as contained in the proviso to Section 36 has clear reference to the obligation created for holding one meeting of the panchayat every month as contained in Rule 3. In our view, it is the intent of the proviso that breach of that obligation and/or the failure to act according to the rules prescribed in connection with holding of the meeting of the panchayat should disqualify the Sarpanch from continuing in office. That is the result of the following phrase in the proviso:—

"Fails without sufficient cause, to convene the meetings of the panchayat according to the rules prescribed in that behalf." We are, in this connection, unable to accept the submission made by Mr. Rane that emphasis is on the phrase in any financial year "as contained in the proviso. We are unable to accept the contention of Mr. Rane that the phrase "the meetings", as contained in the proviso was intended to mean that the failure should be in connection with more than one meeting. In our view, the plural in the phrase "the meetings" was intended to include and to mean singular also. In our view, therefore failure to convene even a single meeting in breach of the rules prescribed would attract the penalty as contained in the proviso. The above interpretation is in consonance with the intent and purpose of Rule 3 and also the amended provisions of Section 36. We are, therefore, unable to accept the submission made as above by Mr. Rane on behalf of the petitioner."

6. In view of this decision of the Division Bench holding that even failure to convene a single meeting in breach of the Rules prescribed would attract the penalty as contained in the proviso to Section 36 of the Act, the submission made by Shri Phadkar cannot be accepted.

7. It was then contended by Shri Phadkar that the order passed by the Collector in effect amounts to removal of the Sarpanch and, therefore, is without jurisdiction because the power to remove a Sarpanch is conferred upon the Standing Committee under Sec. 39 of the Act and the Collector by taking action under Section 36 cannot exercise the said jurisdiction. It is not possible for us to accept this contention also. Section 36 of the Bombay Village Panchayat Act reads as under:

Provided that, if the Sarpanch, or in his absence the Upa-Sarpanch, fails without sufficient cause, to convene the meetings of the panchayat in any financial year according to the rules prescribed in that behalf, he shall be disqualified for continuing as Sarpanch or, as the case may be, Upa-Sarpanch or for being chosen as such for the remainder of the term of office of the members of the panchayat. The decision of the Collector on the question whether or not there was sufficient cause shall be final."

From the bare reading of this section it is quite clear that the disqualification from continuing as a Sarpanch for not convening the meeting of the panchayat as per the rules without a sufficient cause is automatic. The matter as to whether the disqualification has been incurred, if in doubt or dispute or whether there was sufficient cause for failure to convene the meeting without sufficient cause, then such a question has to be decided or adjudged by the Collector. This declaration cannot be equated with the removal of Sarpanch under Section 39 of the Act. The order passed by the Collector merely amounts to a declaration of disqualification. Section 39 of the Act deals with the removal of any member or Sarpanch or Upa-Sarpanch of the Panchayat. This removal is contemplated for the misconduct in the discharge of his duties or disgraceful conduct or incapacity to perform his duty etc. The area and field covered by Section 39 is distinct and different from the one covered by Section 36. Disqualification is laid down by Section 36 itself. Once the facts constituting disqualification are proved and sufficient cause is not shown, then the disqualification to continue as Sarpanch comes into operation. The section does not contemplate any further order of removal as is contemplated by Section 39 of the Bombay Village Panchayats Act. Therefore, it is not possible for us to accept this contention of Shri Phadkar.

8. It was then contended by Shri Phadkar that the Collector was in error in not considering the cause shown and in coming to the conclusion that the petitioner had failed to convene the meeting of the panchayat without any sufficient cause. According to Shri Phadkar the business which is to be transacted by the Village Panchayat being obviously trifling one, what could be done in a meeting by circulation, then it cannot be said that there was failure to convene the meeting. According to Shri Phadkar in any case this could be treated as sufficient cause for not convening the meetings. It is not possible for us to accept this interpretation of Shri Phadkar for the obvious reasons. Section 36 read with rules enjoins a duty upon the Sarpanch or Upa-Sarpanch to convene the meeting as per the rules prescribed. The proviso makes this position further clear because it provides for a penalty for not convening meeting as per rules. The proviso therefore makes it very clear that the substantive part of the section is mandatory one. The rules framed under Bombay Village Panchayat Rules known as Bombay Village Panchayat (Meeting) Rules, 1959, prescribe that the panchayat shall meet at least once in every month on such day as may be fixed by the Sarpanch or in his absence by the Upa-Sarpanch. The Rule 3 which is mandatory in form, thereafter lays down that at least one meeting in every month should be convened. The rules also lay down as to how the business will be treated at the meeting. Rule 13 then lays down that no resolution of the panchayat shall be modified or cancelled within 3 months of the passing thereof unless certain conditions are fulfilled. According to Rule 15 every meeting is open to the public unless the person presiding decides that any enquiry or deliberations of the panchayat should be held in camera. Rule 23 then provides for as to how the motion will be considered. As per R. 29 when the votes are on voting paper which shall be not be signed by him etc. Then according to Rule 39 no motion shall be discussed or noted in the minute book unless and until it has been properly proposed and seconded. According to R. 40 the proceeding of each meeting of the panchayat is to be recorded in a bound book and a copy of the proceeding is to be submitted to the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti and to the Chairman of the Standing Committee within 7 days of the meeting. If all these rules are read together and harmoniously it is quite clear that decision by circulation is wholly ruled out and is not contemplated. To say the least such a method is prohibited by necessary implication. In substance it will amount to negation of the object of Section 36 itself as well as rules framed thereunder. In these circumstances a thing which is prohibited by the statute itself cannot be pleaded as sufficient cause for failure to convene the meeting. The Collector has considered the cause shown by the petitioner and has also come to the conclusion that the circulating memos were issued by the Sarpanch for very trifling and non-urgent matter which cannot be treated as substitute for the meeting. In our opinion of finding recorded by the Collector is correct and calls for no interference, in this writ jurisdiction.

9. It cannot be forgotten that decentralization of power is one of the basic concepts of democracy. As a part of this scheme, village administration for the purpose of local self Government is entrusted to village panchayat. Village Panchayat is a body corporate having a perpetual succession etc. The enactment also provides for holding a meeting of 'Gram Sabha' which consists of entire adult population of the village. A body corporate is not a human being and therefore can act through resolutions only. These resolutions can be adopted in a duly convened meeting. Any act of an individual separately or independently done, is not an act of a body corporate. A thing or act, which is either prohibited or not provided for or is inconsistent with the method prescribed, cannot be done even indirectly. The Legislature in its wisdom has used the word "Meeting" in Section 36 of the Act. In the very nature of things meeting contemplates coming together of more than one person for certain purposes. It is a meeting of minds. (See 1977 Mah LJ 689 : (AIR 1978 Bom 28), Awadhoot v. State). The object of meeting is to take collective decision which is to be expressed in the form of resolution. This active participation of the members of the panchayat is not possible by following circulation method and, therefore in our opinion the Collector was right in coming to the conclusion that the circulating memos issued by the petitioner cannot be accepted as sufficient cause for his failure to convene the meetings of the panchayat.

10. A grievance was also made by Shri Phadkar that a copy of the report submitted by the Block Development Officer was not submitted to the petitioner before calling upon him to submit his explanation or showing cause for his failure to convene meeting. Such a request was not made by the petitioner before submitting his written reply. The petitioner very well knew as to on what point his explanation was called for and in fact the petitioner has submitted his written reply on 3rd November, 1980 in reply to the show cause notice. Further the fact that the meetings of the village panchayat were not held is practically admitted. In these circumstances it cannot be said that any prejudice has been caused to the petitioner because of the non-supply of the copy of report submitted by the Block Development Officer.

In this view of the matter there is no substance in this writ petition. The petition fails and is dismissed. Rule is discharged. However, in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

Petitioners v. The Spl. Land Acquisition Officer and another, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 2407, 2431, 2432,

(A) Maharashtra Re-settlement of Project Displaced Persons Act
(41 of 1976), Sections 13-15 and Section 16 (2) — Compliance with requirements of Sections 13-15 is condition precedent for exercising powers conferred under S. 16 (2).

The compliance with requirements of Sections 13 to 15 is simply indispensable and is condition precedent for invoking the acquisition powers under the L. A. Act contemplated to be exercised under Section 16 (2) for the Act once the Project together with affected or benefited villages are notified under Section 11 of the Act. The words "any land required for carrying out the purposes of the Act" in Section 16 (1) or words to that effect in Section 16 (2) obviously refer to the land in respect of which assessment, as to the requirements of displaced persons and availability of land for the grants is made under Section 13, and specification whereof is made under Section 10 read with Section 13 (3) or Section 15. The extent of the area affected and benefited is notified under Section 15. This is further made clear under sub-secs. (3) and (4) of Section 16 indicating the sources of the land in respect of which acquisition powers under sub-sec. (2) of S. 16 are intended to be exercised. Thus, the land to be acquired under sub-sec. (2) of Section 16 cannot be ascertained till the steps contemplated under Sections 13 to 15 for its identification are taken.

Any acquisition, without first complying with Sections 13 to 15 would be incompetent and bad in law. (Paras 5, 6)

It was contended that non-compliance with Sections 13 to 15 might prevent acquisition of land under the Act contemplated under sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 16 but not the acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act of 1894, the powers in respect to which were expressly preserved under sub-sec. (2) of Section 16, enabling the Government to acquire the required land by recourse to L. A. Act "also". The word "also" in sub-section (2) as also in sub-sec. (3) was relied on in support of the contention that such acquisition under the L. A. Act was independent of the acquisition powers provided under sub-sections (3) and (4) of Sec. 16 of the Act.
A close examination of the different clauses of Sec. 16, however, would expose the fallacy and untenability of the contention. To begin with acquisition of land is an integral part of the resettlement scheme of the Act and all the provisions of the Act would apply to such acquisitions as soon as any project is notified under Section 11 of the Act. Section 16 providing for such acquisition power, contemplates acquisition of the required land for this purpose either by negotiation or by recourse to statutory compulsion under the L. A. Act. The question of acquisition of any land cannot arise unless preliminary processes as to assessment of land required and available, affected and benefited, by the project as contemplated under Secs. 13 to 15 of the Act are finalised. Reference to L. A. Act in sub-section (2) of Section 16 is intended to adopt the mechanism of acquisition evolved thereunder. Recourse thereto for this compulsory acquisition by itself does not make the acquisition otherwise than under the Act and cannot relieve the authorities of their obligation to comply with Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. Secondly, it is fallacious to assume that S. 16 contemplates two different modes of compulsory acquisitions i. e. one under the instant Act and the other under the L. A. Act. Sub-section (2) of Section 16 merely adopts the L. A. Act for the requirement of the land under the instant Act. Creating fiction of the purposes of the Act being a public purpose is intended to remove any possible doubts as to the validity of the contemplated acquisitions. Sub-sections (3) and (4) merely indicate the source from which the lands required are to be acquired by recourse to the provisions of the L. A. Act under S. 16 (2) of the Act. The wording of clause (c) of Section 13 (3) of the Act fortifies this view and demonstrates the fallacy of the contention. The extent of land liable to be acquired and covered by sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 16 has to be first ascertained and area thereof identified. This can be done only on preliminary assessment and enquiry under Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. Any assumption that sub-sec. (2) is independent or unconnected with sub-secs. (2) and (4) would prevent application of L. A. Act to the acquisition of lands covered by sub-secs. (3) and (4) of Section 16. The Act does not provide for any other mechanism of acquisition, and the fiction of acquisition being for public purpose would also be inapplicable in that case. This apart, Section 16 cannot be so interpreted as to permit option of acquiring land under the instant Act or under the L. A. Act without exposing it to the attack of being violative of Article 14 of the Constitution as it would be difficult to find out in that case, any criteria with Section to determine, when and why the one should be invoked and not the other.

(Paras 7, 8, 9, 10, 11)

The reliance on the word "also" in S. 16 (2) is equally misconceived. The word is intended to highlight the availability of one more mode of securing the required land under the Act in addition to its acquisition by negotiations provided for in sub-sec. (1) and not to emphasise any power of acquisition unconnected with Sections 13 to 15. Section 16 (2) contemplates recourse to the L. A. Act for the acquisition of the land "required" for the purposes of the Act. Such "requirement" can be ascertained only by the process as provided under Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. Sub-sections (3) and (4) only reflect the crystallisation of this process and it is for the land so required that mechanism of the L. A. Act is intended to be adopted under S. 16 (2) of the Act. The word "also" in sub-sec. (3) does not have any significance excepting to emphasise that even land 'affected' is liable to be acquired for if needed for 'gaathan' though the Act contemplates resettlement on benefited and other zones.

(Para 13)

Thus once the project is notified under S. 11, the acquisition of the land from the benefited zone and other sources is liable to be governed by the provisions of the Act, and the powers under sub-sec. (2) of Section 16 and the mechanism of the L. A. Act cannot be invoked unless first the assessment and ascertainment as contemplated under Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act is finalised. Such acquisition is subject to the limitation indicated in sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 16 of the Act and Schedule thereto.

(Para 15)

(B) Maharashtra Re-settlement of Project Displaced Persons Act (41 of 1976), S. 13 (3), cls. (c) and (d) — Scope of Cl. (d) — It covers only lands acquired by negotiation and the 'Gaathan' land covered by S. 16 (3) — In view of specific cl. (c), land referred therein shall be deemed to be excluded from cl. (d), although cl. (d) is wide enough to cover such land.

(Para 12)

B. P. Abhale, V. A. Thorat, J. R. Lalit and Ulhas G Kerkar, for Petitioners; M. F. Saldhana, Asst. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

DESHPANDE, Ag. C. J. :— These seven petitions raise a common question of law and can, therefore, be disposed of by this common judgment. The lands in dispute, notified for acquisition u/ss. 4 and 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (hereinafter referred to as the L. A. Act), are all situate in village Dhandarphal (BK), Taluka Sangamner, District Ahmednagar. The petitioners in these seven petitions are the owners of those different lands. It is not in dispute that these lands are sought to be acquired for the purpose of rehabilitating the displaced persons, affected by the Upper Pravara Project in Ahmednagar District. The Government of Maharashtra has issued a Notification dt. 16th May 1978 u/s. 11 (1) of the Maharashtra Re-settlement of Project Displaced Persons Act, 1976 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Act'). The provisions of the Act are made applicable to the said Upper Pravara Project. The Notification also specifies the villages likely to fall in the affected or benefited zones of the said Project, as required under the said S. 11 (1). Dhandarphal (BK) village is one of the villages notified as being a village in the benefited zones. Ss. 4 and 6 Notifications under L. A. Act have been issued thereafter in all these cases. Before S. 6 Notification was issued, objections in writing were raised by all the petitioners asserting that proper enquiry under the Act was not made. Subsequently, even notifications and notices under sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 9 of the L. A. Act have been issued and the urgency clause was thereafter applied, and the petitioners were called upon to deliver possession of the respective lands u/s. 17 (1) of the L. A. Act. The validity of the said notifications, notices and the acquisition proceedings is challenged in all these petitions.

2. Mr. Abhale, Mr. Thorat, Mr. Lalit and Mr. Kerkar, the learned Advocates appearing for the petitioners raised several points in support of these petitions. It, however, appears to us to be enough to take notice of only one point as to the non-compliance with Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. This point goes to the root of the matter and the present proceedings are liable to be quashed on that count itself.

3. It is necessary to examine the scheme of the Act to deal with this contention. The Act is a special piece of legislation providing for resettlement of "certain" persons displaced from lands required for any projects of public utility. Apart from providing for cash grants, S. 10 of the Act contemplates resettling as many displaced persons as possible on the land (1) in the benefited zone, or 2 (a) in other villages, or 2 (b) in areas to be specified under the said section and some other lands forming part of the "land pool" as defined u/s. 2 (11). The "land pool" has to be worked out in accordance with Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act and secured by the modes indicated in S. 16. S. 13 (1) makes it clear that even the land of the 'Gaathan' affected by the project is liable to be acquired for such resettlement.

4. Which "certain" persons displaced by any such project should be resettled by recourse to the provisions of this Act is left to the decision of the Government. The Government has to notify such "project" u/s. 11 (1) of the Act and also expressly apply the provisions of the Act in relation to the said project. The Government has to specify in the said notification the villages and areas which are likely to be in the affected or benefited zones of the said project. The Act would obviously have no application to the acquisition of lands for resettlement of the persons displaced by any project not so notified. S. 12 prevents alienation of any land situated in the villages specified in the notification u/s. 11 without the prior permission of the Government. S. 13 requires the Resettlement Officer to take a survey and ascertain the extent of land from which persons would be displaced and the land available for grant to such displaced persons from the sources enumerated in Cls. (a) to (e) of Sec. 13 (3) and to draw a list of lands (1) that may be included in the benefited zone or villages or areas which may be specified under Section 10. Sections 14 and 15 further require such Resettlement Officer to make an estimate after giving reasonable opportunity to the persons affected of land required for the project and would be affected thereby and the area likely to be benefited and make first provisional and then final declaration in respect thereof. Then follows Sec. 16 indicating modes of acquisition of land required for the purposes of the Act. Section 17 then provides for the grant of land to the displaced persons. Area of land to be acquired and granted is subject to the limitations and restrictions indicated in Section 16 and 17 and Schedules 'A' & 'B', details of which are not relevant to the point under consideration excepting to emphasize that the Act furnishes a self-contained code in the matter of resettlement.

5. The Act contemplates acquisition of the required land either by negotiation under Section 16 (1) or by compulsory acquisition under Section 16 (2) thereof. The words "any land required for carrying out the purposes of the Act" in Section 16 (1) or words to that effect in Section 16 (2) obviously refer to the land in respect of which assessment, as to the requirements of displaced persons and availability of land for the grants is made under Section 13, and specification whereof is made under Section 10 read with Section 13 (3) or Section 15. The extent of the area affected and benefited is notified under Section 15. This is further made clear under sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 16 indicating the sources of the land in respect of which acquisition powers under sub-sec. (2) of S. 16 are intended to be exercised. Thus, the land to be acquired under sub-sec. (2) of S. 16 cannot be ascertained till the steps contemplated u/ss. 13 to 15 for its identification are taken. Any acquisition, such as in the present cases, without first complying with Ss. 13 to 15, cannot but be held to be incompetent and bad in law.

6. Mr. Saldhana, the learned Assistant Government Pleader appearing for the respondents could not draw our attention to any material indicating that assessment of the extent of the land required and available or extent of the area affected or benefited, was ever made as required u/Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. This point is specifically raised by the petitioners in their petitions and the hearing of the case, was adjourned earlier to enable him to produce material to that effect. The affidavits of the respondents in all these cases do not show, if and when such assessment as required u/s. 13 and provisional and final declaration as required under S. 14 or 15, were made. As seen earlier, this was obligatory. The acquisition officer cannot decide as to how much and which area of land is required for the purposes of the Act. It is impossible to identify the land covered by sub-secs.

(3) and (4) of S. 16 and liable to be acquired unless this is done. The compliance with the requirements of Ss. 13 to 15 is simply indispensable and is condition precedent for invoking the acquisition powers under the L. A. Act contemplated to be exercised u/s. 16 (2) of the Act once the Project together with affected or benefited villages are notified u/s. 11 of the Act. Any notifications u/s. 4 or S. 6 of the L. A. Act or further proceedings thereunder could not have been issued or taken without following the provisions of Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. These proceedings are, therefore, not legal and are liable to be quashed.

7. Mr. Saldhana, however, contends, that non-compliance with Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act may prevent acquisition of land under the Act contemplated under sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 16 but not the acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act of 1894, the powers in respect to which are expressly preserved under sub-sec. (2) of S. 16, enabling the Government to acquire the required land by recourse to L. A. Act "talso". Mr. Saldhana strongly relied on the word "also" in sub-sec. (2) as also in sub-sec. (3) in support of his contention that such acquisition under the L. A. Act is independent of the acquisition powers provided under sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 16 of the Act. This contention assumes as if acquisition of land contemplated under sub-sec. (2) of S. 16 is not under the Act but is under the L. A. Act and is different from and independent of the powers of acquisition under sub-secs. (3) and (4) of the Act and that the officer has an option to acquire the required land u/s. 16 (2) or Ss. 16 (3) and 16 (4) of the Act.

8. This makes it necessary to examine contents of S. 16. It is convenient to quote the same in extenso to test the validity of this contention.

"Sec. 16. (1) The State Government may enter into an agreement with any person for the purchase or exchange, of any land required for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Subject to the provisions of this section, the State Government may also for carrying out the purposes of this Act compulsorily acquire land under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and the acquisition of any land for the said purposes shall be deemed to be a public purpose within the meaning of that Act.

(3) The State Government may also acquire lands included in a gaathan in the affected zone as far as practicable according to the provisions of Part I of Schedule 'A' hereto.

(4) For the purpose of resettling displaced persons on land, the State Government may, subject to any rules made "in this behalf, acquire land from holdings in the benefited zone or from any village or area specified under Section 10 as far as practicable, according to the provisions of Part II of Schedule 'A' hereto.

(5) All lands acquired under this section shall form part of the land pool."

The section is not very happily worded. A superficial reading thereof may give some apparent plausibility to the contention of Mr. Saldhana. A close examination of the different clauses, however, would expose the fallacy and untenability thereof.

9. To begin with, acquisition of land is an integral part of the resettlement scheme of this Act and all the provisions of the Act would apply to such acquisitions as soon as any project is notified u/s, 11 of the Act. S. 16 providing for such acquisition power, contemplates acquisition of the required land for this purpose either by negotiation or by recourse to statutory compulsion under the L. A. Act. The question of acquisition of any land cannot arise unless preliminary processes as to assessment of land required and available, affected and benefited, by the project as contemplated u/Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act are finalised. Reference to L. A. Act in sub-sec. (2) of S. 16 is intended to adopt the mechanism of acquisition evolved thereunder. Recourse thereto for this compulsory acquisition by itself does not make the acquisition otherwise than under the Act and cannot relieve the authorities of their obligation to comply with Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act.

10. Secondly, it is fallacious to assume that S. 16 contemplates two different modes of compulsory acquisitions i.e., one under this Act and the other under the L. A. Act. Sub-sec. (2) of S. 16 merely adopts the L. A. Act for the requirement of the land under this Act. Creating fiction of the purposes of the Act being a public purpose is intended to remove any possible doubts as to the validity of the contemplated acquisitions. Sub-secs. (3) and (4) merely indicate the source from which the lands required are to be acquired by recourse to the provisions of the L. A. Act u/s. 16 (2) of the Act. The wording of cl. (c) of S. 13 (3) of the Act fortifies this view and demonstrates the fallacy of the contention. The extent of land liable to be acquired and covered by sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 16 has to be first ascertained and area thereof identified. This can be done only on preliminary assessment and enquiry u/Ss. 13 to 15 of the Act. Any assumption that sub-sec. (2) is independent or unconnected with sub-secs. (3) and (4) would prevent application of L. A. Act to the acquisition of lands covered by sub-secs. (3) and (4) of S. 16. The Act does not provide for any other mechanism of acquisition, and the fiction of acquisition being for public purpose would also be inapplicable in that case. All this goes a long way to show how contrary contentions are ill-founded.

11. This apart, S. 16 cannot be so interpreted as to permit option of acquiring land under this Act or under the L. A. Act without exposing it to the attack of being violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution, as it would be difficult to find out, in that case, any criteria with section to determine, when and why the one should be invoked and not the other.

12. Our attention was also drawn to the wording of cls. (c) and (d) of S. 13 (3) of the Act, suggesting that the basis of acquisition of land covered by cl. (c) is different from the one covered by cl. (d). The detailed description of land under cl. (c) tallies with its description under sub-sec. (4) of S. 16. This is another instance of bad drafting. It is difficult to know why this land is placed in separate cl. (c) when it is liable to be covered also by cl. (d). In the context now, the cl. (d) shall have to be interpreted to cover only lands acquired by negotiation and the "Goathan" land covered by sub-sec. (3) of S. 16 though it is wide enough to cover land referred to in cl. (c). We have already seen how express reference to the L. A. Act in cl. (c) herein fortifies our view that acquisition of lands covered by sub-sec. (4) of S. 16 can be secured only by recourse to L. A. Act.

and by no other provisions of this Act and how this rather runs counter to Mr. Saldhana's arguments.

13. The reliance on the word "also" in Sec. 16 (2) is equally misconceived. The word is intended to highlight the availability of one more mode of securing the required land under the Act in addition to its acquisition by negotiations provided for in sub-sec. (1) and not to emphasise any power of acquisition unconnected with Secs. 13 to 15. Section 16 (2) contemplates recourse to the L. A. Act for the acquisition of the land "required" for the purposes of the Act. Such "requirement" can be ascertained only by the process as provided under Secs. 13 to 15 of the Act. Sub-sections (3) and (4) only reflect the crystallisation of this process and it is for the land so required that mechanism of the L. A. Act is intended to be adopted under Sec. 16 (2) of the Act. The word 'also' in sub-section (3) does not have any significance excepting to emphasise that even land 'affected' is liable to be acquired if needed for 'gaathan' though the Act contemplates resettlement on benefited and other zones.

14. It is true that the lands in dispute are all situated in a village which is one of the villages notified as likely to be in the benefited zone under Section 11 (1) of the Act. Mr. Saldhana relies on this and contends that the lands in dispute are in either case liable to be acquired. This contention is untenable. The likelihood of a land being in the benefited zone under S. 11 (1) is not the same thing as its being found to be so after enquiry under Sec. 15 of the Act. As stated earlier, objections raised are fundamental and deserve to be upheld.

15. Thus once the project is notified under S. 11, the acquisition of the land from the benefited zone and other sources is liable to be governed by the provisions of this Act, and the powers under sub-sec. (2) of Section 16 and mechanism of the L. A. Act cannot be invoked unless first the assessment and ascertainment as contemplated under Sections 13 to 15 of the Act is finalised. Such acquisition is subject to the limitation indicated in sub-secs. (3) and (4) of Sec. 16 of the Act and Schedule thereto. Looking at from this point of view, the notifications and the land acquisition proceedings initiated and carried on by the respondents in the present cases are liable to be quashed.

16. In this view of the matter, the petitions deserve to be allowed. We accordingly allow all the seven petitions and make the Rules absolute and quash the acquisition proceedings. The petitioners will get the costs from the respondents.

Petitions allowed.

TULPULÉ, J.

Gopaldas Kishanchand Talreja, Petitioner v. Vijaysingh Bhimsingh Patil and others, Respondents.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 4206 of 1976, D/- 3-10-1980.

(A) Maharashtra Municipalities Act (40 of 1965), Section 195 — Notice under — Validity — Structure on leased land found in dilapidated condition — Tenant of land, both owner and occupier of structure by virtue of sale by previous tenant who constructed it — Held, notice under Section 195 to tenant alone without any notice to landlord would be valid.

No doubt, in the ordinary course where nothing is known about the ownership of the structure, the notice under Section 195 would have to be served both upon the owner of the land as well as the occupier of the structure built thereon. However, where it is known, or comes to the knowledge of the Chief Officer that the owner of the premises, namely, the landlord has no concern whatsoever with the structure, in his wisdom, the Chief Officer may decide not to issue a notice to the owner but issue only to the occupier who is the owner of the structure. (Para 18)

(B) Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 13 (1) (b) — "Permanent structure" — Notice served on tenant under Section 195, Maharashtra Municipalities Act, to demolish and reconstruct dilapidated temporary structure — Structure rebuilt with bricks and cement instead of with bricks and lime mortar — Held, mere use of cement did not make structure a permanent one — Structure built in pursuance of notice amounted to restoration of premises and not to a new construction.

What Section 13 (1) (b) lays down is that the structure which is erected by the tenant must be different from the demised premises and must change the character or situation and the nature of the premises demised. Apart from the character of that work being of a permanent nature or enduring and lasting nature, there must be some addition to the premises. Mere re-erection or reconstruction of premises which had either fallen down or which were required to be pulled down, cannot be termed as such construction. (Para 28)

The tenant was served with a notice under S. 195, Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 to demolish and reconstruct the temporary structure that had been built on the open plot of land which had been leased out to him. The brick and lime mortar structure which was in a dangerous state was replaced by a brick and cement structure.

Held, merely because cement was used, it could not be held that the construction was not a restoration of the former structure made of old bricks and lime mortar but an entirely and wholly new construction of a permanent nature. What the tenant had done amounted to restoration and reconstruction of the premises which were required to be pulled down in obedience of the orders of the Municipal Corporation. The petitioner would have been visited with a prosecution and fine if he had failed to comply with the provisions of Section 195 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. Therefore, the tenant had acted not voluntarily but in obedience of the process of law, and may be under a compulsion. Under the circumstances it could not be held that in the present case he had attracted the penalty of eviction under the provisions of Section 13 (1) (b), and the structure erected was of a permanent nature. N. H. Gursahani with S. H. Gurusahani and D. M. Butani, for Petitioner; R. V. Desai, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER :— This petition is directed against the Judgment and Decree passed by the Learned Extra Assistant Judge. Jalgaon, in regular Civil Appeal No. 70 of 1974 arising out of the decision in Regular Civil Suit No. 81 of 1972 given by the Learned Joint Civil Judge, Junior Division, Jalgaon, dismissing the suit.

2. The Respondent landlord was the owner of two plots of land admeasuring 27 ft. x 11 ft. and 18 ft. x 14 ft. bearing City Survey No. 2122/A-2 and Municipal No. 340 and situated within the Jalgaon Municipal limits. The two plots were known as Plot No. 1 and Plot No. 2 and were adjacent to each other.

3. It appears, sometime prior to 1957, Plot No. 1 was released as an open plot of land to one Lalji Waghji. This Lalji Waghji had constructed a structure thereon and was running a hotel business. On the 29th June, 1957, the petitioner tenant purchased this hotel as a running business together with the shed thereon constructed by Lalji Waghji with the consent of the Respondent-landlord. The petitioner was accepted as a tenant by the Respondent.

4. Thereafter on the 1st December, 1957, it seems that the petitioner-tenant took on rent for his hotel business the adjoining plot also. On this adjoining plot he erected a structure. The rent of the plot which was let out to Lalji Waghji at first and was subsequently given to the petitioner-tenant was Rs. 35/- though for the second plot taken on lease by the petitioner, the agreed rent was Rs. 6/- only.

5. On the 8th of August, 1970 the Respondent landlord served a notice upon the petitioner tenant to quit and hand over vacant possession of the premises by 30th Aug., 1970. Out of the two grounds which were raised for demanding possession from the petitioner-tenant one was arrears of rent, namely, that the petitioner-tenant was in arrears of rent for a period from 1st January, 1970 to 30th July 1970. The second ground was that the petitioner had erected a permanent structure on the land.

6. With regard to the arrears of rent, the petitioner-tenant paid all the amount which was due within a period of one month and, therefore, there was no question of any default having been committed by the petitioner-tenant. The only ground, therefore, which was in issue, and remains now in issue, is as to whether the petitioner-tenant has lost his right to remain in possession for having constructed and erected a permanent structure on the land.

7. It appears that on the 29th November 1971, the Chief Officer, Jalgaon Municipality, served a notice upon the petitioner-tenant requiring him to demolish the walls of the shed wherein he was conducting his hotel business on the ground that the walls had become dangerous and were in a dilapidated condition. The notice directed the petitioner to pull down those walls and construct those walls anew.

8. On the 11th January, 1972, the Respondent-landlord filed the suit against the petitioner-tenant being Regular Civil Suit No. 81 of 1972, in the Court of Joint Civil Judge, Jalgaon District, Jalgaon. As stated, the suit was based on two grounds for possession, namely, arrears of rent and the petitioner-tenant erecting a permanent structure. It was the case of the Respondent-landlord that the Petitioner-tenant erected this permanent structure without his consent in writing. That the work was actually going on when the plaint was filed and that the petitioner-tenant did not desist from finishing the work, though requested not to do so. Soon after the institution of the plaint, the Respondent got a Commissioner appointed to visit the site in suit, to draw a sketch plan and to make a report. Shri A. D. Chaudhari was appointed Commissioner, who made his report and also drew a map. The report of the Commissioner is at Ex. 76, while the map is produced at Ex. 77.

9. The petitioner tenant in his defence stated that he had taken these premises on rent which was agreed and that the premises were then open plots taken for the purpose of hotel business. On those plots a temporary structure for the purpose of the hotel was erected,

That out of these plots, Plot No. 1, admeasured 27 ft. x 11 ft. This was originally let out to Lalji Waghji and that Lalji Waghji had erected thereon a structure admeasuring 10 ft. x 11 ft., which according to the petitioner was a shed with walls built in bricks and mortar. The petitioner purchased this property from Lalji Waghji with the consent of the Respondent-landlord and since then the Respondent accepted the petitioner as a tenant. It was contended that the ownership of the sheds belonged to the Petitioner. It was contended that the walls of the shed and the roof had become dilapidated and dangerous to the occupants, and, therefore, on account of Notice issued by the Jalgaon Municipality dt. 27th Nov., 1971 the shed was demolished and was re-constructed on the same plots.

10. The learned Trial Judge dismissed the suit of the Respondent-landlord. Against that the Respondent filed an Appeal in the Court of the learned Extra Assistant Judge, Jalgaon. The learned Extra Assistant Judge allowed the Appeal of the Respondent and set aside the Judgment and Decree passed by the Trial Court and passed instead a Decree for possession in favour of the Respondent-landlord.

11. In passing this Decree, the learned Extra Assistant Judge was of the opinion that, considering the nature of the work which was being carried out and which had been carried out by the Petitioner-tenant, it was a permanent structure which had been erected and not a restoration of the original structure. He also held that what the Petitioner-tenant had done was not to re-construct the old structure "but has completely built a new one." He also found that in place of the old structure, the Petitioner-tenant has "constructed a structure covering the area of both the plots". He was of the view that the learned Trial Judge had overlooked that what the petitioner had done was not a re-construction of "the same type of structure of the same size." Reliance before him was placed on a ruling in the case of Suka Ishram Chaudhari v. Ranchhoddas reported in (1972) 74 Bom LR 220 : (AIR 1972 Bom 273) and a decision of this Court in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 114 of 1965 decided on 12th Nov., 1968 by Justice Kantawala as he then was, in view of the fact that what was put up by the Petitioner-tenant on the site a permanent structure and since it was not a restoration of the former structure but an enlarged shed on the entire plots, he held that the ratio of the decisions in Civil Revn. Applns. Nos. 1160 of 1968 and 114 of 1965 did not apply to the facts before him. His findings and conclusions were seriously challenged before me.

12. Shri Butani, who appeared for the petitioner, contended that the principle laid down by Justice Kantawala in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 114 of 1965 was misconstrued by the learned Judge. That what was done by the Petitioner-tenant in this case was to obey the orders of the Jalgaon Municipal Council to pull down the structure and to replace it by new walls. What he was, therefore, doing was an act in obedience of the orders of the Municipal Council. It was contended by Shri Butani that there was no evidence adduced by the parties in the Courts below nor was there any material on record of the case to hold and determine as to what was the total area or extent of both the structures on the two plots. Though the plots are adjoining, dimension of the structure on the second plot is not known. If the two structures were built jointly with each other, then together they would become only one shed used for the purpose of the hotel, which the Petitioner was running. It was his submission that the learned Judge mis-read the evidence in coming to the conclusion that what was constructed by the Petitioner was the shed which was larger in extent than it was before and that it has been built upon the plots so as to suggest that the entire plots have now been built upon and there is no open plot or land left. This, he said was not borne out at all by the Commissioner's report or by the map. It was contended that it is the nature of the structure and the intention with which it is affixed together with the degree of annexure to the premises let namely the open plots of lands in this case, which will determine the character of the structure. Merely because cement and bricks were used, it could not follow that the structure must, therefore, be a permanent structure. The learned Judge, according to Shri Butani was unduly impressed by the circumstances that a foundation was dug and was seen by the Commissioner. He, however, urged that the learned Judge's observations that the foundation was 3½ ft. deep is in no way supported by any evidence or material on record. The mere fact that the walls were built upon foundation does not ipso facto establish or prove that the structure was a permanent structure. The size of the walls, kind of material used for the erection of the walls, the possible and likely damage in case the structure is taken away from the premises let, all these circumstances when taken into account indicate that the intention of the lessee or the person who erected the structure was to erect a structure which will endure for all times and would confer a lasting advantage in respect of the premises. Only then the structure can be considered as a permanent structure. Shri Butani seriously contended that in order to attract operation of S. 13 (1) (b) of the Bombay Rent Act a permanent structure must be by way of addition to the premises let and must not be part of the premises themselves.

13. It was contended on behalf of the Respondent that the decision and principle laid down in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 115 of 1965 was in no way applicable to the facts of this case. In that case action was taken by the tenant pursuant to a notice issued by the Municipal Corporation, Poona and since the landlord in that case had statutory liability to keep the premises in tenantable repair he had not done so. What the tenant, therefore, did with the permission of the Municipal Corporation, Poona was to erect a construction after the landlord-Plaintiff in that case had neglected or refused to do so when he was called upon to do so, by the Municipal Corporation, Poona. In the present case, Shri Desai submitted that there was no notice issued to the Respondent-landlord at all. On the other hand, it was Shri Desai's submission, that the Notice served by the Municipality appears almost to have been invited by the petitioner. There is no evidence to show that the Respondent-landlord had neglected or refused to carry out any work.

14. The second submission was that the learned Judge has not considered the evidence fully and completely. On a consideration of that evidence he had arrived at the conclusion that what was constructed by the Petitioner was a shed larger in extent and of permanent nature. If that was so, Shri Desai submitted under Art. 227 it will not be permissible to disturb that finding of fact. If that finding of fact is conclusive and is binding on that Court, then he submitted that, there is no alternative but to dismiss this Petition.

15. It would be convenient firstly to refer to the notice issued by Jalgaon Municipal Council. It does appear that the notice or direction was issued in connection with some application or reference dt. the 2nd Nov., 1971 made by the Petitioner. Shri Desai says that this is an application made by the Petitioner himself. However, what is further material is not as to who made that application but as to what that application contained. The original application or its certified copy is not placed on record. No questions were asked to the Petitioner in the witness-box in that behalf.

16. The notice says that the premises were inspected on the 23rd Nov., 1971 by the Municipal Engineer and he was of the opinion that the structure was in a dilapidated condition. The Notice also recorded the state of the structure which was built in brick with lime plaster and C. I. sheet proof that the plaster had come off at many places and mortar had also come off from the joints. The walls being broken at many places and, therefore, the walls should be pulled down and at that place new walls should be built. The notice also directed that the walls have become dilapidated and dangerous for occupants.

17. Now it is clear that this notice issued by the Municipal Council can only be considered as one u/s. 195 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. That Section empowers the Chief Officer where he is of the opinion that any building or other structure was in a ruinous condition or likely to fall or in any way dangerous to any person occupying, the Chief Officer may by Notice "require the owner or occupier of such building or structure to pull down, secure, remove or repair such a building or structure, "and also" 'do' one or more such things". The Chief Officer, therefore, if he is of the opinion that a structure is in a ruinous condition or in any way dangerous or about to fall, may not only direct the owner or the occupier to pull it down but may also direct him to repair and secure the structure by doing any or more of such things mentioned in the Section. The consequences of not complying with the Notice u/s. 195 is that the person not so complying with the Notice can be fined and prosecuted.

18. Now it is not in dispute in the present case that the Respondent-landlord was not served with any such notice u/s. 195 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. Shri Desai says and rightly contended that the Notice should also have been served upon the Respondent-landlord and if it had been so served and the Respondent had not carried out the work, then possibly the decision relied upon would have been attracted. This contention overlooks the powers of the Chief Officer and the facts which are obtaining in the present case. It is not disputed that the owner in this case was the owner of the land only. The Respondent-landlord had nothing to do with the structure which admittedly belonged to the occupier. In the ordinary course where nothing is known about the ownership of the structure, Shri Desai would be right in contending that the notice u/s. 195 should also have been served upon the owner. However, where it is known, or comes to the knowledge of the Chief Officer that the owner of the premises, namely, the landlord has no concern whatsoever with the structure, in his wisdom, the Chief Officer may decide not to issue a notice to the owner but issue only to the occupier who is the owner of the structure. In the present case, if the notice was issued to the occupier, namely, the Petitioner only, it cannot be said that there was a deliberate attempt to by-pass the Respondent-owner. In the present case since the owner of the structure was also the occupier thereof, the notice issued u/s. 195 and served on the occupier would be a perfectly valid notice.

19. The notice also clearly points out as to the condition of the premises and the nature of the structure. It shows that the walls were built in bricks and mortar and that there was C. I. sheet-roof. However, the notice unfortunately, and may be fortunately for the Petitioner-tenant, does not say as to what is the extent of the premises. It merely refers to the structure and does not relate to more than one structure. This notice is dt. 27th Nov., 1971 and it is thereafter that the present work was commenced. It does, therefore, appear that the original walls which were constructed on this structure were constructed on bricks and mortar.

20. This position is also further clarified by the Commissioner's Report. The Commissioner's report says that the old work, debris of which was lying on the premises, indicate that it was made in mortar and bricks and the old mortar was lying everywhere and some new frames of windows were also seen. The new building work or wall building work was being carried out in bricks and cement. He makes a reference also to the foundation at one place only described as S-1 to S-2 in his map. There he says that the foundation was being filled up from mortar, pieces of mortar and cement.

21. According to the evidence given by the petitioner, he was using the same material for the purpose of the construction. Presumably, he meant thereby that he was using the old bricks and also partly using the doors and windows of the former structure, though some of the window frames were new. He has specifically referred to frames, but the Commissioner did not similarly make any reference to any new door frames. He has made a reference to the door frames but has not said whether the door frames were new or old. Reliance was sought to be placed upon a photograph Ex. 69 showing the work done. This will partly support the evidence of the Petitioner in that some of the bricks which appear to have been used in the construction of the walls appear to be old bricks since mortar seems to be clinging on to them. Even the Commissioner observed lime and mortar at many places was clinging on to the bricks.

22. I have already pointed that the dimension of the plots taken together would work out to 54 x 22. What the Commissioner has not done, nor the parties seem to have insisted upon, is the drawal of the sketch map of the entire two plots in question. That would have shown to us the structure which was constructed and the remaining open space, if there was any, which was available. The learned Judge has recorded a finding that the sketch or map drawn by the Commissioner was of the entire plot. This finding, however, cannot be supported and is incorrect. If we look to the Commissioner's report and the sketch map, the report does not say that the sketch was of the entire plot. The Commissioner's report goes to show that the length and breadth of the structure was 32 ft. along the south and line AB and 15 ft. in width along line B to S-2. There does not appear to be any construction beyond the foundation shown by the Commissioner in S-1 and S-2. No wall to the north and no wall to the west had been admittedly constructed then. The width of the structure to the west has not been shown by the Commissioner. The width of 18 ft. which I have found of the structure is to the East. Beyond the foundation shown by the Commissioner, there is a portion of the wall which is north south but except that wall there is no other structure shown. It will thus be seen that the construction which is now ready ad-measures 32' 6" x 15'. In any event it does not cover an area of 45' x 22'. The learned Judge's finding, therefore, that the construction was on the entire plot is wholly unsupported by the Commissioner's sketch as to what was the situation at the site when the work was going on. If that is so, then the finding or the conclusion of the learned Extra Assistant Judge to that effect disappears.

23. The same must also be stated about his observation and finding that the foundation of the walls was 3½ ft. deep. He says that "the Defendant-tenant had taken foundation of 3½ ft. deep and was constructing the building with cement and mortar and was making altogether a new construction". In coming to this conclusion, he relies himself on the statement of Anandsingh at Ex. 65, and that statement of Anandsingh has gone unchallenged. I have gone through the statement of Anandsingh. It nowhere says that the foundation was 3½ ft. deep. For the Respondent-landlord it was conceded that there was no such statement or piece of evidence appearing on the record. Neither the Commissioner has said in his report that the foundation was 3½ ft. deep. It is not known from where the learned Judge obtained this impression that the foundation was 3½ ft. deep. On the other hand, the description of the foundation, the laying of it and the type of material which was thrown in the foundation indicated that the foundation cannot be considered as fit for a permanent structure. It was being filled with broken pieces of bricks, mortar and cement. Such a foundation can hardly support a permanent structure. It may be used for a temporary structure at best. The learned Judge was, therefore, wrong in coming to the conclusion both on observation of the material which was used and the nature of the construction that it was permanent merely because cement was used. Instead of lime mortar which was used for the old structure, the material which was used was cement in this case. Merely because cement is used in this case, it is difficult to hold that the construction was not a restoration of the former structure made of old bricks and lime mortar but an entirely and wholly new construction.

24. If it is held that the construction was not of such a type as to describe it of an enduring nature, even if the materials used be of sufficient durable quality and strength, then it is difficult to hold that the construction was of a permanent nature. After all the construction was intended to serve the purpose of running a hotel. No attempt to build a permanent building as such on a plot of land obtained for the purpose of running a hotel has been expressed or stated. What was formerly a brick and lime mortar structure with C. I. sheet roof is now sought to be converted into a brick and cement structure.

25. It is true that Anandsingh, Plaintiff's witness, in his evidence stated that the shed was constructed "of mud and brick walls" and there were tins on the roof and Plot No. 2 was constructed of Kud walls and there were tins on it. Now this statement of Anandsingh is not supported by Ex. 72, viz. the report based on the visual examination by the Municipal Engineer. Anandsingh admits, however, in cross-examination that the walls were old but that they were constructed on the basis of a foundation. No Kud walls had been referred to by the Municipal Engineer. Kud walls are generally not constructed upon foundations. The Petitioner in his evidence stated that the shed "is constructed with the same bricks" and that the shed was "constructed in bricks and lime". He does not refer to any Kud walls nor was he questioned during his cross-examination of the existence of a shed with Kud walls. The learned Extra Assistant Judge seems to have proceeded on the basis that these Kud walls, made of bamboo strips were removed and replaced by solid brick walls built in bricks and cement. On behalf of the Petitioner the Municipal Engineer was examined who actually saw the shed in question on the 23rd Nov., 1971 and purasant to whose report, notice Ex. 72 was given to the Petitioner. He had not been asked any question as to the character of the walls whether they were of Kud or otherwise nor even the extent of the premises which was already existing. On the other hand he stated that the walls of the shed "were cracked and the structure was in a condition which was dangerous to human habitation." In the circumstances, it is difficult to think that what was attempted to be done pursuant to the Notice of the Municipal Council, Jalgaon, by the Petitioner was not a restoration of the premises to their former condition as was required after dismantling the walls which were in a dangerous state and re-built in bricks and cement instead of bricks and lime mortar. This amounts to restoration of the premises and not to a new construction.

26. I would now refer to the decision in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 114 of 1965. It is true that in that case the Pona Municipal Corporation had served a notice to the landlord to reconstruct and restore the portion of the kitchen which was washed away in the Panshet Dam floods. The landlord in obedience of the Notice omitted to do so. The tenant then moved the Municipal Corporation and sought permission to do so. The tenant was granted permission and the tenant reconstructed the washed out portion of the kitchen and built the structure again with walls on its foundation. The landlord sued him for possession on the ground that he had erected a permanent structure. It was held in that case that what the tenant had done was in obedience of the Notice issued by the Municipality and the same amounted to restoration of the premises and not new construction.

27. Dealing with S. 13 (1) (b) Justice Kantawala observed that in order to obtain a decree for recovery of possession, the landlord has to establish that a tenant without his written consent erected a permanent structure on the demised premises. Such a permanent structure would not be on the demised premises. It pre-supposes that it must be in addition to or different from the original demised premises. It is this last part of the observation on which considerable reliance is placed. Shri Desai contended that these observations were not necessary for the decision in that case. I am unable to agree with this submission of Shri Desai. The Court in that case was required to consider whether in the circumstances the tenant had erected a permanent structure by contravening the provisions of S. 13 (1) (b) and thereby incurred the penalty of eviction. It was said what S. 13 (1) (b) contemplates is an addition to or different kind of structure from the original. What was being done in that case was laying down the law so far as the provisions of S. 13 (1) (b) were concerned. It was in the context of this requirement of S. 13 (1) (b), namely, whether the premises were an addition to or different from the original structure that the question as to whether premises built by the tenant came within its ambit or otherwise had to be decided.

28. It seems to me that what S. 13 (1) (b) also lays down is that the structure which is erected by the tenant must be different from the demised premises and must change the character or situation and the nature of the premises demised. Apart from the character of that work being of a permanent nature or enduring and lasting nature, there must be some addition to the premises. Mere re-erection or reconstruction of premises which had either fallen down or which were required to be pulled down, cannot be termed as such construction. What was in that case done was a mere restoration of the premises to their original condition. It may be that the material which is used for erecting a permanent construction has been used therein. But it would not mean that it is, therefore, an erection of a permanent structure. What the Petitioner-tenant in this case has done must be held to be restoration and reconstruction of the premises which were required to be pulled down in obedience of the orders of the Municipal Corporation, Jalgaon. The Petitioner would have been visited with a prosecution and fine if he had failed to comply with the provisions of S. 195 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. Therefore, the Petitioner-tenant had acted not voluntarily but in obedience of the process of law, and may be under a compulsion. Under the circumstances it cannot be held that in the present case he has attracted the penalty of eviction under the provisions of S. 13 (1) (b), and the structure erected is of a permanent nature.

29. In the circumstances and the view which I have taken on the basis of the material and evidence on record it is not necessary to refer to the decision in the (1972) 74 Bom LR 220: (AIR 1972 Bom 273). It would be sufficient to point out that in that case also the walls were put up after digging a foundation of 1½ ft. deep. In the present case there is no evidence as to the depth of the foundation. The Petition, therefore, must be allowed and succeeds. Rule made absolute. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

KANADE AND PENDSE, JJ.

Mohamad Maqbool Mohamad Khaja and others, Petitioners v. State of Maharashtra and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 431 of 1981, D/- 1-7-1981.

Maharashtra Municipalities Act (40 of 1965), Ss. 40 (3), 19A, 48A (inserted by Act 12 of 1981) — Scope and object of S. 40 (3) — Councillors cannot claim to hold office beyond term of six years — S. 48A is not ultra vires the State Legislature — Connotation of expression 'changed circumstances' in S. 48A — Power to appoint Administrator under S. 48A is not absolute and unguided — Principles of natural justice are not violated if S. 48A notification is issued without notice to Councillors. (Constitution of India, Art. 14, Seventh Schedule, List II, Entry 5; Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Natural justice).

Sub-section (3) of S. 40 of the Act has only a limited application and a legal fiction was created by the Legislature only to overcome a possible vacuum which may occur in exceptional cases. It is not permissible for any Councillor to take resort to that sub-section to claim that he can remain in office as a matter of right beyond the extended period of six years. The term of office of the Councillor comes to an end at the expiry of five years or six years as the case may be and he ceases to hold and vacates the Office of the Councillor at the expiry of the term. The legal fiction created by sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act only enables him to carry out day to day administrative work till the meeting of the new Councillors under S. 19A of the Act is held, and does not permit to take any long term policy decisions. In these circumstances, the contention that the term of the Councillors would automatically stand extended beyond six years under sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act even in cases where general election for electing fresh Councillors is not held is without any merit. (1962) 64 Bom LR 557 Relied on; AIR 1977 Bom 244 Explained. (Para 8)

Entry 5 of List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution enables the State Legislature to legislate in regard to the constitution and powers of the Municipal Corporations. Fixation of a term of the Councillor or grant of extension in such term and withdrawal of such extension are matters which are so closely connected with the constitution and powers of the local government that there can be no hesitation whatsoever in concluding that the State Legislature was perfectly competent in enacting S. 48A of the Act. (Para 12)

While enacting Section 48A of the Act, the State Government had to meet a contingency which was unprecedented and unusual. The State Government was under an erroneous impression that the Councillors can continue indefinitely in their office even after the expiry of their term because of the provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act. The Councillors of large number of Municipal Councils continued to hold the office even after the expiry of term of six years by resort of sub-section (3) of Sec. 40 and in these circumstances, the Government felt it necessary to cover the cases of such Councillors also by inserting sub-section (3) of Section 40 in the sweep of Section 48A (1) of the Act.

The powers could be exercised by the State Government under Sec. 48A of the Act only in cases where the State Government has extended the term of Councillors from five years to six years and such extension is still subsisting. It could not be said that the Legislature intended to confer the power upon the Government to appoint the Administrator to prevent the elected representatives of people from taking over charge of Councils. Reading amended Section as it is, the State Legislature was perfectly competent to enact the Section. (Para 13)

The apprehension that the, "changed circumstances", is an expression which is not definite and can be attributed different meaning or variety of meanings which can fluctuate from one situation to another is not well founded. The changed circumstances do not depend upon the whims or caprice of the State Government, but are justiciable in court and are not left to the whims of the executive. (Para 15)

Under Section 48A absolute powers are not conferred upon the State Government without any guidelines. The guidelines are provided as the powers can be exercised only in changed circumstances and only in cases where the extended term of one year after the expiry of normal period of five years is still running and subsisting. Only in those and those cases that the Government can exercise the powers and that too because of the changed circumstances which lead the Government to conclude that the continuance of the Councillors during the extended term is not expedient. The guidelines are clear and specific and in cases the guidelines are violated or any order is passed which is not in consonance with the provisions of the Section, then it is always open for the aggrieved party to approach the High Court. The State Legislature was perfectly competent to enact Section 48A of the Act and it does not suffer from any infirmity and does not offend any provisions of the Constitution or the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution of India.

The provisions of Section 48A of the Act are intra vires. AIR 1969 SC 1100, AIR 1975 SC 1234 and AIR 1978 SC 597, Refd. (Para 17)

When the petitioners had no right to hold the office of the Councillor after the expiry of the period of six years, the Government was not bound to give any notice to the petitioners before taking action under Section 48A of the Act. It could not be said that the principles of natural justice are violated even though the person who claims violation, had no right to remain in office.

Dr. B. R. Naik with R. V. Naik, for Petitioners; C. J. Sawant, Addl. Govt. Pleader with D. P. Hegde, Asst. Govt. Pleader and Advocate General, for Respondents.

PENDSE, J.:— By this petition filed under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, the petitioners are seeking a writ of mandamus for striking down Section 48A of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act 1965 (hereinafter referred to as the "Act") as being ultra vires of the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution of India and for quashing and setting aside the order dated February 5, 1981, issued by respondent No. 1 under sub-section (1) of Sec. 48A of the said Act.

2. The petitioner No. 1 is the President of Nanded Municipal Council, while the petitioners Nos. 2 to 5 are its Councillors. The Municipal Council of Nanded was established under Section 8 of the Act. Section 10 onwards of the Act provide for election of Councillors to the Municipal Councils and Section 40 (1) of the Act lays down a term of five years for the Councillors elected at the general election. The term of Councillors of the Nanded Municipal Council was to expire on December 16, 1979. Section 40 (1) of the Act enables the State Government in exceptional circumstances to extend the term not exceeding in the aggregate six years for reasons which have to be stated in the Notification to be published in the Official Gazette. In exercise of the powers conferred under this sub-section, the State Government extended the term of the Councillors by a period of six months on December 11, 1979. A further extension of six months' duration was granted on May 3, 1980, and the term of the Councillors was to expire on November 30, 1980. In spite of the fact that the term was to expire in November, 1980, the general election to the Municipal Council was not held earlier by the State Government, but the respondent No. 2 — the Director of Municipal Administration — issued instructions only on February 3, 1981 to hold the elections of the Municipal Council. It is required to be stated at this juncture that the identical situation prevailed in about 192 Municipal Councils in the State of Maharashtra. In other words, though the extended period of six years' term was over, the Municipal Councillors in 192 Municipal Council continued to function as Councillors. With this background, the Governor of Maharashtra issued Maharashtra Ordinance No. 1 of 1981 on February 4, 1981. The Ordinance was issued as the State Legislature was not in Session and the Governor was satisfied that the circumstances exist which render it necessary to take immediate action to amend the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 and also the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporations Act, 1949 and the City of Nagpur Corporation Act, 1948. By this Ordinance, Section 48A was inserted in the Act. The amended Section confers power upon the State Government to appoint Administrator in the Municipal Councils where the term of the Councillors stands extended under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act. The Ordinance further provided that on publication of such an order by the State Government appointing an Administrator, all Councillors including the President and the Vice-President shall cease to hold and shall vacate the office as Councillors or otherwise. In pursuance of the powers conferred by the Ordinance, the State of Maharashtra Published Notification on February 5, 1981, whereby the term of the Councillors of 187 Municipal Councils was terminated and the Administrator was appointed with effect from February 6, 1981. One of the Municipal Councils covered by this Notification is the Nanded Municipal Council which has been joined as respondent No. 3 to the petition. The petitioners challenged the said Notification by filing the present petition in this Court on Feb. 9, 1981. The petition was duly admitted on February 11, 1981. During the pendency of this petition, on March 21, 1981, the Ordinance was replaced by Maharashtra Act No. XII of 1981 with retrospective effect from February 4, 1981. The amended Section 48A of the Act was inserted in the Act having been assented by the Governor after the Legislature approved the same. Certain alteration was effected by the Legislature while enacting Section 48A of the Act by providing that the general elections shall be held within a period of one year from the date of publication of the order issued under Section 48A of the Act. The petitioners thereafter amended the petition and challenged the vires of Section 48A of the Act.

3. The principal grounds of challenge to the vires of Section 48A of the Act are that the enactment of the Section is beyond the Legislative competence of State Legislature and the same has been enacted with mala fide intention. It is also claimed that the provisions of Section 48A of the Act are required to be struck down as it violates the fundamental rights conferred under Article 14 of the Constitution of India. The petitioners also claimed that the State Government has appropriated absolute powers under Sec. 48A of the Act to suppress the concept of Local Self Government and such absolute powers are conferred without any guidelines for its exercise. It was also claimed that the principles of natural justice were violated while publishing the Notification dated February 5, 1981. The claim of the petitioners to hold the office beyond the term of six years is based on the provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act. The petitioners urged that they are entitled to hold the Office of the Councillors till the day immediately preceding the date of meeting to be held under Section 19A of the Act by the newly elected Councillors. It is the claim of the petitioners that S. 48A of the Act makes wide inroad upon the fundamental rights of the petitioners to hold an elected office. On these grounds, the petitioners challenged the vires of Section 48A as well as the action taken by the Government in pursuance of the provisions of the Section by issuance of the Notification dated February 5, 1981.

4. In answer to the petition, Smt. Asha K. Shete, the Assistant Secretary, Urban Development and Public Health Department, Government of Maharashtra, has filed return sworn on April 29, 1981. By this return, it is submitted that the claim of the petitioners to hold the office beyond the term of six years is totally misconceived. The respondents' claim that the provision of sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act is merely a stop-gap arrangement and does not extend the term of the Councillors beyond the aggregate term of six years. According to the respondents, a peculiar situation arose whereby the term of the Councillors of a large number of Municipal Councils expired but the Councillors continued to remain in office by resort to the provisions of sub-section (3) of S. 40 of the Act and therefore, it was necessary to amend provisions of the Act to meet such unusual situation. The State of Maharashtra claims that the enactment of Section 48A of the Act was perfectly within the legislative competence of the State Legislature and the challenge that the Section confers absolute powers without any guidelines is not correct. The grounds of mala fide are denied and so also the contention that the principles of natural justice were violated before issuance of the notification. The petitioner No. 1 has filed an affidavit-in-rejoinder sworn on June 10, 1981 and reiterated the submissions made in the petition.

5. In view of these rival submissions, it is first necessary to determine the ambit and scope of Section 40 of the Act which provides for the term of office of the Councillors. It would be convenient to set out the provisions of sub-secs. (1), (2) and (3) of Section 40 of the Act to understand the controversy involved in the petition:—

"(1) Save as otherwise provided by this Act, Councillors, elected at a general election, shall hold office for a term of five years, which may be extended by the State Government in exceptional circumstances by notification in the official Gazette, to a term not exceeding in the aggregate six years for reasons which shall be stated in such notification,

(2) The term of office of such Councillors shall be deemed to commence on the date of the special meeting held under Section 19A to co-opt Councillors.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-sections (1) and (2), the term of office of the outgoing Councillors shall be deemed to extend to and expire with the day immediately preceding the date of such meeting."

The plain reading of sub-section (1) of Section 40 of the Act makes it clear that the elected Councillors are entitled to hold office for a term of five years. The term can be extended by the State Government for one more year but such extension can be given only in exceptional circumstances and for reasons which shall be stated in the Notification to be published in the Official Gazette. In other words, there is no inherent right in the elected Councillors to remain in office beyond the period of five years. The extension of period is not a right conferred on the Municipal Councillors but the extension can be granted by the State Govt. only in exceptional circumstances. It is implied in sub-section (1) of Section 40 of the Act that in normal circumstances, general elections should be held before the expiry of the term of five years. The exceptional circumstances may arise where holding of an election is not possible. Times of war or where the area is under floods or famine are some of the circumstances where the State Govt. may exercise the power to extend the term. The power to extend the term is also circumscribed by the sub-section providing that such extension shall not be beyond the period of one year from the date of expiry of five years. Sub-section (2) of Sec. 40 of the Act provides for a starting point to determine the period of term of office of five years. The period will begin to run from the date of the special meeting held under Section 19A of the Act to co-opt the Councillors.

6. Section 10 onwards of the Act provide for holding of the general election to the Municipal Council and S. 19 (1) of the Act provides that the names of the elected Councillors shall be published in the Official Gazette. Section 19A of the Act lays down that within 25 days from the date on which the names of Councillors elected to a Council are published or, as the case may be, first published, under sub-section (1) of Section 19, in the Official Gazette, or from the date on which the result of election of President is published under sub-section (3) of Section 51, in the Official Gazette, whichever is later, the President of the new Council shall convene a special meeting of the Councillors for co-option of Councillors. The term of the Councillors shall be deemed to commence on the date of such special meeting. In other words, though the Councillor is declared to be elected by publication of his name in the Official Gazette, his term of five years would not commence from that date but by legal fiction provided under sub-sec. (2) of Section 40, the term would begin to run from the date of the meeting convened under Section 19A of the Act. The reading of sub-sections (1) and (2) of the Act makes it crystal clear that the normal term of the Municipal Councillors is for a period of five years and could be extended by the State Government in exceptional circumstances by one more year. It is further clear that the legislature intended that the general elections should be held before the expiry of the term of five years in normal circumstances and six years in exceptional circumstances where the Government extends the term. It is implied in the provisions of Section 40 of the Act that the general elections must be held before the term of the Councillors expires. It is well recognised principle in this country that the local bodies should be manned by the elected representatives of the common man, and Section 40 of the Act was enacted obviously to advance that purpose.

7. The sub-section (2) of Section 19A of the Act provides that notwithstanding anything contained in sub-sec. (1) special meeting of the newly elected Councillors shall not be held before the expiry of the term of office of the outgoing Councillors. Such a meeting has to be normally convened within a short duration after the expiry of term of outgoing Councillors. It is possible that a meeting may be held immediately after the expiry of the term but the Legislature in its wisdom realised that in some cases there would be time-gap between date of expiry of term and holding of special meeting. In such interregnum, there would be no effective administration of Council and to overcome such situation, the Legislature provided by sub-section (3) of Sec. 40 of the Act that notwithstanding anything contained in sub-sections (1) and (2), the term of office of outgoing Councillors shall be deemed to extend to and expire with the day immediately preceding the date of such meeting. By this sub-sec. (3), a legal fiction is created to have the continuity in administration and to avert vacuum in the functioning of Municipal Council. The outgoing Councillors, in view of fixed tenure of office, cannot hold charge on expiry of term but by a deeming provisions are allowed to function, till the special meeting of the new Councillors is held. This sub-section does not create any right in the outgoing Councillors to remain in office beyond the expiry of their term, nor such legal fiction would amount to automatic extension of term. It is necessary to emphasise that the term of the office of the Councillors is fixed by provisions of sub-section (1) of Section 40 of the Act and it could not be extended beyond the aggregate term of six years. Sub-section (3) of S. 40 of the Act does not provide for any extension but contemplates a situation where election of the new Councillors has already been held but such Councillors have not entered the office because the meeting under Section 19A of the Act is not held. The reading of the three sub-sections of S. 40 of the Act makes it clear that provisions of sub-sec. (3) of Section 40 of the Act would come into operation provided the elections of the new Councillors are held or the process of election of the new Councillors is almost over. Sub-section (3) of Sec. 40 of the Act can have no application in cases where the elections are not held. It is not permissible for the Councillors whose term has expired to claim that they can remain in office as long as the fresh elections are not held and the meeting under Section 19A of the Act is not convened.

8. Dr. Naik, the learned counsel appearing in support of the petition, submits that sub-section (3) of S. 40 of the Act automatically extends the term of the Councillors beyond the term of six years if the special meeting as contemplated under Section 19A of the Act is not held. Dr. Naik urges that the sub-sec. (3) of Sec. 40 of the Act opens with a non obstante clause and it is indicative of the fact that the term can extend beyond six years in cases where elections are not held. It is difficult to accept this submission. The Legislature has provided for a fixed term of five years under sub-section (1) of S. 40 of the Act and which could be extended by one more year in exceptional circumstances. The fact that even the extension of one year could be only in exceptional circumstances and that too by setting out the reasons in the Notification to be published in the Official Gazette clearly indicates that the Legislature never intended that the term of the Councillors should be postponed beyond the duration of five years. The Legislature never desired to create the monopoly of the Councillors by holding the post of Municipal Councillor for indefinite time. It is difficult to conceive that by enactment of sub-sec. (3) of Section 40 of the Act, the Legislature intended that the outgoing Councillors should hold office even beyond the period of six years merely because the elections of the new Councillors are not held. On the other hand, there is intrinsic evidence in sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act to hold that it would come into play provided the elections of the new Councillors are already held. The acceptance of the submission of Dr. Naik would lead to a very curious situation, as the existing Councillors can continue in their office for indefinite period by taking advantage of the fact that the elections are not held even after the expiry of six years. It is impossible to accept such a construction because that would lead to the destruction of the basic and fundamental rights conferred upon the voter to elect his representative for a duration of time. Sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act cannot be so read as to confer a charter upon the Councillors to remain in office for all time to come. In our judgment, sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act has only a limited application and a legal fiction was created by the Legislature only to overcome a possible vacuum which may occur in exceptional cases. It is not permissible for any Councillor to take resort to that sub-section to claim that he can remain in office as a matter of right beyond the extended period of six years. In our judgment, the term of office of the Councillor comes to an end at the expiry of five years or six years as the case may be and he ceases to hold and vacates the Office of the Councillor at the expiry of the term. The legal fiction created by sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act only enables him to carry out day to day administrative work till the meeting of the new Councillors under Section 19A of the Act is held, and does not permit to take any long term policy decisions. In these circumstances, in our judgment the contention urged by Dr. Naik that the term of the Councillors would automatically stand extended beyond six years under sub-sec. (3) of Section 40 of the Act even in cases where general election for electing fresh Councillors is not held is without any merit.

9. In this connection, it would be proper to make a reference to the provisions of Section 25 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925 which provide for the term of office of Councillors after general election. Sub-section (2) of Section 25 of the Act inter alia provides that the term of office of Councillors shall be deemed to commence on the date of the first special meeting, while the term of office of the outgoing Councillors shall be deemed to extend to and expire with the day before the date of such meeting. Sub-section (2) (b) of Section 25 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. reads as under :—

"the term of office of the outgoing councillors shall be deemed to extend to and expire with the day before the date of such meeting."

The question with regard to the interpretation to be placed on this sub-section came for consideration before the Division Bench of this Court. The provision of this sub-section and that of sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act are almost identical. The Division Bench in a judgment in the case of Narayan Sitaram Kokaje v. Secretary to the Government of the State of Maharashtra reported in (1962) 64 Bom LR 557, held that sub-sec. (2) (b) of Section 25 of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, does not authorise the outgoing Councillors to function actively as Councillors even after the term of their office as provided by sub-section (1) of Section 25 of the Act has come to an end. The sub-section is only a deeming provision which by a legal fiction extends the term of outgoing Councillors so as to preserve the conceptual continuity of the Municipality. are in entire agreement with the interpretation put by the Division Bench on the said sub-section. The view which we are taking of the provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 40 of the Act is in accordance with the decision recorded by the Division Bench. In our judgment, the object and the effect of the provisions is not to authorise the outgoing Councillors to function actively as Councillors even after the term of their office has come to an end. The sub-section merely provides for an interregnum between the term of the office of one body of the Municipal Councillors and the term of the office of the next body of the Councillors. The sub-section relates only to and covers the interregnum between the expiry of the term of the outgoing Councillors and the taking over charge of the new Councillors. In this view of the matter, the contention of the petitioners that they are entitled to continue in the office as Councillors till the next elections are held and the special meeting of the newly elected Councillors is held under S. 19A of the Act cannot be entertained. The term of the office of the petitioners having expired, they have no right whatsoever to hold the office or claim any lien thereon by resort to the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of the S. 40 of the Act. In view of this conclusion, the petitioners are not entitled to claim the relief that they should be deemed to have continued as Councillors after the expiry of the term of six years and on the date when the Notification was published by the Government of Maharashtra under S. 48A of the Act.

10. On behalf of the petitioners, reliance was placed on the judgment of the Division Bench of this Court in the case of the Municipal Council, Malkapur v. State of Maharashtra reported in AIR 1977 Bom 244 to submit that under sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act even though the term of the Councillors had expired, they are entitled to continue in office. In our judgment, the reliance on this decision is misplaced. The Division Bench was not considering the scope of the provisions of S. 40 of the Act. The question which came for consideration before the Division Bench was in respect of the action taken by the Government under S. 313 of the Act by appointing an Administrator and the Division Bench had laid down the principles which must be observed before passing that order. In para 14 of the judgment, the Division Bench dealt with an objection raised on behalf of the Government that the petition itself had become infructuous in view of the subsequent enactments and events referred to in the additional affidavit. One of the circumstances relied upon on behalf of the State was that the term of the Municipal Councillor had come to an end and, therefore, it was futile to consider whether the appointment of an Administrator was in accordance with law or otherwise. The Division Bench did not accept the contention and held that an illegal order cannot be cured by mere fact that the term of the Councillors has expired. The petition filed to challenge the order of appointment of the Administrator during the subsistence of the term cannot be defeated by the mere fact that on the date of the hearing of the petition, the term has expired. While dealing with this contention, the Division Bench made an observation that though the initial term of the Councillors had expired, they are entitled to continue in office. We are unable to read anything in this observation to conclude that the Division Bench has held that the term of the Councillors automatically stands extended under sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act even in cases where the general elections to elect fresh Councillors are not held. In our judgment, the reliance upon the decision of the Division Bench in Malkapur Municipal Council's case (AIR 1977 Bom 244) is misconceived.

11. That takes us to the consideration of challenge to the vires of S. 48A of the Act. S. 48A of the Act reads as under:—

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 40 or any other provisions of this Act, where the term of office of five years of the Councillors of any Council has expired and the State Government is of opinion that in the changed circumstances the continuance of such Councillors in office is not necessary or expedient, the State Government may, at any time, even during the period the term stands extended under sub-sec. (1) or (3) of S. 40, by order, published in the Official Gazette, direct that —

(a) all Councillors of the Council (including the President and the Vice-President) shall, as from the date specified in the order, cease to hold and shall vacate their offices as Councillors or otherwise; and

(b) the person appointed by the State Government, from time to time, shall be the Administrator to manage the affairs of the Council, during the period from the said date up to the day preceding the date on which the first meeting of the reconstituted Council after the general election is held, where there is a quorum. Such general election shall be held within a period of one year, from the date of publication of the order issued under this sub-section in the Official Gazette.

(2) During the said period, all the powers and duties of the Council and its various authorities under this Act or any other law for the time being in force shall be exercised and performed by the Administrator.

(3) The Administrator may delegate any of his powers and duties to any officer for the time being serving under the Council.

(4) The Administrator shall receive such remuneration from the Municipal fund, as the State Government may, from time to time, by general or special order, determine."

Before we advert to the contention urged by Dr. Naik in support of the petition, it would be appropriate to refer to the statement annexed to the Ordinance issued by the Government of Maharashtra on Feb. 4, 1981 and which was subsequently replaced by the amending Act. The Statement, inter alia, mentions that the Government was under the impression that the term of the outgoing Councillors is deemed to be automatically extended even after the expiry of the normal term of five years or extended term of six years until the general election is held and the successors enter on their office. The Government further considered that such Councillors who claim to continue by automatic extension may not be able or inclined to attend to all the important matters except day to day administration of the local authority. The statement further recites that general election cannot be held on account of some temporary difficulties and in such cases, short extension may be justified, but when it is not possible to hold the general election for a longer period for administrative or other reasons, it is not desirable to continue such Councillors indefinitely. In view of these peculiar circumstances that some of the Councillors of the Municipal Councils have continued to hold the office for 7 or 8 years, the Government felt that amendment to the Act was seriously called for and as the Legislation was not in Session, the Governor issued the Ordinance. The Ordinance, as it stood, enabled the Government to appoint Administrator who could function till the day preceding the day on which the first meeting of the reconstituted Council after the general election is held. In the amended S. 48A of the Act, it was provided that such general election shall be held within a period of one year from the date of the publication of the order issued under the sub-section appointing the Administrator.

12. The first challenge to the enactment of S. 48A of the Act is that it is beyond the legislative competence of the Maharashtra Legislature. It is urged that Entry 5 in List II of the Constn. does not authorise the State Legislature to make law enabling the State Government to dissolve the term of the existing Councillors and to appoint an Administrator. Entry 5 in List II of the Constn. reads as under:—

"Local Government, that is to say, the constitution and powers of municipal corporations, improvement trusts, district boards, mining settlement authorities and other local authorities for the purpose of local self-government or village administration."

The entry permits the State Legislature to provide for constitution and powers of municipal corporations. The setting up of local self-government is one of the requirements of the Constitution and the State Legislature is entitled to legislate with reference to the constitution and powers of such local government. It is not disputed by the petitioners that it is permissible for the Legislature to determine the duration of the terms of the Councillors, but what is urged is that it is not permissible for the Legislature to provide for reduction of term already extended. The submission is that once the State Government extends the term of the Municipal Councillors beyond the normal term of five years, then it is not permissible for the State Legislature to authorise the State Government to reduce it or to curtail it before the expiry of such period. We do not find any merit in this submission. It is well-settled that the power to grant includes the power to withdraw. The State Government was conferred with the power to give extension for a period of one year in exceptional circumstances. As the power is conferred to grant extension, there is nothing illegal or illogical if the authority is further provided to withdraw such extension in changed circumstances. The grant of extension is left to the discretion of the State Government though undoubtedly such discretion is to be exercised in exceptional circumstances and for sound reasons. The State Legislature, by enactment of S. 48A of the Act, merely conferred the power on State Government to withdraw such extension in changed circumstances and, in our judgment, the State Legislature was perfectly within the compass of its Legislative competence while empowering the State Legislature to do so. Entry 5 enables the State Legislature to legislate in regard to the constitution and powers of the Municipal Corporations. Fixation of a term of the Councillor or grant of extension in such term and withdrawal of such extension are matters which are so closely connected with the constitution and powers of the local government that we have no hesitation whatsoever in concluding that the State Legislature was perfectly competent in enacting S. 48A of the Act.

13. The petitioners then submit that while enacting S. 48A of the Act, the Legislature did not merely confer the power upon the Government to appoint an Administrator by reducing the term of the Councillors in cases where the extension has been given under subsec. (1) of S. 40 of the Act, but also authorised the State Government to exercise the power in cases where subsec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act applies. In other words, the submission is that the Government could exercise powers under S. 48A of the Act and appoint an Administrator even in cases where general elections are held and fresh

Councillors are elected but have not yet taken over the charge. The basic and fundamental rights conferred on the voters, says Dr. Naik, to have representation on the local self-government through their elected representatives is sought to be defeated by insertion of S. 48A in the principal Act. It was urged that Entry 5 in List II enables the State Legislature to constitute local government and regulates the administration by elected representatives but does not permit to pass legislation which would destroy the principle of local government by local people. In our judgment, the contention is not sound because we do not read S. 48A of the Act in the manner suggested by the petitioners. It is undoubtedly true that S. 48A (1) of the Act refers to the situation where the term of office of five years has expired and the Councillors are in office in view of the extension granted by the State Government under sub-sec. (1) of S. 40 of the Act and so also to the deemed continuation under sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act. Shri Sawant, the learned Additional Government Pleader, submits and we find considerable merit in his contention that while enacting S. 48A of the Act, the State Government had to meet a contingency which was unprecedented and unusual. The State Government, says Shri Sawant, was under an erroneous impression that the Councillors can continue indefinitely in their office even after the expiry of their term because of the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act. Shri Sawant submits that the Councillors of large number of Municipal Councils continued to hold the office even after the expiry of term of six years by resort of sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 and in these circumstances, the Government felt it necessary to cover the cases of such Councillors also by inserting sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 in the sweep of S. 48A (1) of the Act. Shri Sawant submits that the intention of the Legislature in inserting sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 in S. 48A of the Act was obviously to cover only those cases where the tenure of six years is over and the general elections are not held but Councillors are continued without any authority by resort to sub-sec. (3) of S. 40 of the Act. In our judgment, the powers could be exercised by the State Government under S. 48A of the Act only in cases where the State Government has extended the term of Councillors from five years to six years and such extension is still subsisting. We will deal with this aspect later in greater detail, and suffice it to say here that it is neither the intention of the Legislature, nor the plain reading of S. 48A indicates that the Government could exercise the powers under the said amended Section and could appoint the Administrator even in cases where the elections are already held. The submission of Dr. Naik that by enacting this amending Section, the Government decided to by-pass the election of Municipal bodies by the citizens is not correct. We do not think that the Legislature intended to confer the power upon the Government to appoint the Administrator to prevent the elected representatives of people from taking over charge of Councils. It hardly requires to be stated that the State Government is duty bound to hold elections for the purpose of filling up of the posts of the Councillors in the Municipal Councils before the expiry of the normal term of the Councillors. It is only in exceptional circumstances where the elections could not be held that an extension could be given. It is possible that the situation may arise that even during the extended period, the elections could not be held as where the war has broken out and in such circumstances after the expiry of the term of six years, there would be a vacuum in the administration of the Municipal Council. In such situation where the term of six years is expiring and the elections could not be held for sound reasons, that the Government could well exercise the powers under S. 48A of the Act before the term of expiry of six years. We hope and trust that the State Government would exercise the powers under S. 48A of the Act only in such cases and such cases alone and in no other circumstances. Reading amended Section as it is, in our judgment, the State Legislature was perfectly competent to enact the Section under challenge and the petitioners' grievance that the enactment was beyond the legislative competence of the State Legislature deserves to be repelled. By taking into consideration the pith and substance of the legislation and well-settled principle that entries in the List attached to the Schedule of the Constitution should be liberally construed, the challenge on the ground of legislative competency deserves to be repelled.

14. The next ground of challenge to the enactment of S. 48A of the Act is that it violates the fundamental rights guaranteed under Art. 14 of the Constn. It is now well-settled that the legislation can be struck down only on the ground of legislative competency or violation of any fundamental rights or on the ground that the legislation is opposed to the Constitutional provisions. A reference can be usefully made in this connection to a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Municipal Committee, Amritsar v. State of Punjab reported in AIR 1969 SC 1100. It is also well-settled that the burden of proof is on the party who challenges the validity of the legislation on the ground that it offends the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. Shri Justice Khanna, speaking for the Court, in a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Anant Mills Co. Ltd. v. State of Gujarat reported in AIR 1975 SC 1234 (at p. 1242) observed:—

"There is a presumption of the constitutional validity of a statutory provision. In case any party assails the validity of any provision on the ground that it is violative of Article 14 of the Constitution, it is for that party to make the necessary averments and adduce material to show discrimination violative of Article 14."

The averments in the present petition in regard to the infringement of Art. 14 of the Constn. are to be found only in para 13 (h) of the petition. The averment of the petitioners is that the State Govt. has failed to lay down any guideline for exercise of the power and as the power could be exercised arbitrarily and can fluctuate from one case to another, the legislation suffers from the vice of Art. 14 of the Constn. The reliance is placed on behalf of the petitioners on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Smt. Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India reported in AIR 1978 SC 597 and especially the observations of Shri Justice Bhagwati in para 56 of the Judgment. The learned Judge observed that Art. 14 is a founding faith of the Constitution and the pillar on which rests securely the foundation of our democratic republic. Equality is a dynamic concept, observed the learned Judge, with many aspects and dimensions and it cannot be imprisoned within traditional and doctrinaire limits. The Supreme Court further observes that where an act is arbitrary, it is implicit in it that it is unequal both according to political logic and constitutional law and is, therefore, violative of Art. 14 of the Constn. The legislation must answer the test of reasonableness in order to be in conformity with Art. 14 and that implies that it must be "right and just and fair" and not arbitrary, fanciful or oppressive. It is urged that S. 48A of the Act is neither fair, nor just nor reasonable but on the contrary is oppressive and unreasonable.

15. Shri Sawant, on the other hand, urges that the averments made by the petitioners are insufficient and do not spell out the reasons to conclude that the impugned section is violative of Art. 14 of the Constn. The learned counsel further submits that S. 48A of the Act makes no discrimination between the Councillors placed in the similar situation and the challenge that the powers conferred are arbitrary, unfair and unjust is, without any substance. In our judgment, the challenge to the impugned section on the ground of violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India cannot be accepted. It is necessary, at this stage, to examine the true ambit and scope of S. 48A of the Act. The section provides that notwithstanding anything contained in S. 40 of the Act, the State Government may, at any time, order that the term of all the Councillors as from the date specified would come to an end and all the Councillors shall cease to hold and shall vacate their offices as Councillors. It further enables the Government to appoint an Administrator to manage the affairs of the Council till the first meeting of the reconstituted Council after the general election is held. It further casts an obligation upon the State Government to hold the general election within a period of one year from the date of the publication of the order. It is necessary first to determine in which circumstances the Government can exercise the powers under

S. 48A of the Act. The reading of S. 48A (1) of the Act makes two things clear; first that the State Government must arrive at a conclusion that in the changed circumstances, the continuance of the Councillors in office is not necessary or expedient and, secondly the normal term of five years of such Councillors has expired but the State Government has extended the term in pursuance of the powers conferred under sub-sec. (1) of S. 40 of the Act. It is obvious that the State Government cannot exercise the powers under S. 48A of the Act any time during the subsistence of the normal term of five years of the Municipal Councillors. The right to exercise the power under this Section accrues provided the extended term of one year is still subsisting. As observed hereinabove, the State Government is conferred with the power to extend the term for one year beyond the normal term of five years only in exceptional circumstances and which are also required to be recorded in writing in the notification to be published in the Official Gazette. The State Government can extend the term only for a period of one year over the normal term of five years and not beyond that. The special circumstances which prompted the Government to exercise the power of extension may not be available or may drastically change during the period of that one year itself, and only in those cases where the Government is satisfied that the changed circumstances do not make it expedient to continue the Councillors in their office that the power of S. 48A of the Act can be exercised. In other words, two circumstances must exist before resort to the provisions of S. 48A of the Act and those circumstances are: (1) the extended term of the Councillors under sub-sec. (1) of S. 40 of the Act is still running and, (2) the Government is satisfied that in the changed circumstances the continuance of the Councillors is not expedient. The expression "changed circumstances" has obviously reference to the exceptional circumstances which were prevalent when the Government decided to extend the term of the Councillors beyond the normal period of five years. The apprehension of the petitioners that the, "changed circumstances", is an expression which is not definite and can be attributed different meaning or variety of meanings which can fluctuate from one situation to another is not well founded. The changed circumstances do not depend upon the whims or caprice of the State Government, but such circumstances must have reference to the circumstances which Government thought were exceptional at the time of giving extension to the Councillors. S. 40 (1) of the Act provides that exceptional circumstances which prompt the Government to give extension should be recorded in writing and must be incorporated in the Notification to be published in the Official Gazette. That clearly indicated that special circumstances are justiciable in Court and are not left to the whims of the executive. It follows that the reference to the changed circumstances in S. 48A of the Act has reference to the circumstances referred to in S. 40 (1) of the Act and the action of the Government based upon such changed circumstances would also be open to scrutiny in the Court of law. This construction would harmonise the provisions of S. 48A of the Act with that of S. 40 of the Act.

16. Dr. Naik submits that once the powers are exercised under S. 48A of the Act, it is open for the Government to postpone the elections indefinitely and continue the Administrator to manage the affairs of the Council and thereby defeat the fundamental rights of the voter to have his elected representative to manage the affairs of the local government. The submission is not accurate because S. 48 (1) (b) of the Act casts an obligation upon the Government to hold the general election within a period of one year from the publication of the order. Dr. Naik sounded an apprehension that the Legislature may amend the provision over and over again and extend the period fixed for holding the general election. It is not possible to assume that Legislature would act in such a fashion to defeat the fundamental principle on which our Republic has been founded. We hope and trust that no Legislature in this country would enact any legislation which would deprive the citizen of his right to vote and have his elected representative on the local Government. The apprehension of Dr. Naik in this connection seems to be unfounded.

17. Dr. Naik then urges that absolute powers are conferred upon the State Government without any guidelines and there is a danger that the powers would be exercised to the detriment of the citizen and, therefore, as laid down in Smt. Maneka Gandhi's case (AIR 1978 SC 597), the absolute powers without any guidelines is itself a ground to hold that fundamental rights conferred under Art. 14 of the Constn. are infringed. We are not prepared to accept such a broad submission. In the first instance, we are not satisfied that absolute powers are conferred upon the State Government without any guidelines. As mentioned hereinabove, the guidelines are provided as the powers can be exercised only in changed circumstances and only in cases where the extended term of one year after the expiry of normal period of five years is still running and subsisting. Only in those and those cases that the Government can exercise the powers and that too because of the changed circumstances which lead the Government to conclude that the continuance of the Councillors during the extended term is not expedient. In our judgment, the guidelines are clear and specific and in cases the guidelines are violated or any order is passed which is not in consonance with the provisions of the Section, then it is always open for the aggrieved party to approach this Court. As the action of the Government in extending the term beyond the normal period of five years is justifiable, so also the action of the Government to exercise powers under S. 48A of the Act, and therefore in our judgment, the submission of the petitioners that the impugned Section suffers from the vice of Art. 14 of the Constn. is without any merit and deserves to be turned down. As both the grounds of legislative competency and of the violation of the fundamental rights under Art. 14 of the Constn. are without any substance, the challenge to the validity of S. 48A of the Act must be turned down. In our judgment, the State Legislature was perfectly competent to enact S. 48A of the Act and it does not suffer from the any infirmity and does not offend any provisions of the Constitution or the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution of India. We hold that the provisions of Section 48A of the Act are intra vires.

18. That leaves the question as regards the validity of the Notification issued by the State Government on Feb. 5, 1981. The petitioners claim that the Notification was issued mala fide by the State Government and was politically motivated. The averments in this connection are to be found in para 14 (a) of the petition. It is claimed that the impugned order was issued on the ground of political consideration, viz., that the Congress (I) party was reasonably satisfied that they would not be able to capture power in the Municipal Councils. According to the petitioners as the party in power in the State Government was not sure of the results of the Municipal elections, recourse was taken to the provisions of S. 48A of the Act to supersede the Municipal Councils. This is the only averment in regard to the alleged mala fide action on the part of the State Government. In para 20 of the return filed on behalf of the Government, the allegations about the mala fides are denied. We are not satisfied about the challenge to the notification on this count. In the first instance, the averments in the petition on this count are not, at all, satisfactory. The allegations are too vague to require any investigation. It is well-settled that when a party challenges certain action on the ground of mala fides, it is necessary that the details are set out in the petition itself. The petition is silent as regards the requisite averments and no details are furnished save and except a wild averment that the State Government belongs to Congress (I) Party and was not confident of the success in the election to the Municipal Councils. In our judgment, this averment is too vague to require consideration in petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India, and Dr Naik realising this position very rightly did not press the contention.

19. There is another aspect of the matter which cannot be overlooked. The normal term of the petitioners to hold the office of the Councillor was over on Dec. 16, 1979 and even the extended term of one year was over by Nov. 30, 1980. After the expiry of that term, the petitioners had no right to remain in the office because of the provisions of Section 40 of the Act. In spite of expiry of term, the petitioners continued to remain in office merely because the fresh general elections were not held.

It is true that the holding of the election was exclusively within the powers of the State Government and the Municipal Councillors have no control over it, but that does not enable the Councillors to claim any right to remain in office after the term expires. In more than 186 Municipal Councils, the Municipal Councillors were holding their Offices even after the extended term was over, and in such circumstances, the Legislature had to resort to amend the provisions of the Act and make a provision which would enable the State Government to appoint an Administrator. We have made it very clear that it is not open for the State Government to claim that the elections will not be held but the powers under Section 48A of the Act would be exercised even after the expiry of the term. The powers conferred under Section 48A of the Act are obviously to be used only in cases where the extended term has still not run out of its period. The Government has issued the notification in the present case because of the misconception as regards the true interpretation of the provisions of Sec. 40 of the Act and on an assumption that sub-section (3) of Section 40 enables the Councillors to remain in Office as long as the elections are not held and the special meeting is not held. We have pointed out how the assumption was erroneous and that the powers under Section 48A of the Act can be exercised only in cases where the two circumstances mentioned hereinabove are in existence. It is true that in an unusual situation which the Government has to face, the powers have been exercised even in cases where the period of six years has expired but we are not willing to hold that the exercise of the powers in such circumstances was tainted with mala fide intention. For these reasons, though the powers under Section 48A are exercised beyond the expiry of six years, in the present case, we are not inclined to strike down the notification.

20. There is one more ground of challenge to the Notification dated Feb. 5 1981 and that is that the principles of natural justice were not observed by the State Government in as much as no notice was given to the petitioners before taking action. In our judgment, the submission is devoid of any merit and does not require detailed consideration. As we have found that the petitioners have no right to hold the office of the Councillor after the expiry of the period of six years, the Government was not bound to give any notice to the petitioners before taking action under Section 48A of the Act. We fail to appreciate the force in the submission of Dr. Naik that principles of natural justice are violated even though the person who claims violation, had no right to remain in office. In these circumstances, the submission deserves to be turned down. Even otherwise, we enquired from the learned Counsel as to what cause could have been shown if any notice was given, and Dr. Naik had no effective answer. In our judgment, neither the provisions of Section 48A of the Act, nor the Notification dated February 5, 1981, suffers from any infirmity and the petitioners are not entitled to any relief.

21. Accordingly the petition fails and the rule is discharged, but in the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

K. J. Abhyankar with Y. S. Jahagirdar, for Petitioners; Bhimrao N. Naik. for Respondent No. 1.

MADON, J.:— This Petition under Article 227 of the Constitution of India challenges an order made by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal by which the tribunal held that the application filed by the Petitioners and Respondents numbers 2 and 3 under section (84?) (Bombay Act No. LXVII of 1948) (hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as "the said Act"), was not maintainable.

2. The Petitioners and Respondents Nos. 2 and 3 are owners of half portion of a plot of land bearing Revision Survey Nos. 91 and 92 situate in Kagal Taluka in the District of Kolhapur. It will be convenient to refer hereinafter to the Petitioners and Respondents numbers 2 and 3 as "the landlords". In 1953 the landlord leased the said plot of land to one Shankar Krishna Bondre whose heirs and legal representatives are Respondents Nos. 5 (a), 5 (c) and 5 (d). It is not disputed that the said lease was for the purpose of cultivation of sugarcane. By a writing dated October 24, 1969, the said Bondre created a sub-lease in respect of the said plot of land in favour of the First Respondent, Valubai for a period of ten years for a consideration of Rs. 4,000/-. It is the case of the landlords that on coming to learn about the sub-lease they gave a notice of three months terminating the said lease in favour of the said Bondre. In the said notice the ground for termination was mentioned as the creation of the said sublease in favour of the First Respondent without the consent of the landlords. This notice was addressed both to the said Bondre as also to the First Respondent. Thereafter the landlords filed an application under Sec. 84 of the said Act against the First Respondent. The said application was numbered as Tenancy Case No. 9 of 1971 and was heard by the Assistant Collector, Karvir Division, Kolhapur. The said Assistant Collector sent the papers to the Tenancy Aval Karkun, Kagal, for recording evidence, both oral and documentary, which the said Aval Karkun did and forwarded his report to the said Assistant Collector. Before the said Assistant Collector it was contended by the First Respondent that she was in possession of the plot of land on the basis of the said writing dated October 24, 1969 and, therefore, it could not be said that her possession was illegal or invalid. It was further urged that the legality of the First Respondent's tenancy was yet to be decided and, therefore, the landlords should seek redress under Sections 14 and 29 of the said Act. The said Assistant Collector held that the said writing dated October 24, 1969 was executed without the consent of the landlord and, therefore, the possession of the First Respondent was a wrongful possession and that of a trespasser, and he allowed the said application and passed an order of summary eviction from the said land against the First Respondent. The First Respondent thereupon approached the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal in revision. Before the Tribunal four contentions were taken on behalf of the First Respondent, namely, (1) the application under Section 84 was not maintainable and the only remedy available to the landlords was to proceed under sub-section (2) of Sec. 29, (2) the said Bondre was a necessary party to the proceedings, (3) as the said plot of land was leased to the said Bondre for the purpose of cultivation of sugarcane, Section 27 of the said Act was not attracted, and, therefore, the landlords could not file an application under Section 84 on the ground that the said plot of land had been sublet by the said Bondre to the First Respondent, and (4) the said

Bondre had become a deemed purchaser on April 1, 1957, and the question of unlawful subletting by the said Bondre, therefore, did not arise. The Tribunal held that by reason of the provisions of Section 43A of the said Act Sec. 27 did not apply to the plot of land in question inasmuch as the said plot was leased for the purpose of cultivation of sugar-cane and, therefore, the application filed by the landlords under Section 84 was not maintainable and that the proper remedy for the landlords was to proceed under Section 29 (2) of the said Act. It is against this order of the Tribunal that the present Petition under Article 227 of the Constitution has been filed by the Petitioners.

3. The other co-owners not having joined the Petitioner in filing this Petition, they have been made Respondents Nos. 2 and 3 to the Petition. The original Fourth Respondent was a Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal whose name on an application by Mr. Abhyankar, learned advocate for the Petitioners has been deleted from the record. This Petition reached hearing before Pendse, J., on October 23, 1980. At the hearing of this Petition the attention of the learned Judge was drawn to two unreported decision of this High Court, both being by learned single Judges, the first being the judgment of Vaidya, J., delivered on December 11, 1975 in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1782 of 1972 with Spl. Civil Appln. No. 345 of 1972* — Hiralal Vithaldas Gujarathi v. Kondaji Keru Girmee, in which Vaidya, J., held that Section 27 of the said Act did not apply to lands which had been leased for cultivation of sugar-cane. The second decision is that of Apte, J., in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 5076 of 1976 with Spl. Civil Appln. No. 5079 of 1976, Hari Rau Pawar v. Jijabai, decided on July 20, 1977, in which the learned Judge held that Section 27 applied to lands leased for cultivation of sugar-cane. In view of this conflict, Pendse, J., by his order dated October 23, 1980 referred the matter to a Division Bench. While this matter was pending, the Petitioners applied to the Court to bring on record the heirs and legal representatives of the said Bondre who had in the meantime died Bondre's heirs and legal representatives were thereafter added as Respondents Nos. 5 (a), 5 (c) and 5 (d) to the Petition.

*Since Reported in 1977 Mah LJ 768.

4. The question of applicability of Section 27 of the said Act to the plot of land in question arises by reason of the provisions of Section 43A of the said Act. The relevant provisions of the said Section 43A are as follows :

"43A. Some of the provisions not to apply to leases of land obtained by industrial or commercial undertakings, certain co-operative societies or for cultivation of sugarcane or fruits or flowers,

(1) The provisions of Sections 4B, 8, 9, 9A, 9B, 9C, 10, 10A, 14, 16, 17, 17A, 17B, 18, 27, 31 to 31D (both inclusive), 32 to 32R (both inclusive), 33A, 33B, 33C, 43, 63, 63A, 64 and 65, shall not apply to:—

(a) xx xx xx xx

(b) leases of land granted to any bodies or persons other than those mentioned in clause (a) for the cultivation of sugar-cane or the growing of fruits or flowers or for the breeding of livestock;

(c) xx xx xx xx

(2) xx xx xx xx

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-sections (1) and (2), it shall be lawful for the State Government to direct, by notification in the official Gazette, that the leases of lands, as the case may be, to which the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) apply, shall be subject to such conditions as may be specified in the notification, in respect of —

(a) the duration of the lease;

(b) the improvements to be made on the land and the formation of co-operative farming societies for the purpose and financial assistance to such societies;

(c) the payment of land revenue, irrigation cess, local fund cess and any other charges payable to the State Government or any local authority. or

(d) any other matter referred to in sections mentioned in sub-sec. (1)."

It is not disputed that the plot of land in question falls under Cl. (b) of Section 43A (1).

5. It will be noticed that amongst the list of sections which by sub-section (1) of Section 43A of the said Act do not apply to leases of lands granted for the cultivation of sugar-cane are Ss. 14 and 27. It should further be noted that under sub-section (3) of the said S. 43A it is open to the State Government to direct by a notification in the Official Gazette that the leases of lands, as the case may be, to which the provisions inter alia of sub-section (1) apply are to be subject to such conditions as may be specified in the said notification in respect of the four classes of matters set out in clauses (a) to (d) of sub-section (3). Clause (d) speaks of "any other matter referred to in sections mentioned in sub-section (1)", which would include any of the matters referred to in any of the sections specified in sub-section (1) including Sections 14 and 27, as not being applicable to the leases of lands of the classes mentioned in Clauses (a) to (c) of sub-section (1). So far as the leases of lands for the cultivation of sugar-cane are concerned, the Government of Maharashtra has issued a notification dated February 14, 1958, under sub-section (3) of Sec. 43A. The said notification was amended by another notification dated October 8, 1969. The relevant provisions of the said notification as so amended are as follows :

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (3) of Section 43A of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 (Bom. LXVII of 1948), the Government of Bombay hereby directs that the leases of land referred to in Cl. (b) of sub-section (1) of the said Section 43A and to which the provisions of sub-section (1) of the said Sec. 43A apply shall be subject to the following conditions, namely:—

Conditions as to the duration and termination of lease :

xx xx xx xx

3. If a lessee commits any of the defaults mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Sec. 14 in relation to such lease of land, the lease may be terminated by the lessor by giving the lessee three months' notice in writing stating therein the reasons for such termination.

xx xx xx xx

Thus under the said notification a lease for cultivation of sugar-cane can be terminated by the lessor by giving the lessee three months' notice in writing stating therein the reason for such termination if the lessee commits any of the defaults mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 14. Section 14 (1) provides as follows :

14. Termination of tenancy for default of tenant.

(1) Notwithstanding any law, agreement or usage, or the decree or order of Court, the tenancy of any land shall not be terminated — (a) unless the tenant:—

(i) has failed to pay the rent for any revenue year before the 31st day of May thereof;

(ii) has done any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the land;

(iii) has sub-divided, sub-let or assigned the land in contravention of Section 27;

(iv) has failed to cultivate it personally; or

(v) has used such land for a purpose other than agriculture or allied pursuits; and

(b) unless the landlord has given three months' notice in writing informing the tenant of his decision to terminate the tenancy and the ground for such termination, and within that period the tenant has failed to remedy the breach for which the tenancy is liable to be terminated."

6. As it is the case of the landlords that the said Bondre had sublet the said plot of land in contravention of the provisions of Section 27 of the said Act, it now becomes necessary to refer to the said Section 27. Under the said Sec. 27, "Save as otherwise provided in S. 32-F, no sub-division or subletting of the land held by a tenant or assignment of any interest therein shall be valid". The section then sets out the cases in which it is permissible for the lessee either to sub-divide or sublet the land leased or to assign any interest therein. It is not disputed that were Section 27 to apply, the sub-lease in favour of the First Respondent by Bondre would be invalid. Since the Tribunal has held, by its order which is challenged before us, that the proper remedy for the landlords was to proceed under Section 29 (2) and not under Section 84, it will be convenient also to set out the said statutory provisions. Section 29 is headed "Procedure of taking possession", and sub-section provides as follows :

"(2) Save as otherwise provided in sub-section (3A), no landlord shall obtain possession of any land or dwelling house held by a tenant except under an order of the Mamlatdar. For obtaining such order he shall make an application in the prescribed form and within a period of two years from the date on which the right to obtain possession of the land or dwelling house, as the case may be, is deemed to have accrued to him."

Section 84 is in the following terms:

"84. Summary eviction.

Any person unauthorisedly occupying or wrongfully in possession of any land:

(a) the transfer or acquisition of which either by the act of parties or by the operation of law is invalid under the provisions of this Act.

(b) the management of which has been assumed under the said provisions, or

(c) to the use and occupation of which he is not entitled under the said provisions and the said provisions do not provide for the eviction of such persons, may be summarily evicted by the Collector."

7. Mr. Abhyankar, learned advocate for the Petitioners, has submitted before us that the subletting of the said plot of land by Bondre to the First Respondent was in contravention of Sec. 27 of the said Act and that, therefore, under the said Government notification a right accrued to the landlord to terminate the tenancy of the said Bondre and that such tenancy had been validly terminated by him. He further submitted that by reason of the provisions of Section 27 the sub-tenancy created by the said Bondre in favour of the first Respondent was invalid and created no right, title or interest in favour of the First Respondent and the First Respondent was, therefore, a trespasser upon the said plot of land and could, therefore, be summarily evicted by the Collector under Section 84. Mr. Naik, learned advocate for Respondent No. 1, on the other hand, raised four contentions before us, namely, (1) that the tenancy of the said Bondre had not been determined, (2) that the said Bondre was a necessary party, (3) Section 27 had no application to a lease of land granted for cultivation of sugar-cane, and (4) that the application made by the landlords under Sec. 84 was not maintainable and that the proper remedy of the landlords was to proceed under S. 29 (2). Turning now to the first point raised by

Mr. Naik, it does not appear from the record that the First Respondent had at any time contended either before the Assistant Collector or before the Tribunal that the tenancy of Bondre had not been terminated. In fact, it is the admitted position that the First Respondent had received the said notice of termination dated June 30, 1970. The fact that such a notice had been sent to both the said Bondre and the First Respondent is mentioned in the report made by the Tenancy Aval Karkun. The Tribunal also, while setting out the undisputed facts, has stated that the said Bondre was a tenant of the said plot of land from 1953 to 1969, which could only be on the basis that after 1969 the tenancy of the said Bondre had been terminated. There is, therefore, no substance in the contention that Bondre's tenancy had not been terminated by the landlords.

8. The questions whether Section 27 of the said Act applies to the plot of land in question and the section under which the remedy of the landlords lay are interlinked and require to be considered together. By the express terms of Section 43A, Sections 14 and 27 are not to apply to leases of lands granted for the cultivation of sugar-cane. However, in the notification which the State Government is empowered to issue under sub-section (3) the State Government can direct that these leases should be subject to such conditions as may be specified in the notification in respect of inter alia matters referred to in the sections mentioned in sub-section (1). Therefore, while issuing a notification under Section 43A (3) the State Government can direct that leases of lands for cultivation of sugar-cane were to be subject to the conditions specified by it in respect of matters referred to in Ss. 14 and 27 which are two of the sections which by the opening words of sub-section (1) of Section 43A do not apply to the lands and leases specified in the said sub-section (1). It is necessary to bear in mind that under the said sub-section (3) what the State Government is empowered to do is not to direct that certain sections which, though made inapplicable to these lands and leases by Section 43A (1), will none the less apply to these lands and leases or any of them. What it is empowered to do is to direct that these lands and leases shall be subject to certain conditions specified in the said notification in respect of the matters specified in clauses (a) to (d) of sub-section (3). So far as the Government notification in question is concerned, what the Government has done is to inter alia specify the conditions subject to which a lessor can terminate a lease, namely, when the lessee commits any of the defaults mentioned in cl. (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 14. The termination is to be by three months' notice in writing stating therein the reason for such termination. The subject-matter of Section 14 is termination of tenancy for default by tenant, one of such defaults being subdivision or subletting or assignment of lands in contravention of Section 27. What the Government has done is instead of reproducing the matters set out in S. 14 (1) (a) it has stated shortly in the said notification that, "If a lessee commits any of the defaults mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 14 the lease may be terminated by the lessor", but the effect of these words is to incorporate in the said notification the conditions upon which a lease can be terminated under Section 14 (1) (a). The Government has thus in substance reproduced in para 3 of the said notification the provisions of Section 14 (1) (a). It is pertinent to notice that the said notification refers only to clause (a) of Section 14 (1) and not to clause (b) of Section 14 (1) which gives to the tenant an opportunity to remedy the breach complained of within the three months' period of notice. As we have seen, one of the defaults specified in Section 14 (1) (a) is subdivision, subletting or assignment of lands in contravention of S. 27, and if the effect of reference to S. 14 (1) (a) has the effect of incorporating, by a reference in the said notification, the provisions of Section 14 (1) (a), then necessarily the provisions of Section 27 must also be deemed to have been incorporated in the said notification, because had the provisions of S. 14 (1) (a) been reproduced in the said notification, then while setting out the provisions of sub-clause (iii) of Cl. (a) the Government would have been required to set out also the circumstances in which a subdivision, subletting or assignment would be in contravention of Section 27, which would be when a subdivision, subletting or assignment would be invalid under Section 27. Vaidya, J., in his judgment in Special Civil Application No. 1782 of 1972 with Special Civil Application No. 345 of 1972, referred to earlier, held that if the Government wanted Section 27 to apply to lands leased for cultivation of sugar-cane, it would have specifically said so and that in the absence of any such specific reference it would not be proper for the Court to apply Section 27 just because the Government had referred to Section 14 (1) (a). Apte, J., on the other hand, in the said Special Civil Application No. 5076 of 1976 with Special Appln. No. 5079 of 1976, also referred to earlier, came to the conclusion that Section 14 (1) (a) having been referred to and since sub-clause (iii) of clause (a) mentioned Section 27, it was unnecessary to make any reference to S. 27 in the Government notification in question. With respect, we find ourselves unable to accept the view which found favour with Vaidya, J. We have already pointed out that the effect of the reference to Section 14 (1) (a) in Cl. 3 of the said Government notification is to incorporate in the said notification the provisions of Section 14 (1) (a) and the incorporation of the provisions of Section 14 (1) (a) (iii) in the said notification has the effect of incorporating in the said notification the provisions of S. 27. Were the view which found favour with Vaidya, J., correct, the result would be that even though the lessee of a land leased for cultivation of sugar-cane had subdivided, sublet or assigned the land in contravention of Section 27, the landlord would have no right to terminate lease even though such subdivision, subletting or assignment were invalid and would have thus no remedy in respect of these defaults. It can never have been the intention of the State Government to make these defaults the grounds for termination of tenancy without even providing for a locus poenitentiae for the tenant, which clause (b) of Section 14 does, and none the less leave the landlord without a remedy; and we are unable to ascribe such intention to the Government.

9. This, therefore, takes us to the question as to the proper remedy of a landlord in a case where there is an illegal subletting. The sub-tenancy in favour of the First Respondent being invalid under Section 27 of the said Act, by reason of its being in contravention of the provisions of that section, the First Respondent did not and could not acquire any right, title or interest to the plot of land in question. Her possession of the said plot was, therefore, wholly unauthorized and that of a trespasser. The question is whether the landlords should have proceeded under Sec. 29 (2) as contended for by Mr. Naik and as held by the Tribunal, or should have proceeded under S. 84, as they have in fact done. Under Section 29 (2) save as otherwise provided in sub-section (3A) of S. 29, a landlord cannot obtain possession of any land or dwelling house held by a tenant except under an order of the Mamlatdar. Admittedly, sub-section (3A) has no application to the present case. The question to consider, therefore, is whether in the present case the landlords could have obtained possession of their plot of land by making an application to the Mamlatdar under S. 29 (2). Such an application, however, is to be made where the land is held by a tenant. Clause (6C) of Section 2 defines the expression "to hold land" as an owner or tenant as follows:

"(6C) 'to hold land' as an owner or tenant shall, for the purposes of Clause (2D) of this section and Secs. 32 (1B), 32A, 32B and 63, mean to be lawfully in actual possession of land as an owner or tenant, as the case may be;"

That definition, however, applies only when the expression defined is used in the sections mentioned in the said clause (6C) and not in other sections. Section 29 is not amongst the sections mentioned in clause (6C). Clause (6C) therefore, cannot be of any use in interpreting the expression "held by a tenant" in Section 29 (2). We must, therefore, turn to the definition of the expression "to hold land" in Cl. (12) of Section 2 of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code, 1966 (Maharashtra No. XLI of 1966), which is as follows :

"(12) 'to hold land' or 'to be a landholder or holder of land' means to be lawfully in possession of land, whether such possession is actual or not".

Now the plot of land was not in the actual possession of tenant Bondre but it was in the possession of the First Respondent. Unlike in the case of clause (6C) of Section 2, where the possession of the tenant has to be actual possession, under Cl. (12) of Section 2 of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code the possession may be either actual or constructive. It was contended by Mr. Naik that the said Bondre was constructively in possession of the said plot of land though the First Respondent, his sub-tenant. The sub-tenancy being, however, invalid and creating no right, title or interest in favour of the First Respondent, the First Respondent cannot be said to be in possession of the said plot of land on behalf of the tenant, the said Bondre, because by the express words of the said S. 27 the sub-tenancy and consequently the agreement upon which the transaction of sub-tenancy was founded must both be held to be invalid, and there cannot therefore, be said to be either any privity of contract or privity of estate between the said Bondre and the First Respondent.

10. What the landlords were seeking to do is to obtain possession of their land on which a trespasser was squatting without any right or title in law. Bondre was neither in actual nor in constructive possession of the said plot of land. He had left the said land, it appears, for good and had no interest left in the said plot of land. In this connection, it is significant that though the heirs and legal representatives of the said Bondre have been joined as Respondents Nos. 5 (a), 5 (c) and 5 (d) to this petition, they have not appeared before the Court at any stage of the proceedings. It should further be borne in mind that the tenancy of Bondre had already been validly terminated before the landlords' said application was filed. The question, therefore, of obtaining possession of land from a tenant who has continued in possession after the termination of his tenancy did not arise in the present case. What the landlords had to do in the present case was to obtain possession of their plot of land from the trespasser who was squatting on it. To such a case Section 29 (2) of the said Act cannot be applied. The only section which can apply is Section 84. In Spl. Civil Appln. No. 278 of 1956 — Shiddappa Bhimanna Ullaoidi v. Mallappa Mennappa Badachi decided by Gajendragadkar, J. (as he then was), and Gokhale, J., on April 10, 1956 (Bom) (Unrep.) it was decided that an application under Section 29 of the said Act could not be against a trespasser and that the only provision that could be invoked was that contained in Sec. 84. This position was reiterated by another Division Bench of this Court consisting of Mudholkar and Patel, JJ., in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 3207 of 1958 — Smt. Anjalibai v. Shankar Bala Patil, decided on February 10, 1959 (Unrep.). The ratio of these two cases was again re-emphasized by another Division Bench consisting of Patel and Wagle, JJ., in Mallasha Sayabanna Mangonda v. Khadir Ajam Aherwadi, (1969) 71 Bom LR 523, in which Section 84 again came up for interpretation. In that case the Court further held that the expression "the said provisions" in Cl. (c) of Section 84 did not mean merely the provisions relating to transfers but they could only mean the provisions of the said Act and that if it is shown that the occupant is not entitled under any of the provisions of the said Act to occupy or use the land and if there is no provision for eviction of such persons, S. 84 would apply. The only provision of the said Act upon which Mr. Naik has relied as providing the proper remedy for eviction is S. 29 (2) which, as we have already held earlier, is wholly inapplicable. The use and occupation of this plot of land by the First Respondent is obviously contrary to the provisions of the said Act, and there being no remedy provided under any of the provisions of the said Act, the only section under which the landlords could have proceeded was S. 84.

11. This brings us to the last question whether the tenant Bondre was a necessary party to the proceedings before the Assistant Collector. This contention raised on behalf of the First Respondent overlooks the real nature of the proceedings. It overlooks the facts that the said Bondre has left the land, handing over possession thereof to the First Respondent; that his tenancy had been determined; that even though the sub-lease period of ten years has expired, he has not claimed to come back into possession of the plot of land purported to be sub-leased by him; and that the person in actual possession today is a rank trespasser without the least colour or authority of law, namely, the First Respondent. Such a trespasser cannot contend as against the true owner of the property that the person entitled to possession of the said plot of land is not the owner but his tenant. In the words of S. 84 of the said Act, the First Respondent was a person unauthorizedly occupying and wrongfully in possession of the said plot of land to the use and occupation of which she was not entitled under the provisions of the said Act, and she can, therefore, be summarily evicted by the Assistant Collector, irrespective of the fact whether the said Bondre was a party to the proceedings or not.

12. In the result, this Special Civil Application succeeds and is allowed and the rule issued therein is made absolute by setting aside the impugned order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Kolhapur, and restoring the order of summary eviction passed by the Assistant Collector, Karvir Division, Kolhapur. Respondent No. 1 will pay to the Petitioners the costs of this Special Civil Application. The other Respondents will bear and pay their own costs.

Application allowed.

MASODKAR AND BHARUCHA, JJ.

Shri Govardhandhari Devasthan, Korpagaon, Appellant v. Collector of Ahmednagar and others, Respondents.

F. A. No. 468 of 1975, D/- 1-3-1982.

(A) Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), Sec. 23 — Compensation — Deductions — Acquisition of land held as restricted tenure — Compensation paid only to extent of two-thirds of market price, remaining one-third deducted on basis of restricted tenure — Held, deduction on basis of restricted tenure was impermissible and claimants were entitled to entire compensation. AIR 1982 Bom 225 Rel. on. (Para 9)

(B) Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), Sections 31 and 32 — Applicability — Acquisition of lands belonging to public trust governed by Bombay Public Trusts Act — Trustees not competent to alienate property except with previous sanction of Charity Commissioner — Procedure under Sections 31 and 32 has to be followed — Procedure under Section 31 (1) can be avoided by issuing notice under Section 56B of said Trusts Act to Charity Commissioner, who acting under Section 36 of that Act, can give sanction for alienation by laying down conditions similar to those enacted in Sec. 32. (Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), Section 56B read with Sec. 36).

Trustees qua property are persons who are not, ordinarily, possessed of the capacity to alienate property held under trust. Therefore, for the purpose of working out the provisions of getting statutory satisfaction in the matter of payment of compensation, the Collector is obliged, to follow the procedure as is required by Sections 31 and 32 of the Land Acquisition Act. (Para 24)

As incapacity to alienate arises, notwithstanding the instrument of trust, by the provisions of Section 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, the Collector for the purpose of making proper orders should, in the case of acquisition of properties belonging to public trusts, give notice to the Charity Commissioner as it would be in keeping with the principles underlying Section 56B of that Act. The making of the award for the purpose of compensation and its payment clearly is a legal proceeding of civil character giving rise to civil consequences and in view of the provisions of Section 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act under which the Charity Commissioner can give the sanction for the purpose of alienation of the given property by putting conditions which may be similar as are enacted by S. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act the statutory satisfaction by payment of compensation money can be worked out. Therefore, if validly a notice is given under Section 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act by the Collector in the compensation proceedings and, acting upon the provisions under Section 36 by laying down the conditions for the purpose of alienation of the given property, the Charity Commissioner permits the trustees to act in consonance with the principles underlying Section 32 of the L. A. Act, then substantially the procedure required by Section 31 (1) of the L. A. Act would not be required to be followed, for then the case would be answered by showing that the trustees possessed the capacity to alienate the property in keeping with the provisions of Section 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. In all other cases, where either because the notice is not given or because there was no valid sanction in favour of the trustees even otherwise capable to alienate the property, the Collector will have to have recourse to the provisions of Sections 31 and 32 of the L. A. Act. In such case also, when the matter goes to the Court under sub-section (2) of Section 31, the Court is bound to give notice, as is required by Section 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, to the Charity Commissioner. Held, neither of the above procedures had been followed in the instant case, on acquisition of lands belonging to a public trust governed by the Bombay Public Trusts Act. The Collector had consigned the compensation in the Government Treasury with a rider that cash allowance should be paid to the trustees upon recommendation by the Tahsildar routed through the Collector. Such a direction on the face of it was ultra vires the provisions of Section 31 (1) of the L. A. Act and had to be treated as non est. For all purposes, the Collector was bound to deposit the amount of compensation in the Court to which a reference under Section 18 would be submitted. In no other manner could he get a statutory discharge by payment of compensation with regard to the property belonging to the Public Trust. (Paras 18, 26)

V. D. Govilkar, for Appellants; M. R. Kotwal, Govt. Pleader, for Respondent No. 1; Mrs. C. D. Shenoy, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for the Charity Commissioner.

MASODKAR, J.:— This appeal and the suo motu notice issued to the Charity Commissioner have reference to the compensation proceedings under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 with regards to the lands belonging to the public trust, being Shri Govardhandhari Devasthan, Kopargaon, bearing survey No. 238 (13 acres) and survey No. 31 (6 acres and 36 gunthas). Section 4 notification was issued on January 9, 1969. The Special Land Acquisition Officer, Ghod Project, Ahmednagar, made an award under Section 11 of the L. A. Act, under which compensation as against survey No. 238, being Rs. 72,152/-, was directed to be credited into the Government Treasury with a rider that proposal for payment of cash allowance be submitted to the Commissioner, Poona Division, Poona through the Collector, Ahmednagar, by the Tahsildar, Kopargaon. Thus, he virtually seized the amount in favour of the Government and put the same in the custody of the Tahsildar for the purpose of permitting payment of cash allowance to the trustee. He determined the compensation for survey No. 31 at Rs. 25,392/-, being the two-thirds value of the market price. This determination under Section 11 of the L. A. Act, in this manner, was subjected to reference under Section 18 of the L. A. Act by the trustees and the reference was tried by the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Ahmednagar.

2. By the impugned judgment under appeal at the behest of the trustees, the learned trial Judge rejected the reference, firstly holding that the two-thirds market price paid for survey No. 31 was proper in view of the Government Resolutions with regard to restricted tenures. With regard to the compensation awarded in respect of the other land, it was found, on the basis of the evidence, that the compensation was adequate, the rate being Rs. 4,800/- per acre. It does not appear that any notice as required by Section 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 was issued to the Charity Commissioner, nor does it appear that the direction with regard to the holding of the compensation money in favour of the Government was properly considered in the light of the law applicable to such matters.

3. When the appeal came up for hearing, because of the admitted position that the lands belonged to the public trust and that the original claimants and the appellants before us were the trustees thereof, we thought it fit to issue a suo motu notice under Section 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 to the Charity Commissioner. A faint submission was made on behalf of the Collector objecting to such issuance of the notice, but, as the decision in the present appeal would show, such an objection is without any merit. In fact, if the compensation is payable to the persons who are the trustees of the trust governed by the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts

Act, 1950, the Special Land Acquisition Officer could not have consigned the compensation money to the Government Treasury, nor could have conferred authority by giving a direction for the purpose of cash allowance payable upon the recommendation of the Tahsildar routed through the Collector. As we see, Section 31 of the L. A. Act enjoined that in such matters, he had to follow the procedure indicated by sub-section (2) of Section 31 by deposit of the compensation with the Court competent to hear the reference under Section 18 of the L. A. Act. The appeal, admittedly, arises out of the proceedings under Section 18 itself and we do not find any impediment in exercise of our jurisdiction in dealing with the direction with regard to the converted property of the public trust as a result of the land acquisition. Only because as a result of the acquisition the corpus is transformed into cash compensation from that of the lands, it does not cease to be the trust property, nor does it cease to be governed by the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act and the original instrument of trust. Thus, we overrule the objection of the learned Government Pleader with regard to the issuance of the notice and hearing the matter in the presence of the Charity Commissioner.

4. This takes us to the debated questions in the appeal and the notice.

5. On behalf of the appellants, Mr. Govilkar contended that the compensation awarded at the rate of Rs. 4,800/- per acre is inadequate and the value should have been worked out on per sq. ft. basis. Secondly, he contended that the compensation could not have been deducted to the extent of one-third of the price on the basis of restricted tenure with regard to survey No. 31 and paid only to the extent of two-thirds. According to him, the trustees are entitled to the entire compensation.

6. As against this, the learned Government Pleader supported the award of compensation, as is made by the impugned judgment, and, in his view, the direction in the award was simply to protect the property of the trust.

7. As for the Charity Commissioner, Mrs. Shenoy, the learned Assistant Government Pleader, on the other hand, contended that the direction in the award was contrary to law and was given without even notice to the Charity Commissioner. She contended that the true position is that the trustees being the persons not competent to alienate the property, the monies should have been deposited with the civil Court under Section 31 (2) to be dealt with under Sec. 32 of the L. A. Act. Several provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 were brought to our notice with regard to the incapacity of the trustees to deal with the property. Reliance was placed on certain decisions by the learned Counsel in this regard, to which we will make reference during the course of the judgment.

8. Turning first to the contention of Mr. Govilkar, as far as the evidence is concerned, it does not admit of doubt that the property acquired is agricultural lands and as such would be valued on that basis. The evidence of Rangnath and Khanderao can hardly be relied upon to hold that they had agreed to purchase the property on the sq. ft. basis. Similarly, the evidence tendered with regard to the lease deeds in respect of 24 gunthas out of survey No. 226 and 1 acre and 20 gunthas out of survey No. 238, which, admittedly, were made after a period of about 20 months from the date of Section 4 notification, does not bear any scrutiny for the purpose of fair valuation. The only evidence that has been rightly accepted by the learned trial Judge is that of Dr. John, who purchased the property on July 27, 1967 from Yeshwant Pawar. The sale deed at Ex. 85 shows that Rs. 41,000/- were paid for 8 acres and 33 gunthas. There is nothing to doubt the transaction evidenced by that sale deed. The transaction being a comparable one, the view taken by the learned trial Judge that the compensation works out fairly to Rs. 4,800/- per acre will have to be affirmed.

9. As far as the deduction introduced as against the compensation for survey No. 31 and the payment only of the two-thirds to the claimants are concerned, we find that the said deduction is impermissible, particularly in view of our decision in First Appeal No. 567 of 1976 (State of Maharashtra v. Ganpatrao Amritrao Deshpande), decided on Feb. 23, 1982 (reported in AIR 1982 Bom 225). We have found that in the land acquisition proceedings, what is determinable is the market price and there is hardly any scope for introducing arbitrary deductions on the basis of restricted tenures. Only because survey No. 31 was originally

Kazi inam land was regranted to the Devasthan in a new tenure and it was that of restricted character in the matter of alienation, it does not follow that the market price of this land would be less than Rs. 4,800/- per acre. The non-payment of one-third of the compensation and its deduction by Special Land Acquisition Officer on that count will have to be set aside.

10. Turning to the remaining submissions, which arise mainly upon the submissions of Mrs. Shenoy appearing for the Charity Commissioner, it is necessary to look into the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 and the provisions of the L. A. Act and particularly of Sections 31 and 32 thereof so as to find out the validity of the direction contained in the land acquisition award made by the Special Land Acquisition Officer.

11. Admittedly, the property belongs to the Devasthan, which is a public trust registered under the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950. Under that Act, Section 19 permits inquiry and Section 22B requires registration of the trust property in the register to be maintained by the Charity Commissioner. Section 22C deals with particulars of immovable property of such trust. Section 30 provides that the particulars of the property so entered are deemed to be known to any person acquiring any immovable property belonging to a public trust. Section 36 further puts an embargo on the entitlement of the trustees to sell, exchange, gift or lease out any immovable property belonging to the public trust without the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioner, notwithstanding anything contained in the instrument of trust in that regard. The Charity Commissioner is enabled to accord sanction upon such conditions as he may think fit to impose, regard being had to the interest, benefit or protection of the trust. The term "trust" by itself is not defined, though there is a definition of "public trust", as is available in S. 2 (13) of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950. The Indian Trusts Act, 1882 defines the term "trust" as being an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner, or declared and accepted by him for the benefit of another, or of another and the owner.

12. These provisions indicate that the Bombay Public Trusts Act is a self-contained statute with regard to the matters of public trust and its property and whatever may be the instrument of trust conferring the competency upon the trustees, its alienation, which is the subject-matter of Section 36, cannot be validly effected without the previous sanction of the statutory authority, that is, the Charity Commissioner. Thus, in the case of trustees of a public trust governed by the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, they do not possess unqualified power to alienate the trust property and, on the other hand, it is made statutorily contingent upon the previous sanction being accorded by the Charity Commissioner upon such conditions as may be necessary for the protection and furtherance of the trust.

13. The concept of trust, juridically, is well-settled. When the property is vested in a trust and thereunder the ownership and vesting is conferred upon the trustees, in law a peculiar relation arises between the holder of such property and his capacity to deal with the same. The trust creates a sort of duplicate ownership. The trust property, in law, is owned not only by the trustees but also by the beneficiaries and the relation between them is governed by the obligation annexed to the ownership which enjoins upon the trustee to apply and use the same in the fulfilment and discharge of that obligation for the benefit of the other. That is why the trust ownership is qualified by the annexed obligations and is not an absolute ownership known to law. (See Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 33, page 87, and Salmond on Jurisprudence, 9th Edition, page 349). When there arises such a dual or duplicate ownership in the matter of the property, the resultant is the trust, the trustee's ownership being a matter of form rather than of substance, it being nominal rather than real. In legal theory no doubt, the position of the trustee is that of an owner subjected to the obligation by the instrument of trust to apply and use the property vested in him for the purposes and for the benefit of the real owner. Between the trustee and the beneficiary, in substance, the property belongs to the beneficiary, though for its application and use it vests in the trustee. However, qua third person, fiction of ownership continues to prevail in favour of the trustee. The trustee, thus, gets the right and entitlement to represent the beneficiary in dealings with the world at large. In such matters of dealings, the question of his capacity to alienate or otherwise deal with the trust property depends upon the intent of the instrument of trust and purposes thereof.

14. The provisions enacted by S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 are in the nature of statutory rider over the power of the trustee to alienate the trust property. In the light of this statutory rider, when the property belongs to the trust, the question of necessity must arise whether the trustee has the power to alienate the land. Such question will have to be first answered by looking to the nature of the trust as well as the instrument thereof and the statutory conditions like the one available in S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. Juridically the trust being of conditional ownership and by its very nature being limited, the trustee is not the absolute or full owner of the trust property; in the sense he is not free to deal with it as he likes nor can he dispose of the same at his sweet will. Both these incidents, that is, the capacity to enjoy and capacity to alienate, are eclipsed because of the trust and the confidence reposed for the benefit of the beneficiaries. In case the instrument of trust indicates that the trust is created without any fetter with regard to disposition of the property, the question is different, but in case the capacity to alienate is fettered, then, notwithstanding the vesting of the property, the trustee could not be equated with the owner of the property. Ordinarily, we think that looking to the juridical character of the trust qua the property, the trustee is a person who cannot be said to be free to alienate the property at his sweet will and for any purpose.

15. The provisions of S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 abundantly make it clear that in spite of capacity in favour of the trustee to alienate the property by sale, exchange or gift or leasing it out for a period exceeding 10 years or 3 years, as the case may be, those provisions statutorily fetter the authority of the trustee in the matter of dealing with the property belonging to the public trust and no such alienation, as is spoken to in that section, can be validly made without the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioner. It is not enough that the instrument of trust permits sale, exchange or gift or leases for the given period of immovable property. It is further to be shown for a valid alienation that there had been the previous sanction by the Charity Commissioner of such alienation. It is significant that the purpose in enacting the provisions of S. 36 is primarily to protect the trust itself; and the conditions imposed are required to be in the interest and benefit of such trust. The provisions are thus made in public interest and their rider will have to be kept in view while administering or dealing with the property of the trust.

16. Having said so, we must turn to the relevant provisions of the L. A. Act, 1894. It is not necessary to have the feedback of all the provisions. Suffice it to say, after S. 9 notices are served, the Collector has to make an award after holding an inquiry. By that award, he makes an offer with regard to the compensation as against the immovable property. Upon making such award, S. 31 enjoins the Collector to tender payment of the compensation to the persons interested and entitled thereto and he is required to pay it to them unless prevented by one or more of the contingencies mentioned in sub-sec. (2). The contingencies contemplated by sub-sec. (2) of S. 31 are four in number, being the persons interested do not consent to receive it, or such persons are not competent to alienate the land which is the subject-matter of acquisition, or there be any dispute as to the title to receive the compensation, or there is any dispute with regard to the apportionment of the compensation money. In all such matters, the Collector has to deposit the amount of the compensation in the Court competent to decide references u/s. 18 of the L. A. Act. With regard to the class of persons who have no power to alienate the immovable property under acquisition, sub-sec. (1) of S. 32 provides how the Court has to deal with the deposited money. Thereunder cls. (a) and (b) indicate how the Court will deal, by making an order, with the said deposit.

17. The critical phrase with which we are concerned covers the class of persons who are not competent to alienate the land. It raises, indeed, a question of fact to be determined on the basis of the material available to the Collector and thereafter to the Court u/s. 32 of the L. A. Act, but if the matters are clear, in that the class of persons are not competent to alienate the land, then the Collector has no other option but to follow the provisions of S. 31 of the L. A. Act by depositing the compensation money in the Court. The provisions of Ss. 31 and 32 in this regard further the statutory policy and are enacted in public interest. Every acquisition results in extinguishing the title of the owners of the property and the law enjoins that the person whose property is being so acquired is entitled to statutory compensation, as is provided by the provisions of the L. A. Act. Unless such compensation, is awarded and paid, there is no statutory extinction of the title. It is to have statutory discharge by payment of compensation as against the title-holder that the provisions of S. 31 enjoin upon the Collector to tender payment of compensation in the manner provided by sub-sec. (1) of S. 31.

18. It is well settled that if the entitlement as well as the liability are prescribed by law and the procedure, mode and manner for working out the same are also prescribed, then the statutory authority can act only in the manner so provided by the statute, any other manner being impermissible to be followed. We do not find in the text of the L. A. Act any authority in the Collector to consign the compensation in the Government Treasury, as is done in the present case, with a rider that cash allowance should be paid to the trustees upon recommendation by the Tahsildar routed through the Collector. Such a direction on the face of it is ultra vires the provisions of S. 31 (1) of the L. A. Act and must be treated as non est. For all purposes, the Collector is bound, in the case of class of persons who are not competent to alienate the land, to deposit the amount of compensation in the Court to which a reference u/s. 18 would be submitted. In no other manner he can get a statutory discharge by payment of compensation with regard to the property belonging to such class of persons.

19. The juridical character of the ownership of the trustees being a qualified one and fettered by the terms of the trust, prima facie, we think that when the property belongs to the trust, the trustees would be the persons of that class which falls within the provisions of sub-sec. (2) described by the terms "if there be no person competent to alienate the land". Though, ordinarily, the trustees would fall in this class and for statutory satisfaction in the matter of payment of compensation the Collector would be enjoined to follow the procedure required to be followed by sub-sec. (1) of S. 31, cases may arise where the Collector could be satisfied that the trustees have full authority to alienate the land. The law of trusts is not averse to clothe the trustees in all cases with the competency to alienate the land. It gives rise to finding the facts in each case with regard to the competency of the trustees to alienate the land. If the fetters are irremovable and the competency is qualified, either by the terms of the instrument of trust or by reason of the necessary intentment of the obligations flowing therefrom, then the legal procedure required to be followed is indicated by sub-sec. (1) of S. 31. It is obvious that for the purposes of compensation deposit, once the trust property is transformed into the compensation money, the Court is made the custodia legis and it is by the order of the Court, as is required to be done u/s. 32, the monies are further to be applied either by investing in the purchase of other lands to be held in the similar title and subject to the similar conditions, or, if such a purchase cannot be effected forthwith, then by putting the same in the Government or other securities as the Court may think fit. It is the Court which has to direct the payment of the interest of other proceeds arising from such investments to the person or persons who would, for the time being, be entitled to possession of the immovable property which is acquired under the provisions of the L. A. Act. The deposit has to remain so invested until the same is applied in the purchase of a similar property or in payment to the beneficiaries who become absolutely entitled thereto. This scheme clearly is intended to protect the initial trust and further its object. As far as possible, basically, the property in trust has to be protected and administered as such. The result of compulsive acquisition is to transform the property into that of compensation money, but, because of the provisions of S. 32, it has to be invested, as far as possible, in acquiring similar corpus which was the subject of the trust. Once such corpus is acquired,

S. 32 and the scheme thereunder stands fully satisfied. In case the obligations are fulfilled by payments to the beneficiaries, the scheme comes to an end. The statutory scheme of S. 32, thus, in the matters of trust is of prime importance and is to further the public interest when obviously it relates to the property of the public trust.

20. Now, we may turn to the decisions which are relevant for the purpose of determining the controversy. S. 32 of the L. A. Act came for construction in the context of the widow's estate in the case of Mrinalini Dasi v. Abinash Chandra Dutt, (1910) 14 Cal WN 1024, and the Calcutta High Court found that when the property was the widow's estate, the matter was governed by S. 32 and the person who had taken away the money of compensation could be compelled to refund the money into Court for the purpose of investment and the Court had authority to give directions for the proper investment of the money in the interest of the reversioners in accordance with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience in the absence of any statutory power. The provision was applied because Hindu widows had no authority to alienate the property. It is significant to observe that in that case, the principle underlying S. 32 was stated to be the one intended to protect the interest in property of the reversionary heirs whose land was taken in compulsive acquisition for public purpose. The same High Court in the case of Kamini Debi v. Promotha Nath Mookerjee, (1912) ILR 39 Cal 33, applied the provisions of S. 32 to debuttar property in the hands of shebait following the principle laid down by Mrinalini Dasi's case, holding that the land dedicated to an idol or to religious and charitable purposes is land belonging to the shebait or trustee who had no power to alienate the same and that compensation money was required to be invested in approved security and that the provisions of S. 32 of the L. A. Act were attracted. In a different context before the same High Court in the case of K. C. Banerjee, Official Receiver, In re, AIR 1928 Cal 402, the question arose u/s. 32 as to the character of the compensation money paid for acquisition of the property to a person not competent to alienate the same. The facts in that case were that a portion of immovable property belonging to debuttar estate of certain idols was acquired under the L. A. Act and the compensation was deposited with the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal u/s. 31 of the Act. After referring to the earlier judgments and also to the judgment of the Privy Council in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Devi, (1904) 31 Ind App 203, to the effect that although an idol may be regarded as a juridical person capable of holding properties, it is only true in an ideal sense and the matter of fact is that the possession and management of the dedicated properties belonged to shebait, the Court observed that the compensation money represented the estate of an incompetent person but partook of the nature of real property and did not lose its character as such only because it had been transformed in shape. The money in deposit remained the debuttar property.

21. In the Madras High Court too the same principle appears to have been stated and applied. In the case of Shiva Rao v. Nagappa, (1906) ILR 29 Mad 117, the Madras High Court was considering the case of a family charity. It held that the properties set apart for charities are prima facie inalienable, and where such properties are acquired under the L. A. Act, the award made thereunder may direct the investment of the compensation money in Government securities. It is not clear from that judgment as to whether the investment was directed by the Court or not. The case of Special Deputy Collector, Ramnad v. Rajah of Ramnad, AIR 1935 Mad 215, related to the acquisition of an impartible estate and the holder of such estate was found to be not the absolute owner of the same and by reason of that, the Court held that the provisions of Ss. 31 and 32 of the L. A. Act, prima facie, were attracted. The Court observed that in the ordinary sense of the words available in Ss. 31 and 32, the holder of such impartible estate was incompetent to alienate the lands and the compensation money could not be paid over to him but was required to be converted into other land to form part of the impartible estate. After noticing the judgment of this Court rendered in the case of Assistant Collector of Kaira v. Vithaldas Vallavadas, AIR 1915 Bom 143, the Madras High Court found it difficult to follow the distinction and stated the law to be that if person is entitled to land which by reason of some enactment he cannot alienate, he is incompetent to alienate it. It may be stated that after considering the judgment of this Court in Vithaldas Vallavadas's case, the Madras High Court found that that decision did not afford real parallel to the case that was for decision before it.

22. We do not find that there is any substantial departure from the principle which is basic to Ss. 31 and 32 of the L. A. Act available in the decision of this Court in Vithaldas Vallavadas's case (supra). That case arose in appeal, which was raised by the Assistant Collector of Kaira against an order made by the Land Acquisition Court u/s. 18 of the L. A. Act. The property in that case was governed by the provisions of S. 3 of the Bhagdari and Narvadari Tenures Act, which provided that it was not lawful to alienate any portion of any bhag or share in any Bhagdari or Narvadari village other than a recognised sub-division of such bhag or share. The submission in that case was that the holders of such land were incompetent to alienate the land. The trial Court rejected the said contention by pointing out that S. 32 of the L. A. Act applied to cases where the possessor of the land had a limited interest in it, e. g., a tenant for life, guardian, trustee, widow, administrator, etc. but not to persons called narvadar holding a portion of land of a narva. After considering the provisions of S. 32, which uses the phrase "if it appears that the land belonged to any person who had no power to alienate the same", both the learned Judges (Bachelor, J. and Hayword, J.) found that the section contemplates an absolute disability to alienate in the person to whom the land belonged and that the disability of the narvadar was not absolute. On the other hand, it was found that the navadar could alienate any portion of the holding in certain circumstances, provided, for instance, he joined with it another parcel so that the whole subject of alienation was a recognised sub-division. Hayword, J. made it clear by pointing out that the case was not one of disability attached to the holder of the land but a sort of disability attached to the land.

23. Suffice it to say that the judgment in Vithaldas Vallavadas's case (AIR 1915 Bom 143) recognises the principle that if there be the holder under disability to alienate the land, then the provisions of S. 32 are attracted. On the interpretation of the provisions of the Tenures Act (Bombay Act V of 1862), the Court found that the disability was only contingent with regard to certain circumstances and not absolute. In other words, circumstances not being present, the property was capable of being alienated; the impediment was in the matter of working out the alienation and not operative upon the capacity to alienate the property.

24. All the above decisions, in our view, highlight the principles underlying the provisions of Ss. 31 and 32 of the L. A. Act, 1894 with regard to property taken in acquisition in the hands of person having limited power to deal with it and further having no capacity to alienate the same. Trustees qua property are the persons who are not, ordinarily, possessed of such capacity. Therefore, for the purpose of working out the provisions of getting statutory satisfaction in the matter of payment of compensation, the Collector is bound, nay obliged, to follow the procedure as is required by Ss. 31 and 32 of the L. A. Act.

25. At this stage, a mention may be made of the provisions of S. 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, read with the provisions of S. 36 thereof. We have already indicated that notwithstanding anything contained in the instrument of trust, the trustees of the property belonging to the public trust cannot validly alienate the same except with the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioner laying down the conditions in keeping and in furtherance of the trust. The transformation of the corpus in the shape of compensation money does not affect the character of the trust nor the character of the property. The principles underlying the provisions of S. 32 of the L. A. Act require that, as far as possible, the compensation money should be utilised for restoring the corpus in the original form, being a similar immovable property, and, in case of failure, by investment in Government or public securities till such property is available. As incapacity to alienate arises, notwithstanding the instrument of trust, by the provisions of S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, we think that in keeping with the principles underlying S. 56B of that Act, the Collector for the purpose of making proper orders should, in the case of acquisition of properties belonging to public trusts, give notice to the Charity Commissioner. No doubt, S. 56B speaks of the notice being given by the Court, meaning any civil Court of competent jurisdiction in the State of Maharashtra (sub-sec. (3)), but the principle underlying S. 56B is that the Charity Commissioner, in whom the power to supervise the charities has been conferred by the statute, has to be heard whenever the matter arises affecting a public, religious or charitable trust in any legal proceedings. The making of the award for the purpose of compensation and its payment clearly is a legal proceeding of civil character giving rise to civil consequences and in view of the provisions of S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act under which the Charity Commissioner can give the sanction for the purpose of alienation of the given property by putting conditions which may be similar as are enacted by Section 32 of the L. A. Act, we think that the statutory satisfaction by payment of compensation money can be worked out. Therefore, if validly a notice is given u/s. 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act by the Collector in the compensation proceedings and, acting upon the provisions u/s. 36 by laying down the conditions for the purpose of alienation of the given property, the Charity Commissioner permits the trustees to act in consonance with the principles underlying S. 32 of the L. A. Act, then substantially the procedure required by S. 31 (1) of the L. A. Act would not be required to be followed, for then the case would be answered by showing that the trustees possessed the capacity to alienate the property in keeping with the provisions of S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. In all other cases, where, either because the notice is not given or because there was no valid sanction in favour of the trustees even otherwise capable to alienate the property, the Collector will have to have recourse to the provisions of Ss. 31 and 32 of the L. A. Act. In such case also, when the matter goes to the Court under sub-sec. (2) of S. 31, the Court is bound to give notice, as is required by S. 56B of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, to the Charity Commissioner.

26. Neither of these procedures has been followed in the present case and quite an anomalous and unsustainable deduction with regard to the compensation money has been made. The said part of the award is, thus, liable to be set aside.

27. On the basis of the above discussion, we make the following order:—

The compensation in respect of Survey No. 238, being the sum of Rupees 72,152/- along with interest at 4 per cent per annum, is payable to the trustees in the manner indicated above and so also the unpaid compensation of Rs. 12,696/- along with 4 per cent interest as against survey No. 31. The interest is payable from the date of taking possession till the money is paid by deposit in the trial Court. The trustees represented by Mr. Govilkar have undertaken that, with the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioner and upon such conditions as the Charity Commissioner may impose with regard to the investment of the said money, they will, upon receipt of the same, invest the same, firstly, for the purpose of acquiring a similar property and/or, if that be not possible, invest the same in Government or public securities. In our view, this undertaking satisfies the requirements of both S. 36 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act and S. 32 of the L. A. Act. The monies so payable are directed to be deposited within four weeks in the trial Court. The appeal to this extent is allowed. There would be no order as to costs in the appeal.

28. In the suo motu notice issued to the Charity Commissioner, we quantify the Counsel's fees at Rs. 700/- payable by the Collector, the first respondent herein.

Appeal partly allowed.

C. S. DHARMADHIKARI AND

S. J. DESHPANDE, JJ.

Dr. Abdur Rahim Undre, Appellant v. Smt. Padma Abdur Rahim Undre, Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 99 of 1981, D/- 30-1-1982.*

(A) Muslim Law — Nikah Fasid — Presence of two witnesses of Mohammadan faith cannot ipso facto convert a civil marriage into a Nikah Fasid.

No civil marriage validly performed and solemnized, according to any law in force can be treated as a religious marriage.

*Against judgment of A. N. Mody, J. reported in 1982 Mah LJ 243.

FZ/FZ/C417/82/RSK

age, by introducing elements of formalities of personal law. The presence of two witnesses of Mohammedan faith, cannot ipso facto convert any civil marriage into any other form of marriage much less a 'Nikah Fasid': AIR 1930 PC 31 Rel. on.

(Para 10)

In the instant case when the marriage was solemnized in England as per the procedure laid down by the British Marriage Act, the defendant wife was a Hindu. Hence it was not possible to say that the said marriage could concurrently be treated as Nikah Fasid within the meaning of Muslim Law. In that case even a secular and monogamous marriage solemnized as per provisions of Special Marriage Act, 1954 would have to be termed as 'Nikah Fasid' and a secular and monogamous marriage between the two muslims or between muslim husband and non-muslim wife would become impossible even if they desire to solemnise such a secular and monogamous marriage.

(Para 11)

(B) Foreign Marriage Act (33 of 1969), S. 18 — Scope — Words "any other marriage solemnized in a foreign country" — Include all marriages solemnized in a foreign country either before or after coming into force of the Act. (Interpretation of Statutes — Form prescribed under statute).

The Foreign Marriage Act is a complete Code in itself. S. 18 was intended to cover all foreign marriages. Expression used in S. 18 (1) viz. "to any other marriage solemnized in the foreign country" must take in its import all other marriages which are not covered by the first part of S. 18 (1). The word 'solemnized' indicates that it applies to the marriages which are solemnized even prior to coming into force of the Act. This is further clear from S. 17 which deals with registration of foreign marriages solemnized under other laws. S. 12 (2) lays down that no marriage shall be registered under S. 17 unless at the time of registration it satisfies the conditions in S. 4. Then by sub-sec. (6) of S. 17 it is declared that the marriage registered under this section shall as from the date of registration be deemed to have been solemnized under the Act. If the form prescribed under the Rules is read with S. 17 of the Act, it is further clear that it takes in its import even the marriage already solemnized. Form prescribed under the Rules can be used as an aid to construction on the basis of principles of contempore expositio which is a well settled rule of interpretation.

(C) Foreign Marriage Act (33 of 1969), S. 18 — Expression "grant relief in respect of such marriage" — Means relief which a Court can grant in matrimonial matter — Voluntary and unilateral act of giving talaq to wife is not covered by the expression.

The expression "grant relief" used in sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of S. 18 will have to be read harmoniously, as every sub-section throws light on another. The said expression will have to be understood to have the same meaning in all the sub-sections. So understood the expression "grant of relief in respect of such marriage" must mean a relief which could be granted by a court in respect of matrimonial matters. This expression cannot take in its import a voluntary and unilateral act of a husband of giving talaq to his wife which does not require any intervention of the Court. (Para 15)

Thus, the words "grant of relief" as used in S. 18 (4) obviously means grant of relief by an independent court, tribunal or authority which is available qua a foreign marriage obviously to both the parties. It cannot take in its import a unilateral voluntary act of husband of dissolving a marriage by oral talaq. For such a unilateral act it is not necessary for husband to approach any court, tribunal or authority. Moreover such a unilateral right of divorce is only conferred upon a husband by Mohammedan law and not on wife. Sub-sec. (4) contemplates grant of relief at the instance of both the parties. A relief contemplated is a relief which could be granted by a court of law or independent tribunal or authority. Such a relief should be available qua particular marriage. Relief must take in its import obviously the grounds on which such a relief could be granted by an independent tribunal or authority. It cannot be forgotten that under the Mohammedan law defendant-wife who is a Hindu has no remedy to seek matrimonial relief. If the wife wants to seek a matrimonial relief qua foreign marriage which took place in the year 1966 as per the provisions of British Marriage Act, she has no remedy available under the Mohammedan law. So far as she is concerned, law available is obviously Foreign Marriage Act. (Para 16)

(D) Foreign Marriage Act (33 of 1969), S. 18 — Provision cannot be said to be retrospective in nature or one affecting any vested right. (Muslim Law — Marriage — Husband has no vested right to marry more than one wife).

(Paras 31, 32)

It is not correct to say that a Mohammedan husband has a vested right to marry more than one wife viz. to have four wives at a time. It cannot also be said that anybody has got a vested right in the matter of divorce. To say the least dissolution of marriage is not a part and parcel of the contract of marriage. Nobody has got any vested right in the matter of dissolution of marriage. So far as the polygamy is concerned, the provision of Mohammedan law is only permissive or optional in nature and not obligatory. It only lays down a ceiling on wives and does not lay down that every Mohammedan should have four wives as a matter of right. It is in a form of an exception. Therefore it cannot be said that Chapter IV or S. 18 of Foreign Marriage Act which deals with matrimonial reliefs in respect of foreign marriages has affected any vested right retrospectively. The said chapter deals with the events taking effect in future though based on an earlier incident viz. foreign marriage. Only because it takes into consideration earlier event of marriage, it cannot be said that the provision is retrospective in nature or affects any vested right. It is well settled that vested right is a right which has come into operation and is not a potential right. Mere right to take advantage of a provision of law is not an accrued right. A statute cannot also be said to be retrospective, "because a part of the requisites for its action is drawn from a time antecedent to its passing". AIR 1964 SC 464 and AIR 1980 SC 101, Ref.

(Para 19)

(E) Foreign Marriage Act (33 of 1969), S. 18 — Marriage solemnised under British Marriage Act, 1949, between Muslim husband and Hindu wife in 1966 — Marriage is governed by Special Marriage Act, 1954, and not by personal law of the husband (Mohammedan Law). (Special Marriage Act (1954), S. 1). (Private International Law — Marriage — Rights under). (Interpretation of Statutes — Ambiguity — Interpretation consistent with Part IV of Constitution is to be preferred).

In the present case the marriage took place in England on 5th of May 1966. Therefore, it was a foreign marriage within the meaning of Foreign Marriage Act, 1969. The said marriage was solemnized under the British Marriage Act, 1949 and there is no statutory law in the field which provides for grant of matrimonial reliefs as contemplated by S. 18 (4) of the Act. Therefore, the marriage between a plaintiff male muslim and the defendant a Hindu wife which took place in England was governed by Chapter IV of the Foreign Marriage Act, 1969.

(Para 20)

Once it is held that the marriage which took place in England in 1966 was secular in the form and content and also monogamous and such a secular law is also available in India in the form of Special Marriage Act, 1954 then even the lex domicilli in case of such secular marriage will be the Special Marriage Act and not the Personal Law of the husband. This is more as when one of the parties belongs to different religion and is not a Muslim. After all there should be harmony between different personal laws so that the parties can live together.

(Para 22)

In this context it is also pertinent to note that between 1954 to 1969 two Indian citizens domiciled in India could have married under Special Marriage Act even outside India. A marriage which is monogamous in form continues to be so, whereas original religious marriage can be converted into a secular marriage. However, a secular marriage cannot be converted into religious marriage. Therefore if there is in the field an Indian enactment which is applicable to all the citizens of India irrespective of their religion, then so far as secular marriages are concerned the said law will become lex-domicilli of India for the purposes of matrimonial reliefs. Such an interpretation will be in tune with Article 44 as well as the preamble of the Constitution.

(Para 23)

If two interpretations are reasonably possible regarding the provisions of law, then the law will have to be interpreted and applied in the perspective of Part IV of the Constitution, which deals with directive principles of the State policy and benefit of reasonable doubt of law and fact, if there be such doubt must go to the weaker section, in the present case to women.

(Para 24)

(F) Muslim Law — Divorce — Unilateral talaq — Whether violates Articles 14 and 44 of the Constitution. (Question left open).

(Para 25)

(G) Muslim Law — Conversion to — Essentials — Burden of proof where conversion is denied.

The real test of conversion to Moham-medan religion is of professing Moham-medan religion. For conversion there should be a declaration of one's belief and the said declaration should be in such a way that it should be known to those whom it may interest. If a public declaration is made by a person that he has ceased to belong to one religion and is accepting another religion, he will be taken as professing the other religion. AIR 1965 SC 1179, Rel. on.

(Para 27)

There should be a change of heart and honest conviction in the tenets of new religion in lieu of tenets of the original religion. If a ceremony of conversion is gone into conscientiously after such an honest conviction, then alone there is a conversion of faith or it can be said that a person is professing another religion. In case of conversion from one religion to another a strict proof is required and it cannot be easily inferred. More so when a person converted denies even the factum of conversion. As to whether there is in fact a conversion or not must depend on facts and circumstances of each case and no general rule can be laid down in that behalf. ILR (1948) 2 Cal 119, Rel. on.

(Para 28)

(H) Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), S. 151, O. 39, R. 1 — Suit for declaration that marriage stood dissolved by talaq and for injunction restraining the defendant from entering the matrimonial house — Court finding that marriage was subsisting in law but had broken down beyond repairs — Another suit relating to ownership of flat also pending in the Court — Held this was a fit case for granting a conditional injunction to the effect that flat should be partitioned and wife restrained from entering portion reserved for the plaintiff and that the plaintiff should pay defendant maintenance of Rs. 1000 p.m. till fixation of maintenance in proper proceedings. 1982 Mah LJ 243, Reversed.

N. A. Mody with S. H. Karim, for Appellant; Suresh Parekh and Smt. Nanavati with Y. E. Mooman, for Respondent.

DHARMADHIKARI, J.:— The appellant-plaintiff Dr. Abdur Rahim Undre married Smt. Padma, respondent-defendant in the United Kingdom on 6th May 1966. At the time of marriage plaintiff Abdur Rahim was a Mohammedan whereas respondent Padma was a Hindu. Both of them were Indian citizens. Their domicile was India. Both of them held Indian passports. On 6th of May 1966 the plaintiff and the defendant went to the office of Registrar of Marriages at Weymouth. Before that a necessary notice of intention to marry was already given. Thereafter on 6th of May 1966 the parties went through the marriage ceremony before the Registrar and the said marriage was duly registered. The marriage certificate relating to this marriage duly authenticated and certified copy is also on record. From this certificate it appears that the marriage took place under the British Marriage Act, 1949. After this marriage birth of Shabnam took place on 18th of May 1967. of Shama on 19-11-1968. Thereafter on 4th April 1969 the plaintiff and the defendant with their children returned to India. After their return on 14th of November 1969 Suhail, a boy was born. It is the case of the appellant-plaintiff that on 29th December 1969 conversion of the defendant Padma took place and she was converted to Muslim religion. On the same day a Nikah ceremony was also performed. Thereafter on 21st of November 1973 Sabir, a boy was born. Thereafter relations between the parties became strained and hence the plaintiff further alleged that he gave talaq to the defendant Padma on 20-4-1978. This talaq was given in the absence of defendant Padma. However, an oral intimation about it was given to her in paradise apartment on the same night. It is the case of the appellant that he was forced to give divorce in view of the extreme cruelty meted out to him by Smt. Padma. She had been carrying on a sustained and deliberate campaign of defaming him which resulted in causing acute mental tension as well as interference with his professional duties. He also alleged that due to the ill-treatment meted out by Smt. Padma and her indifferent attitude towards him and the members of his family, the marriage relationship had broken down beyond the scope of reconciliation and in these circumstances he dissolved the marriage by giving unilateral talaq on 20-4-1978. After this divorce he told the respondent-defendant not to enter his residential premises. However, the respondent went to the said flat, broke it open and took away several things, articles, jewellery etc. about which the appellant had to lodge a police complaint. It is the case of the plaintiff that he was in exclusive possession and occupation of the flat at Nepean Sea Road. He also contended that the four children were living with him and were under his care and custody. As according to plaintiff he became apprehensive that the defendant was likely to enter upon and remain in the said flat with the help of hirelings and would also go to the extent of forcibly removing the children from his custody, he was constrained to file the present suit for a permanent injunction against the defendant. The suit was filed on 24th of April 1978. On the same day an ex parte injunction was granted by the Court against the defendant. On 22nd of June, 1978 the said ex parte injunction was confirmed. Therefore, the respondent filed an appeal against the said order on 21st of July 1978 bearing A.O. No. 251 of 1978. Desai, J. vide order dated 29th August 1978 confirmed the order passed by the trial Court on certain terms. After the judgment in A.O. the plaint was amended and the plaintiff also sought a declaration from the Court that the defendant was not his wife. While amending the plaint the plaintiff alleged that on 29-12-1969 the respondent-defendant had embraced Islam and went through the Nikah ceremony at 303. Abdul Rahman Street at his father's residence and that on 20th April 1978 he gave her talaq and thus dissolved marriage relationship. He alternatively contended that even assuming that the defendant was not a Muslim and was a Hindu as contended by her, still Muslim personal law was applicable to their relationship and the plaintiff was entitled to dissolve the marriage by giving talaq as per Mohammedan Law. Thus the suit filed by the plaintiff was one for declaration as well as for injunction.

2. The defendant denied various allegations made in the plaint and also filed a counter-claim. According to her the court had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit and the suit filed was misconceived and bad in law. She also contended that the plaintiff had not come to court with clean hands. According to her the marriage in England was under civil law of England. She also contended that the flat in Paradise Apartment was secured out of their joint contribution and the said flat is also her matrimonial home. Therefore she is entitled to stay therein in her own right as wife as well as joint owner. She denied the factum of conversion or Nikah, and contended that the averments made in that behalf were wholly false. She also denied the factum of divorce or talaq. She maintained that all through she was a Hindu and continues to be a Hindu even today. According to her the marriage is not yet dissolved in accordance with law and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to any declaration in that behalf. She denied the allegation regarding cruelty or that the children were under protection and custody of the plaintiff. She also denied that she had any intention to forcibly remove the children with the help of hirelings. She also denied that she had ever broken open the flat or had illegally entered into the same. In the counter-claim she claimed that the flat is of joint ownership. The plaintiff filed his say in reply to the counter-claim denying the allegations made therein. In view of the pleadings of the parties, the learned Judge of the Civil Civil Court, Bombay framed the following issues :

"1. Whether this Hon'ble Court has jurisdiction to try and entertain this suit in respect of prayer (b) of the plaint as alleged in para 1 of written statement?

2. Which law will apply to the parties as regard marriage and divorce?

3. Does the plaintiff prove that the defendant embraced Islam on 29-12-1969 and was a Muslim thereafter?

4. Does the plaintiff prove that the defendant went through a Nikah ceremony with him on 29-12-1969?

5. Whether the plaintiff proves that the defendant has been duly divorced as alleged by the plaintiff?

6. Is it proved that the premises of flat No. 12-A, Paradise Apartments is the Matrimonial home of the parties?

7. If so, does the defendant further prove that she continues to be entitled to the user of the aforesaid premises for her residence?

8. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any reliefs as prayed for and if so, what?

9. Is the counter-claim correctly valued for the purposes of jurisdiction and court-fee?

10. Does the defendant prove that the marriage between her and the plaintiff performed on 6-5-1966 in England under the Civil Marriages Act, is still subsisting?

11. Does the defendant prove that the Talaknama is antedated and fabricated?

12. Is the defendant entitled to the declarations or any of them as prayed in clauses (b) and (c) of the prayers?

13. Is the defendant entitled to the orders of injunction as prayed in cls. (f), (g), (h), (i) and (j), of prayers in the counter-claim?

14. Whether the defendant is entitled to any relief and if so what?

3. In support of his case the plaintiff examined as many as 11 witnesses, including himself whereas the defendant examined herself and two other witnesses. The parties also produced documentary evidence before the trial court. After appreciating all the evidence on record both oral and documentary the trial court came to the conclusion that the Special Marriage Act read with Foreign Marriage Act or English Law will apply to the parties as regards the marriage and divorce. He also found that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the defendant embraced Islam on 29th Dec. 1969 or was a Muslim thereafter. He also held that the plaintiff failed to prove that the defendant went through Nikah ceremony with him on 29-12-1969 as alleged. He also found that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the defendant has been duly divorced as alleged by him. So far as the flat in Paradise Apartment is concerned, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the said flat is a matrimonial home of the defendant and the defendant is entitled to the user of the said premises for her residence. So far as the marriage in England is concerned, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the marriage between the parties on 6th of May, 1966 in England was under the civil law or Civil Marriage Act and is still subsisting. As a necessary consequence of these findings he (we?) dismissed the suit filed by the plaintiff.

4. Being aggrieved by the findings as well as the judgment and the decree passed by the City Civil Court, the plaintiff filed an appeal before this Court bearing First Appeal No. 307 of 1980. The said appeal was heard by Mody, J.

Mody, J. disposed of the appeal on a pure question of law by holding that the marriage in the present case was governed by the provisions of Foreign Marriage Act, 1969, and therefore in case of such a marriage the divorce can be obtained by husband only in accordance with the provisions of the said Act and not otherwise. He also came to the conclusion that the plaintiff is also not entitled to equitable relief in the nature of injunction having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case. Therefore, the learned single Judge dismissed the appeal filed by the plaintiff.

5. Being aggrieved by this appellate judgment dated 9th of July, 1981 the plaintiff filed the present Letters Patent Appeal. The said appeal was admitted on 22nd of July, 1981 but no stay was granted. Against the interim order refusing the stay, the appellant filed a special leave petition before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court refused to grant special leave vide order dated 31st of July, 1981 but asked this court to dispose of the appeal within one month. Thereafter on 4th August, 1981 the defendant wife came to live in the Paradise Apartment. When the appeal came up for hearing, a grievance was made before us that the learned single Judge committed an error in not deciding all the issues involved in the appeal, including the controversy based on facts viz. the alleged conversion, Nikah as well as talaq. Therefore, the parties filed before us on 3rd of November, 1981 a joint purshis agreeing that all the questions and issues of facts and law, including that of jurisdiction whether decided by the first appellate court or not should be decided by this Court in this Letters Patent Appeal. In view of this joint purshis, we have permitted the learned counsel appearing for both the sides to argue all the questions of law and facts. We have heard the learned counsel on all the issues in detail.

6. Shri Mody, learned counsel appearing for the appellant contended before us that the learned Judge of the first appellate court committed an error in coming to the conclusion that the marriage between the parties is governed by the Foreign Marriage Act of 1969. According to Shri Mody the said Act is not retrospective and, therefore, the provisions of S. 18 (1) of the Foreign Marriage Act are not applicable to the marriage which took place in the year 1966. He contended that the law applicable to the said marriage is the personal law viz. Muslim

Law and according to the Muslim Law the plaintiff husband was authorised to give talaq to his wife without intervention of court. He also contended that in any case S. 18 of the Foreign Marriage Act does not preclude the operation of the Mohemmedan Law concurrently and, therefore, it was open to the plaintiff to give divorce to his wife as per his personal law. He also contended that even if it is held that the marriage between the parties which took place in the year 1966 in England was performed according to the British Marriage Act, still on their return to India, as the parties were Indian citizens, they were governed by the law of domicile, which is the personal law of the husband viz., Mohammedan Law and, therefore, it was open to the plaintiff to give divorce to his wife according to the provisions of Mohammedan Law.

7. Shri Mody, then, contended that the learned Judge of the City Civil Court committed an error in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove conversion of the defendant as well as the subsequent Nikah. According to Shri Mody the said finding is wholly perverse and is liable to be set aside. In the alternative it was contended by Shri Mody that the marriage which took place in England was Nikah Fasid within the meaning of Mohammedan Law. From the evidence of the defendant itself it is quite clear that two Mohammedan witnesses were present at the time of the said marriage and in this view of the matter the said Nikah Fasid could have been dissolved by the plaintiff by giving talaq to his wife in accordance with the provisions of Mohammedan Law. In any case according to Shri Mody from the evidence placed on record it is quite obvious that the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant had already broken down beyond any scope of reconciliation. The defendant had gone to the extent of making wild allegations against the plaintiff letter Exh. C. In these circumstances their living together under the same roof was wholly impossible and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction as claimed by him qua the flat in the Paradise Apartment.

8. On the other hand it is contended by Shri Parikh, learned counsel appearing for the respondent-wife that the marriage in England was performed according to the British Marriage Act, 1949. The said marriage was a monogamous one and secular in nature. To such a marriage the Special Marriage Act 1954 alone is applicable. Therefore, the marriage performed under the secular law of England cannot be dissolved under the personal law of the parties. According to Shri Parikh so far as secular marriages are concerned lex domicile in India is a Special Marriage Act and not personal law of the parties. He then contended that all through the defendant continued to be Hindu and was never converted. According to him the evidence adduced by the plaintiff to prove conversion is wholly false and the learned Judge of the trial court was quite justified in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove either conversion or Nikah. Shri Parikh then contended that provisions of Mohammedan Law which provide for a unilateral talaq is no more good law as it is violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. So far as the provisions of Foreign Marriage Act are concerned, according to Shri Parikh the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant which took place in the year 1966 is also covered by the provisions of S. 18 (1) of the Foreign Marriage Act. The question of giving retrospective effect to the provisions of Foreign Marriage Act does not arise as divorce is not a part and parcel or incident of marriage. Nobody can claim any vested right in matters of divorce etc. Even according to the plaintiff divorce in this case took place after coming into force of the Foreign Marriage Act, 1969 and, therefore, the said marriage could have been dissolved as per the procedure prescribed by the Foreign Marriage Act and not otherwise. Therefore according to the learned counsel the marriage of the defendant with the plaintiff which took place in 1966 in England is still subsisting.

9. So far as the flat in the Paradise Apartment is concerned, it is contended by Shri Parikh that a separate suit is pending between the parties in the High Court wherein the question of title qua the said flat is involved. In the said suit the plaintiff has prayed for a declaration as well as injunction, hence the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in that behalf, in this suit, more so when it is the case of the defendant that the flat was purchased out of the joint funds of the plaintiff and the defendant and, the defendant has also claimed joint ownership in the said flat. In any case, as long as relationship of husband and wife, is subsisting the defendant is entitled to live in her matrimonial home and, therefore, no injunction can be granted which will result in throwing her out of the said matrimonial home. Therefore, in substance it is contended by Shri Parikh that the judgment and decree passed by the City Civil Court as well as the single Judge in First Appeal is wholly justified and the plaintiff is not entitled to any reliefs.

10. So far as the marriage dated 6th May, 1966, solemnized in England is concerned parties are not at issue. The defendant herself has given evidence that marriage was solemnized and plaintiff also admitted in his evidence that required ceremony and formalities were completed and he accepted the defendant as his wife in the presence of witnesses. Therefore, it must be held that marriage dated 6th of May, 1966 was performed in England according to the British Marriage Act, 1949. This position is also clear from the entry of marriage made pursuant to the provisions of Marriage Act, 1949. However, among the persons who attended the aforesaid marriage, there were two adult Mohammedans, one Dr. Amin and the other Dr. Khan, who were also physically present. At the time of solemnization of the said marriage defendant was admittedly a Hindu by religion, Mr. Mody has contended that the said marriage should be treated as 'Nikah Fasid' irregular marriage according to Mohammedan Law. It is not possible for us to accept this contention. No civil marriage validly performed and solemnized, according to any law in force can be treated as a religious marriage, by introducing elements of formalities of personal law. The presence of two witnesses of Mohammedan faith, cannot ipso facto convert any civil marriage into any other form of marriage much less a 'Nikah Fasid'. As held by the Privy Council in AIR 1930 PC 31, Engene Berthiaume v. Dame Anne Marie Yvonne Dastous :

"If a marriage is good by the law of the country where it is effected it is good all over the world no matter whether the proceedings or the ceremony which constituted the marriage according to the law of place would not constitute marriage in the country of domicile of one or the other spouses."

The character of marriage remains unaffected by such external factors. Because, a civil marriage validly performed, has an overriding effect on all other religious forms of marriages.

11. When the parties have solemnized a legal and valid marriage as per British Marriage Act, it is difficult to hold that the said marriage should also be treated as Nikah Fasid. When the parties with open eyes have chosen a specific form of marriage, it cannot be held that they concurrently also intended to enter into another form of marriage. To impute such an intention is contrary to well established principles of justice, equity and good conscience. This is more so, when the plaintiff himself does not say in his evidence that it was an irregular marriage within the meaning of Mohammedan Law or he intended to solemnize marriage according to the provisions of Mohammedan Law. In this context Shri Parekh has placed reliance upon the Rules 32, 33, 35, 36 and 37 of Dicey & Mories Conflict of Laws. Rule 32 deals with the formal validity of the marriage. Rule 33 lays down that the capacity to marry is governed by the law of each party's antenuptial domicile. As per Rule 35, the marriage celebrated in a form which is monogamous under the law of the place of celebration is monogamous marriage, whatever the personal law of the parties at the time of marriage or at any subsequent time. As per Rule 36 even the marriage celebrated in England in Muslim Mosques is also monogamous. Then comes Rule 37 which declares that a man or woman whose personal law does not permit polygamy has no capacity to contract a valid polygamous marriage. Admittedly at the time of the said marriage the defendant was a Hindu and therefore it is also doubtful whether a Nikah Fasid as per the Mohammedan Law was really possible. It was not disputed by Shri Mody that the marriage in England was a monogamous one. If this is so, how can a marriage be monogamous and polygamous at the same time. Therefore, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case it is not possible for us to accept the contention of Shri Mody that the marriage solemnized as per the procedure laid down by the British Marriage Act could concurrently be treated as Nikah Fasid within the meaning of Mohammedan Law. If such a contention is accepted then even a secular and monogamous marriage solemnised as per provisions of Special Marriage Act, 1954 could be termed as 'Nikah Fasid' and a secular and monogamous marriage between the two muslim or between two muslim husband and non-muslim wife will become impossible even if they desire to solemnise such a secular and monogamous marriage.

12. Shri Mody, learned counsel appearing for the appellant husband then contended that the view taken by the learned single Judge that the present marriage is governed by the Foreign Marriage Act is wholly illegal and unjustified. It is contended by Shri Mody that the Foreign Marriage Act, 1969 is not retrospective in its operation and therefore cannot govern the marriage which took place prior to 1969. He also contended that under the Mohammedan Law husband had some vested rights. The Foreign Marriage Act cannot be interpreted to mean that the said vested rights have been taken away retrospectively. According to Shri Mody under the Mohammedan Law a husband has a vested right to have four wives, he has a vested right to give a unilateral talaq and hence the provisions of the Foreign Marriage Act cannot be interpreted in such a way so as to affect these vested rights. Shri Mody also contended that in the context of the subject matter Mohammedan Law is a Special Act, whereas the Foreign Marriage Act is a general enactment. Mohammedan Law does not apply to all foreign marriages but applies to those foreign marriages only where the parties are Mohammedans. He also contended that if it is held that the provisions of the Foreign Marriage Act apply retrospectively, then disastrous effect are likely to follow because in that case the marriage already performed even before coming into force of the Foreign Marriage Act is likely to be subject to penalties prescribed by Chapter V of the said Act. Therefore, according to the learned counsel the provisions of the Foreign Marriage Act will be applicable only to those marriages which are solemnised after coming into force of the Foreign Marriage Act. Shri Mody also contended that even otherwise in view of the provisions of S. 18 (4) of the Act the provisions of S. 18 (1) will not apply to the present case as the Mohammedan Law provides for a grant of relief in respect of such marriage.

13. The Special Marriage Act or Foreign Marriage Act do not require continuance of the original religion as a condition for getting relief of divorce. Section 18 (1) of the Foreign Marriage Act provides for statutory rule. Sec. 18 (4) is in the nature of proviso or exception and therefore will have to be strictly construed. The very wording of subsec. (4) of S. 18 clearly indicates that it intends to take out something from Section 18 (1). Therefore it can only take out some thing which is included in Section 18 (1).

14. For properly appreciating the controversy raised before us it will be worthwhile if a detailed reference is made to various provisions of the Foreign Marriage Act, 1969, hereinafter referred to as the said Act. It was enacted to make a provision relating to the marriage of citizens of India outside India. The expression "foreign country" is defined by S. 2 (c) to mean a country or a place outside India. Chapter II deals with solemnisation of foreign marriages. Chapter III deals with registration of foreign marriages solemnised under other laws. Then, by sub-sec. (6) of S. 17 it is laid down that the marriage registered under S. 17 shall as from the date of registration be deemed to have been solemnised under the Act. Then comes Chapter IV which deals with matrimonial reliefs in respect of foreign marriages. Section 18 in the said Chapter reads as under :

"18 (1) Subject to the other provisions contained in this section the provisions of Chapters IV, V, VI and VII of the Special Marriage Act, 1954, shall apply in relation to marriages solemnised under this Act and to any other marriage solemnised in a foreign country between parties of whom one at least is a citizen of India as they apply in relation to marriages solemnised under that Act :

Explanation : In its application to the marriages referred to in this sub-section. S. 24 of the Special Marriage Act, 1954 shall be subject to the following modifications, namely :

(i) the reference in sub-sec. (1) thereof to clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of S. 4 of that Act shall be construed as a reference to clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) respectively of S. 4 of this Act, and

(ii) nothing contained in S. 24 aforesaid shall apply to any marriage—

(a) which is not solemnized under this Act; or

(b) which is deemed to be solemnized under this Act by reason of the provisions contained in S. 17 :

Provided that the registration of any such marriage as is referred to in sub-clause (b) may be declared to be of no effect if the registration was in contravention of sub-sec. (2) of S. 17.

(2) Every petition for relief under Chapter V or Chapter VI of the Special Marriage Act, 1954, as made applicable to the marriages referred to in sub-section (1), shall be presented to the district court within the local limits of whose ordinary civil jurisdiction—

(a) the respondent is residing at the time of the presentation of the petition; or

(b) the husband and wife last resided together; or

(c) the petitioner is residing at the time of the presentation of the petition, provided that the respondent is at that time residing outside India.

Explanation— In this section, "district court" has the same meaning as in the Special Marriage Act, 1954.

(3) Nothing contained in this section shall authorise any court—

(a) to make any decree of dissolution of marriage, except where;

(i) the parties to the marriage are domiciled in India at the time of the presentation of the petition; or

(ii) the petitioner, being the wife, was domiciled in India immediately before the marriage and has been residing in India for a period of not less than three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition;

(b) to make any decree annulling avoidable marriage, except where—

(i) the parties to the marriage are domiciled in India at the time of the presentation of the petition; or

(ii) the marriage was solemnised under this Act and the petitioner, being the wife, has been ordinarily resident in India for a period of three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition;

(c) to make any decree of nullity of marriage in respect of a void marriage, except where;

(i) either of the parties, to the marriage is domiciled in India at the time of the presentation of the petition, or

(ii) the marriage was solemnized under this Act and the petitioner is residing in India at the time of the presentation of the petition;

(d) to grant any other relief under Chapter V or Chapter VI of the Special Marriage Act, 1954, except where the petitioner is residing in India at the time of the presentation of the petition.

(4) Nothing contained in sub-sec. (1) shall authorise any court to grant any relief under this Act in relation to any marriage in a foreign country not solemnized under it, if the grant of relief in respect of such marriage (whether on any of the grounds specified in the Special Marriage Act, 1954 or otherwise) is provided for under any other law for the time being in force."

Section 18 (1) takes in its import the marriage solemnized under the Act and any other marriage solemnized in the foreign country between the parties of whom one at least is a citizen of India. Thus, from the bare reading of S. 18 (1) it is quite clear that it applies to all other marriages solemnized in a foreign country between the parties of whom one at least is a citizen of India. For properly appreciating the intention behind the said legislation it will be worthwhile if a reference is made to the 23rd report of the Law Commission which deals with the foreign marriage. It appears from the said report that the object of the legislation was to regulate marriages performed outside India when either of the parties thereto is a citizen of India, thereby filling a gap in the Special Marriage Act, which is limited in its application to the marriages between Indian citizens. After analysing different types of marriages which could be entered into abroad by the parties, one or both of whom are Indian citizens, para 3 of the report explains that the object of the legislation is not only to provide for solemnization of the marriages but also to enable the parties thereto to obtain proper matrimonial relief, such as, dissolution of marriage and so forth. The report also makes a reference to the rules of private international law on the subject so as to ensure as far as possible that the validity of the marriage can be recognised in other countries besides India. Then come paras 13 and 18 of the report which read as under :

"13. As already stated, we do not have in this country what may be called a lex loci dealing generally with matrimonial jurisdiction and if suitable provisions are not made in this behalf in respect of marriages solemnized under the proposed legislation, there will be a lacuna in the law. We have, therefore to depart in this respect from the English and Australian Acts.

In our opinion the proposed law should contain an express provision regarding matrimonial causes. Further, it has been brought to our notice that difficulties are experienced by citizens of India who choose to marry abroad not under our laws but under foreign laws, in obtaining the appropriate matrimonial relief in our country in case the marriage unfortunately turns out to be a failure. In a recent case the Rajasthan High Court has held that where a person domiciled in India has contracted a marriage in England with an English woman (presumably under the English Law) he can obtain a divorce under the Special Marriage Act, 1954 on the ground that that Act is the general law of divorce in force in this country. Without entering into any discussion as to its correctness we think that the decision emphasises the need for making it clear by a statutory provision. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the provision about matrimonial reliefs to be included in the proposed legislation should also apply to a marriage performed in a foreign country under a foreign law where one of the parties to the marriage is a citizen of India. At the same time, care has to be taken to ensure that a marriage in a foreign country between parties, only one of whom is a citizen of India, not solemnized under the provisions of the proposed law, is not held to be void on the ground that it contravenes one or the other of the conditions for valid marriage under this law, that is to say, if any such marriage is to be challenged on the ground that it is ab initio void, the ordinary rule relation to choice of law should apply rather than the provisions in the new law. Subject to this reservation, any other matrimonial relief available to a party who is married under this law should also be available to a citizen of India marrying a foreigner abroad under a foreign law."

18. (a) Our recommendation being that we should on the several topics mentioned above draw from the provisions of the Special Marriage Act, 1954, the question naturally arises as to how that could best be done. The proposed legislation can be framed in any one of the following four modes :

(i) We may draft a separate and self-contained Act. This will deal both with marriage and with matrimonial causes, not by referring to the Chapters in the Special Marriage Act and the Christian Marriage Bill, but by enacting the provisions therein full.

(ii) We may draft a separate Act without making it self-contained and incorporate therein by reference the provisions relating to marriage in Chapters IV, V, VI and VII of the Special Marriage Act, 1954. This will be shorter than No. (i) above.

(iii) We may insert a new Chapter in the Special Marriage Act; the Chapter itself would not be self-contained, but would refer back to the provisions in other Chapters relating to marriage as well as matrimonial causes.

(iv) A fourth course would be to amend S. 1 (2) and S. 4 (e) of the Special Marriage Act, so as to allow marriage in the Special Marriage from where one party is a citizen of India. This would be shorter than No. (iii) above. Consequential amendments may be required to other sections also. After careful consideration, we have reached the conclusion that course No. (ii) above is the best. The usual objection to referential legislation — that it often leads to ambiguity — will not apply in this case. For the purposes of matrimonial relief, there is hardly any difference between a foreign marriage solemnized under the proposed law and a marriage solemnized in India under the Special Marriage Act, 1954. This device has the additional advantage of avoiding unnecessary repetition of a major portion of the Special Marriage Act, 1954, in the proposed law."

The Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill also throws light upon the intention behind this legislation. The Statement of Objects and Reasons reads as under :

"This Bill seeks to implement the twenty-third report of the Law Commission on the law relating to foreign marriages. There is, at present considerable uncertainty as to the law on the subject, as the existing legislation touches only the fringes of the subject and the matter is governed by principles of private international law which are by no means well-settled, and which cannot readily be applied to a country such as ours in which different marriage laws apply to different communities. The Special Marriage Act, 1954 sought to remove the uncertainty to some extent by providing that marriages abroad between citizens of India who are domiciled in India might be solemnized under it.

In the course of the debate in relation to that Act in Parliament, it was urged that a provision should also be made for marriages abroad where one of the parties alone is an Indian citizen. In this context, an assurance was given that Government would, after careful consideration introduce comprehensive legislation on the subject of foreign marriages. The present bill is the outcome of that assurance.

2. The Bill is modelled on the Special Marriage Act, 1954 and the existing English and Australian Legislation on the subject of foreign marriages subject to certain important modifications rendered necessary by the peculiar conditions obtaining in our country."

Then the Statement of Objects and Reasons dealing with S. 18 of the Act reads as under :

"Clause 18 : Sub-clause (1) applies the provisions of Chapters IV to VII of the Special Marriage Act so as to —

(i) Define the consequences of a marriage under the proposed law; and

(ii) provide for matrimonial relief, Read with sub-clause (4), it covers also foreign marriages under other laws for which matrimonial relief is not available in India under any other law. Sub-cl. (2) is intended to define the district court which will have jurisdiction for granting relief and sub-clause (3) embodies the recognised principles of private international law as to jurisdiction of Indian courts to grant matrimonial relief.

While providing for matrimonial relief in respect of foreign marriages under other laws, care has been taken to ensure that:—

(a) the validity of such marriages is not affected by the provisions of the proposed law; and

(b) even where such marriage is registered under this law its validity is not affected by the said provisions, the only relief available in such a case being cancellation of registration."

Therefore, from the Law Commission's report as well the Statement of Objects and Reasons it is quite clear that the Foreign Marriage Act was intended as a piece of comprehensive legislation on the subject relating to foreign marriages. Hence it is a complete Code in itself. S. 18 was intended to cover all foreign marriages.. Expression used in S. 18 (1) viz. "to any other marriage solemnized in the foreign country" must take in its import all other marriages which are not covered by the first part of S. 18 (1). The word 'solemnized' indicates that it applies to the marriages which are solemnized even prior to coming into force of the Act. This is further clear from the provisions of S. 17 of the Act which deal with registration of foreign marriages solemnized under other laws. S. 12 (2) lays down that no marriage shall be registered under S. 17 unless at the time of registration it satisfies the conditions mentioned in S. 4. Then by sub-section (6) of S. 17 it is declared that the marriages registered under this section shall as from the date of registration be deemed to have been solemnized under the Act. If the form prescribed under the Rules is read with S. 17 of the Act, it is further clear that it takes in its import even the marriages already solemnized. Form prescribed under the Rules can be used as an aid to construction on the basis of principles of contemporeo expositio which is a well settled rule of interpretation of a statute. (See K. P. Verghese v. I.-T. Officer, Ernakulam, AIR 1981 SC 1922). The expression "any other marriage solemnized in a foreign country" therefore must take in its import all the marriages solemnized in a foreign country either before or after coming into force of the enactment. Looking to the words of the section and giving them their plain and natural meaning we find it impossible to hold that the foreign marriages solemnized prior to the coming into force of Foreign Marriage Act, 1969 are not covered by S. 18 (1) of the Act. To accept such a contention one has to read into the section additional words "after the date of this Act", after the word solemnized. If such a construction is not put up, the intention of the legislature in enacting a comprehensive legislation on the subject of foreign marriages will be frustrated.

15. It is also not possible for us to accept the contention of Shri Mody that in view of the provisions of sub-sec. (4) of S. 18 nothing contained in sub-sec. (1) of S. 18 will apply to the present case. In this context it was contended by Shri Mody that the Mohammedan law is a law for the time being in force which provides for grant of relief in respect of marriages within the contemplation of sub-sec. (4) of S. 18. According to Shri Mody, the learned single Judge committed an error in construing the said provision. The learned Judge in para 10 of his judgment has held as under:

"10. To summarise, Section 18 of the Act applies to all marriages solemnized in a foreign country whether under the Act or registered under the Act or otherwise and one of the party to which is an Indian citizen. The consequences of such a marriage and reliefs in respect thereof will be governed by Section 18 (1) read with the relevant provisions of the Special Marriage Act in all cases except where any Indian Law, statutorily or otherwise provides for grant of relief. No law which is non-statutory presently comes to my mind which provides for grant of reliefs, that is a right to apply to some authority. There being no such provision in the Muslim law, so far as a husband is concerned, in case of a foreign marriage a divorce can be obtained by a husband only in accordance with the provisions of the said Act not otherwise.

11. Mr. Bhatt's contention that the Shariat Act is such an Act as is contemplated by S. 18 (4), cannot be accepted. The Shariat Act was enacted to provide for governance of Muslims by law as laid down in Shariat Act in preference over customary law. The Shariat Act, therefore, makes personal law applicable uniformly to all Muslims notwithstanding any custom or usage to the contrary. The Shariat Act does not contain any rules of law governing Muslims and less so provides for grant of any relief, in respect of a marriage. The Shariat Act or the Shariat Act read with Muslim personal law cannot be said to be the law in force contemplated by Section 18 (4) of the Foreign Marriage Act".

We are in general agreement with these observations of the learned single Judge for more than one reason. Chapter IV deals with the matrimonial reliefs which could be granted by the Court. Sub-section (2) of S. 18 deals with the procedure of filing of a petition for relief. Then in sub-s. (3) read with sub-cl. (d) it is laid down that nothing contained in this section shall authorise any court to grant any other relief under Chapter IV or Chapter VI of the Special Marriage Act, 1954 except where the petitioner is residing in India at the time of the presentation of the petition. The word "relief" is used in sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of S. 18. Similarly expression 'grant relief' is also used in sub-sections (3) and (4) of S. 18. All these provisions of S. 18, will have to be read harmoniously, as every sub-section throws light on another. The said expression will have to be understood to have the same meaning in all the sub-sections. So understood in our opinion the expression "grant of relief in respect of such marriage" must mean a relief which could be granted by a court in respect of matrimonial matters. This expression cannot take in its import a voluntary and unilateral act of a husband of giving talaq to his wife which does not require any intervention of the court.

16. The provisions of the Act as well as Section 18 will have to be construed harmoniously so as to discover the true intention of the legislature and to make law effective and not to frustrate legislative intent in that behalf. While interpreting the words and expressions used in Section 18 it is necessary to have regard to the subject-matter of the statute and the object which it is intended to achieve. While construing the words and expressions, the context in which the words occur, the object of the statute in which the provisions is included and the policy underlying the statute assume importance. The words and expressions will have to be construed in the light of their context rather than their etymological sense or their popular meaning apart from the context. It is a sound and indeed a well known principle of construction that the meaning of words and expression used in an Act must take their colour from the context in which they appear. If two interpretations are reasonably possible any construction will have to be avoided which would reduce the legislation to a futility because Parliament is presumed to legislate only for the purpose of bringing about effective result. When the material words are capable of bearing two constructions the well settled principle is to construe such words in tune with the rule laid down in Haydon's case which has now attained the status of classic. The words will have to be construed in the light as to what was the common law before the enactment of the Act, what was the mischief and defect for which the common law did not provide and what remedy the Parliament has provided to cure the said defect. A construction will have to be placed which will suppress the mischief and advance remedy. If the construction suggested by Shri Mody is accepted it will reduce the legislation to futility. From the bare reading of sub-section (4) it is clear that the said section is dealing with the authority of the Court to grant relief under the Act in relation to any marriage in a foreign country not solemnized under the Act, if grant of relief in respect of such marriage is provided for under any law for the time being in force. Therefore, the relief contemplated is in relation to a marriage and not regarding general relationship of husband and wife. The expression "whether on any of the grounds specified in the Special Marriage Act, 1954, or otherwise" makes this intention further clear. The words "or otherwise" are referable to grounds. Prohibition is imposed upon a court to grant a relief under sub-sec. (1) of Section 18 if grant of relief in respect of such foreign marriage is provided for under any other law for the time being in force. Thus the words "grant of relief" as used in S. 18 (4) obviously means grant of relief by an independent court, tribunal or authority which is available qua a foreign marriage obviously to both the parties. It cannot take in its import a unilateral voluntary act of husband of dissolving a marriage by oral talaq. For such a unilateral act it is not necessary for husband to approach any court, tribunal or authority. However, it was contended by Shri Mody that in a given case a declaratory suit could be filed before a Civil Court claiming a declaration that the marriage stands dissolved and such a suit is also covered by sub-section (4) of S. 18. It is not possible for us to accept this contention. In a declaratory suit only a declaration is sought for, regarding a thing which has already become effective on its own force and such a declaratory relief cannot be equated with a grant of relief in relation to any marriage which is provided for under a law for the time being in force. Moreover such a unilateral right of divorce is only conferred upon a husband by Mohammedan law and not on wife. Sub-sec. (4) contemplates grant of relief at the instance of both the parties. A relief contemplated is a relief which could be granted by a court of law or independent tribunal or authority. Such a relief should be available qua particular marriage. Relief must take in its import obviously the grounds on which such a relief could be granted by an independent tribunal or authority. It cannot be forgotten that under the Mohammedan law defendant-wife who is a Hindu has no remedy to seek matrimonial relief. If the wife wants to seek a matrimonial relief qua foreign marriage which took place in the year 1966 as per the provisions of British Marriage Act, she has no remedy available under the Mohammedan Law. So far as she is concerned, law available is obviously Foreign Marriage Act. This position becomes further clear from S. 29 of the Foreign Marriage Act by which the provisions of Special Marriage Act, 1954 stand amended. This is further clear from the statements of Objects and Reasons as well as the Law Commission's report. Therefore, it is not possible for us to accept the contention of Shri Mody that in view of the provisions of sub-section (4) of S. 18, S. 18 (1) of the Foreign Marriage Act is not applicable to the present case. In our view the view taken by the learned single Judge is the only view possible, and therefore, we agree with the findings recorded by the learned single Judge in that behalf.

17. Chapter V which deals with the penalties is obviously prospective. It applies to any person whose marriage is solemnized or deemed to be solemnized under the Act. S. 17 deals with registration of foreign marriages solemnized under other laws and sub-sec. (2) of S. 17 lays down that no marriage shall be registered under this section unless at the time of registration it fulfils the condition mentioned in Section 4. From the phraseology used in sub-sec. 17 (2) it is quite clear that conditions mentioned in S. 4. should be satisfied at the time of registration and not at the time of marriage itself. Chapter IV which deals with matrimonial reliefs, in respect of foreign marriages is in terms made retrospective, otherwise it was not necessary to use the words or expression "any other marriage solemnized in a foreign country between the parties of whom one at least is a citizen of India."

18. In S. 18 (1) the words used are "other marriage solemnized" which must mean solemnized at any time. Whenever legislature wanted that certain provisions of the Act should apply to the marriage which are solemnized under the Act, the legislature has used the expression "may be solemnized", "is solemnized", "to be solemnized" etc. Such an expression is not used in S. 18 (1). As already observed S. 17 takes in its import the marriages already solemnized in accordance with the law of the country concerned. Therefore, in our opinion Chapter IV of the Foreign Marriage Act will apply to the present marriage, which is admittedly a foreign marriage.

19. It is also not correct to say that a Mohammedan husband has a vested right to marry more than one wife viz. to have four wives at a time. It cannot also be said that anybody has got a vested right in the matter of divorce. To say the least dissolution of marriage is not a part and parcel of the contract of marriage. Nobody has got any vested right in the matter of dissolution of marriage. So far as the polygamy is concerned, the provision of Mohammedan law is only permissive or optional in nature and not obligatory. It only lays down a ceiling on wives and does not lay down that every Mohammedan should have four wives as a matter of right. It is in a form of an exception. Therefore it cannot be said that Chapter IV or S. 18 which deals with matrimonial reliefs in respect of foreign marriages has affected any vested right of the appellant retrospectively. The said chapter deals with the events taking effect in future though based on an earlier incident viz. foreign marriage. Only because it takes into consideration earlier event of marriage, it cannot be said that the provision is retrospective in nature or affects any vested right. It is well settled that vested right is a right which has come into operation and is not a potential right. Mere right to take advantage of a provision of law is not an accrued right. A statute cannot also be said to be retrospective, "because a part of the requisites for its action is drawn from a time antecedent to its passing" (see AIR 1964 SC 464, Sajjansinghi v. State of Punjab and 1980 Mah LJ 58: (AIR 1980 SC 101), Zohrabai v. Arjuna).

20. As already held in the present case the marriage took place in England on 5th of May 1966. Therefore, it was a foreign marriage within the meaning of Foreign Marriage Act, 1969. The said marriage was solemnized under the British Marriage Act, 1949 and there is no statutory law in the field which provides for grant of matrimonial reliefs as contemplated by S. 18 (4) of the Act. Therefore, in our opinion the learned single Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant which took place on 5th of May, 1966 in England is governed by Chapter IV of the Foreign Marriage Act, 1969.

21. Once it is held that the relationship of the parties flowing from the marriage solemnized in England in 1966 is covered by the Foreign Marriage Act, 1969, in fact it is not necessary to deal with any other contention raised by Shri Mody. It is also not necessary to consider the decision of this Court in Khambatta v. Khambatta, (1934) 36 Bom LR 1021: (AIR 1935 Bom 5). Even otherwise in our opinion even lex domicilli so far as secular marriage of this type is concerned will be Special Marriage Act, 1954 and not Mohammedan Law. It cannot be disputed that the marriage which was solemnized as per the provisions of the British Marriage Act, in 1966 in England was secular in form and content. It was a monogamous marriage. On the date of the marriage the defendant was a Hindu. Therefore, the marriage which took place in England was inter-religious marriage. In support of his contention Shri Parikh, learned counsel appearing for the defendant has placed reliance upon certain observations in 'Muslim Law of India by Dr. Taher Mohammad, 1980 edition, at pages 59 and 91. He has also placed reliance upon S. 2 (6) page 13, and S. 199 page 188 of Tyabji's Muslim Law (1968 Edition) and has contended that even the Muslim Law stands modified in view of the Special Marriage Act as well as the Constitution of India.

22. The legal system prevailing prior to Special Marriage Act clearly indicates that the Special Marriage Act of 1872 was not applicable to Indian Muslims, nor Indian Divorce Act was applicable if neither party was a Christian. Muslim law applied to marriages between male muslims and jewess or Christian female known as Kitabiya. The Special Marriage Act 1954 applies to all citizens irrespective of religion. Till 1969 it applied to all the Indian citizens marrying in foreign countries, if they chose to marry under the Act. To some extent there was a choice open and the parties could have married under the secular system of marriage which provided for a monogamous form of marriage namely: union for life to the exclusion of others, and dissoluble only by a judicial authority. Admittedly the marriage which was solemnized in May 1966 in England under the British Marriage Act, 1949, was monogamous and secular in nature. Therefore it will have to be seen as to whether there is any Indian law available in the field which can apply to such monogamous secular marriage. No such law was available till the Special Marriage Act, 1954 was enacted. It appears to be well-settled principle of law that in the absence of anything to the contrary the rights under the marriage are to be governed by the law of domicilli. In the present case both the plaintiff and the defendant are Indian citizens. They came to India in 1969 and are living in India thereafter. Therefore it was contended by Shri Mody relying upon the decision of this Court in Khambatta v. Khambatta, (1934) 36 Bom LR 1021: (AIR 1935 Bom 5) that so far as lex domicilli is concerned, the present marriage will be governed by the personal law of the husband viz. Mohammedan law. In our view this is not the correct position today. Once it is held that the marriage which took place in England in 1966 was secular in the form and content and also monogamous and such a secular law is also available in India in the form of Special Marriage Act, 1954 then in our view even the lex domicilli in case of such secular marriage will be the Special Marriage Act and not the Personal Law of the husband. This is more so when one of the parties belonged to different religion and is not a muslim. After all there should be harmony between different personal laws so that the parties can live together.

23. It can safely be said that Special Marriage Act is in reality an Indian Marriage Act, which applies to all Indian Communities irrespective of caste, creed or religion. The concept of marriage under the said Act, is monogamous, that is union for life, dissoluble by judicial authorities. Under the said law all modern matrimonial reliefs are made available to both the spouses in the event of break down of marriage on an application to the Court of competent jurisdiction. Even the religious marriages can be registered under the said Act. On such registration the religious marriage can be converted into secular marriage. In this context it is also pertinent to note that between 1954 to 1969 two Indian citizens domiciled in India could have married under Special Marriage Act—even outside India. A marriage which is monogamous in form continues to be so, whereas original religious marriage can be converted into a secular marriage. However, a secular marriage cannot be converted into religious marriage. Therefore if there is in the field an Indian enactment which is applicable to all the citizens of India irrespective of their religion, then so far as secular marriages are concerned the said law will become lex domicilli of India for the purposes of matrimonial reliefs. Such an interpretation will be in tune with Article 44 as well as the preamble of the Constitution. It cannot also be forgotten that the establishment of a secular society is the aim and goal of Indian Constitution. Therefore in the area and field which is secular or non-religious laws will have to be common for all citizens of India, and that is what has been done, though to limited extent by enacting Special Marriage Act. The said Act at least leaves a choice open which is available to all the citizens of India irrespective of their caste, creed or religion. In Mohammedan Law Marriage is a Civil Contract. Hence so far as relationship flowing from contract of marriage is concerned, including its dissolution, the area and field is secular in nature.

24. In this context it will have to be remembered that if two interpretations are reasonably possible regarding the provisions of law, then the law will have to be interpreted and applied in the perspective of Part IV of the Constitution, which deals with directive principles of the State policy and benefit of reasonable doubt of law and fact, if there be such doubt must go to the weaker section, in the present case to women (See AIR 1978 SC 474). In this context a reference also could usefully be made to the decision of Karnataka High Court in AIR 1976 Kant 200, Raj Mohammad v. Saheeda, wherein E. S. Vyankataramayya J. (as he then was), has observed that our notions of law will have to be altered in such a way as to bring them in conformity with modern social conditions.

25. Shri Parikh learned counsel appearing for the respondent-wife has also raised a contention that the provisions of the Mohammedan law read with Sheriyat Act are violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. Such a contention is specifically raised by respondent in the memorandum of cross-objection. Shri Parikh further contended that full equality between sexes is hardly possible in a legal system which permits polygamy and unilateral talaq and the social system which tolerates it. He contended that in some of the Muslim countries polygamy has been prohibited and divorce is also regulated by statute. However denial of equality and social justice still continues in India and that too in spite of the directive principles of the State policy, which also includes Article 44. Because of the system of unilateral talaq a muslim wife continues to be in a position of legal inferiority and insecurity. He also contended that the trend in modern times is in favour of territorial laws in preference to contractual laws and Art. 44 is in tune with the said trend. In support of his contention he has placed reliance upon decisions of V. R. Krishna Iyer J. (as he then was) in 1970 Ker. LT 4, Shahulameedu v. Subaida Beevi, 1970 Ker LT 477 : (AIR 1971 Ker. 261) Yusuf Rawthan v. Sowramma; 1971 Ker LT 663 Aboo Backer Haji v. Mamu Koya and the judgment of Khalid J. in 1972 Ker LT 512, Mohammad Haneefa v. Puthumal Beevi. Shri Parikh also contended that the continuance of various personal laws which discriminate between men and women violates the fundamental rights and even the Preamble of the Constitution which promises equality of status to all citizens. It is also against the spirit of national integration and secularism. He has placed strong reliance upon the following observations of V. Khalid J. in Mohd. Haneefa v. Pathumal Beevi viz.: "Should Muslim wives suffer this tyranny for all times? Should their personal law remain so cruel towards unfortunate wives? Can it not be amended suitably to alleviate their sufferings? My judicial conscience is disturbed at this monstrosity. The question is whether the conscience of the leaders of public opinion of the community will also be disturbed." We respectfully share the feelings expressed by Khalid J. Shri Parikh has also drawn our attention to the observations of the Supreme Court in AIR 1980 SC 1730, Fuzlunbi v. K. Khader Vali, para 20 which reads as under:

"20. Before we bid farewell to Fuzlunbi it is necessary to mention that Chief Justice Baharul Islam, in an elaborate judgment replete with quotes from the Holy Quoran, has exposed the error of early English authors and judges who dealt with talaq in Muslim law as good even if pronounced at whim or in tantrum, and argued against the diehard view of Batchelor, J. (1906) ILR 30 Bom 537 (539) that this view 'is good in law, though bad in theology'. May be, when the point directly arises, the question will have to be considered by this court, but enough unto the day the evil thereof and we do not express our opinion on this question as it does not call for a decision in the present case."

However, in the view which we have taken it is not necessary to decide this challenge based on Article 14 of the Constitution, and the same is kept open.

26. The next contention which requires consideration in this appeal is to find out as to whether the plaintiff has proved that the defendant-wife was converted to Islam and thereafter a Nikah ceremony took place.

27. It is a well known principle of civil law that a person born into or following one religion continues to belong to such religion subject to conversion to another religion. Conversion to another religion basically requires change of faith. To say the least it is a matter of conviction. According to Mulla's Principle of Mohammedan Law any person who professes Mohammedan religion that is, he acknowledges that there is but one God and that Mohammad is his prophate is a Mohammedan. Such a person may be a Mohammedan by birth or he may be a Mohammedan by conversion. It is not necessary that he should observe any particular rites or ceremony to be an orthodox believer in that religion; no Court can test or gauge sincerity of religious belief. It is sufficient if he professes Mohammedan religion in the sense that he accepts prophetic grant of Mohammedan (Section 19, Chapter 2, page 19 of Mulla's Principles of Mohammedan Law). Thus the real test is of professing Mohammedan religion. As to what is the true import of the term 'profess' fell for consideration of the Supreme Court in Punjabrao v. D. P. Meshram, AIR 1965 SC 1179. In para 13 of the said decision the Supreme Court has observed as under:

"13. What cl. (3) of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order, 1950 contemplates is that for a person to be treated as one belonging to a Scheduled Caste within the meaning of that Order he must be one who professes either Hindu or Sikh religion. The High Court, following its earlier decision in Narayan Waktu v. Punjabrao, AIR 1958 Bom 296 has said that the meaning of the phrase "professes a religion" in the aforementioned provision is "to enter publicly into a religious state" and that for this purpose a mere declaration by a person that he has ceased to belong to a particular religion and embraced another religion would not be sufficient. The meanings of the word "profess" have been given thus in Webster's New World Dictionary: "to avow publicly; to make an open declaration of;..... to declare one's belief in: as to profess Christ. To accept into a religious order". The meanings given in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary are more or less the same. It seems to us that the meaning "to declare one's belief in: as to profess Christ" is one which we have to bear in mind while construing the aforesaid order because it is this which bears upon religious belief and consequently also upon a change in religious belief. It would thus follow that a declaration of one's belief must necessarily mean a declaration in such a way that it would be known to those whom it may interest. Therefore if a public declaration is made by a person that he has ceased to belong to his old religion and has accepted another religion he will be taken as professing the other religion. In the face of such an open declaration it would be idle to enquire further as to whether the conversion to another religion was efficacious. The word 'profess' in the Presidential Order appears to have been used in the sense of an open declaration or practice by a person of the Hindu (or the Sikh) religion. Where, therefore, a person says, on the contrary that he has ceased to be a Hindu he cannot derive any benefit from that order." Thus it appears that for a conversion there should be a declaration of one's belief and the said declaration should be in such a way that it should be known to those whom it may interest. If a public declaration is made by a person that he has ceased to belong to one religion and is accepting another religion, he will be taken as professing the other religion.

28. In Rakeya Bibi v. Anil Kumar Mukherjee, ILR 1948 (2) Cal 119, Calcutta High Court had an occasion to consider this aspect of the matter in the context of conversion to Islam. Having held that the plaintiff in that case offered herself for conversion and went through the necessary formalities, the Calcutta High Court observed as under:

"The question, however, still remains whether her conversion was a bona fide one or a mere device adopted for the purpose of avoiding the marriage. Mr. Das, who appeared for her, contended on the authority of certain observations made by Ormond J. in the case of Ayesh Bibi v. Subodh Chandra Chakrabarti, (ILR (1945) 2 Cal 405): (AIR 1949 Cal 436) that the question of bona fides was wholly irrelevant and, further that no court could determine the bona fides or otherwise of a person's change of faith. We entirely dissent from those propositions. It may be that a court cannot test or gauge the sincerity of religious belief; or that, where there is no question of the genuineness of a person's belief in a certain religion, a court cannot measure its depth or determine whether it is an intelligent conviction or an ignorant and superficial fancy. But a court can and does find the true intention of men lying behind their acts and one certainly find from the circumstances of a case whether a pretended conversion was really a means to some further end. We can see no reason to hold that it is in the nature of things impossible for a court of law to determine whether a conversion was bona fide. Nor can we agree that the question of bona fides is immaterial. In the case of Skinner v. Skinner ((1897) ILR 25 Cal 537) the Privy Council, while referring to the possibility that a change of religion on the part of both the spouses might have the effect of altering rights incidental to the marriage, was careful to add the qualification that such change must be made "honestly" and "without any intent to commit a fraud upon the law." Indeed, it seems to us to be elementary that if a conversion is not inspired by religious feeling and undergone for its own sake, but is resorted to merely with the object of creating a ground for some claim of right, a court of law cannot recognise it as a good basis for such claim but must hold that no lawful foundation of the claim has been proved. Where conversion gives a legal right, to go through a mock conversion and set it up as a basis of that right is to commit a fraud upon the law. We are clearly of opinion that where a party puts forward his conversion to a new faith as creating a right in his favour to the prejudice of another, it is proper and necessary for a court of law to enquire and find whether the conversion was a bona fide one."

Thus in case of a conversion there should be a change of heart and honest conviction in the tenets of new religion in lieu of tenets of the original religion. If a ceremony of conversion is gone into conscientiously after such an honest conviction, then alone there is a conversion of faith or it can be said that a person is professing another religion. In case of conversion from one religion to another a strict proof is required and it cannot be easily inferred. More so when a person converted denies even the factum of conversion. As to whether there is in fact a conversion or not must depend on facts and circumstances of each case and no general rule can be laid down in that behalf.

29. To prove factum of conversion apart from himself the plaintiff has examined P.W. 3 Qazi Mohammad Ali Paloba, (PW 4) Alli M. Shama (PW 5), Abdul Kadar Divekar, (P.W. 6), Yusuf Khan, (P.W. 7) Dr. Bailur, (P.W. 9) Mrs. Parhat Qazi, (PW 10) Hussein Beg and (P.W. 11) Zafar Ali Mirjee. The plaintiff is also relying upon the documentary evidence viz., certain letters as well as the diary of the defendant and an entry in a register maintained by Quazi.

30. The trial court has considered in detail all this evidence and has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove the factum of conversion. The trial court has given good reasons for coming to this conclusion. As we are in general agreement with the views of the trial court it is not necessary to reproduce the whole evidence over again. (See AIR 1981 SC 1415, Ayodhya Dube v. Ram Sumer Singh). According to the learned Judge the following surrounding circumstances make the story of conversion highly impossible: (1) the first and the foremost circumstance is that the plaintiff as originally filed was totally silent about the alleged conversion; (2) there is no reference to the date of any marriage nor any details are given; (3) the plaintiff admitted in his evidence that he knew that there was a mosque in England and he had also Muslim friends there; therefore it would not have been difficult for him to have arranged for Nikah and conversion ceremonies while the parties were in England and one wonders as to why the plaintiff should wait till their return to India and no explanation is given by the plaintiff for this; (4) it is not pointed out that there was any pressing occasion or pressure which necessitated the conversion of the defendant and the subsequent Nikah; (5) if the father of the plaintiff was an orthodox, then the plaintiff ordinarily would have insisted on the defendant's conversion and would not have allowed his children to be born and brought up without the defendant's conversion to Islam; (6) though the plaintiff speaks about conversion, it is not his case that either his parents or his friends or anybody else had desired that Nikah also should be performed.

31. One is at a loss to understand as to what was the object or purpose or even propriety in performing the second marriage with the same wife over again after about three and half years. No written invitations were issued about the so-called Nikah ceremony. The learned Judge in para 48 of his judgment has observed that the manner in which the ceremonies are stated to have taken place did not appear to him as natural. No Nikahnama is produced. There is no record of conversion. There are no photographs of the ceremonies viz. conversion or Nikah. The entry dated 29-12-1969 is practically at the end of the register and had not seen light of the day till it was produced in court and therefore in substance it is held by the learned Judge that it is doubtful. In our view these circumstances are relevant in appreciating the evidence both oral and documentary while deciding the issues of conversion and Nikah. The learned Judge of the trial court has considered the oral evidence in the light of these surrounding circumstances and in our view rightly, therefore, it is not possible for us to accept the contention of Shri Mody that the finding recorded by the learned Judge in that behalf is perverse. Apart from these circumstances, in our opinion there are certain other circumstances which made the story of conversion doubtful.

32. The Bombay Registration of Marriages Act, 1953 provides for registration of marriages. This Act came into force in the year 1954 and, therefore, the alleged Nikah which took place in 1969 should have been normally registered under the Bombay Registration Act. Absence of such a registration throws serious doubt on the factum of Nikah. It is pertinent to note that compulsory registration of marriages was recommended by the United Nations so as to have effective check on bigamous marriages. Apart from this registration also supplies reliable proof of marriages and ensures legitimacy etc. Such a provision is also helpful to prevent fake conversion to Islam to evade prohibition of bigamy under other laws.

33. Apart from the fact that there were no written wedding invitations, there is also no signed document in respect of Meher. No document bearing signatures of the parties and witnesses such as Nikahnama, is forthcoming. Apart from this subsequent events viz. opening of a joint account in the Bank in the name of Padma, entry in the ration card, birth certificates, telephone application, insurance policies all show that in all these documents the defendant wife is described as Padma. This clearly negatives the story of conversion. Apart from this the circumstance that none of the defendant's personal lady friends or relatives were invited to the conversion ceremony or Nikah speaks for itself. At the time when the alleged conversion and Nikah took place the last child of the defendant was a sucking child of less than two months' old. Therefore, it appears to be a bit improbable that with a sucking child in her arm the defendant will decide to enter into Islam. According to the plaintiff himself reason for conversion was orthodoxy of his parents and none else. Hence, the oral and documentary evidence produced by the plaintiff to prove the factum of conversion will have to be considered in this background.

34. The main witness to the conversion ceremony is Qazi Paloba. It is the case of the plaintiff that this witness has acted as Qazi and has conducted the conversion and Nikah ceremony. Qazi Paloba has filed an affidavit dated 12th June 1978 wherein he speaks about the certificate dated 5th May 1978, which is a certificate of marriage. In this affidavit he has not stated anything about conversion. So far as the factum of conversion is concerned, P.W. 3 Qazi Mohammed Ali Paloba has stated as under:

"Whenever the parties come for Nikah I asked them their names. If I find that the party is non-muslim, I ask that person whether he or she was willing to embrace Islam willingly. If that person consents then I make him or her recite Kalma. This is my invariable practice in cases of non-Muslims coming for Nikah". But for saying this he does not speak about the factum of conversion or the fact that in fact the defendant wife was asked to recite any Kalma or he had even asked her name. Thus his evidence is not direct evidence of conversion. Then he speaks about Nikah ceremony. However, in para 4 of his deposition he has stated that he does not remember whether he had prepared at that time Nikahnama form in respect of the present Nikah. He admitted that he belonged to Konkani Jamat, which seems to be Jamat of the plaintiff. He is not aware of the existence of the Bombay Marriage Registration Act. He does not recollect what name was told to him by the defendant, nor he is in a position to say definitely as to whether he had asked the defendant whether she was prepared to embrace Islam religion. In para 7 of his deposition he stated that he cannot remember the place where Nikah took place and in the register the place of Nikah is not entered. He has admitted that so far as the register is concerned, some pages towards the end of the register are blank. He also admitted that he does not maintain any record about converting a person to Islam and he does not hold any Sanad of Qazi. He also did not remember time or the date on which Nikah of the plaintiff was performed. He then admitted that general practice is to keep a record. He also admitted that he takes signatures of both parties after preparing Nikahnama. His attention was drawn to one of such Nikahnama Ex. 8 which related to other marriage. He also admitted in para 13 of his deposition that the column is provided for Nikah form where the Qazi makes entries such as whether bride is a widowed woman or is a divorcee etc. He also admitted that if bride or bridegroom had been converted to Islam before Nikah, he writes in the column serial number of the certificate issued by Nake Masjid about his or her conversion. He then admitted in para 17 of his deposition that the presence of Vakil is necessary at the time of Nikah to give consent of the bride besides fixing Meher etc. This witness was not in a position to remember anything about Nikah of Zubeda, sister of the plaintiff which took place in the year 1978, though he has tried to depose about Nikah which took place in the year 1969 about 10 years back. In this context it is also pertinent to note that Shri Abdul Aziz Murghey (P.W. 2), who is Naib Qazi of Bombay since the last 25 years and who is examined by the plaintiff to prove Talaqnama has stated in his deposition that his office maintains Nikahnama register which is in the nature of form. He also stated that as a rule he obtains signatures of both the parties to Nikah on the Nikahnama and normally parties do sign Nikahnama. Thus it appears that Nikahnama is normally written. Therefore the learned Judge was quite right in discarding the evidence of Qazi Paloba. This is more so when there is no written record about the conversion and he does not speak about having made the defendant recite Kalma.

35. The other evidence on record viz. the evidence of (P.Ws. 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9) is at the most in the nature of corroboration to the evidence of Qazi (P.W. 3). Therefore if the main evidence of Qazi itself cannot be believed or is of little assistance for proving the factum of conversion and Nikah, then on the basis of other evidence on record it is not possible to record a conclusive finding in that behalf. Ali Shamshi (P.W. 4) is the friend of the plaintiff. So far as his examination-in-chief is concerned, his affidavit dated 9-5-1978 was produced on record and he was tendered for cross-examination. He has stated in his deposition that he had gone alone to attend the marriage. He then stated that in fact Nikah was performed by Qazi in the evening and he does not remember the exact time. He also admitted that he is secretary of the Konkani Ambulance Society and director of Konkani Mercantile Bank and it appears that the plaintiff is also associated with the said institutions. According to him it was Qazi Paloba who had conducted the conversion ceremony as well as the Nikah ceremony. Though he has stated that before Nikah, conversion ceremony had taken place, it was not possible for him to give the details. He also stated that as far as he remembers the plaintiff had not told him any time about his intention to divorce the defendant. Thus the evidence of this witness is also vague. Abdul Kadar Divekar (P.W. 5) is another witness who is also a friend of the plaintiff. According to him the defendant was made to recite Kalma at the time of conversion. He also stated that he had acted as Vakil at the time of Nikah. He then stated about the subsequent conduct of the defendant and has stated that she was behaving like a Muslim lady meaning thereby that she used to say "Salam", "Khuda Hafiz" etc. In para 13 of his evidence he stated that he may have signed on Nikahnama in both of his marriages. Then in para 14 he stated that as far as he remembers, at the time of Nikah of the plaintiff and the defendant a Nikahnama was written and he had signed over it. He then stated that as far as his memory goes he had signed over only one Nikahnama form at that time. However, so far as the plaintiff is concerned in para 129 of his deposition he stated that he does not remember if he has signed on the Nikahnama at the time of Nikah. Qazi Paloba stated in his deposition that he does not remember whether he had prepared at that time any Nikahnama. Then in para 12 of the deposition Divekar has stated that as 10 years have passed, he does not remember all the details of the ceremony. This witness is alleged to have acted as a Vakil. However in para 15 of his deposition he had admitted that he has not acted as Vakil in any other Nikah except this. He also admitted that at the time of Nikah often bride and bridegroom are made to stay in separate room. He further admitted that ordinarily Vakil is a person from blood relation of bride. He also could not say whether it is a rule that the bride has to give consent or Vakil has to act on her behalf. It was also not possible for him to say as to who actually fixed Meher at the time of Nikah between the plaintiff and the defendant. Thus it is doubtful as to whether he had acted as a Vakil at all. To say the least his evidence is also beautifully vague. Yusuf Khan (P.W. 6)

is a relative of the plaintiff. He also speaks about the conversion and Nikah ceremony which were conducted by Qazi Paloba as well as the subsequent conduct of the defendant. In para 14 of his deposition he has stated that he does not remember whether he had signed over the Nikahnama on 29-12-1969. Then in para 18 he stated that he could not bear what exactly was spoken by Qazi and by the defendant between themselves as he was sitting at a distance and they were talking in a soft voice. Therefore his evidence is to some extent based on his own guess-work. In para 19 of his deposition he admitted that in the marriage of Zubeda Nikahnama was made. He also stated that he could not say whether the Qazi who officiated at the Nikah of the plaintiff and defendant was the same Qazi who officiated at the Nikah of Zubeda. It was then suggested to him that he had an influence over Qazi Paloba as he was Assistant Commissioner of Police (CID) and by using the said influence he had obtained certificate from Qazi. This suggestion was denied by the witness. Thus the evidence of this witness is also of little assistance. The evidence of other witness viz. P. W. 7 Dr. Baillur is also stereo-type. In para 7 he has stated that he was not aware of disputes between the plaintiff and defendant till filing of the suit. It was not possible for him to give details about the marriage ceremony of Farhad, the sister of the plaintiff, which was a recent one and he had attended the said marriage. This witness is a close friend of the plaintiff. P.W. 9 Farhad is the sister of the plaintiff. At the time of alleged conversion and Nikah she was about 14 or 15 years of age. Initially in the examination-in-chief she stated that she does not remember as to whether the plaintiff and the defendant were married again according to Muslim rites after their coming to India. Thereafter Interpreter was called and then the questions were again asked to her in Urdu. This witness has studied up to B.A. standard and therefore it cannot be said that earlier she could not understand the question. She has admitted that the marriage photographs were taken at the time of her marriage. She also stated that she does not know what customs the defendant wife was following prior to 29-12-1969 but according to her after that date she was following Muslim customs. She also stated in para 2 of her deposition that even prior to the conversion and Nikah ceremonies she herself and members of her family used to know the defendant as Pervin. From her evidence it is clear the photographs were being taken at the time of marriages. Admittedly no photographs were taken when the marriage of the plaintiff and defendant took place in England. On record, there are one or two photographs of the father of the plaintiff. Therefore the absence of photograph at such an important function when both the plaintiff and the defendant are not only educated but were leading a modern life is a circumstance which is relevant for deciding the theory of conversion and subsequent Nikah. So far as the plaintiff's evidence is concerned, it is obviously an interested testimony. To say the least the other evidence on record can only render corroboration to the evidence of Qazi Paloba who had conducted the conversion as well as Nikah ceremonies. Once his evidence is disbelieved, then obviously the other evidence is not of much assistance to prove the factum of conversion. We have also on record the earlier affidavits filed by plaintiff and his father. These affidavits were filed in the year 1978. The evidence of the defendant is obviously negative. However, it is pertinent to note that since very beginning she is denying the factum of conversion and Nikah. Nothing has been suggested as to why she should decide to get herself converted to Islam and have a Nikah ceremony. It is no doubt true that she had made certain incorrect statements in her deposition. But that part of the evidence is not relevant for deciding the question of conversion and Nikah. According to her there was no conversion and Nikah and the whole story is false. Further we do not find any good or compelling reason so that the defendant should decide to get herself converted to Islam. Her case of denial gets substantial corroboration in subsequent events namely the opinion of Bank account, entries in birth register and ration card wherein her name is still shown as Padma. Therefore, to us the whole story of conversion and subsequent Nikah sounds most improbable. If the said case of the plaintiff is tested on the touchstone of probabilities, it will have to be held that the plaintiff has failed to prove conversion or Nikah. Therefore, if cumulative effect of all this evidence is considered together with the surrounding circumstances, it cannot be said that the view taken by the trial Court is not the correct view of the evidence.

36. So far as the evidence relating to the subsequent conduct of the defendant is concerned, viz., her observing Muslim festival or her adopting certain modes of behaviour, which are consistent with Muslim form of behaviour, in our view that cannot change the complexion. After all the defendant wife had chosen to marry a Muslim husband. Her children were also Muslim. Most of the relatives and friends of the husband with whom the defendant had to associate and keep relations were Muslim and therefore it is but natural that she had adopted certain norms of behaviour which were consistent with Muslim culture. It is not disputed by Shri Mody that from this alone an inference of conversion cannot be drawn. On the other hand the other documentary evidence on record, namely the entry in the ration card, recitals in the application for telephone, entries in the birth certificates pertaining to birth of Sabir clearly indicates that there was no conversion. The learned Judge of the trial court has considered this aspect of the matter in paras 60 to 73 of his judgment and has rightly come to the conclusion that her said conduct does not lead to inference that she was converted to Islam or was professing Muslim religion. Even otherwise the alleged conversion was motivated by orthodoxy of plaintiff's parents and was not with noble sentiments. It does not show honest conviction or change of heart of faith in Muslim religion.

37. Once such a finding is recorded, then so-called talaq loses all its efficacy and, therefore, we do not propose to deal with the said evidence. Once it is held that the marriage between the defendant and the plaintiff solemnized in England in 1966 is governed by the Foreign Marriage Act, then obviously it cannot stand dissolved by unilateral talaq. It is rather surprising that though the marriage solemnized in England in 1966 was subsisting, the plaintiff has put up a story of second marriage in Nikah form with the same wife in December 1969. Even if it is assumed that the subsequent Nikah is established, earlier monogamous and secular marriage of 1966 cannot get merged in subsequent Nikah. In our opinion the marriage which took place in England in 1966 under British Marriage Act, 1949 is still subsisting as it has not been lawfully dissolved till today. Therefore we generally agree with the appreciation of the evidence as well as the findings recorded by the learned trial Judge in this behalf.

38. In the view which we have taken it is not necessary to make any detailed reference to various decisions cited at the Bar either for the plaintiff or the defendant.

39. However, it is contended by Shri Mody that even if it is held that the marriage of the plaintiff with the defendant is still subsisting then also this is a fit case where injunction should be granted in favour of the plaintiff restraining the defendant from entering into the premises in Paradise Apartment. According to Shri Mody from the tenor of the evidence on record it is clear that their living together in the same house is an impossibility. The defendant had gone to the extent of making false allegations against the plaintiff vide her letter Exhibit C. According to Shri Mody, learned trial Judge was not right in coming to the conclusion that the said letter was written by her in a feat of anger or it could be explained as abuses from an angry woman. According to Shri Mody, the wife who has gone to the extent of making such false allegations against her husband should not be permitted to live in the same house. Further the plaintiff husband had got a reasonable apprehension of danger to his life and to his reputation from her if she continues to live with him under the same roof. Shri Mody has also submitted that an injunction could be granted in favour of the plaintiff subject to certain terms and conditions and she could also be granted reasonable maintenance. According to Shri Mody in law wife has no specific right against her husband to be provided with any particular house nor she has a right to live in a particular portion of the house. He also contended that in the present case there is ample evidence on record to show that the defendant wife is motivated by desires of revenge, which is amply clear from the entries in her diary, as well as her letter Exh. C and therefore this is a fit case wherein an injunction should be granted in favour of the plaintiff on payment of certain amount towards maintenance. On the other hand it is contended by Shri Parekh that all through it is the case of the wife that the flat in Paradise Apartment is jointly owned by her or in any case is her matrimonial home. She has also pleaded that her articles including her telephone, is inside the matrimonial home. The defendant was residing in her matrimonial home till the date of institution of her suit and as long as the marriage is subsisting the husband has no right to throw his wife out of their matrimonial home. He also contended that the trial court as well as the first appellate court have exercised their discretion judicially and this court sitting in the Letters Patent Appeal cannot make out an altogether new case in favour of the plaintiff nor the plaintiff can be permitted to make out an altogether new case in this appeal. According to Shri Parekh this is not a fit case wherein any interference is called for in this Letters Patent Appeal which is in substance a second appeal. He also contended that in the trial court no injunction was sought for subject to certain terms and conditions including payment of maintenance. At the first appellate stage at the last minute an affidavit was filed but at that stage the defendant had no opportunity to file a counter. He also contended that after the decision in the first appeal, the stay was refused by the High Court and the leave petition filed against it was also dismissed by the Supreme Court and since then the husband and wife are living in the same premises. No material is placed on record by the plaintiff husband to indicate that their living together is not peaceful. He also contended that during the course of the arguments in this Letters Patent Appeal the Court indicated to Mr. Karim, learned Advocate on record for the plaintiff that if he so desires, he can file an application indicating as to how the plaintiff will be providing an alternate accommodation and maintenance to his wife; but such an application is not filed. Therefore, according to Shri Parekh in the absence of any such application, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in this Letters Patent Appeal. It is also contended by Shri Parekh that the plaintiff's conduct all through was such that he cannot be heard in equity. It is also submitted by him that the plaintiff has filed a separate suit on the Original Side of this Court bearing Suit No. 1413 of 1978 wherein he has sought for a declaration that he is the absolute owner of the flat in the Paradise Apartment. He has also asked for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant wife from entering into the said premises. Thus the question of ownership of the flat is sub judice and until it is decided it cannot be assumed that the plaintiff is the sole owner. In the said plaint the plaintiff has made a reference to the injunction earlier granted by this Court in Appeal from Order No. 251 of 1978, therefore, if so advised, he can approach the High Court in the said suit for an injunction on terms or otherwise and in that case the defendant will have an opportunity to put forward her case. According to Shri Parekh granting an injunction in the present case either on terms or otherwise will be most inequitable and will prejudice the case of the wife in the suit filed on the Original Side.

40. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case, in our opinion, this is a fit case wherein an injunction subject to certain terms and conditions should be granted. From the bare reading of the letter, Exhibit 6, wherein respondent wife has made an allegation against the petitioner husband about his incestuous relationship we are more than satisfied that their living together is an impossibility. Shri Mody is also quite justified in complaining that she is motivated by desires of revenge. He is supported in his contention in this behalf by the entries in her diary. It further appears that not only in the trial Court but even at the first appellate stage various efforts were made for reconciliation or settlement. Such efforts were also made during the pendency of this Letters Patent Appeal also. However all these efforts failed. This clearly indicates that the relations between the parties are strained beyond reconciliation and the marriage has broken down beyond repairs. In these circumstances it will not be in the interest of either parties to force them to live together. Assuming that the residence in the Paradise Apartment is matrimonial home of the respondent wife, the wife has no specific right against her husband to live in the whole of the house or in any particular portion of the house. The flat in Paradise Apartment is big enough to allow the parties to live there separately by effecting suitable partition. This will be also in interest of children who are away for education but come home in vacations. It is clear from the record that both mother and father have love and affection for the children. Therefore if the parties are allowed to live though separately in the same house, the children will be in a position to enjoy the company of their parents when they come home. Therefore in our opinion it will be just and fair if an injunction is granted to the plaintiff on the condition that he will effect a partition in the flat as suggested in the plan submitted by the learned counsel for the defendant-wife and is also directed to pay her maintenance on an ad hoc basis. It is not disputed that the Court has jurisdiction to pass such a conditional order of injunction. In our view such an order is absolutely necessary in this case to do justice between the parties before us. The plaintiff is an eminent surgeon. Therefore he must have a peace of mind to enable him to discharge his duties as a surgeon more efficiently. Unless there is peace at home, such a peace of mind is an impossibility. Therefore in our view this is a fit case wherein the plaintiff should be granted an injunction though on certain terms and conditions, till the matter is decided in the suit pending on the Original Side of this Court or in any other appropriate proceedings.

41. It is submitted by Shri Parekh that in case Court comes to the conclusion that it is necessary to grant interim injunction, then the defendant wife should be given a portion of the flat as outlined by him in red boundary in the map accompanying his written submissions on the condition that the appellant-plaintiff shall pay all outgoings and shall not effect any sale or create third party rights or tenancy in respect of the flat. He should also be directed to pay additional ad hoc maintenance per month to the defendant from the date of the order in this appeal as the Court considers proper till quantum of maintenance is fixed by the order of the Court of competent jurisdiction in any other proceeding. In the plan submitted by Shri Parekh he has made a reference to points Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, which are doors and which will be closed and E 2 will be the defendant's entrance and at points 5 and 6 a notional or real partition will have to be created. E 1 which is a servant's room or passage marked 'A' can become kitchen. The hall, dining room, bedroom, toilet and two balconies will remain with the plaintiff and the other smaller portion which is less than one-third could be allotted to the defendant wife where-in she can live separately. Shri Parekh has further submitted that at points 5 and 6 where the partition will be constructed, the partition should have a door so that at least children can use both the parts of the flat. In our opinion the arrangement suggested by Shri Parekh in the plan attached to his written submission is most reasonable and if the plaintiff husband is granted injunction obviously subject to the decision or orders in suit bearing No. 1413 of 1978 pending on the Original Side, it will meet the ends of justice. This will be subject to the further term of paying additional ad hoc maintenance of Rs. 1,000/- per month to the defendant by the plaintiff from the date of the order of this Court in this Letters Patent Appeal, till the quantum of maintenance is fixed by the Court of competent jurisdiction in any other proceeding instituted by either of the parties. To that extent the appeal deserves to be allowed.

42. In the result, therefore, the appeal is partly allowed and the defendant will be restrained from entering into the portion of the flat, which is outlined in the map kept on record and which is reserved for the residence of the plaintiff after he effects a notional or real partition at points 5 and 6 i.e. door in between. The injunction will become operative from the date on which such partition is actually effected. The injunction will also be subject to the condition that the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant an amount of Rs. 1,000/- (one thousand) per month, on or before the 10th of each month, towards ad hoc maintenance subject to the fixation of the maintenance by a Court of competent jurisdiction in any other proceedings. The parties shall not effect any sale or create third party interest or tenancy rights qua the flat, of course subject to the order of the Courts of competent jurisdiction. The plaintiff will be liable to pay all outgoings including taxes etc. qua the portion of the flat in occupation of the defendant. Since we have decided major issues against the appellant plaintiff in this appeal, in our opinion this is a fit case where the appellant husband should be directed to pay costs of this appeal to the defendant, which is quantified at rupees one thousand (Rs. 1,000/-). The map produced is taken on record. In the view which we have taken no order on cross-objection are necessary. Counter-claim as decreed stands modified in terms of our aforesaid final order.

Appeal partly allowed.

Hind Construction and Engineering Co. Ltd., Appellant v. Union of India. Respondent.

Appeals Nos. 273, 274 of 1976, D/- 23-12-1981.

(A) Arbitration Act (10 of 1940)
S. 2 (a) — Works contract containing arbitration clause — Term in contract for certificate of Engineer after completion of contract — Parties going to arbitration by consent long prior to completion — Held, on facts of case it was impossible to hold that certificate was condition precedent to entertainment of claim. (Para 11)

(B) Arbitration Act (10 of 1940), S. 2 (a) — Works contract — Term in contract for certificate of Engineer — Arbitration clause empowering arbitrator to open up, review and revise certificate — Effect of absence of certificate.

An arbitration clause in general terms a fortiori if it empowers the arbitrator to open up, review and revise any opinion or certificate of Engineer or specifically mentions disputes arising on the withholding of a certificate, will, in the absence of any provision to the contrary, empower the arbitrator to disregard a certificate or the absence of one. In a case where finality to any certificate is not specifically attached under the contract, the wide power given to the Arbitrator to open up, review or revise any certificate would enable him to consider the entire dispute referred to him and the absence of any certificate under the contract would not affect the claim. *Brodie v. S. S. Ray with N. R. Khaitan i/b M/s. Mulla & Mulla and Craigie Blunt and Caroe (in Appeals Nos. 273 and 274 of 1976), for Appellant; H. H. Advani with R. L. Dalal (in Appeal No. 273 of 1976) and H. H. Advani with A. M. Setalvad (in Appeal No. 274 of 1976) For Respondent.

CHANDURKAR, J.:—This Judgment will dispose of Appeals Nos. 273 & 274 of 1976. Both these appeals arise out of two judgments delivered by Lentin J. in two Award Petitions which were filed by the Appellant Company, hereinafter referred to as 'the Contractor' for setting aside two Awards, dt. 14th Feb. 1974 arising out of disputes between the Contractor and the Union of India, the Respondent herein, in respect of a contract of construction for the development of the Naval Dockyard at Bombay, for which the tender of the Contractor was accepted by the Government of India. In view of the limited challenge to the two Awards, both in the trial Court as well as in this Court, it is not necessary to set out in detail the events which led to the contract of construction. It is sufficient to state that in connection with the scheme for the development of the Bombay Harbour in or about 1952, the Government of India had entered into an arrangement with a concern known as "Sir Alexander Gibb and Partners", referred to hereafter as "AGP Engineers" for the preparation of a detailed design after carrying out the necessary survey and investigation. The contract which was intended to be given to the Contractor was intended for the work which was described as follows:—

1. Rock breaking and dredging.
2. Dredging of soft material.
3. Construction of Barracks and Destroyer wharves standing on vertical cylinders.
4. Boat Pond wall.
5. Custom Basin wall.
6. Mint storm water culverts and mint reclamation.

The Government of India invited global tenders for this work. The Contractor's tender was accepted by the Government in Aug. 1954 and the contract was formally signed on 2nd Sept. 1954. Works Order under Cl. 41 of the contract was issued on 24th Sept. 1954.

2. However, before the completion of the works, the Contractor addressed letters, dt. 9th June 1956 and 11th June 1956 to the Government, informing the Government of India that the Contractor had stopped the work of dredging and rock breaking. Finally on 4th Sept. 1956, after attempts to make some amicable settlement to enable the Company to complete the work had failed, the Contractor informed the Government that they were taking steps to wind up the organisation and that the plants, machinery, stores etc. lying at the site would be at the risk and responsibility of Government. Government thereupon forfeited the contract under Cl. 63 of the Agreement of Contract, which we shall shortly reproduce, and entered the site on 27th/28th Dec. 1956. On 2nd Feb. 1957 Government finally decided to carry out the unfinished contract works departmentally.

3. On or about 26th Dec. 1956, the Contractor served a Notice u/s. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the Union of India, but later on invoked Cl. 66 of the contract for arbitration. Mr. J. M. Mazumdar, retired Judge of the Calcutta High Court was appointed sole Arbitrator. Unfortunately, after entering on the reference, he expired before any evidence could be recorded. Thereafter the Union Government appointed Mr. Bishan Narain, retired Judge of the Punjab High Court to act as the sole Arbitrator and the Arbitrator entered upon the reference on 15th April 1961. Before the Arbitrator, the Company claimed an amount of Rs. 84,47,527/- on various grounds. The Respondent Union of India made a counter-claim against the Contractor for Rs. 2,65,00,000/-. In the course of the proceedings before the Arbitrator, a question arose as to whether the Arbitrator had jurisdiction to entertain the Respondent's counter-claim aggregating to Rs. 2,65,00,000/-. Thereupon the Union of India by its letter, dt. 8th Jan. 1962 appointed the Arbitrator as the sole Arbitrator under Cl. 66 of the contract to adjudicate upon the claim of the respondent contained in Parts A, C and D of the Respondent's pleadings filed before the Arbitrator on 1st June 1961. On 9th Jan. 1962, the Arbitrator entered upon the Reference. On 11th Jan. 1962 both the parties made a joint submission giving their consent "to the learned Arbitrator opening reference on Jan. 9, 1962 on all matters referred to him by the Secretary, Ministry of law, Government of India, vide his Instrument dt. Jan. 8, 1962, in spite of the fact that the works have not yet been completed." Prior to that, on 9th Oct. 1961, both the parties had already filed a joint application empowering the Arbitrator to adjudicate upon all disputes arising in the case and on the next day, they had also filed a joint application that the Government's counter-claim for — Rs. 2,65,00,000/- was covered by reference to arbitration already made by the Law Secretary on 30-3-1961. On 8th Jan. 1962, fresh appointment was, however, made by the Law Secretary as the Arbitrator was of the view that the agreement of parties did not confer any jurisdiction upon him and he had, therefore, suggested to the Counsel for the Government to reconsider the matter and get a new reference made relating to the Government's counter-claim and thus avoid complications later on.

4. By a further agreement between the parties, dt. 31-3-1964, the Arbitrator was appointed as the sole Arbitrator to adjudicate upon claims made by the Government in Ex. E. of Part D of the Government's pleadings filed before the Arbitrator on 1st June 1961. All the three references were consolidated by consent of parties and time for making the Award was extended from time to time and finally till 31st Mar. 1974.

5. On 14th Feb. 1974, the Arbitrator made three Awards. By the first Award, in the reference made by the letter, dt. 30th Mar. 1961, which dealt with the claim of the Contractor, the Arbitrator found an amount of Rs. 17,85,146/- due to the Contractor from the Government of India. In the second Award made in respect of the counter-claim made by the Government of India, the Arbitrator found a sum of Rs. 30,27,300/- due from the Contractor to the Government of India. In the third Award made in the reference, dt. 31-3-1964 the Arbitrator found a sum of Rs. 3,27,881.90 being due from the Contractor to the Government of India. The sum total of all these three Awards was that finally the Contractor was liable to pay Rs. 15,70,035.90 to the Government of India. The first Award was challenged by the Contractor in Award Petition No. 31 of 1974, which was rejected by the learned Single Judge and that order is challenged in Appeal No. 273 of 1976. The second Award was challenged in Award Petition No. 32 of 1974, which was also rejected, and that decision is challenged in Appeal No. 274 of 1976. We shall first deal with Appeal No. 274 of 1976 which deals with the validity of the second Award.

6. Before the learned single Judge the second Award was challenged on four grounds: firstly, that the learned Arbitrator had misconstrued Cl. 63 (3) of the conditions of contract; secondly, that in the matter pertaining to "grabbing" the learned Arbitrator wrongly rejected an admission made by a witness for Government and erroneously relied on an admission made by the petitioner's witness; thirdly, that in the matter pertaining to "Soft Dredging", the Contractor's submission on mitigation of damages was wrongly rejected by the learned Arbitrator and fourthly, in assessing the amount spent by the Government in excess of the reasonable amount, by reason of delay in the completion of the works, the learned Arbitrator arrived at conclusions which were inconsistent with his own findings. All these four contentions were rejected by the learned single Judge, and we may point out at this stage that when the appeal was argued before us by Mr. Ray, only the first and the fourth submissions were canvassed.

7. Before we refer to the two submissions, made before us by Mr. Ray, it is necessary to reproduce Cl. 63 (3) and Cl. 66 of the contract. Cl. 63 (3) reads as under:—

"If the employer shall enter and expel the contractor under this clause he shall not be liable to pay to the contractor any money on account of the contract until the expiration of the period of maintenance and thereafter until the costs of completion and maintenance, damages for delay in completion (if any) and all other expenses incurred by the Employer have been ascertained and the amount thereof certified by the Engineer. The Contractor shall then be entitled to receive only such sum or sums (if any) as the Engineer may certify, would have been due to him upon due completion by him after deducting the said amount. But if such amount shall exceed the sum which would have been payable to the Contractor on due completion by him then the Contractor shall upon demand, pay to the Employer the amount of such excess and it shall be deemed a debt due by the Contractor to the employer and shall be recoverable accordingly."

Cl. 66 reads as under:—

"If any dispute or difference of any kind whatever shall arise between the Employer or Engineer on one side and the Contractor on the other in connection with or arising out of the contract or the carrying out of the work (whether during the progress of the works or after the completion and whether before or after the determination, abandonment or breach of the contract) the Engineer on behalf of the Employer, will endeavour to reach an agreement on the point in dispute with the Contractor and failing such agreement the aggrieved party may require that the dispute should be referred to an arbitrator appointed by the Secretary to the Ministry of Law, Government of India, provided always that notwithstanding the disagreement by the contractor any direction given by the Engineer shall be final and binding on the contractor until the completion of the work and shall forthwith be given effect to by the contractor who shall proceed with the work with all due diligence. All references to the arbitrator shall be deemed to be a submission to arbitration within the meaning of the Arbitration Act 1940 or any statutory enactment or amendment thereof for the time being in force.

Such arbitrator shall have full power to open up, review and revise any decision, opinion, direction, certificate or valuation of the Engineer and neither party shall be limited in the proceedings before such arbitrator to the evidence or arguments put before the Engineer for the purpose of obtaining his decision above referred to. The award of the arbitrator shall be final and binding on the parties. Such reference except as to the withholding by the Engineer of any certificate or the withholding of any portion of the retention money under Clause 60 hereof to which the contractor claims to be entitled or as to the exercise of the Engineer's power to give a certificate under Clause 63 hereof shall not be opened until after the completion or alleged completion of the works unless the written consent of the Employer and the Contractor. Provided always:—

What is contended before us by Mr. Ray is that on an interpretation of Cl. 63 (3) of the contract, no claim can be filed by either the Contractor or the Employer either before the Arbitrator or anybody else before the grant of the certificate by the Engineer as envisaged in that Clause. It was contended that want of a certificate contemplated by Cl. 63 (3) will go to the root of the matter and if the Contractor is held liable without the certificate of the Engineer, then this would render the matter different in substance from what was stipulated for by the parties. In other words, the contention is that a certificate under Cl. 63 (3) of the contract is a condition-precedent before the Government of India could canvass its counter-claim and no such certificate having been obtained from the Engineers, the counter-claim was liable to be rejected. The learned Arbitrator had held that Cl. 63 (3) did not require the AGP Engineers to issue any certificate for the works done by the Government of India after forfeiture of the contract, and the learned Arbitrator recorded a finding in the alternative that the AGP Engineers were in error in not granting completion certificates as the rock-breaking work had been substantially completed. The learned Arbitrator held that the firm of AGP is a firm of Engineers and not that of Cost Accountants and its duties and powers are described in Cl. 2 of the contract, which inter alia provided "to watch and supervise the works and to test and examine any material to be used or workmanship employed in connection with the works." According to the learned Arbitrator, under the contract, AGP had no power to control the expenses incurred by the Company or by the Government, and under Cl. 63 (3), AGP could only ascertain and certify the amount spent and, therefore, this provision was neither a condition precedent nor mandatory. The learned Arbitrator further held that "AGP's failure to issue such a certificate could not possibly deprive the Government from recovering the extra amounts spent by it in completing the works," and that it was not for the AGP to certify reasonableness of such expenses. The learned Arbitrator, therefore, held that it was open to him to ascertain and determine the amount of reasonable expenses incurred by the Government under Cl. 63 (3) of the contract. The Arbitrator pointed out that the reference was made when the Government was in the process of completing the works and the basis of the claim originally made was completion of the contract works under Cl. 63 (3) and the amount specified in the claim consisted of expenses already incurred and estimate of expenses to be incurred; this amount was not ascertained at that time and was only an estimate, but by the time the Award was made, the expenses were ascertained. The Arbitrator also referred to the joint applications of the parties, dt. 9-10-1961, 10-10-1961 and 12-1-1962 which clearly expressed "the parties' intention and position that I should decide all claims relating to both periods." According to the Arbitrator, any other conclusion would amount to multiplicity of legal proceedings and such a conclusion must be avoided.

8. With regard to Cl. 63 (3) of the contract, the learned Judge took the view that he was not sitting in appeal over the reasonings and findings of the learned Arbitrator who had taken all the factors into consideration, and even assuming that the Court might come to a different conclusion, that by itself was not sufficient to set aside an award. The limitations were strictly prescribed by S. 30 of the Arbitration Act beyond which it was not permissible to travel. According to Mr. Ray, the finding recorded by the learned Arbitrator that the requirement of a certificate under

Cl. 63 (3) was not a condition precedent was an error apparent on the face of the record and since the arbitrator proceeded on the erroneous view of the matter that certificate was not a condition precedent, the correctness of the finding on the question of law could be gone into. Reliance was placed on the decision of the Supreme Court in Thawardas Pherumal v. Union of India, AIR 1955 SC 468 where the Supreme Court pointed out that an arbitrator cannot ignore the law or misapply it in order to do what he thinks is just and reasonable. It was held that he is a tribunal selected by the parties to decide their disputes according to law and so is bound to follow and apply the law, and if he does not, he can be set right by the Court provided his error appears on the face of the award. The exception to this was when the parties choose specifically to refer a question of law as a separate and distinct matter. When the matter was argued before us on behalf of the respondent, the hearing proceeded on the footing that the correctness of the finding given by the learned Arbitrator as to whether a certificate under Cl. 63 (3) was a condition precedent to be satisfied by the Government of India before the counter-claim was made, could be looked into u/s. 30 of the Arbitration Act. We need not, therefore, go into the contention whether the correctness of the finding could be validly looked into or not. The contention advanced before us on behalf of the appellant is based on certain decisions which are referred to in Ch. 7, S. 3 in Hudson's Building and Engineering Contracts, Tenth Edition under the heading "Whether Certificate, Satisfaction or Approval a Condition Precedent to Builder's Right to Sue."

9. Now, before we go to these authorities, it is necessary to refer to the relevant terms of the contract. Cl. 63 of the contract empowers the Government of India, under certain circumstances, to enter upon the site and the works and expel the Contractor therefrom without thereby avoiding the contract or releasing the Contractor from any of his obligations or liabilities under the Contract or affecting the rights and powers conferred on the Employer (the Government of India) or the Engineer (AGP) by the contract and the Government of India could complete the works or employ any other contractor to complete the works and the Employer or such other contractor could use for such completion so much of the constructional and Dredging Plant, temporary works equipment, transport and materials on the Site as the Employer or the Contractor may think proper. This clause refers to the power of forfeiture and one of the circumstances in which this power of forfeiture can be exercised is that the Contractor has abandoned the contract. We are not concerned with the other grounds of forfeiture. Under Cl. 63 (1), therefore, it is open to the Employer (Government of India) to complete the works after entering upon the site and the works. Under Cl. 63 (2) the Engineer has to determine either ex parte or by or after reference to the parties or after such investigation or inquiries as he may think fit to make or institute and certify what amount had at the time of such entry and expulsion been reasonably earned by or would reasonably accrue to the contractor in respect of work then actually done by him under the Contract and what was the value of any unused or partially used materials, any plant and temporary works equipment or transport on the site. Then we come to Cl. 63 (3). Cl. 63 (3) is headed "Payment after Forfeiture." It is expressly provided in that clause that the Employer shall not be liable to pay to the Contractor any money on account of the Contract in the case of forfeiture until the expiration of the Period of Maintenance and thereafter until the costs of completion and maintenance, damages for delay in completion (if any) and all other expenses incurred by the Employer have been ascertained and the amount thereof certified by the Engineer. Cl. 63 (3) also provides for the quantum which the Contractor is entitled to get. The Contractor will be entitled to get only such amount as the Engineer may certify, would have been due to him upon due completion by him after deducting the said amount, i.e. the amount which the Contractor would be entitled to receive will be the difference between the amount which he would have earned if he had duly completed the contract and the expenses incurred by the Employer on account of costs of completion and maintenance as well as after taking into account the damages for delay in completion. The Period of Maintenance in the instant case was 12 months calculated from the date of completion of the works certified by the Engineer in accordance with Cl. 48. Cl. 48 refers to the Certificate of Completion of Works. Cl. 47 refers to the Liquidated Damages for Delay under which if the Contractor failed to complete the Works within the time prescribed, he was to pay to the Employer the sum stated in the Tender as liquidated damages for such default — the amount specified in the instant case being Rs. 7,200/- per week — and the Employer had the right without prejudice to any other method of recovery, to deduct the amount of such damages from any moneys in his hands due or which may become due to the Contractor. Cl. 63 (3) further provides that if the amount of costs of completion and maintenance, damages for delay in completion (if any) and all other expenses incurred by the Employer exceeded the sum which would have been payable to the Contractor on due completion by him, then the Contractor shall upon demand pay to the Employer the amount of such excess and it shall be deemed a debt due by the Contractor to the Employer and shall be recoverable accordingly.

10. The counter-claim of the Union of India made before the Arbitrator was under this later clause of Cl. 63 (3) and the question is whether a certificate of the Engineers was a pre-condition before this claim could be entertained or granted. Now, according to Cl. 66, if there was any dispute or difference of any kind whatever between the Employer or Engineer on one side and the Contractor on the other, in connection with or arising out of the contract, primarily it was the Engineer who had to endeavour to reach an agreement on the point in dispute, and failing such agreement the aggrieved party had the right to require that the dispute should be referred to an Arbitrator appointed by the Secretary to the Ministry of Law, Government of India. The powers of the Arbitrator are given in the second paragraph of Cl. 66 and it shows that the Arbitrator had the power to open up, review and revise any decision, direction, certificate or valuation of the Engineer and neither party was limited in the proceedings before such Arbitrator to the evidence or arguments put before the Engineer for the purpose of obtaining his decision on the dispute. Normally, under Cl. 66 a reference is not to be opened until after the completion or alleged completion of the works, except in respect of three matters viz.

(1) Withholding by the Engineer of any certificate;

(2) Withholding of any portion of the retention money under clause 60 to which the Contractor claims to be entitled; and

(3) As to the exercise of the Engineer's power to give a certificate under Cl. 63.

However, it is provided in Cl. 66 that in respect of other matters, the reference can be opened with the written consent of the Employer and the Contractor. The effect of clause 66 is that in respect of the three matters referred to above, the reference could be opened before the completion or alleged completion of the works. It is obvious, therefore, that when clause 66 specifically provides that the reference as to the Engineer's power to give a certificate under Cl. 63 can be opened before the completion of the works, the reference cannot be to anything else except clause 63 (2) which refers to the valuation at the date of forfeiture. That clause specifically requires the Engineer to certify what amount (if any) at the time of entry of the Employer and the expulsion of the Contractor, the Contractor had reasonably earned on the date of forfeiture. Such a reference alone could be opened prior to the completion. Reference in respect of all other disputes had to be postponed after the completion or alleged completion of the works, unless the parties agreed in writing to have the reference opened.

11. Now, it is no doubt true that clause 63 (3) refers to the Engineer ascertaining the costs of completion and maintenance, damages for delay in completion and all other expenses incurred by the Employer and this amount will be certified by the Engineer. The occasion to certify this amount can arise only after the completion of the contract. As a matter of fact, the right of the Contractor to claim any moneys in terms of clause 63 (3) can arise only after the completion of the works. No claim for any amount due or alleged to be due from the Employer to the Contractor could have been made under clause 63 (3) before the completion of the contract. Thus, clause 63 (3) comes into operation only after the completion of the work contract. Now, admittedly in the instant case, both the parties have gone to the Arbitrator before the completion of the contract. Indeed, originally the first arbitration proceeding was taken by the Contractor after they had served a Notice under Section 80 of the Civil P. C. Admittedly, at that time, the contract was not complete and it is not in dispute that the Contractor took recourse to the procedure for arbitration under Cl. 66 prior to the completion of the contract. Now, if the parties have, by consent, gone to arbitration in respect of their disputes prior to the completion of the contract itself and prior to the time when the said Cl. 63 (3) could really become effective, it is difficult to see how any certificate as contemplated by Clause 63 (3) could be treated as a condition precedent which had to be satisfied by the Government of India before making their counter-claim. Mere reference to Cl. 63 (3) by the Arbitrator that the claim was under Cl. 63 (3) would not necessarily imply that all the conditions under Cl. 63 (3) would also have to be satisfied. When the Arbitrator was relying upon the fact that the claim was under clause 63 (3), obviously it was intended to convey that the rights and liabilities of the parties had to be determined on the basis that the Contractor would be entitled to claim the difference between such amount as he would have earned if the contract was completed and the costs of completion and maintenance, damages for delay and the other expenses incurred by the Union of India. This was the mode of determining the quantum of liability of the parties against each other and that was why a reference to clause 63 (3) was required to be made by the Arbitrator. The Arbitrator was, therefore, clearly right when he took the view that no certificate under clause 63 (3) was required to be issued. Indeed, when the parties by consent have gone to arbitration long before the completion of the works and when the certificate contemplated by clause 63 (3) was a certificate after completion, it is difficult to see how the certificate could be required as a condition precedent on the facts of the case.

12. Even otherwise the question as to whether a certificate, which is normally contemplated by such contracts, has to be obtained as a condition precedent before the claim is made, will have primarily to be decided on the basis of the intention of the parties to be deduced from the contract, and as pointed out by Hudson at page 404 'there is no magic in the existence of a contractual provision as to a certificate.' We have not been shown any provision in the contract which indicates that the parties ever intended that any certificate is to be treated as conclusive by the parties under the contract. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Fourth Edition, paragraph 1194, it is observed as follows :—

"Contracts for works of construction frequently provide that the contractor should carry out and complete the works to the satisfaction or approval of the architect or engineer. In such a case, such approval may, on the proper construction of the contract, be a condition precedent to the contractor's right to payment. This question of construction may turn on considerations similar to those which determine whether the issue of a certificate is a condition precedent, but the mere fact that the architect or engineer is required to express his approval in a certificate is not decisive. The main test seems to be whether the decision of the architect or engineer in granting or withholding approval was intended by the parties to be final".

13. Now, certificates which are normally contemplated by such contracts are either progress or interim certificates or final certificates or some other certificates. Progress or interim certificates are issued from time to time during the course of the work, certifying that, in the opinion of the Architect, work has been carried out and in some cases, materials supplied is of a certain value. A final certificate may certify the amount finally payable to the contractor under the contract or the satisfaction of the Architect that work conforms with the contract or both. Upon these matters the Architect's decision embodied in his cerificate is often binding and conclusive on the parties. The other certificates may empower the Architect to certify various matters, such as the happening of an event which entitles the employer to exercise a right of forfeiture or to record an extension of time given by the Architect to the contractor. The Architect's decision may be binding and conclusive upon these matters. (See Building Contracts by Keating, Fourth Edition, pages 76 and 77). We are not concerned in this case with the certificate of approval which is normally given by the Engineer to the Contractor. As a matter of fact, it does not appear that when the arbitration proceedings commenced, the certificate required under clause 63 (2) of the contract was obtained even by the Contractor.

14. In the present case, there is no specific provision with regard to the finality of any certificate given by the Engineer. The power of the Arbitrator under clause 63 is so wide that he has been given the power to reopen or review any decision of the Engineer and therefore, when the matter is taken to the Arbitrator, the merits of the claim have to be gone into completely and fully by the Arbitrator. Even assuming that there was any requirement of the certificate, which indeed we do not find on the contract, as being condition precedent, it is necessary to refer to the law with regard to the powers and jurisdiction of the Arbitrator in such cases. On the question as to the effect of the arbitration clause on the certificate clause, where a building contract contains a clause by which the determination or certificate of the Architect is made final and conclusive between the parties, or is made a condition precedent to any right of the contractor to payment and the contract also contains a clause by which all disputes are to be referred to arbitration, the law is stated thus by Halsbury in paragraph 1298:—

"Where the arbitration clause excludes certain matters in express terms and leaves them to the sole discretion of the architect, no arbitration can arise in respect of these matters except by agreement, and, in the absence of an allegation of fraud, neither the Court nor the arbitrator has jurisdiction to review the determination of the architect as to those matters.

On the other hand, where there is no express restriction of the scope of the arbitration clause, the jurisdiction of the arbitrator does not apparently extend to review the correctness of measurements and valuations where they are made conclusive between the parties, or conditions precedent to a right to payment. Where, however, the architect has power to issue a certificate which is neither made conclusive between the parties, nor is a condition precedent to payment, such a certificate would be subject to an arbitration clause in the contract."

Also in Paragraph 1215, the learned Author has observed as follows:—

"A clause giving an arbitrator power to open up, review and revise the certificate, opinion or decision of the certifier and to determine all disputes and matters submitted to him as if no such certificate, decision or opinion had been given will certainly be wide enough".

15. After a review of several decisions, to some of which we shall refer, Hudson has culled the principles as follows at page 446:—

"(a) An arbitration clause in general terms a fortiori if it empowers the arbitrator to open up, review and revise any opinion or certificate, or specifically mentions disputes arising on the withholding of a certificate, will, in the absence of any provision to the contrary, empower the arbitrator to disregard a certificate or the absence of one,

(b) Once an arbitrator is held to have jurisdiction to hear the merits of a claim, any purely technical or procedural difficulties in the way of giving full practical effect to his decision arising out of the wording of the contract in relation to the certifier and the parties are likely to be disregarded, the implication being that all necessary powers have been conferred on the arbitrator to enable him to give full effect to his decision."

Both these propositions are founded, inter alia, on Brodie v. Cardiff Corporation, (1919) AC 337, Neale v. Richardson (1938) 1 All ER 753 and Prestige v. Bretzell, (1938) 4 All ER 346. On the basis of proposition (a), Mr. Advani appearing on behalf of the Respondent has urged that the proposition clearly laid down that the absence of a certificate does not prevent the Arbitrator to deal with the disputes between the parties, Mr. Ray, however, has contended that when reference in proposition (a) is made to the absence of a certificate, it must be construed to mean that the certificate was not produced or could not be obtained because the Engineer wrongly declined to issue the certificate, when asked for.

16. Now, it is no doubt true that in the case of Brodie v. Corporation of Cardiff and Neale v. Richardson, cited (supra), the Engineer had declined to issue the necessary certificate. In Brodie's case, the contract was to construct a reservoir for a Municipal Corporation at a fixed price in accordance with the specification, and the work had to be done to the satisfaction of the Corporation's Engineer, with such additions, alterations and variations as might from time to time be directed by the Corporation or the Engineer as provided by the specification. The contract provided that the Corporation would not be liable for payment of any charge for additions, alterations or deviations unless instructions for them were given in writing by the Engineer. The contract provided that in case any dispute should arise, either during the progress of the works or after the determination of the contract, as to the construction of the contract, or as to any matter or thing arising thereunder, or as to any objection by the Contractor to any certificate, finding, decision, requisition or opinion of the engineer, such dispute was to be referred to the arbitration and final decision of a single arbitrator, and either party might demand an immediate determination of the dispute. In respect of certain works which the contractor contended were extras, for which he was entitled to be paid in addition to the contract price, the Engineer refused to give written orders on the ground that the works were in accordance with the contract and were not extras. The matter was referred to arbitration. The Arbitrator found that the requirements were not in accordance with the contract, that the Engineer improperly refused to give orders in writing for the same as extras and that in deciding against the claim of the contractor, the Engineer did not act fairly or impartially, but had no dishonest motive and, therefore, awarded certain sums to be paid to the contractor. The House of Lords held that upon these findings the Arbitrator had power to award that the items in question should be paid for as extras, notwithstanding the absence of any orders in writing by the Engineer. The question which was posed for decision in that case was "whether the claim for payment is barred for want of a certificate in writing." The contention that the Cardiff Corporation was entitled to defeat the contractor by pleading that there was no order in writing was rejected by the House of Lords with these words :—

"When the arbitration was held it appeared that the engineer was in the wrong, and the award finds that the claims ought to have been allowed as extras. On the arrangement for arbitration at the end the contractor executed these extra works, and it is now strenuously contended on behalf of the corporation that although the award is in favour of the contractor, and shows that an order in writing should have been given, the corporation are entitled to defect the contractor by pleading that there is no order in writing. In my opinion this contention is unfounded. The dispute was whether the item was an extra for which an order in writing should be given, and when the parties agreed that the work should be done and that the question should stand over for arbitration, the effect of the contract is that the finding of the arbitrator is to take the place of the order in writing which ought to have been given. Otherwise, the postponed arbitration would be entirely useless." (p. 351)

17. The decision in Brodie's case (1919 AC 337) was followed in Neale v. Richardson, (1938) 1 All BR 753. That was also a case where under the contract to build a house for the defendant, the plaintiff was to be paid by instalments when a certificate was given by the architect and in case of disputes, the architect was to act as arbitrator. A dispute arose and the arbitrator nominated a person other than himself to act as arbitrator and when it was pointed out to him that the contract provided that he himself should be the arbitrator, he refused to arbitrate or to issue a certificate with regard to the final instalment. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant for the balance alleged to be due according to him. The defendant took no steps to appoint a new arbitrator or stay the suit. Before the County Court Judge it was argued for the defendant that under the contract obtaining a certificate was a condition precedent to payment. The County Court Judge held that the arbitrator had failed to carry out his duties and a decree was passed. The defendant appealed. The Court of Appeal took the view that the arbitration clause in the contract provided that in all cases of dispute arising out of the contract, the decision of the architect shall be binding on the parties, and held that the arbitration clause was sufficiently wide to empower the Architect as Arbitrator to determine whether a certificate should have been given and since he had refused to act and the defendant had taken no steps to have a new Arbitrator appointed, the Court could assume the powers which the Arbitrator would have had and determine whether a certificate should have been given. Referring to Brodie's case, it was observed in the judgment of Slesser L. J., as follows :—

"Here, the question being as to whether or not the final certificate ought to be given, a dispute arose on which, under clause 8, I think the arbitrator had power to determine that the certificate ought to have been given, and, if he had, the legal effect would have been, as their Lordships assumed in Brodie's case, as if it had been so given.

In the present case, it is clear on the facts that the arbitrator under the contract has refused to arbitrate, and the question of the builder's right to remuneration, in the absence of a final certificate, has failed to be determined. Following Brodie's case, an arbitration resulting in favour of the builder for a sum there determined would have enabled him to use for his payment as if a final certificate for that amount had been granted and not wrongfully refused." (pp. 757-758)

Now, it is no doubt true, as contended by Mr. Ray, that Neale v. Richardson was also a case where the Architect had declined to issue a certificate and the Court, therefore, proceeded to determine the right of the builder on the basis of his claim to which he would have been entitled if a final certificate for that amount had been granted by the Architect.

18. Though the two decisions in Brodie's case 1919 AC 337 and Neale v. Richardson (1938) 1 All ER 753, arose out of the refusal of the architect, it is instructive to see how these decisions have been construed by the Court of Appeal in Prestige & Co. Ltd. v. Bretzell, (1938) 4 All ER 346. That was also a case where the architect had refused to issue a certificate to the builders on the ground that he had received a complaint from the building owner with reference to the work. The architect asked the builders to get in touch with the owner. Upon this the builders alleged that a dispute had arisen and claimed that the matter should be referred to an arbitrator under the arbitration clause in the contract. The arbitrator took the view that he was entitled to consider not only the withholding of the certificate, but also the manner in which the work had been done. The Court of Appeal took the view that in view of the decision in Brodie v. Cardiff Corporation, the arbitrator had power not only to decide as to the issue of a certificate, but also to make an award of the sum due, having regard to the manner in which the work had been done Slesser, L. J., who was a party to the decision in Neale v. Richardson, was one of the learned Judges who decided Prestige & Co's. case. Slesser, L. J., referred to the judgment of Bankes, L. J. in Brodie v. Cardiff Corporation in the Court of Appeal and reproduced the following paragraph from Bankes, L.J.'s judgment :—

"The dispute between the parties which arises under these circumstances appears to me to be a dispute not merely as to whether the engineer was right or wrong in refusing to treat the work as an extra and to give a written order for it, but the dispute includes the question of what the contractor is entitled to be paid for the work so done, assuming that the engineer ought to have given a written order for it."

Dealing with the scope of the arbitration in the case of a dispute which arose out of the refusal of the arbitrator to issue the necessary certificate, Slesser, L. J., observed as follows, referring to the above-quoted observations of Bankes, L. J. :—

"There, as I read Bankes, L. J., you have a situation very similar to the one in this case. That is to say, on a very strict and technical interpretation of the reference, it might be said, as was there said, that all that was being asked was whether the failure or refusal to issue the certificate was well founded. Alternatively, it might be said that it was reasonable to imply that the reference included the question whether the full amount for which such certificate might have been issued, or some lesser sum which the arbitrator thought the contractors were entitled to, should be paid." Now, it may be pointed out that the arbitration clause in Prestige & Co's case was very similar to the arbitration clause in the present case. The operative part of Cl. 26, which deals with the powers of the Arbitrator, was as follows:—

"The arbitrator shall have power to open up, review and revise any certificate save in regard to the said matters expressly excepted above, and to determine all matters in dispute which shall be submitted to him, and of which notice shall have been given as aforesaid, in the same manner as if no such certificate ... had been given." It was while considering such a clause that the Court of Appeal held in Prestige & Co's case that the dispute referred to the arbitrator could not be considered as being restricted merely to the issuance or non-issuance of the certificate and that the claim on merits was also referred. Certain observations in the judgment of Greer, L. J. are worth noting. Greer, L. J. while reading the contract as meaning that as a condition precedent to liability to pay anything from time to time during the progress of the work, there must be, first, a certificate of the architect and that without that certificate, there was no legal liability established by the contract to pay any sum whatsoever observed that he was precluded by authority from giving effect to the view which he would otherwise have taken, but for the authorities. He also observed that he was inclined to accept the view that there never was in that case any reference to the arbitrator to decide whether or not there was an amount due from the building owner to the building contractor, Greer, L. J., then observed as follows:—

"I cannot read these as being other than decisions that there may be occasions on which the Court may say that, notwithstanding the failure of the claimant to establish that conditions precedent to liability have happened, the Court has power to make an order, in the absence of the performance of these conditions, for payment of money which by the contract, is made dependent upon those conditions. It is because I am impressed with the effect of the two authorities which have been cited that I am able to agree with the view which has been expressed by my brethren. I cannot read either Brodie v. Cardiff Corporation or Neale v. Richardson except as expressing the view that, in the opinion of the House of Lords in Brodie's case and in the opinion of this Court in Neale v. Richardson, an arbitrator to whom a matter is remitted in the form in which it was in this case has the power to dispense with the conditions precedent, and to order that, notwithstanding the non-performance of those conditions precedent, a liability may be established on which money may be ordered to be paid."

18-A. The abovequoted observations from Prestige and Co's case (1938) 4 All ER 346, will, therefore show that where the dispute with regard to the claims of the parties is expressly referred to the arbitrator, then the Arbitrator has the power to dispense with the condition precedent and that non-performance of the condition precedent does not prevent him from determining the claim of the parties on merits. In the light of these observations, the joint submission made by the two parties to the Arbitrator, dated 11th January, 1962, becomes extremely relevant. We have already referred to this joint submission by which the parties gave their consent to the opening of reference on January 9, 1962 "on all matters referred to him by the Secretary, Ministry of Law, Government of India, vide his Instrument dated January 8, 1962." The order issued by the Law Secretary on 8th January, 1962, is on record and it expressly refers to the claim both as a set-off as well as substantive claim made by the Government of India against the Company while replying to the claims of the Company in the reference pending before the Arbitrator, and it refers to the consent given by the Contractor "to the said Shri Bishan Narain opening reference on the claims of the Union of India as contained in its Statement dated the 1st day of June, 1961, in the said reference and adjudicate upon the same both as substantive claim and as set off against the claims of the Company as contained in its Statement dated the 26th day of April 1961 in the said reference." By this instrument the Secretary to the Ministry of Law Govt. of India, specifically appointed the arbitrator "for the purpose of reference of the dispute arising out of the claims made by the Union of India as set out in Parts A, C and D of the said Statement filed by the Union of India, dated 1st day of June, 1961." In view of the Terms of the Reference, therefore, and in view of the Statement of Law in Prestige and Company's case, it does not appear that there was any legal impediment in the way of the Arbitrator to deal with the claim.

19. Mr. Ray has invited our attention to the decision of the House of Lords in East Ham Corporation v. Bernard Sunley & Sons Ltd, 1966 AC 406. The question in that case was to what extent the certificate is conclusive even where the Arbitrator has the power under the contract to open up, review or revise any certificate. Under the contract for the erection of a school for a local authority, Cl. 24 (f), which dealt with the final certificate to be issued by the Architect, read as follows:—

".....(f) Upon expiration of the defects liability period (six months from the practical completion of the work) ... the architect shall issue a final certificate and such final certificate save as regards all defects and insufficiencies in the works or materials which a reasonable examination would not have disclosed, shall be conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of the works and materials."

Then clause 27, after providing for arbitration in cases of dispute, stated:—

".....the arbitrator shall have power to open up, review or revise any certificate ... in the same manner as if no such certificate...had been given." After the completion of the work and some two years after the architect had given his final certificate, stone panels fixed to the exterior walls fell off owing to defective fixing by the contractors and were repaired by the local authority who sought to recover the cost from the contractors in an arbitration pursuant to clause 27 of the contract. The question before the House of Lords was (a) whether the arbitrator had power to reopen the architect's final certificate and (b) if so and liability were established, at what date damages were to be assessed. The House of Lords held that clause 24 (g) showed that the final certificate was to be conclusive evidence that the works and materials were in accordance with the contract and, therefore, the architect's final certificate was placed in a special position for a special purpose and, therefore, the wide general words of clause 27 could not be read literally, because so to do would deprive clause 24 (f) and (g) of any effect or operation. It was further held that in order to give effect to both clauses, clause 27 must be read as being subject to Cl. 24 (f) and (g) and accordingly the final certificate of the architect was conclusive and could not be reopened by the arbitrator save in the exceptional circumstances therein stated.

20. Now, it is difficult for us to see how this case can be of any assistance to the appellant. We have already pointed out that there is no clause which gives finality to any certificate of the Engineers in the contract and the law laid down by the House of Lords that in spite of the fact that the arbitration clause was widely worded, the Arbitrator could not reopen matters in respect of which the certificate was made final, was not relevant for the purpose of the case before us. As a matter of fact, if the converse proposition is spelt out, the position would be that in a case where finality to any certificate is not specifically attached under the contract, the wide power given to the Arbitrator to open up, review or revise any certificate would enable him to consider the entire dispute referred to him and further, in view of the earlier decisions, the absence of any certificate under the contract would not affect the claim. It is, therefore, not possible to accept the argument of Mr. Ray that when in proposition (a) laid down in Hudson at p. 446 reference to the absence of a certificate was made, that contemplated only a case where the certificate was asked for and declined.

21. We must mention that in support of his contention that a certificate by the Engineer must be treated as a condition precedent, the learned Counsel for the appellant has referred to certain decisions which are clearly distinguishable. They were all decisions where the question was whether, unless there was a certificate in favour of the contractor, the contractor would be entitled to the payment or not. The earliest in point of time was the decision in Morgan v. Birnie, (1833) 9 Bing 672. That was a case in which an action was brought on a builder's contract under which the defendant was to pay for building upon receiving the architect's certificate that the work was done to his satisfaction. The architect checked the builder's charges and sent them to the defendant. It was held that the certificate did not amount to a certificate of satisfaction as contemplated by the contract so as to enable the builder to sue the defendant, although the defendant had not objected to pay on the ground that no sufficient certificate had been rendered.

22. The second case is Scott v. Corporation of Liverpool, (1858) 44 ER 1297. Other cases are Clarke v. Watson, (1865) 18 CB (NS) 278, Eaglesham v. McMaster, (1920) 2 KB 169 and Dunlop v. Hendall, (1957) 1 WLR 1102. In the view which we have taken about the scope of the clause of arbitration and the absence of any clause making any certificate issued by the Engineer conclusive, we do not think it necessary to discuss in detail these authorities.

DESHPANDE, Actg. C. J. AND KOTWAL, J.

Hanmantrao Yeshwantrao Patil and others, Petitioners v. Chintamani K. Gulvani and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 2339 of 1980, D/- 9-12-1980.

Maharashtra Municipalities Act (40 of 1965), Ss. 16, 44, 2 (7), 302 — Disqualification of President — Disqualification prescribed for elected Councillor applies to President also.

There is no provision in the Act prescribing any qualification or disqualification of the President as such. The meaning given to the word "Councillor" by S. 2 (7) of the Act must prevail in terms of the opening sentence of S. 2" unless the context otherwise requires." The definition requires the President to be deemed to be an ex-officio Councillor and to be treated as an additional Councillor. The fact that he is elected as President and not as Councillor, or that the nature of his constituency is different from the one from which other Councillors are elected or co-opted, cannot affect the potency of the fiction of his being such Councillor. The statutory fiction requires the President to be assumed to be a Councillor for all purposes as any other Councillor. The disqualifications in S. 16 apply therefore with equal force to the President as well. (Para 14)

This explains why no other provision prescribes any qualification or disqualification for the persons seeking or holding the office of the President. Under the fiction raised u/s. 2 (7), the word "Councillor" in Ss. 16 and 44 must be deemed to be inclusive of even the "deemed Councillor". It was not necessary to include expressly the office of the "President" or "deemed Councillor", as the word "Councillor" itself was found adequate enough to embrace the said office. The Legislature could not have intended to permit any person to be elected or to hold the office of the President even when he was disqualified to become or to act as Councillor u/s. 16 or S. 44. The Legislature did not presumably feel it necessary to expressly refer to the office of the President in Ss. 16 and 44 when it had achieved the said object by raising a fiction of his also being such Councillor u/s. 2 (7). (Para 15)

The fiction of the President being a deemed Councillor is not without some basis (vide S. 81 (9) and (13).) The context of Ss. 9 and 21 and other sections, however, would make it clear how the addition of the word "President" was necessary to make the same applicable to him as, but for such additions, the provisions would not have ipso facto been applicable to him. There are various other sections in the Act e.g. Ss. 95, 96, 302 etc. omitting any reference to the President. Yet, reference to the Councillor in the context implies reference to the deemed Councillor and indirectly to the President in the same manner as it is implicit in Ss. 16 and 44. The different contingencies in which the President ceases to hold his office e.g. Ss. 55, 56, 313 etc. have no bearing on the interpretation of Ss. 16 and 44.

(Paras 16, 17, 18 19)

A. V. Savant, for Petitioners; P. M. Pradhan (for Nos. 1 to 5); C. J. Sawant with M. B. Mehre, Asst. Govt. Pleader (for Nos. 9 to 12), For Respondents.

KOTWAL, J.:—This petition raises a short question as to whether acts or omissions disqualifying a person from becoming or acting as a Councillor of a Municipal Council under S. 16 read with S. 44 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 (shortly stated as "the said Act"), also so disqualify the "President" who is elected as such directly by the voters of the Council & who becomes a "deemed Councillor" ex-officio on account thereof, though not elected as a Councillor.

2. The petitioners Nos. 2 to 4 and respondents Nos. 1 to 7 were elected as Councillors to the Vita Municipal council in the election held on 7-11-1974. Petitioner No. 1 was elected as President at the said election directly by all the voters of the Council under the amended Act.

3. A contract was entered into on behalf of the Municipal Council by the Chief Officer on October 1, 1975, with the Vita Co-operative Electric Supply Society Ltd., (shortly stated as "the said Society") for the supply of electricity for street lights. A resolution was unanimously passed in the meeting of the Council held on July 29, 1976, ratifying the said contract. The five petitioners admittedly voted in favour of the said resolution though each one of them admittedly held share in the said Society and as such held some interest therein.

4. On or about August 20, 1977, respondents Nos. 1 to 5 moved the Collector of Sangli, respondent No. 9, herein, making a grievance that the five petitioners incurred a disqualification under Section 44 (1) (b) read with Section 16 (1) (ii) of the said Act by voting in favour of a matter in which they had an interest and a share. They, therefore, requested that the five petitioners be declared to have become disqualified to continue as Councillors. The petitioner No. 1, the president, is alleged to have incurred the disqualification by reason of being a deemed Councillor.

5. In response to the notice, by the Collector in this behalf, the petitioners explained on June 13, 1978 how they were not so disqualified. The petitioners inter alia, explained that they were merely shareholders in the Society and did not take part in the management. They also came out with the defence that the Society was supplying electricity since long and passing of such a resolution was just a formality and entering into a contract in favour of the said Society was an indispensable requirement of the residents of town Vita, the undertaking of the Society being the only source of supplying electricity for street lights. The Government was moved by the Council to require the Maharashtra State Electricity Board to take over the undertaking to avoid such contingencies in future. Petitioner No. 1 raised an additional contention that the disqualifications prescribed for an elected Councillor do not apply to the president who is directly elected as such President under Section 51 of the said Act and not as a Councillor and becomes only an ex-officio Councillor under Section 2 (7) of the said Act.

6. All these contentions were overruled by the Collector by his order dated 29-10-1978. He declared all the petitioners to have become disqualified under Section 44 (1) (b) by virtue of having voted for the matter in which they had interest and further declared the seats to have fallen vacant under Section 44 (3) of the said Act. The petitioners' appeal to the State Government, respondent No. 12, was dismissed by an order dated August 14, 1980. Hence this petition under Article 226 of the Constitution to this Court. At the admission stage, claim of the petitioners numbers 2 to 5 was summarily rejected. Rule is granted only with regard to claim of petitioner No. 1 whose case obviously stands on different footing.

7. Shri A. V. Savant, the learned counsel appearing on behalf of petitioner No. 1, does not dispute either that petitioner No. 1 held shares in the Society or voted at the meeting for ratification of the contract with it. He, however, contends that under the amended Act, a person directly elected as the president is not elected as Councillor but is to be deemed to be such Councillor by virtue of his being the President. The Act does not prescribe any qualification or disqualification for holding the office of the President or discharging and performing its consequential functions including that of the Councillor. The acts or omission disqualifying a Councillor under Section 16 of the said Act cannot, therefore, disqualify the President and consequently cannot prevent him from being deemed as such Councillor. Strong reliance was placed by Shri Savant on the circumstances that, (1) unlike under the pre-amended Act, a person is not required to be elected as Councillor to become the President as also, (2) on the omission of the words "President," "ex-officio" or "deemed Councillor" in S. 44 or Section 16 of the said Act. He also contends that the so-called interest of the petitioners, in the shares of the Society is too nominal, and ratification of the of the contract is too formal to incur the disqualification.

8. A short survey of the relevant provisions of the said Act may not be out of place at this stage. The words "Council" and "Councillor" are defined under Section 2 (6) of the Act and Section 2 (7) of the Act, while Sec. 2 (49) defines the words "total number of Councillors". The President is deemed to be an ex-officio Councillor under Section 2 (7) of the said Act, in addition to the total number of Councillors elected or co-opted. Various Municipal authorities are enumerated under Section 7 indicating that the President and the Council are distinct authorities. Under Section 9 (i) of the Act the Council is to consist of (1) a President and (2) elected or co-opted Councillors. A deemed and ex-officio Councillor is not separately or expressly included therein. The total number of Councillors of any Council is to be determined by the Director in accordance with sub-section (2) of S. 9 by reference to the class to which it belongs. Section 11 prescribes (1) the manner of preparing the voters' list and (2) the eligibility to vote. Section 15 prescribes the fundamental qualifications for a Councillor. Section 51 (2) makes Sec. 15 applicable to the candidate seeking election as President.

9. Section 16 of the said Act enumerates the acts, omissions and circumstances which disable any candidate from becoming a Councillor. Clause (i) of Section 16 (1) disqualifies a person from becoming a Councillor, if he has directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract with or under or by on behalf of the Council. Exceptions to this clause (i) are, however, carried out in sub-section (3) of the said S. 16. The relevant Cl. (b) thereof provides that a person shall not be deemed to have incurred such disqualification under subsec. (1) (i) merely by having such a share or interest in a company or co-operative society, so contracting with the Council. Reading Sections 16 (1) (i) and 16 (3) (b) of the said Act together, it would be clear that the disqualification contemplated under cl. (i) is made inapplicable if the interest of the person happens to be of a share or interest in a company or co-operative society, which enters into any contract with the Council.

10. However, Section 44 (1) (b) operates as an exception to such an exception. This Sec. 44 (1) (b) reads as follows :

"44(1). A Councillor shall be disqualified to hold office as such, if at any time during his term of office, he:—

xx xx xx xx

(b) as a Councillor or as a member of any Committee of the Council votes in favour of any matter in which he has directly or indirectly by himself or his partners any such share or interest as is described in Cls. (a), (b), (c), (e) and (g) of sub-section (3) of Sec. 16, whatever may be the value of such share or interest or in which he is professionally interested on behalf of a client, principal or other person; or".

11. This clause (b) stipulates that a Councillor shall be disqualified if, as a Councillor or as a member of any Committee of the Council, he votes in favour of any matter in which he is directly or indirectly by himself or his partner any share or interest as described in Section 16 (3) (b) of the said Act. A distinction is thus made between the passive part of merely having share or interest in a company or co-operative society, having contract with the Councillor, and the active additional part of voting in favour of such a contract at the meeting of the Council. The former does not, but the latter does incur the disqualification.

12. Section 51 provides for election of the President and Vice-President. This S. 51 is amended by the Maharashtra Act No. XLVII of 1973. The President of the Council is now directly elected by persons whose names are included in the Municipal Voters' List. Before this amendment, the President and Vice-President of the Council were elected from amongst the Councillors who were elected or were deemed to have been elected. A person could be elected as President only if he was a Councillor. This amendment of Section 51 made it necessary to amend other relevant provisions vis-a-vis office of the President to make them accord with the new set up.

13. Then, reference to sub-secs. (6), (9), (12) and (13) of Sec. 81 also is relevant. Section 81 deals with various aspects of the meetings of the Council. Sub-section (6) enables any other Councillor to preside over a meeting in case of need while sub-section (9) provides for the quorum. Sub-sec. (12) deals with the minutes while sub-sec. (13) stipulates that in a meeting convened and presided over by the presiding officer, the business will be carried on and decided by a majority of votes of the Councillors present and voting, and in the event of equality of votes the presiding authority shall have a right to a second or a casting vote.

14. Shri Savant's contention shall have to be examined in the light of these provisions. It is true that Section 16 and S. 44 provide for the disqualifications of a Councillor and not of the President. In fact, there is no section in the Act prescribing any qualification or disqualification of the President as such separately or expressly. The word "Councillor", however, shall have to be construed by reference to its definition under S. 2 (7) of the Act. The President is also a "Councillor" under this definition. The meaning given to this word under the legislative mandate of Section 2 (7) must prevail in terms of the opening sentence of S. 2 "unless the context otherwise requires". Shri Savant could not show any such context of these two sections requiring departure from the plain definition. The definition requires the President to be deemed to be an ex-officio Councillor. It also requires him to be treated as an additional Councillor, i. e., in addition to other total number of Councillors, as defined under Section 2 (49). The fact that he is elected as President and not as Councillor, or that the nature of his constituency is different from the one from which other Councillors are elected or co-opted, cannot affect the potency of the fiction of his being such Councillor. The statutory fiction requires the President to be assumed to be a Councillor for all purposes as any other Councillor. The disqualifications in Section 16 of the Act apply therefore with equal force to the President as well.

15. This explains why no other provision prescribes any qualification or disqualification for the persons seeking or holding the office of the President. Under the fiction raised under Sec. 2 (7), the word "Councillor" in Sections 16 and 44 must be deemed to be inclusive of even the "deemed Councillor". It was not necessary to include expressly the office of the "President" or "deemed Councillor", as the word "Councillor" itself was found adequate enough to embrace the said office. It is difficult to believe that the Legislature could have intended to permit any person to be elected or to hold the office of the President even when he was disqualified to become or to act as Councillor under Section 16 or Section 44 of the Act. The Legislature did not presumably feel it necessary to expressly refer to the office of the President in Sections 16 and 44 when it had achieved the said object by raising a fiction of his also being such Councillor under S. 2 (7) of the Act. The contention of Shri Savant that the word "Councillor" in Sections 16 and 44 does not include a "deemed Councillor" such as the President is thus devoid of substance. The act of the President of voting for the resolution amounts to the act of so voting by a Councillor even if he happens to be a deemed such Councillor and, therefore, is hit by S. 16 (1) (i) and is not saved by Sec. 16 (3) because of its being covered by S. 44 (1) (b) of the Act.

16. The fiction of the President being a deemed Councillor is not hollow and without some basis. He is empowered to discharge the function of the Councillor apart from his functions as President enumerated in Section 58 of the Act. Section 81 (9) and (13) are illustrative of how he has to vote at the meeting as a Councillor in addition to vote as President when necessary. He attends the meeting in the dual capacity of the President and the Councillor. He presides over the meeting in discharge of his presidential function under clause (a) of S. 58 (1) of the Act. He also exercises the right of "second" or "casting" vote, in the event of equality of votes, as such President as contemplated under Section 81 (13) of the Act. His presence is taken into account for the purposes of the quorum under sub-section (9) of Section 81 which can only be in his capacity of a Councillor. He exercises his right to vote only as a Councillor at the first round of voting which may or may not result in the equality of votes to require his casting second vote. The occasion to exercise second or casting vote arises only when the first round discloses equality. This second or casting vote on the equality of votes can be exercised by him in discharge of the functions of the President. Any other presiding authority also can exercise such a casting vote even when any other Councillor happens to preside over the meeting under sub-section (6) of Section 81, due to the absence of the President and Vice-President. This is illustrative firstly of how the office of President and the deemed Councillor gets blended integrally when he has to act as Councillor, exercising right to vote at the meeting of the Council being one such contingency. This is also illustrative of how fiction of the President being a deemed Councillor is not without some basis,

17. Shri Savant drew our attention to Sections 9, 21 and some other provisions of the Act in which the word "President" is added to the word "Councillor" in contrast to the glaring omissions to that effect in the wording of Secs. 16 and 44 of the Act. This omission according to Shri Savant is reflective of legislative intent to exclude the President from the disqualifications contemplated thereunder. The context of Sections 9 and 21 and other sections, however, would make it clear how addition of the word "President" was necessary to make the same applicable to him as, but for such additions, the provisions would not have ipso facto been applicable to him. It was thus necessary to refer to the President as constituent of the Council under Section 9 as otherwise he cannot fall under any of the other categories of Councillors enumerated in the section. Similarly, a plain, reading of Section 21 would indicate that but for the words "including the president" no disputes as to his election could have been raised in any election petition under S. 21 of the Act. In spite of his being a deemed Councillor, he cannot be said to have been co-opted or elected Councillor to attract the section.

18. There are various other sections in the Act omitting any reference to the President. Yet, reference to the Councillor in the context implies reference to the deemed Councillor and indirectly to the President in the same manner as it is implicit in Secs. 16 and 44 of the Act. Thus, for instance, Section 302 of the said Act prescribes that every Councillor and officer of a Council and other persons shall be deemed to be public servants within the meaning of S. 24 of the I. P. C. However, the omission of the word "President" is obviously innocuous, inasmuch as it is implicit that the same is covered by the term "Councillor" it cannot be gainsaid that the President cannot be said to be a public servant. Reference can also be made on the same pattern to the other provisions such as Sections 95 and 96 of the said Act.

19. Shri A. V. Savant then submitted that Section 55 of the said Act is the only provision under which President such as the petitioner No. 1 can be removed. Section 55 on the face of it relates to the removal of the President consequent to a resolution to that effect passed by the prescribed majority at a special meeting convened on requisition. It has nothing to do with the effect of disqualification. Section 56 contemplates his ceasing to be in office consequent to his absence for a particular period. He ceases to hold this office on his resignation also under Sec. 53 and can also be removed by the State Government under certain contingencies. Dissolution of the Council including the office of the President in case of supersession is also contemplated by Section 313 of the said Act. These different contingencies in which the President ceases to hold his office have no bearing on the interpre-itation of Sections 16 and 44 of the said Act.

20. Having thus taken the survey of the entire situation, we are of the opinion that Section 44 (1) of the Act squarely embraces the case of the petitioner No. 1 notwithstanding the fact that he is elected directly as the President and not as a Councillor. The resultant consequence is that he having voted in favour of the impugned resolution as a Councillor, in the matter of which he had an interest, he did incur the disqualification contemplated under Section 44 (1) of the Act. The protection afforded by Section 16 (3) (b) of the Act to the situation covered by Section 16 (1) (i) is lost due to the act of voting. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the impugned order passed by respondent No. 9, i.e., the Collector, is not open to any exception. This conclusion is inevitable on the rational and harmonious interpretation and construction of the various provisions of the Act having regard to the scheme and object thereof as also the legislative intent. Any other course would be contrary to the plain reading and would also defeat and frustrate the object and would equally disturb the harmonious coherence of the fabric.

21. Shri A. V. Savant made a faint endeavour to under-estimate the implications of the impugned voting. The value of the share is claimed to be insignificant and the resultant interest being negligible. Holding of mere such shares along with a number of villagers, without any active part in the management of the Society could not be, according to Shri A. V. Savant, any evidence of any interest of substance. It is argued that he had no option but to vote in favour of the resolution inasmuch as the said Society is the only available source of electricity supply to the town of Vita and contracts were renewed every time without any objection from anyone almost as rituals. We are unable to uphold the contention. The clear mandate contained in Sections 16 (1) (i), 16 (3) (b) and 44 (1) (b) of the Act leaves no choice once the same are attracted by the facts admitted or proved. The wording is clear enough not to admit of any other construction. The result may, be unfortunate, but is equally inevitable.

22. In the result, the rule is discharged with no order as to costs. At the request of Shri A. V. Savant the operation of this order is suspended till 19th January 1981.

Rule discharged.

DESHPANDE, J.

Saheblal Rasulkhan Pathan, Appellant v. Nanubi Kasimsaheb Shaikh, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 475 of 1976, D/- 15-10-1981.

Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), Sec. 103 (b) — Applicability — Suit for specific performance of contract of sale — Issue of delivery of possession wrongly determined by lower appellate court on totally wrong assumption trial court had found that possession was delivered to plaintiff and agreement was acted upon — Held, High Court in second appeal could re-open issue u/s. 103. (Para 9)

J. R. Lalit, for Appellant; V. B. Rajure for Bhimrao N. Naik, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT :— This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by respondent Mhanubi Kasimsaheb Shaikh, original plaintiff against the defendant Saheblal Rasulkhan Pathan who is the appellant before me. The suit was filed by the plaintiff for getting specific performance of a contract of sale Exh. 34 dt. 17th, Aug. 1970. It was the case of the plaintiff that the property sold was a house situated at Siddeshwar peth, Solapur and the terms of the contract were reduced into writing. It was stated that Rs. 4,000/- were fixed as the sale price and Rs. 2,000/- were to be paid at the time of agreement as earnest money. It was also agreed that the sale-deed was to be executed within a week from the date on which the said agreement was to be executed. It was further averred by the plaintiff that under the said agreement Exh. 34, two rooms were given in possession of the plaintiff on Aug. 17, 1970. The plaintiff stated that at the time of filing of the suit she was not in possession because she alleged that on 24th of Aug. 1970, the defendant broke open the house and forcibly took possession of the said two rooms. The plaintiff prayed for specific performance of the contract Exh. 34 and in the alternative, she also prayed for decree of Rs. 2,000/- which were paid by her as earnest money, in case, the contract is not accepted.

2. The defendant filed his written statement at Exh. 15 and his principal defence was that the alleged transaction of the sale was not truly reflected in the documents but in fact the alleged transaction was only in the nature of loan transaction. The plaintiff does not possess any money lending license, though carries on the transaction of money lending. She has earlier entered into such transaction with defendant in the year 1968 and therefore defendant stated that the alleged agreement not being an agreement of sale, the suit is liable to be dismissed.

3. The learned trial Judge framed necessary issues, which are as follows.—

"(1) Whether the plaintiff proves the agreement of sale dt. 17-8-1970 as alleged.

(2) Does she prove that she was put in possession of two rooms as part performance of the alleged agreement of sale.

(3) Does defendant prove that suit dealing was a money-lending transaction.

(4) Whether plaintiff is entitled to get specific performance of the agreement of sale as claimed? If yes, on what terms.

(5) Whether in the alternative plaintiff is entitled to the refund of Rupees 2,000/- with interest as claimed." Other issues are not necessary to refer to for the disposal of this appeal. Parties led evidence. Plaintiff examined three witnesses in support of her case. The plaintiff's witness 1 Kasimsaheb Imamsaheb Shaikh examined at Exh. 40 is the husband of the present plaintiff. Plaintiff's witness 2 is Narayan Dakaji Murjkar who is examined at Exh. 43. Plaintiff's third witness is Abdul Rahiman Hussinsaheb Merchant, who is examined at Exh. 44.

4. The defendant himself is examined as witness at Exh. 46 and no other evidence was produced by the defendant. After going through the oral evidence and the document relied on by the plaintiff (Exh. 34), the learned trial Judge found that the plaintiff has failed to prove the nature of transaction as alleged. He also found that the defendant also failed to prove the transaction as of loan and on the issue of delivery of possession, he found that the plaintiff was not in possession. The learned Judge also relied on the circumstance that the plaintiff had given different versions with regard to the payment of earnest money and in view of this fact, he was not impressed by the terms of the agreement and therefore he negatived the finding against her. Therefore the learned trial Judge dismissed the suit of plaintiff as far as the specific performance of the agreement is concerned and granted, in the alternative, the decree for Rs. 1,750/- with interest and the decretal debt was kept as charge on the property described in the plaint. In the result, he dismissed the suit of the plaintiff by his judgment and decree dt. 27-6-1973.

5. Being aggrieved by this decree, the plaintiff filed an appeal before the District Court at Solapur and the Assistant Judge, Solapur, who heard the appeal, reversed the decree passed by the learned trial Judge and decreed the suit for specific performance of the agreement as per Exh. 34 Dt. Aug. 17, 1970. He also directed the plaintiff to deposit the remaining part of the sale price and thus plaintiff's claim was decreed by him. The learned appellate Judge framed two points for determination as under:—

"(1) Whether the plaintiff succeeded in proving that both the parties had intended to have a genuine agreement of sale in respect of the suit property as per the document Exh. 34 D/- 17th Aug. 1970.

(2) Whether the defendant proved that the document was executed as a surety for the repayment of Rs. 2,000/- and it enshrined the transaction of loan."

The District Judge did not choose to raise point regarding the alleged delivery of possession under the agreement but it appears that he has confirmed the same finding recorded by the trial Judge on the point, as recorded in his judgment at para 17. The learned Asst. Judge held the agreement to be proved on the finding that the price agreed has not been proved to be grossly inadequate and secondly, he relied on the fact that since the plaintiff was residing in rented premises, she had advanced the substantial sum of Rs. 1,750/- to the defendant in the hope that she would get property of her own. From this he inferred that she must have intended to purchase the property and having held that these circumstances are in favour of the plaintiff, especially he relied on the vital circumstance that the plaintiff's husband had paid Rs. 2,000/- to the defendant and taken back Rs. 250/- for payment of Municipal Taxes. Thus he reversed the decree of the trial Court and allowed the appeal by his judgment and decree dt. 17th March 1976.

6. The defendant being aggrieved by this judgment and decree, has preferred this second appeal in the High Court, which is placed before me for final hearing. Today before the hearing started, the learned Advocate Mr. J. R. Lalit, who was appearing for the appellant and Mr. V. B. Rajure who was appearing for Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik on 14th Oct. 1981, were present and I heard the appeal, which was part heard and kept today in the early hours. Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik appearing for respondent, requested that he should be allowed to appear and address the Court as he was not able to come on earlier day. I have permitted Shri Bhimrao N. Naik to address me on behalf of the respondent along with Mr. V. B. Rajure. Mr. J.R. Lalit, learned Advocate for the appellant has not raised any objection and he has fairly consented that Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik should be permitted to argue the appeal and Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik then resumed the arguments.

7. Mr. Lalit, the learned Advocate for the appellant submitted three points for consideration. Mr. Lalit firstly contended that the decree of the trial Court was perfectly justified especially because that the trial Court was right in refusing the specific performance to the plaintiff. Mr. Lalit pointed out to me first of all, that the agreement Ex. 34 is on ordinary paper. It is signed as many as by five witnesses. It appears that the revenue stamp and the recitals in the agreement regarding the price and in respect of delivery of possession are not borne out by the plaintiff herself. Mr. Lalit then contended that the alleged price, which is one of the important terms of such agreement regarding the earnest money is not found to be unanimous, because the plaintiff alleged in the suit that the earnest money was Rs. 2,000/- while in the notice Exh. 42 dated 21-8-1970 plaintiff has stated that Rs. 2,100/- were paid. The agreement Exh. 34 itself mentions that Rs. 1,842/- were paid and Rs. 250/- were to be paid towards the Municipal taxes. The sum total of Rs. 1,842/- and Rs. 250/- will be Rs. 2,092, though a calculation is given, as it is only to emphasize the discrepancy as to the earnest money which is paid by the plaintiff according to her own say. Mr. Lalit, therefore, contended that the learned trial Judge was right in holding that there are different versions given by the plaintiff, as many as three versions and therefore the specific performance was refused and it was quite proper. Thirdly, Mr. Lalit further submitted that the alleged amount of Rs. 250/- which was retained by the plaintiff for payment of Municipal taxes was spent towards some private affairs and therefore this case to that extent appears to be incorrect. I find sufficient force in the above contention because in a suit for specific performance the terms of contract are strictly to be obeyed. Lastly, Mr. Lalit pointed out that the recital in the agreement with regard to the possession that two rooms were given in pursuance of agreement dated the 17th August, is not correct because the defendant never delivered possession, according to Mr. Lalit, the possession continued with the defendant. On this aspect of the case Mr. Lalit pointed out rightly that the learned appellate Judge committed an error in holding that the trial court had, in fact found that possession of two rooms was given to the plaintiff.

8. In this connection, Mr. Lalit pointed out from the contents of para 17 of the Appellate Court's judgment that this assessment of the learned Appellate Judge was absolutely wrong, because in fact the trial Court had found on issue 2 specifically that two rooms were not given in possession as part performance of the agreement Exh. 34. The learned Assistant Judge was certainly in error in concurring with the trial Court holding that the agreement was acted upon on the basis that possession was actually delivered to the plaintiff. The initial assumption of the learned Assistant Judge was found to be erroneous.

Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik, the learned Advocate for the respondent was permitted to read the evidence in this second appeal because I thought that the learned Assistant Judge has wrongly determined the issue of delivery of possession.

9. It is true that in a second appeal, apparently, if the two courts below had found the factum of possession has been proved or disproved, this Court will be reluctant to reopen this finding. But in this case, in view of the provisions of S. 103, C. P. C., I find that there is much substance in the grievances made by Mr. Lalit that the learned appellate Judge wrongly determined the issue of delivery of possession on a totally wrong assumption that the learned trial Judge had found that the possession is delivered and the agreement was acted upon. This finding of the learned Appellate Judge has resulted in reversing the decree of trial Court. As I have stated above, S. 103, Civil P. C. reads as under:—

"103. In any second appeal, the High Court may, if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine any issue necessary for the disposal of the appeal—

(a) Which has not been determined by the lower appellate court or both by the Court of first instance and the lower appellate court, or

(b) which has been wrongly determined by such court or courts by reason of a decision on such question of law as is referred to in S. 100."

In this case, the learned appellate judge has certainly committed an error in wrongly assuming that the learned trial judge had found in favour of the plaintiff as far as the delivery of possession is concerned and it is on this wrong assumption that the learned appellate judge concluded the issue with a cryptic reasoning, saying that:

"This fact has been clearly borne out by evidence of plaintiff's witness and, therefore, the lower Court rightly held that the plaintiff was put in possession of the two rooms."

I think that the learned appellate judge was totally in error in recording the finding on this issue and as pointed out by Mr. Lalit, I agree with his submission that this error has vitiated his judgment.

9A. Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik contended that the evidence on record, especially evidence of witness 1, plaintiff's husband and second witness, who is scribe of the document and the third witness Abdul Rahman son of Hussainsaheb Merchant, whose statement of deposition is at Exh. 44, proves the factum of possession and relying on the evidence of these three witnesses, he pointed the evidence of the first witness, which is to this effect:

"(1) Kasimsaheb Imamsaheb Shaikh has deposed that at the time of said agreement, amount of Rs. 2,000/- was paid and he also deposed that on 24th Aug. 1970 the defendant broke open the lock and took forcible possession of the said rooms."

This evidence of Kasimsaheb suffers from basic infirmity that Kasimsaheb was not a witness of the said agreement Exh. 34. It is doubtful, whether he was present at the time of execution of the agreement Exh. 34. He is husband of the plaintiff. It is not known, why the plaintiff herself did not choose to come in the witness box. For these reasons the evidence of this witness is not sufficient to be accepted for the purposes of proof of the alleged transaction as well as delivery of possession. There is no evidence on record to show that defendant took forcible possession of two rooms on Aug. 24, 1970. It would have been very significant, if this forcible dispossession would have been proved by the plaintiff in this case, but for want of evidence in this regard it is not possible to accept the statement of Kasimsaheb that plaintiff was put in possession of two rooms and she was again dispossessed.

10. The evidence of second witness relied on by Mr. Naik is a scribe, Narayan Dekeji Murajkar, who has deposed that:

"On the day Rs. 2,000/- were paid, the defendant also gave possession of two rooms."

Relying on this deposition Mr. Naik contended that the delivery of possession should be held proved. I am not able to accept this part of evidence to be correct. The agreement Exh. 34 itself recites that possession was given on the said day and the recital in the agreement is to this effect:—

“सदरी जागेचा कबजा आज रोजी दोन खोल्यांचा दिला आहे”.

This recital in the Exh. 34 has to be read along with recital regarding the amount of earnest money which is mentioned in the agreement as Rs. 1,842/- and which according to the recital is that this amount was agreed to be kept for depositing in the Post Office for the purpose of paying dues of the earlier purchasers referred to in the earlier part of the recital of this document. Evidence of Narayan saying that Rs. 2,000/- were paid and possession was delivered, appears to be discrepant because earnest money mentioned in the agreement is Rs. 1,842/- while Narayan's deposition is that Rs. 2,000/- were paid. Therefore, I do not attach much importance to this evidence.

11. Mr. Naik then relied on the evidence of the third witness in order to show that possession must have been delivered as part performance of the agreement Exh. 34. Mr. Naik invited my attention to the deposition of Mr. Abdul Rehman son of Hussainsaheb at Exh. 44, whose deposition is as follows.—

“Hayatbi was in possession of two rooms I do not know personally about any transaction between the plaintiff and defendant and Hayatbi. Hayatbi and myself handed over the possession of two rooms to Kasimsaheb. Kasimsaheb paid Rs. 2,000/- to Saheblal and Saheblal paid the said amount to me and thus we delivered the possession to Kasimsaheb.”

It is noticeable that the above evidence is inconsistent and completely discrepant with the evidence given by the witness Narayan, because he refers that the defendant i.e. Saheblal gave possession while the above deposition shows that this witness Abdul Rahiman and Hayatbi handed over possession. Secondly, it is to be noticed that the evidence of this witness suffers from basic infirmity by his own saying that he has no personal knowledge of the transaction which took place between Hayatbi and plaintiff. It is the case of the plaintiff that in view of the earlier transaction the present agreement should be held to be genuine and if that is so the deposition of this witness saying that he has no personal knowledge of the earlier transaction shows that there is no connection between the earlier transaction and the transaction embodied in Exh. 34. It is contrary to the case of plaintiff herself. Therefore this evidence is also quite insufficient to support the case as made out by the plaintiff. In view of this summary of evidence and observations which I have made, it is not possible to accept the contention of Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik that the possession of two rooms must have been delivered as part performance of the alleged contract Exh. 34. Mr. Bhimrao N. Naik, the learned Advocate then contended that as stated by the learned Appellate Judge in para 18 of the judgment the plaintiff was residing in rented house and it is likely that she must have paid that amount with a hope that she would get the property of her own. The learned appellate judge in para 18 of his judgment has stated thus:—

“In view of the evidence on record and the various transactions which have been referred to by the plaintiff in the plaint which were entered into by the defendant with various persons in respect of the suit house, it seems that the plaintiff must be held entitled to the relief of specific performance of the agreement.”

The reason given in this para quoted above seems to be quite irrelevant. The fact that the various transactions referred to by the plaintiff earlier would only show that the defendant is trying to obtain moneys cancelling the earlier transactions and therefore it may perhaps lend support to the defence of the defendant that the transaction which he entered into was in the nature of a loan transaction. It is not that the mere changing the nature of transaction from time to time would give support to either of them. Second reason given by the learned Judge that since the plaintiff is staying in the rented house, she must have been in the hope to get the property of her own and therefore she entered into this agreement, also is not correct. It would be unreasonable to assume that a tenant staying in the rented house, if entered into any such transaction would like to purchase the house. Almost her point is that the Rent Act is applicable to this case, if that is so, it requires to be noticed that no tenant would like to purchase the house instead of remaining satisfied with the benefits of the protection available under the Rent Act. It would be too far to interfere with this case, but suffice it to say that both the reasons given by the learned Judge appear to be incorrect. They do not support the case of the plaintiff as far as the agreement Exh. 34 is concerned. The relevant question which the learned appellate Judge ought to have taken into consideration is, "what is the effect of non-delivery of possession in part performance of the agreement?" and secondly, different versions of the plaintiff in respect of principle terms of payment of earnest money under the agreement. Unfortunately, the learned appellate judge committed the basic error in wrongly assuming that the delivery of possession was made as part performance of the contract as held by him in para 17 of the judgment and which error according to me has vitiated his judgment and this is a clear error of law, because if the finding was based on vital points on his erroneous assumption as to the view of the trial Court and it was also vitiated because the learned appellate Judge had not chosen to examine or discuss the evidence in detail. Therefore, in my opinion, the judgment of the appellate judge is liable to be set aside in this appeal. No other point is urged in this second appeal.

12. It may be stated here that the jurisdiction for the decree of specific performance is discretionary and in my opinion the discretion in refusing to give the decree was rightly exercised by the learned trial judge relying on the various circumstances. Although in appeal it is liable to be corrected u/s. 20, Specific Relief Act, for the reasons which I have given above, the learned appellate judge committed an error in understanding the view of the learned trial judge regarding the delivery of possession, the learned appellate judge came to the erroneous conclusion as shown by me above and, therefore, in my opinion the discretion which was exercised by him in reversing the decree passed by the trial Court was not properly exercised and it appears that because of his erroneous approach and finding he committed an error in passing the decree for specific performance of agreement of sale Exh. 34 in this case.

13. In the result, I allow the appeal and reverse the decree of learned appellate judge and restore that of the learned trial judge. Mr. Lalit pointed out to me that the decree of the appellate court regarding the costs throughout should be maintained and he also made a grievance that he has succeeded to the extent of Rs. 2,250/- and therefore costs should be allowed. As the matter relates to the grant of decree for specific performance of the contract and the jurisdiction as I have stated is discretionary. I have reversed the decree of the appellate court. I do not see any reason to maintain the decree as far as the cost given to the defendant is concerned and therefore the decree of the appellate court is reversed and the appeal is allowed with no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT:— Normally I would have discharged the rule in this petition on the threshold itself because it challenges an interlocutory order passed by the Additional Chief Judge of Small Cause Court at Bombay disallowing the exhibition of a sale-deed on which the petitioner wanted to rely. Since, however, the petition has been admitted and rule granted on the same and since arguments have been advanced before me on the interpretation of a judgment of this Court I have proceeded to hear and dispose of this petition on merits.

2. Before the learned Additional Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court reliance had been placed by the petitioner on a sale-deed but the executant of the sale-deed was not examined. The proof of the signature of the executant, however, was offered but that itself could not prove the contents of the sale-deed or the truth of the contents of the sale-deed. On this ground the learned Judge refused to exhibit the sale-deed. While so doing he relied upon a judgment of Division Bench of this Court "In the matter of Mr. D and Mr. S" (1966) 68 Bom LR 228) in which it was held:

"To conclude this part of the discussion, we hold, in the first place that what has been formally proved is the signature of Abreo and not the writing of the body of the document at Exh. 28 and secondly, that even if the entire document is held formally proved, that does not amount to a proof of the truth of the contents of the document. The only person competent to give evidence on the truthfulness of the contents of the document was Abreo."

This view in fact confirms the view taken by Bhagawati J., as he then was, in Madholal Sindhu v. Asian Assurance Co. Ltd. (1954) 56 Bom LR 147: (AIR 1954 Bom 305). Both the judgments were noticed by Vimadalal J. in Bhima Tima Dhotre v. Pioneer Chemical Co., (1968) 70 Bom LR 683. In this latter judgment Vimadalal J. has made himself bold to say that he, sitting as a single Judge, did not agree with the view which the Division Bench has taken and thereafter proceeded to express his own views on the question of the proof of the contents of a document. Obviously the views expressed by Vimadalal J. cannot be binding upon a Judge of this Court or any Judge of the subordinate Court because they are only his personal views and they are contrary to the binding decision given by the Division Bench, as Vimadalal J. himself has mentioned.

3. Further the matter is no longer in doubt because in the decision of the Supreme Court in Bishwanath Rai v. Sachhidanand Singh, AIR 1971 SC 1949, it has been held that the correctness of the contents of the letter can only be proved by examining the writer of that letter. In this state of law the view taken by the learned Additional Chief Judge of Small Cause Court is correct, and cannot be interfered with.

In the result, this petition must fail. Rule is discharged with no order as to costs. Rule is discharged in Civil Application No. 1846 of 1978.

Petition dismissed.

MASODKAR, J.

Nilkanth Balappa Managave Shop, a Registered Firm, and another, Petitioners v. M/s. Raj & Co. and others Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 3078 of 1981, D/- 9-3-1982.

Partnership Act (9 of 1932), S. 49 — Applicability — Debt of partnership firm — Joint and several decree against firm and its partners — Decree must be executed as it stands and S. 49 cannot be invoked, nor O. 21, R. 50 (1) of Civil P. C. (Civil P. C. (5 of 1908), O. 21, R. 50 (1).)

Before the principles underlying S. 49 are pressed in aid, all the conditions that bear upon the principles must be available. In case of a decree which clearly makes the debt payable by the firm as such and also by each of the defendants, who may happen to be its partners, the principle is clearly not available, for it is not as if that in every case where the debt is of the partnership and the decree is made joint and several against the firm as well as the partners of the firm, such principle would hold good in the matter of execution of a decree in favour of a third party. If such a principle were to be universally applied, several complications will arise in the matter of execution of the decree which is obtained by the third party who is not concerned with the inter se rights and obligations of the firm and its partners. In fairness and in law, therefore, the matter must depend on the terms of a given decree. What is required to be executed is the decree as such and, if the term is clear that the same is liable to be executed even severally, then the executing Court cannot refuse the execution on the ground that the firm is made liable and it should be first proceeded against. When a decree is made by use of the words "jointly and severally", there is no question of any ratable distribution of the liability. It is in those cases only where the liability can be ratably distributed inter se among the judgment-debtors on the terms of the decree that, presumably, the principles of S. 49 may be available for application. In all other cases, the term of the decree is determinative of the liability. (Paras 4, 7)

Now, as regards the provisions of O. 21, R. 50 (1), Civil P. C., they are clearly enabling in nature and the same permit a decree made against a firm to be executed in the manner as is indicated by cls. (a), (b) and (c) thereof. Such a decree could be executed against the personal property of the partners. The provisions of this Rule are not intended for making it compulsory upon the decree holder to exhaust the remedies in the manner laid down by cl. (a) or cl. (b) or cl. (c). In other words, it is not necessary to proceed first and with priority in every case against the property of the partnership and without that as if no recourse can be had to proceed against the personal property of the persons mentioned in cls. (b) and (c). However, the enabling provisions of O. 21, R. 50 (1) govern the case of a decree which has been passed against the firm and not against the firm and against the partners personally. Furthermore, a Court executing the decree cannot go behind the decree. It must take the decree, as it stands, for the decree is binding and conclusive between the parties to the suit. Therefore, when a decree is made not only against the firm but also against the partners personally, it follows that by recourse to any other method, the executing Court cannot refuse to execute the decree which is clearly a personal decree against the partners. AIR 1960 SC 388 and AIR 1964 SC 581, Rel. on.

K. J. Abhyankar, for Petitioners; Bhimrao N. Naik, for Respondent No. 4.

ORDER:— By this petition the challenge is to the order made by the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur, raising the attachment with regard to an amount of Rs. 16,000/- to Rs. 17,000/- which was attached in execution of a decree passed in the suit, being Special Civil Suit No. 206 of 1973. That decree reads as follows:—

"Plaintiff's suit against defendants 1 to 6 is decreed in the sum of Rs. 93,971.78 Ps. with future interest on Rs. 93,871.78 Ps. at 6% per annum from the date of this suit till the realisation of the entire amount herein.

Defendants 1 to 6 jointly and severally shall pay all this amount to plaintiff firm by bearing its costs of this suit in addition to their own.

Decree shall be drawn accordingly."

2. It is not in dispute that the amount that was attached was the deposit belonging to judgment-debtor No. 4 and was available for attachment. After the attachment, the said judgment-debtor No. 4 filed an objection which has been decided in his favour and attachment has been lifted. By the impugned order, the learned trial Judge held that the decretal amount was a joint debt due from the firm and upon the principles underlying S. 49 of the Partnership Act, 1932, the separate property of the partner should not be proceeded against till the property of the firm is first proceeded against and applied for the satisfaction of the decretal amount. That view of law is under challenge in the present petition.

3. Now, as far as the decree is concerned, it makes the decretal amount jointly and severally payable. Primarily, therefore, such a decree has to be executed as is ordered and made payable and that shows that not only the liability is joint but several against each of the defendants. The executing Court is bound to execute the decree as it is made. Had there been any other direction in keeping with the principles underlying S. 49 of the Partnership Act, the question would have been different. In the present case, the decree clearly makes each of the defendants severally liable to pay and satisfy the decretal amount.

4. No doubt, the principles underlying S. 49 of the Partnership Act have been applied when the question of firm debts are in issue, but those have been applied in principle and not by reason of the statute. S. 49 has to be read along with S. 25 of the Partnership Act and, if so read, it would indicate that, even while applying the provisions of S. 49, the debt by the third party can be recovered by proceeding against the partners. Before the principles underlying S. 49 are pressed in aid, all the conditions that bear upon the principles must be available. In case of a decree which clearly makes the debt payable by the firm as such and also by each of the defendants, who may happen to be its partners, the principle is clearly not available, for it is not as if that in every case where the debt is of the partnership and the decree is made joint and several against the firm as well as the partners of the firm, such principle would hold good in the matter of execution of a decree in favour of a third party. If such a principle were to be universally applied, several complications will arise in the matter of execution of the decree which is obtained by the third party who is not concerned with the inter se rights and obligations of the firm and its partners. In fairness and in law, therefore, the matter must depend on the terms of a given decree. What is required to be executed is the decree as such and, if the terms are clear that the same is liable to be executed even severally, then the executing Court cannot refuse the execution on the ground that the firm is made liable and it should be first proceeded against.

5. The provisions of O. 21, R. 50 (1) of the Civil P. C. are clearly enabling in nature and the same permit a decree made against a firm to be executed in the manner as is indicated by cls. (a), (b) and (c) thereof. That such a decree could be executed against the personal property of the partners is well settled. (See Topanmal v. M/s. Kundomal Gangaram, AIR 1960 SC 388, and Gajendra Narain Singh v. Johrimal Prahlad, AIR 1964 SC 581). The provisions of this Rule are not intended for making it compulsory upon the decree-holder to exhaust the remedies in the manner laid down by cl. (a), or cl. (b), or cl. (c). In other words, it is not necessary to proceed first and with priority in every case against the property of the partnership and without that as if no recourse can be had to proceed against the personal property of the persons mentioned in cls. (b) and (c).

6. It is obvious that these enabling provisions of O. 21, R. 50 (1) govern the case of a decree which has been passed against the firm and not against the firm and against the partners personally. Further more, as stated above, a Court executing the decree cannot go behind the decree. It must take the decree, as it stands, for the decree is binding and conclusive between the parties to the suit. (See Topanmal v. M/s. Kundomal Gangaram, AIR 1960 SC 388). Therefore, when a decree is made not only against the firm but also against the partners personally, it follows that by recourse to any other method, the executing Court cannot refuse to execute the decree which is clearly a personal decree against the partners. The question, when such a personal decree is not made what should be the procedure to be followed, is not relevant for determining such a position. Suffice it to say that the provisions of O. 21, R. 50 (1) of the Civil P. C. are attracted when the decree is in terms against the firm and there is no personal decree against the other defendants who were joined to the suit as partners.

7. When the decree is made by use of the words "jointly and severally", there is no question of any ratable distribution of the liability. It is in those cases only where the liability can be ratably distributed inter se among the judgment-debtors on the terms of the decree that, presumably, the principles of S. 49 may be available for application. In all other cases, the terms of the decree is determinative of the liability.

8. That being the position, the impugned order is unsustainable and the same is set aside. The attachment of the amount in deposit to continue. It is for the executing Court to make the eventual order as to the payment of that money. The Rule is made absolute with no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 391

M. N. CHANDURKAR AND

D. N. MEHTA, JJ.

Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay, Appellant v. Ramadevi Shrinivas Ruia and another, Respondents.

Appeal No. 244 of 1976 in Land Acquisition Reference No. 80 of 1972, D/- 5-12-1981.

Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894), Section 30 read with S. 3 (b) — Person interested in appropriation of compensation — Person having a mere agreement in his favour to enter into agreement of lease is not such a person — In absence of enforceable agreement S. 40 of T. P. Act could not be invoked. (T. P. Act (1882), S. 40) Decision in L. A. Ref. No. 80 of 1972 (Bom.) Reversed.

In this case the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay had certain plots available to be let out for building purposes on building lease. The practice of the Corporation was to invite offers firstly to enter into an agreement to enter into a lease and then to execute the lease in respect of such plots. So far as the plot in question is concerned, respondent wrote a letter to the Municipal Commissioner offering "to enter into an agreement in the terms set out in the accompanying draft for a building lease". Along with this letter, approved securities of the face value of Rs. 5000/- duly endorsed to the Corporation to be held by the Corporation if the offer was accepted for due compliance with the obligations under the agreement were also sent. In addition, a sum of Rs. 300/- was sent "to be held by the Corporation, if this offer is accepted, as an advance on account of stamp duty, registration charges and other costs payable in respect of the abovementioned agreement". The letter further stated that if respondent failed to execute and complete the original and duplicate of the agreement within one month after the date of delivery thereof or within such extended period (if any) as the Corporation may permit, the Corporation was to forfeit the security deposit and the advance of Rs. 300/-. This offer was accepted by the Corporation. Admittedly respondent never entered into the agreement of lease and there was no question of any lease in his favour. The plot in question became subject of land acquisition and respondent received an intimation from Corporation about it. Before the Land Acquisition Officer both the Corporation and the respondent claimed the entire amount of compensation whereupon a reference was made to the Court:

Held that even on the offer which had been made by the respondent that she had undertaken to enter into an agreement of lease, the mere fact that this offer was accepted on behalf of the Corporation would not bring about any contract binding on the Corporation unless the contract was in compliance with the provisions of Ss. 69, 70 and 71 of the B. M. C. Act. It was, therefore, an essential term of the offer that an agreement to lease would be executed and the said agreement was to be under seal. Unless that agreement was executed, there was not even a right which could be enforced specifically by the respondent against the Corporation requiring it to lease out the disputed property to her. Hence respondent could not be said to have any right to or interest in land. In absence of even an enforceable agreement question of the provisions of Sec. 40 of the T. P. Act being attracted does not arise at all. AIR 1923 PC 47, AIR 1958 Andh-Pra 533 and F. A. Nos. 367 to 389 of 1964, D/- 27-8-1973 decided by Vaidya J. (Bom) Rel. on. (1958) 60 Bom LR 1208 Disting. CHANDURKAR J.:— This is an appeal by the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay challenging the decision of a learned single Judge of this Court holding that respondent No. 1 was entitled to apportionment of amount of compensation payable to the Municipal Corporation under the Land Acquisition Act in the ratio of 10: 6 in view of the decision of this Court in Dossibai Nanabhoy Jijeebhoy v. P. M. Bharucha (1958) 60 Bom LR 1208.

2. The facts in this case are not in dispute. The Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay (hereinafter referred to as "the Corporation") had certain plots available to be let out for building purposes on building lease. The practice of the Corporation was to invite offers firstly to enter into an agreement to enter into a lease and then to execute the lease in respect of such plots. So far as the plot in question is concerned, respondent 1 wrote a letter to the Municipal Commissioner some time in 1956 offering "to enter into an agreement in the terms set out in the accompanying draft for a building lease". The plot in question is 1600 square yards. Along with this letter, approved securities of the face value of Rs. 5000/- duly endorsed to the Corporation to be held by the Corporation if the offer was accepted for due compliance with the obligations under the agreement were also sent. In addition, a sum of Rs. 300/- was sent "to be held by the Corporation, if this offer is accepted, as an advance on account of stamp duty, registration charges and other costs payable in respect of the abovementioned agreement." The letter further stated that if respondent 1 failed to execute and complete the original and duplicate of the agreement within one English calendar month after the date of delivery thereof or within such extended period (if any) as the Corporation may permit, the Corporation was to forfeit the security deposit and the advance of Rs. 300/-. There is no dispute that this offer was accepted by the Corporation on 15th Nov. 1956.

3. Now, the agreement which respondent 1 had undertaken to enter into is different from the lease itself. This agreement has several clauses and under this agreement, possession was to be given to the intending lessee and the tenant was required to submit the necessary plans of the construction for approval and take the necessary steps. The agreement reserved the power of inspection to the Commissioner and the City Engineer or the Estate Agent and Land Manager in respect of the building and works erected and in the course of erection. The provision with regard to the lease is contained in para 14 of the agreement and it appears that the lease is to be granted only after completion of the structure and the relevant stipulation with regard to the lease is as follows:—

"So soon as the City Engineer has accepted the completion certificate granted by the approved architect and certified that the main building has been roofed in to the satisfaction of the City Engineer the Corporation shall if this agreement has not previously been determined and if the tenant has otherwise fulfilled all the terms and conditions of this agreement grant to the tenant or to any nominee of the tenant who may be approved by the Corporation and the tenant or such nominee shall accept a lease of the plot with the building thereon in perpetuity from the date of possession at the yearly rent mentioned in Cl. 13 hereof"

A separate form of the lease is also prescribed. Now, admittedly respondent 1 has not entered into the agreement of lease and clearly there was no question of any lease in his favour.

4. Now, the plot in question became the subject-matter of land acquisition proceedings consequent upon a notification under Section 4, Land Acquisition Act, being issued on 12th May 1961 and notification under Sec. 6 having been issued on 7th Feb. 1962. Prior to this the Corporation had already sent an intimation to respondent 1 on 20th

Aug. 1960 that the land was under acquisition.

5. The Land Acquisition Officer by an award dated 30th March 1970 determined the compensation inclusive of 15% solatium at Rs. 1,56,400. Before the Land Acquisition Officer the Corporation claimed the entire amount of compensation. Respondent 1 also claimed the entire compensation on the ground that she had entered into an agreement with the Corporation. The Land Acquisition Officer thus made a reference to the Court under Sec. 30 to which the compensation amount was also directed to be sent. In his reference the Land Acquisition Officer stated that there was no application for reference under Section 18, L. A. Act. It is this reference which came before the learned single Judge.

6. The learned single Judge passed a very brief order as follows:—

"Upon the authority of Dossibai Nanabhoy Jijeebhoy v. P. M. Bharucha (1958) 60 Bom LR 1208, an intending lessee under an agreement to lease is a person interested in land and is entitled to claim apportionment"

Holding that the lessor and the lessee were entitled to compensation in the ratio of 10:6 the Corporation was held entitled to Rs. 97,750/- and the lessee was held entitled to Rs. 68,650/-. The reference was accordingly answered by the learned Judge. This view of the learned Judge is being challenged in this appeal.

7. Mr. Singhavi appearing on behalf of the Corporation has contended that the learned Judge was not justified in relying upon the decision in Dossibai's case because the tenant who was held entitled to apportionment of compensation was in possession in pursuance of an agreement of lease. According to the learned Counsel, all that respondent 1 has in her favour in the instant case is an agreement to enter into agreement to lease which is not even specifically enforceable and respondent 1 was not, therefore, a person interested within the meaning of Sec. 3 (b), L. A. Act, and was not, therefore, entitled to claim any compensation.

8. Mr. Nain appearing for respondent 1 has contended that the reference before the learned single Judge has come to be decided on the footing that there is an agreement of lease in favour of respondent 1 and that the appellant is not now entitled to contend that there is in fact no agreement of lease in favour of respondent 1. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel for respondent 1 almost exclusively on the decision in Dossibai's case and on the authority of that decision it was contended that it is not necessary that the interest of the claimant for the purpose of Sec. 30, L. A. Act should be a proprietary interest but that such an interest could be in the nature of an obligation annexed to ownership and a corresponding right in the claimant flowing from the agreement to have the property leased out to her. On the basis of the authority in Dossibai's case, it was contended that if there was a right to or claim to land, it was enough to make the claimant a person interested for the purposes of Sec. 30, L. A. Act.

9. It appears that similar matters are pending in this Court and Mr. Andhyarujina sought permission to intervene and he was also heard in the matter and the arguments advanced before us by Mr. Andhyarujina were also advanced on the basis of the authority of the decision in Dossibai's case (1958-60 Bom LR 1208). In addition, some reliance was placed on the decision of the Supreme Court in Bai Dosabai v. Mathuradas, AIR 1980 SC 1334, to which we shall refer later. Mr. Andhyarujina's arguments were then supplemented by Mr. Kapadia who wanted to go into the larger question as to whether the right in the instant case could be considered as property having regard to the decisions of the Supreme Court in Bank Nationalisation case in AIR 1970 SC 564, and another decision of the Supreme Court in M. M. Pathak v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 803.

10. We may at this stage refer to a judgment of Vaidya J. on which reliance was placed by Mr. Singhavi, where a similar question arose for consideration. That judgment is in First Appeals Nos. 367 to 389 of 1964 decided on 27th August 1973. The claimants in that case claimed a share of compensation awarded under the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952, and the argument on behalf of the Municipal Corporation was that the claimants were merely prospective lessees under the terms of a public auction of plots allotment for building leases for 999 years and no agreement of lease having been executed by any of them as required by Secs. 69 and 70 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, their status was merely that of prospective lessees who had agreed to execute in future agreements of lease and those agreements had become impossible of performance or execution on account of acquisition of land which were first requisitioned under the Defence of India Rules and then under the Requisitioned Land (Discontinuance of Powers) Act, 1947, and lastly under Sec. 3 of the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952. The learned Judge set out the terms of public auction and those whose bids were accepted had first to enter into an agreement and the agreement had to be under seal and had to be registered. In that case also, the offer of the claimants was accepted by the sanction of the Improvements Committee. The agreements were, however, never executed nor registered nor was possession ever delivered. The learned Judge held that the agreement, whether it is considered as an agreement to execute in future an agreement or an agreement to create a lease, it became void on the issue of notification of acquisition and then the learned Judge observed as follows:—

"Having regard to the nature of the agreements entered into by the claimants, and the subsequent notification, the claimants had no interest whatsoever in any compensation money which the Municipal Corporation got from Government in respect of the lands acquired by the Government."

The claim of the claimants was thus rejected.

11. According to the learned counsel for the Corporation, the judgment of the learned single Judge is contrary to the view taken much earlier by Vaidya J. It does not appear that at the time when the reference in this case was argued, the decision of Vaidya J. was brought to the notice of the learned single Judge. However, since the matter has been fully argued before us, we will consider the contentions on their own merits.

12. It does appear that when the learned single Judge decided the reference, he proceeded on the footing that respondent 1 was a lessee or a tenant of the plot in question. That, however, cannot be the basis on which the reference could be decided. It is undisputed on facts that all that had happened in the instant case is that the offer to enter into an agreement was accepted on behalf of the Corporation on 15th November, 1956. It is no doubt true that the offer by respondent 1 refers to the draft of the agreement, but admittedly if the agreement has not been actually signed or executed, the position is that beyond the acceptance of the offer to enter into an agreement to lease, nothing more had taken place and unless it is possible for us to hold that on these facts the claimant or respondent 1 can be said to be a person interested and entitled to apportionment, it will be difficult to sustain the order of the learned single Judge.

13. Now, so far as the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act is concerned, the contract has to be made on behalf of the Corporation by the Commissioner under Sec. 69 (a) and under Sec. 70 (1) cl. (a) if any such contract entered into by the Commissioner required to be under seal, it has to be sealed with the common seal of the Corporation. It is not in dispute that under the terms of auction the agreement to lease was required to be under seal. The manner of executing a contract required to be under seal is specified in Sec. 70 (2) which reads as follows:—

"The common seal of the Corporation which shall remain in the custody of the Municipal Secretary, shall be affixed in the presence of two members of the standing committee to every contract or other instrument (other than contract relating to the acquisition of immovable property or interest therein or a right thereto), required to be under seal and such contract or instrument shall be signed by the said two members of the standing committee in token that the same was sealed in their presence. The signature of the said members shall be distinct from the signatures of any witnesses to the execution of any such contract or instrument."

Section 71 of the Act provides that no contract of the nature specified in subsec. (2) of the last preceding section nor executed as in the said section provided, shall be binding on the Corporation. Therefore, so far as the provisions of the B. M. C. Act are concerned, it is necessary that before any rights or liabilities are created against Corporation, the contract has to be under seal.

14. Now, Sec. 30, L. A. Act, provides as follows:—

"When the amount of compensation has been settled under Sec. 11 if any dispute arises as to the apportionment of the same or any part thereof or as to the persons to whom the same or any part thereof is payable, the Collector may refer such dispute to the decision of the Court."

15. A reference was made before us to the definition of "person interested" having regard to the decision in Dossibai's case. The definition of "person interested" in Sec. 3 (b) is an inclusive definition and the first part thereof provides that the expression "person interested" includes all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of acquisition of land under this Act. In Sunderlal v. Paramsukhdas, AIR 1968 SC 366, while construing the words "person interested," it was pointed out that it was not necessary that in order to fall within the definition, a person should claim an interest in land which has been acquired. Now, for the purposes of the present case, it is really not necessary for us to go into the extended definition because in so far as the claim to apportionment of compensation is concerned, unless respondent 1 is entitled to claim compensation qua compensation, a claim by him under Sec. 30, L. A. Act, will not be maintainable. In order to claim apportionment of compensation under Sec. 30, respondent 1 must show that she had some interest in or right to land.

16. Now, the maximum that can be said in favour of the present claimant-respondent 1 is that she has an agreement in her favour to enter into an agreement of lease and it is well known that while an agreement to lease may be specifically enforceable, an agreement to enter into an agreement is not recognised by law. In Harichand v. Govind, AIR 1923 PC 47, the Privy Council has observed as follows:—

"Whether an agreement is a completed bargain or merely a provisional arrangement depends on the intention of the parties as deducible from the language used by the parties on the occasion when the negotiations take a concrete shape. As observed by Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth) in Ridgway v. Wharton (1857) 6 HLC 238 (299) (268 ?) the fact of a subsequent agreement being prepared may be evidence that the previous negotiations did not amount to an agreement, but the mere fact that persons wish to have a formal agreement drawn up does not establish the proposition that they cannot be bound by a previous agreement."

Now, it is nobody's case that when an offer was made to respondent 1 to enter into an agreement, an agreement to lease did in fact take place because it was clearly intended by the parties that respondent 1 would enter into an independent agreement of lease which would have to be under seal.

17. In Dhulipudi Namayya v. Union of India, AIR 1958 Andh Pra 533, a Division Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court was dealing with the question as to whether the agreement formed by the acceptance of the defendant's tender was provisional and subject to the execution of another formal document and the following observations are instructive (at p. 537):—

"On the question whether the agreement formed by the acceptance of the defendant's tender was provisional and subject to the execution of another formal document, the averment in the plaint was that no separate agreement was intended or contemplated and this was traversed in the defendant's written statement.

The position of the law on the subject has been summarised by Parker J. in Von Hatzfeldt Wildenburg v. Alexander, 1912-1 Ch. 284 at p. 288 (E), in the following passage which has been approved by the Judicial Committee in Hukum Chand v. Ran Bahadur Singh, ILR 3 Pat 625: (AIR 1924 PC 156) (F), Harichand Mancharam v. Govind Laxman, ILR 47 Bom 335: (AIR 1923 PC 47) (G) and Currimbhoy & Co. Ltd. v. L. A. Creet, ILR 60 Cal 980: (AIR 1933 PC 29) (H).

'It appears to be well settled by the authorities that if the documents or letters relied on as constituting a contract contemplated the execution of a further contract between the parties, it is a question of construction whether the execution of the further contract is a condition or term of the bargain or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction, already agreed to, will in fact go through.

In the former case there is no enforceable contract either because the condition is unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract. In the latter case there is a binding contract and the reference to the more formal document may be ignored."

Having regard to this statement of the law, it is clear that even on the offer which has been made by respondent 1 that she had undertaken to enter into an agreement of lease, the mere fact that this offer was accepted on behalf of the Corporation would not bring about any contract binding on the Corporation unless the contract was in compliance with the provisions of Secs. 69, 70 and 71, B. M. C. Act. It was, therefore, an essential term of the offer that an agreement to lease would be executed and the said agreement was to be under seal. Unless that agreement was executed, there was not even a right which could be enforced specifically by respondent 1 against the Corporation requiring it to lease out the disputed property to her. We are in complete agreement with the view taken by Vaidya J. in First Appeals Nos. 367 to 389 of 1964 decided on 27th August 1973 referred to earlier.

18. Once we come to the conclusion that all that respondent 1 had in her favour was an offer which was accepted by the Corporation and respondent 1 was herself to enter into the agreement of lease and if such an agreement is not recognised by law as not creating any obligation or enforceable right, it is difficult for us to see how respondent 1 can be said to have any right to or interest in land because it is clear that there was no question of any proprietary interest in the land in the case of respondent 1.

19. As already pointed out, the contention on behalf of respondent 1 and the interveners is solely founded on the decision in Dossibai's case (1958-60 Bom LR 1208) and that contention seems to have been accepted by the learned single Judge when he applied the ratio in Dossibai's case. It is, therefore, necessary to deal in some detail with Dossibai's case.

20. Dossibai has been described throughout in the judgment as claimant 1 and some of the lands which were under acquisition by the Government by notification dated 1st October 1947 were agreed to be let by the owner Dossibai, claimant 1, to Trivedi, who was a nominee of claimant 2 P. M. Bharucha, at an annual rent of Rs. 500/- per acre for 99 years with an option of renewal for a further period of 99 years. Some other lands were also agreed to be let out by the owner Dossibai to Trivedi for 99 years and an agreement of lease was executed on 2nd June, 1947. Now, all these lands were agreed to be let out by claimant 2 to a co-operative housing society described as claimant 3 and all the three claimants claimed compensation, when the lands were acquired, in respect of their respective interest in the land. It appears that the compensation was divided between claimants 1 and 2 in respect of certain lands and in respect of some lands, compensation was awarded to all the three claimants and finally the dispute came to the High Court after reference was decided by the District Court.

21. It is necessary to refer to the facts found in that case. The facts found were that the first claimant had put the second claimant in possession of the land agreed to be demised by her and in pursuance of the agreements, claimant 2 was in occupation of some of the lands and the remaining lands were in the occupation of the third claimant. It was undisputed that the second claimant had paid rent which was agreed to be paid by him and the second claimant was ready and willing to carry out his part of the contract. Claimant 2 was, therefore, entitled to claim the benefit of part performance under Section 53A, T. P. Act, and also to claim specific performance of the agreement to lease the lands in the event of the first claimant being unwilling to carry out her part of the contract. On the date of the notification, the first claimant was ready and willing to execute a conveyance on the terms agreed upon and the second claimant was willing to take a conveyance from the first claimant. There was also no dispute that the third claimant remained in occupation under an agreement of lease from the second claimant and the third claimant was ready and willing to carry out its part of the contract and the second claimant was also willing to carry out his part of the contract. The third claimant was also, therefore, entitled to the benefit of part performance under Sec. 53A, T. P. Act, and also to obtain specific performance against the second claimant in the event of the second claimant being unwilling to carry out his part of the contract. As against the first claimant, the second claimant had possession of the lands agreed to be demised and he was entitled to hold possession of the lands and the first claimant was debarred from enforcing against the second claimant and persons claiming under him any right in respect of the lands agreed to be demised other than the right expressly provided by the terms of the agreement. The third claimant was also entitled to hold possession as against the second claimant. It was found that if the first claimant, that is, the owner, relying on the title, sought to obtain possession of the lands agreed to be demised to the second claimant, the latter could effectively resist the claim made by the first claimant except a claim arising out of any express terms of the agreement. The Division Bench found that though the second claimant had not acquired any interest of a tenant, there being no registered lease, he was entitled to remain in possession as if he had obtained a lease in his favour. Similarly as against the second claimant, the third claimant had right to remain in possession as if it had obtained a lease.

22. Now, before we come to the legal position set out in this decision, it is necessary to appreciate the fact that the second and the third claimants, who claimed apportionment of compensation, were in possession in part performance of the agreement to lease and could, therefore, resist a claim for possession by the owner. A claim for possession by the second claimant against the third claimant could also be resisted by the third claimant. It is in this context that the passages relied upon heavily on behalf of respondent 1 must be read.

23. Dealing with the question as to who was the person interested in the land, the Division Bench observed as follows in the context of the contention that only those persons were entitled to claim compensation who had interest in the land compulsorily acquired and no others.

"A 'person interested in the land' under Sec. 9 will, in our judgment, by the definition in Sec. 3 (b), include a person who claims interest in compensation to be paid on account of the acquisition of land, and the interest which is contemplated by Sec. 9 and the other sections to which we have referred is not restricted to legal proprietary estate or interest in the land but includes such interest as will sustain a claim to apportionment with the owner of the land. If a person has a right to remain in occupation or has a claim against the land, or some obligation or restriction is imposed upon the ownership of the land, the person in whom the right or claim is vested or who is entitled to the benefit of the obligation or restriction will, in our judgment, be entitled to compensation, even though the right, claim or the benefit may not amount to an interest or estate in the land. If a person has without having any interest a right to remain in occupation or possession of land of the ownership of another, compensation for extinction of that right by compulsory acquisition will be payable to the person having the right of occupation or possession.

For instance, a person who has a licence which is irrevocable will be a person interested, even though the license does not amount to an interest in the land. The owner of a dominant tenement, having an easement over a servient tenement, even though the easement does not amount to an interest in the land, is by the definition declared expressly to be a person interested in land. In our judgment, the right to receive compensation for compulsory acquisition of land is not restricted to those persons who have a legal or proprietary interest or estate in the land and is available to all persons who have a right or claim to land, even if such right or claim does not amount to legal or proprietary estate or interest in the land."

24. Now, both Mr. Nain and Mr. Andhyarujina have laid emphasis on the observations of the Division Bench that it is not necessary to have a legal or proprietary interest or estate in land in order to sustain a claim to apportionment of compensation with the owner of the land and, according to the learned Counsel, if a person has a right to or interest in land, he will be entitled to compensation.

25. There can hardly be any quarrel with the proposition laid down by the Division Bench. But we cannot lose sight of the fact that the Division Bench in that case was dealing with the right of apportionment claimed by claimants 2 and 3 who were in possession in pursuance of an agreement of lease and though the lease was not registered, though it was for 99 years, the Division Bench found that they were entitled to continue in possession in part performance of the agreement under S. 53A T. P. Act and that the agreement of lease could be specifically enforceable. It appears to us that when the Division Bench observed that the agreements of lease in that case were specifically enforceable, even though they were not registered, the obvious reference was to the provisions of Sec. 27 (a), Specific Relief Act, which section has now been deleted but with which we are not concerned because even in the instant case, the transactions are much prior to 1963. Section 49 (c) Registration Act, requires even an agreement to lease to be registered if it is for a lease from year to year or for a period more than one month. Therefore, it is obvious that what weighed with the Division Bench was that although claimants 2 and 3 were in possession, they may not have any interest in land because no such interest was created in the absence of a registered lease deed, but they had a right to land inasmuch as their possession was protected by the doctrine of part performance under Sec. 53A, T. P. Act. When the Division Bench, therefore, referred to a right to land, it was a right which enabled a person to continue in possession of the land. If there is merely an agreement which does not create any enforceable right, as in the instant case, it is difficult for us to appreciate how that can create either a right to or an obligation in respect of that land. The ratio of Dossibai's case (1958-60 Bom LR 1208) was wholly inapplicable to the instant case because it is clear that though the Division Bench laid down that the person need not have proprietary interest or right, the observations clearly indicated that they had in view a right to land or an obligation attached to land which was of an enforceable nature.

26. Reference was made before us to the decision of the Supreme Court in Bai Dosabai's case (AIR 1980 SC 1334) cited supra. That was a case which dealt with the doctrine of equitable ownership or an obligation annexed to the ownership of the property and we have not found anything in that case which will support the claim of present respondent 1 because basically she has not in her favour even an enforceable agreement which can be said to create an obligation in favour of respondent 1 which can be attached to the ownership of the land in dispute.

27. In Bai Dosabai's case, a deed of lease executed by the lessor on 25th Feb. 1946 provided that the lessor was to get a full sale price of Rs. 1,29,111-8-0 either from the lessee or by selling the property by public auction if the lessee did not want to buy it. If the price recovered by public auction was less, the lessee was to make up the deficit. The lessor was under an obligation to sell the land to the lessee, if the lessee so desired, within a period of 7 years and if he paid the purchase price, but if he did not so desire, the land could be sold by public auction. However, if the lessor recovered by public auction sale price larger than that stipulated in the agreement, the excess had to be paid over to the lessee. The lessor had given a notice to the lessee demanding rent for 1950-51 and 1951-52 and he was informed that if rent was not paid, a suit would be instituted to recover possession and the property would be sold thereafter by public auction at the cost and risk of the lessee. After another notice demanding payment of rent for the next year and also for the first two years was given, a suit came to be filed for recovery of rent and a claim for possession as well as damages in lieu of rent was made. The suit was decreed. The property, it appears, was in the possession of a tenant of the lessee and the lessee had also filed a suit for possession against the tenant. Against the decree for possession in favour of the lessor, the lessee filed an appeal which was dismissed. The lessor obtained possession in execution of the decree and thereafter the lessee filed a suit for specific performance of the agreement dated 25th February, 1946 directing the lessor to execute a sale deed in his favour after receiving from the plaintiff-lessee the balance of the sale price or, in the alternative, to direct the lessor to sell the land by public auction and to retain a sum of Rs. 93,833-10-0 out of the sale proceeds to pay the excess amount to the plaintiff. The claim for specific performance was given up. The suit of the lessee, though it was dismissed by the City Civil Court, was decreed in appeal by the High Court and the land was directed to be sold by public auction or by private treaty if the parties so agreed. Out of the sale price, the lessor was first to reimburse himself to the extent of the balance of the original purchase price with interest at the rate of 9% p. a. and thereafter the remaining amount was to be equally divided between the plaintiff and the defendant. If the price fetched was less, then the lessor was to recover the deficit from the lessee. The High Court took the view that the deed dated 26th Feb. 1946 had created an equitable interest in land in favour of the plaintiff, that is, the lessee. The lessor then appealed to the Supreme Court against the decision of the High Court.

28. While disposing of the lessor's appeal, the Supreme Court pointed out that the concept and creation of duality of ownership, legal and equitable, on the execution of an agreement to convey immovable property as understood in England, is alien to Indian Law which recognises one owner, i. e., the legal owner. Reference was made to Sec. 54, T. P. Act, which expressly stated that a contract for sale of immovable property does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on such property and then the Supreme Court observed as follows (at p. 1338 of AIR):—

"But the ultimate and penultimate paragraphs of Sec. 40, T. P. Act, make it clear that such a contract creates an obligation annexed to the ownership of immovable property, not amounting to an interest in the property, but which obligation may be enforced against a transferee with notice of the contract or a gratuitous transferee of the property. Thus the equitable ownership in property recognised by equity in England is translated into Indian law as an obligation annexed to the ownership of property, not amounting to an interest in the property, but an obligation which may be enforced against a transferee with notice or a gratuitous transferee." Analysing the rights of the lessee, the Supreme Court found that the lessor was under an obligation to pay the excess price, if realised by public auction, to the lessee and then in para 10 of the judgment, the following observations were made:—

"We do not have any doubt, on a consideration of the terms of the deed and the relevant statutory provisions earlier referred, that the obligation of the lessor to sell the land by public auction and pay the excess price to the lessee is an obligation annexed to the ownership of the property, not amounting to an interest in the property, that it is an obligation in the nature of a trust, and, therefore, an obligation which may be specifically enforced."

29. Now, it is no doubt true that the principle of Sec. 40, T. P. Act, was invoked in Bai Dosabai's case (AIR 1980 SC 1334) but it is difficult for us to see how the principle of Section. 40 can at all be invoked or attracted in the instant case. The obligation in Bai Dosabai's case arose from the agreement of sale. In so far as the case before us is concerned, there is not even an enforceable agreement and there was, therefore, no question of the provisions of Sec. 40 being attracted in the instant case.

30. It is wholly unnecessary for us to refer to the arguments advanced before us by Mr. Kapadia on the basis of the decision in the Life Insurance Corporation's case (AIR 1978 SC 803) and the Bank Nationalisation case (AIR 1970 SC 564) as to the scope of the concept of property. Obviously the contention is that as a result of acquisition of land, a right or interest of respondent 1 has been extinguished and that was property for which she was entitled to compensation. The question really does not arise in the instant case because we have taken the view that there is not even an enforceable agreement in favour of respondent 1.

31. Some argument was advanced before us on behalf of the Corporation that there was a frustration of the contract. If there was any contract which vested some rights in respondent 1 enabling her to claim compensation, she could not have been deprived of that right merely because there was frustration of the contract, but in any case, that argument now does not survive. It, therefore, appears to us that the learned single Judge was in error in applying the ratio of the decision in Dossibai's case (1958-60 Bom LR 1208) to the facts of the instant case. On the facts of the present case, the ratio of that case was not at all attracted and consequently the order made by the learned single Judge is liable to be set aside.

32. Accordingly, the appeal is allowed, the order of the learned single Judge is set aside and it is held that respondent 1 is not entitled to make any claim in respect of the compensation which is awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer in respect of the property in dispute. Respondent 1 to pay the costs of this appeal. We are informed that the amount awarded to respondent 1 was already withdrawn by her subject to guarantee furnished to the Prothonotary and Senior Master by order dated 11th October 1976. If the amount is not deposited back within four weeks by respondent 1, the Corporation will be entitled to have the guarantee enforced.

Appeal allowed.

MODY, J.

P., Appellant v. K., Respondent.

First Appeal No. 374 of 1980, D/-15-7-1981.

(A) Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), Sec. 12 — Evidence — Requirements of notice and petition — Minute details and entire evidence need not be stated.

Notice is supposed to give only the bare outlines of the grievances of the party sending the notice. How much to reveal, how much not to reveal, will depend on the opinion of the advocate who is sending the notice. Not mentioning of a particular fact in the notice, unless it is so material as ought to have found place in the notice, cannot be a subject of any serious comment nor can such an omission by itself affect the veracity of the evidence. In fact, often a notice is sent even though not necessary as notice is rarely a part of the cause of action. The function of the petition is to give material facts which give rise to the cause of action; it should not contain evidence or other unnecessary details. The notice or the petition are not proper place for minute details and entire evidence is not required to be stated in them.

(Para 8)

(B) Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), S. 12 (1) (c) (as amended in 1976) — Consent as to any material fact or circumstance concerning the respondent — Connotation of — Fact of prolapse of uterus concealed — Marriage is avoidable and is liable to be annulled. AIR 1972 Bom. 132 held no longer good law in view of amendment in 1976.

It is difficult to define with any certainty what can be said to be material fact or circumstance but it may be safely said that the fact or circumstance which is of such a nature as would materially interfere with the marital life and pleasure, including sexual pleasure will be a material fact or circumstance. The only limitation is that the material fact or circumstances must be concerning the respondent, meaning thereby that it must be in respect of the person or character of the respondent. It is immaterial whether such fact or circumstance is curable or remediable. If a party to a marriage is suffering from some abhorrent disease such as leprosy or venereal disease and this is not disclosed it will be definitely concealment and consequently fraud as to material fact and circumstance. Similar would be the case with suppression of the fact of immoral life prior to the marriage. In the present case the sexual intercourse was not possible without manipulation of the protruding uterus by hand, which obviously is likely to cause dislike, abhorrence or disgust to a newly wed husband; concealment of such a fact will be fraud as to material fact or circumstance concerning the respondent as now contemplated by Sec. 12 (1) (c). In the circumstance, the marriage solemnised between the petitioner and the respondent is avoidable and is liable to be annulled. AIR 1972 Bom 132 Held no longer good law in view of amendment in 1970. (Para 20)

(C) Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), Sec. 12 (1) (a) (after amendment in 1976) — Impotency — Question of curability is immaterial. AIR 1977 Cal 213 Rel. on. AIR 1978 Punj & Har 181, Explained. (Para 28)

(D) Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), Sec. 12 (1) (a) — Impotency — Aversion shown by husband due to prolapse of uterus can amount to impotency.

If the condition of a spouse is such as to make intercourse imperfect or painful it would amount to impotency. Even the aversion or abhorrence shown by spouse to having intercourse caused by prolapse of uterus can amount to impotency. In the present case the respondent was impotent for two reasons. Firstly, it is proved that the respondent resisted all the approaches of the petitioner to consummate the marriage, possibly with a view to conceal the condition or prevent the pain which may possibly result because of the intercourse and secondly, because with such a prolapse the intercourse is possible only after manipulation with hands. The sight of the protruding uterus is more likely than not to cool down the ardour and desire of the husband to perform the sexual act resulting in frustration for the husband. Even if the ardour and desire survive the sight of the protruding organ, the manipulation itself will cool it down. In any case an intercourse which demands previous manipulation of the uterus before penetration cannot be said to be an intercourse in the normal way. Therefore, both reasons independently of each other are indicative of impotency and this coupled with non-consummation held, to have been established, entitled the petitioner to annulment of the marriage. If it is the allegation of cruelty by reason of some positive acts, the details are obviously necessary with dates and particulars, but in respect of a negative case, such as non-consummation, a statement that throughout the period there has not been consummation, will normally suffice, with details of one or two attempts. M. K. Nesari, for Appellant; C. R. Dalvi, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The appellant (original petitioner) the husband, and the respondent (the original respondent) were married on 20th June 1976. The appellant and the respondent were both Hindus and were about 36 and 27 years of age respectively at the time of marriage. Due to certain unfortunate circumstances, the husband was driven to file a petition for nullity within a short time which he did on or about 30th Nov. 1976.

2. The petition proceeds to make the following allegations. The marriage had not been consummated owing to the impotency of the respondent. On the very first night the respondent refused to have sexual intercourse saying that for one year she would not have sexual intercourse with the appellant. The respondent appeared to be very much upset at the approach of the appellant to consummate the marriage and was averse to any sexual act. It was decided by the petitioner and his elders to take the respondent on a pilgrimage so that there might be a change in her mentality and outlook by the blessings of God. Even during pilgrimage the matter did not improve. Soon after return from pilgrimage on 29-7-1976 the respondent's father had come to the petitioner's house and the petitioner complained to her father about the behaviour of the respondent. Father ignored the complaint. The respondent's attitude continued. Then followed a medical check up on 27-8-1976, by Dr. Bhatia when it was discovered by the petitioner that the respondent was suffering from second degree prolapse of the uterus. This was indicative of non-virginity. Taking into consideration the medical report and the odd behaviour of the respondent and the surrounding circumstances, the petitioner had reasons to suspect that the respondent wanted to conceal facts from the petitioner and that was one of the main reasons why she was refusing to have sexual intercourse with the petitioner and have the marriage consummated. It was clear from the conduct of the respondent and that of her parents that fraud was committed and that the marriage had been brought about by fraud and misrepresentation. The respondent and her parents had suppressed material facts about the sexual lapse and defect. The petitioner's consent to the marriage was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation as to the material fact or circumstances concerning the respondent. In any event, the respondent was impotent at the relevant time, and there was non-consummation by reason thereof. The petitioner prayed for annulment of the marriage under Sec. 12 (1) (a) and (c). In the written statement the respondent denied that marriage was not consummated or that she refused to consummate the marriage or was averse to sexual act or that she was impotent at any time. It is alleged that she was taken to Dr. Bhatia on 27th Aug. 1976 but the respondent did not understand the result of the said examination. It is denied that the respondent suffered from sexual defects before her marriage and it is averred that neither she nor her parents were aware of any defect at any time before or after the marriage.

3. Mr. Nesari for the appellant has taken me through the evidence and the judgment and contended that the learned trial judge has not correctly appraised the evidence and on the balance ought to have accepted the evidence of the petitioner and Dr. Bhatia and rejected the evidence of the respondent as unreliable and that of Dr. Pancholi as not very reliable on certain aspects of the matter in view of contradictions and that if the evidence of petitioner and Dr. Bhatia is accepted, the grounds for nullity stand proved.

4. Before considering the evidence of the petitioner, I will deal with the evidence of the respondent as in my view her evidence is completely unreliable and the petitioner's evidence not being inherently unreliable will have to be accepted, irrespective of some discrepancies. (After discussing evidence of respondent His Lordship proceed-Ed.)

5. and 6. x x x x

7. Mr. Dalvi has attacked the evidence of the petitioner and contended that the case now made out by the petitioner is different from the one in the petition. He says that initially in the notice of the advocate, case was made out of misrepresentation as to the virginity of the respondent, while the case sought to be made out in the petition is that of concealment of the evidence of prolapse and of impotency and in the evidence there are further embellishments. In support he refers to a statement "my client has reasons to suspect, taking into consideration, the medical report and your behaviour and the surrounding circumstances, that you were not a virgin and you wanted to conceal the fact from my client, and that, that was one of the main reasons why you were refusing to have sexual intercourse with my client and have the marriage consummated". However, the notice has to be read as a whole. Moreover, a notice is not a pleading and not to be interpreted as a pleading. The notice does mention that the marriage had not been consummated till the date of the notice due to the impotency of the respondent. It is further stated that she was examined by Dr. Bhatia and she had given a certificate to the effect that it was found that the hymen was torn and that there was a second degree prolapse of the uterus, indicative of non-virginity. It would appear that words 'non-virginity' are the words used by the petitioner or on the facts disclosed

Then follows a sentence relied on by Mr. Dalvi followed by another sentence in the same paragraph, "that you have suppressed the material facts and your sexual lapse and defect, which were within your own knowledge". It is therefore, clear that the notice proceeds on the basis of non-disclosure of sexual lapse i.e. loss of virginity before marriage as also concealment of sexual defect viz: prolapse. I do not think that either the petition or petition read with notice are open to the attack made by Mr. Dalvi.

8. The evidence of the petitioner practically follows the petition. However, it gives more details than the petition and the notice. Mr. Dalvi attacks the evidence of the petitioner by contending that certain details given in the evidence do not find place in either the notice or the petition, and therefore, should not be believed. I must here point out what is normally required of a notice and a petition. Notice is supposed to give only the bare outlines of the grievances of the party sending the notice. How much to reveal, how much not to reveal, will depend on the opinion of the advocate who is sending the notice. Not mentioning of a particular fact in the notice, unless it is so material as ought to have found place in the notice, cannot be a subject of any serious comment nor can such an omission by itself affect the veracity of the evidence. In fact, often a notice is sent even though not necessary as notice is rarely a part of the cause of action. The function of the petition is to give material facts which give rise to the cause of action; it should not contain evidence or other unnecessary details. In my view the petition in the present case contains sufficient particulars in respect of the facts which constitute that cause of action and no fact which forms material part of the cause of action has come out for the first time in the evidence. The cause of action of the petitioner is that the respondent was suffering from second degree prolapse of uterus and this fact was concealed from him at the time of marriage. That the respondent had no inclination to any sexual intercourse and was repelled by the attempts of the petitioner to consummate marriage subsequently came to the notice of the petitioner because of the prolapse.

He claims that he is entitled to annulment on the ground of concealment of material fact concerning the respondent and non-consummation due to impotency. This case is brought out in the petition. It is averred that sexual lapse and the defect of the nature described were known to her but they were not disclosed before the marriage, and therefore, he is entitled to annulment on the ground of fraud (what is meant thereby is obviously concealment) of material facts relating to the respondent. Having asserted non-consummation of the marriage, it was not necessary to mention in the petition each and every approach the petitioner made to the respondent and which was repulsed. It was sufficient to say generally that from the very first night till the relevant date, there was no consummation of marriage. Therefore, I do not see any substance in the attack of Mr. Dalvi that facts brought out in the evidence of the petitioner do not find place either in the notice or the petition and so the petitioner is improving upon the story from time to time and his evidence should not be accepted. I do not see any substance in Mr. Dalvi's attack as the notice or the petition are not proper place for minute details and entire evidence is not required to be stated in them.

(After examining the evidence of the petitioner in paras 9 to 13. His Lordship proceeded — Ed.)

14. Mr. Dalvi then attacks the evidence on the ground that except the details as to what happened on the first night, there are no details given regarding the attempts made to approach the respondent by the petitioner and as to what was the response either in the advocate's notice or the petition or the evidence. This attack of Mr. Dalvi has no substance. It is not necessary for the petitioner to prove each and every approach made with dates and other details. It is sufficient if he says that he made attempts which were repulsed by the petitioner. It is obvious that the attempt of first night only is described as that would be the most important and it is stated and maintained by the petitioner in his evidence that there was no change in the situation after the first night. It is the respondent who will have to say that it is not true, give some details as to when the relations took place and then the question will be as to whom to believe; but the minute details as contended by Mr. Dalvi are not required to be given in the notice, petition or examination in chief when the case is of complete non-consummation and impotency. If it is the allegation of cruelty by reason of some positive acts, the details are obviously necessary with dates and particulars, but in respect of a negative case, such as non-consummation, a statement that throughout the period there has not been consummation will normally suffice, with details of one or two attempts. Moreover, if it is believed that the respondent was aware of her condition since prior to marriage as appears to be the case, it is possible that she will try to repulse the petitioner's advances and the petitioner's version becomes probable. (After discussing the medical evidence in paras 15 and 16 His Lordship proceeded—Ed.)

17. The evidence therefore, establishes that the respondent must be deemed to be aware of her condition of prolapse since prior to marriage and that either she wanted to hide her condition from the petitioner or had developed abhorrence or repugnance towards intercourse. Not only did she not inform the petitioner about the same at or before the time of marriage but also did not submit to the petitioner with the result that the marriage remained unconsummated.

18. This brings me to the question as to whether it can be said that the respondent was impotent at the relevant time or that the non-disclosure of a known prolapse amounts to obtaining consent of the petitioner "by force or by fraud as to the nature of the ceremony or as to the material fact or circumstances concerning the respondent".

19. Dealing first with the second aspect of the matter, it is to be considered as to what amounts to fraud as to any material fact or circumstance concerning the respondent. Prior to the amendment of the Hindu Marriage Act by Act 68 of 1976, S. 12 (1) (c) read as follows:—

"that the consent of the petitioner, or where the consent of the guardian in marriage of the petitioner is required under Section 5, the consent of such guardian was obtained by force or fraud",

These words were interpreted by this Court in Raghunath Gopal v. Vijaya Raghunath, 73 Bom LR 840: (AIR 1972 Bom 132). In that case the consent to the marriage was procured by concealing from the husband the fact that the wife was suffering from curable epilepsy and false representation that she was healthy and it was held that this concealment and representation though otherwise fraudulent did not amount to fraud within the meaning of S. 12 (1) (c) as then existing. The reason for coming to this conclusion is that the Hindu Marriage though may be in the nature of a contract for some purpose was still a sacrament and therefore, 'fraud' cannot be interpreted in light of its definition in the Contract Act. After relying on certain well-known treatises on the law of divorce prevailing in England, and the commentary in Mulla's Hindu Law (13th Edition) page 862, and on Derrett's Introduction to Modern Hindu Law (1963 Edn.) page 193, it was held by Malvankar J. (at p. 137 of AIR):

"It would thus be seen that the word 'fraud' used in S. 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act does not speak of fraud in any general way, nor does it mean every misrepresentation or concealment which may be fraudulent. If the consent given by the parties is a real consent to the solemnization of the marriage, the same cannot be avoided on the ground of fraud. The marriage, therefore, solemnized under the Hindu Marriage Act cannot be avoided by showing that the petitioner was induced to marry the respondent by fraudulent statement relating to her health".

Malvankar J. then proceeded to consider Indian Cases in which the physical deficiency or illness or suppression of the fact that the wife was a naikin by profession or of her having been kept by more than one person prior to the marriage were not considered as amounting to fraud. After considering all these authorities, it was stated (at p. 138 of AIR).

"These, decision, therefore, before and after the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, came into force definitely show that Indian Contract Act, 1872, does not apply to the marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and the word 'fraud' used in S. 12 of the Hindu Marriage Act does not mean fraudulent representation".

ment. The test to be applied is whether there is any real consent to the solemnization of the marriage."

It was then held (at p. 138 of AIR):—

"A person who freely consents to a solemnization of the marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act with the other party in accordance with customary ceremonies, that is, with knowledge of the nature of the ceremonies and intention to marry, cannot object to the validity of the marriage on the ground of fraudulent representation or concealment. Moreover, in the present case, the fraud alleged is non-disclosure or concealment of epilepsy from which the respondent was suffering since before her marriage, and false representation that she was healthy. I have found that the type of epilepsy she was suffering from is curable. I am also, therefore, of the opinion that non-disclosure or concealment of such curable epilepsy and false representation that the respondent was healthy does not amount to fraud within the meaning of that word used in Sec. 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. The petitioner, therefore, has failed to prove that his consent was obtained by the respondent or her relations by fraud." It is therefore, clear that according to the learned Judge the fraud contemplated was such as must be regarding the ceremony or the identity of the respondent and not as regards the condition of the respondent or her life at the time of or before the marriage. This judgment was followed in David v. Kalpana (1976) 78 Bom LR 85, which was a case under the Indian Divorce Act.

20. If the matter rested there the things would have been simple and I would had no alternative but to hold that no fraud could be said to have been committed in the present case. However, the wordings have now been changed by the amendment of Section 12 (1) (c) which now reads as follows:—

(1) (c) — that the consent of the respondent where the consent of the petitioner was obtained by force or fraud or by the concealment of the nature of the ceremony or of the fact or condition of the respondent

This amendment clearly contemplates change in law and brings into the ambit of fraud, misrepresentation or concealment of any material fact or circumstance concerning the respondent. Fraud must mean representing as existing what is not and concealing what is material. The misrepresentation or concealment necessarily presupposes that the respondent was aware of the facts and circumstances which were misrepresented or concealed. In the present case as I have already held that the fact of the prolapse of uterus was known to the respondent and the only question is whether the non-disclosure thereof can be fraud as to any material fact or circumstance concerning the respondent. Every fact and circumstance cannot be material. Therefore, concealment of misrepresentation of every fact and circumstances cannot be said to be fraud sufficient for annulment. It is difficult to define with any certainty what can be said to be material fact or circumstance but it may be safely said that the fact or circumstance which is of such nature as would materially interfere with the marital life and pleasure including sexual pleasure will be a material fact or circumstance. The only limitation is that the material fact or circumstance must be concerning the respondent, meaning thereby that it must be in respect of the person or character of the respondent. It is immaterial whether such fact or circumstance is curable or remediable. If a party to a marriage is suffering from some abhorrent disease such as leprosy or venereal disease and this is not disclosed it will be definitely concealment and consequently fraud as to material fact and circumstance. Similar would be the case with suppression of the fact of immoral life prior to the marriage. Without going into the detail or definition as to what may or may not constitute material fact or circumstance, it can be said that existence of a condition in the respondent which materially interferes with the sexual intercourse or its pleasure or which makes its indulgence in a normal way difficult or is such as is likely to cause dislike or abhorrence in the mind of the other spouse to have sexual intercourse it will be material fact or circumstance even though it may or may not amount to impotency. In the present case as I have already held the sexual intercourse was not possible without manipulation of the protruding uterus by hand, which obviously is likely to cause dislike, abhorrence or disgust to a newly wed husband; concealment of such a fact will be fraud as to material fact or circumstance concerning the respondent as now contemplated by Section 12 (1) (c). In the circumstance, the marriage solemnised between the petitioner and the respondent is avoidable and is liable to be annulled.

21. This brings me to the question of impotency. This question was considered by the Full Bench of Madras High Court in K. Balavendram v. S. Harry, AIR 1954 Mad 316 (FB). In that case, the petitioner had alleged that the respondent's male organ was so abnormally big as to render sexual intercourse with her impracticable. It had proved to be positively dangerous to the life of the petitioner. She stated that on several occasions when the respondent attempted to have intercourse with her the petitioner evinced great aversion to the act and also suffered great pain on each occasion, with the result she had to push the respondent away or jump out of the bed and in the circumstances, the marriage had not been consummated and that the consummation of marriage was impossible. The respondent in his reply asserted that intercourse was possible and that it had taken place on several occasions. The facts alleged by the petitioner were held to be proved as the respondent did not give evidence or appear. On the basis of these facts the question arose whether these facts amounted to impotency. The said judgment has considered various authorities to come to the conclusion as to what amounts to impotency. The relevant portion of the judgment is as follows (at p. 317):—

"(4) Impotency has been understood by Judges in England in matrimonial cases as meaning incapacity to consummate the marriage, that is to say, incapacity to have sexual intercourse, which undeniable is one of the objects of marriage. The question is, what does 'sexual intercourse' mean? we cannot do better than refer to what has been considered to be the leading decision on this topic, namely — D. E. v. A. G.

(1845) 163 ER 1039. In that case, the husband prayed for a declaration of nullity of his marriage with the respondent who was married to him on the ground that carnal consummation was impossible by reason of malformation of his wife's sexual organ. Dr. Lushington dealt with the point namely, what exactly is to be understood by the term "sexual intercourse", because as he said everyone was agreed that in order to constitute the marriage bond between young persons, there must be the power, present or to come, of sexual intercourse. Dr. Lushington stated,

"Sexual intercourse, in the proper meaning of the term, is ordinary and complete intercourse; it does not mean partial and imperfect intercourse; Yet, I cannot go the length of saying that every degree of imperfection would deprive it of its essential character. There must be degrees difficult to deal with, but if so imperfect as scarcely to be natural, I should not hesitate to say that legally speaking, it is no intercourse at all. If there be a reasonable probability that the lady can be made capable of a 'vera copula' of the natural sort of coitus, though without power of conception I cannot pronounce this marriage void. If, on the contrary, she is not and cannot be made capable of more than an incipient, imperfect and unnatural coitus, I would pronounce the marriage void."

In — 'G v. G' (1871) 2 P & D 287 the rule laid down by Dr. Lushington was followed. The ground on which the husband in that case sought a declaration of nullity of marriage was the wife's peculiar condition which made it impossible for him to consummate the marriage. The wife was suffering from excessive sensibility. Lord Penzance in dealing with the case, after laying down the law that the ground of interference of the courts in cases of impotence is the practical impossibility of consummation said:—

"The invalidity of the marriage cannot be consummated by some structural defect, but the basis of the Court is not the impracticability of the marriage. The learned judge held that

"13. Impotence simply means inability to perform the sexual act. It may be pathological or psychological, permanent or temporary, complete or partial. The judgment of Ramaswamy J. in Rangaswami v. Arvindammal, AIR 1957 Mad 243, contains a full and comprehensive discussion of what impotence means. It is unnecessary to refer to the wealth of literature on the subject. I will confine myself to the consideration of a few cases where problems similar to the one before me had arisen."

Then reference is made to the observation of Dr. Lushington. These observations of Dr. Lushington show that the sexual intercourse in the proper meaning of the term is "ordinary and complete intercourse". It does not mean "partial and imperfect intercourse". He then observes that he cannot go to the length of saying that every degree of imperfection would deprive the intercourse of its essential character. There must be degree difficult to deal with; but if so imperfect as scarcely to be natural (sic) he would not hesitate to say that legally speaking, it is no intercourse at all. Then the observation proceeds to say that if it is curable the marriage cannot be declared void. But that observation appears to be made in the light of the law applicable then. Here as already held by Calcutta High Court, with which I respectfully agree, the question of curability is immaterial and that appears to be the present law in England also as is apparent from the case of M v. M referred to earlier.

29. In my view; therefore, if the condition of a spouse is such as to make intercourse imperfect or painful it would amount to impotency. Even the aversion or abhorrence shown by spouse to having intercourse caused by prolapse can amount to impotency. In the present case in my view the respondent was impotent for two reasons. Firstly, it is proved that the respondent resisted all the approaches of the petitioner to consummate the marriage, possibly with a view to conceal the condition or prevent the pain which may possibly result because of the intercourse and secondly, because with such a prolapse the intercourse is possible only after manipulation with hands. The sight of the protruding uterus is more likely than not to cool down the ardour and desire of the husband to perform the sexual act resulting in frustration for the husband. Even if the ardour and desire survive the sight of the protruding organ, the manipulation itself will cool it down. In any case an intercourse which demands previous manipulation of the uterus before penetration cannot be said to be an intercourse in the normal way. Therefore, both reasons independently of each other are indicative of impotency and this coupled with non-consummation which I have already held, to have been established, entitle the petitioner to annulment of the marriage.

30. The learned trial Judge in my view has not appreciated the evidence properly and has come to erroneous conclusions. He has wrongly not believed the evidence of Dr. Bhatia, particularly when the evidence of the respondent is absolutely unreliable and has failed to appreciate the effect of the evidence of Dr. Bhatia which clearly leads to the conclusion that the respondent was aware of her condition since prior to marriage. He has no doubt strongly relied on the fact that certificate at D-1 did not mention that the respondent was having masturbation for last 3 years though Dr. Bhatia said so in her evidence. He has erroneously come to the conclusion that Dr. Bhatia's enquiry about masturbation was unnecessary; as I have already pointed out she has not been cross-examined on this point and that the question could have arisen naturally in the course of discussion with the respondent. He has failed to take notice of the fact that Dr. Bhatia had maintained notes on the basis of which she was giving evidence and though a question was asked about maintaining of notes to which she replied in the affirmative, she was not called upon to produce the notes. He has disbelieved Ex. D1 which ought not to have been discarded. He has failed to notice material discrepancies in the evidence of Dr. Pancholi. He has failed to appreciate the fact that the father of the respondent has not stepped in to the box to contradict the evidence of the petitioner that he had informed the father about the respondent's behaviour on 25th July 1976 and has also not appreciated that the evidence of the respondent is thoroughly unbelievable and useless. In the circumstances, the judgment of the learned Judge cannot stand. He had also failed to notice that there is now change in S. 12 (1) (c) and the position is now different from what it was prior to 1976, when the decision of Malvankar J. was given.

31. In the circumstances, I set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court dismissing the petition and make the petition absolute in terms of prayer (a).

32. As regards the quantum of maintenance and alimony it is agreed between Mr. Nesri for the petitioner and Mr. Dalvi for the respondent that the respondent should be paid a lump sum of Rs. 13,500/- as and by way of permanent alimony. I pass the order for alimony accordingly. This amount will be paid within 2 months from today. There will be no order as to the costs of the appeal.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1982 BOMBAY 416

(AT NAGPUR)

DHARMADHIKARI AND BHONSALE, JJ.

Krishnarao Anandrao Dhayagude and others, Petitioners v. Khandala Taluka Shetkari Sahakari Kharedi Vikri Sangh Ltd., Lonand and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 1049 of 1981, D/- 10-11-1981.

(A) Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (24 of 1961), S. 144-T (3) and (4) — Election petition — Powers of Commissioner or Specified Officer — Has power to dismiss petition for non-appearance or for default.

Under Section 144-T (3), the Commissioner or Specified Officer has been conferred with the same powers as are vested in the Court in respect of items mentioned in the section. If the Commissioner or the Specified Officer under S. 144-T is vested with and empowered to exercise certain powers of the Court, it follows that all such incidental and ancillary powers which a Court is empowered to exercise as is referred to in S. 144-T (3) can also be exercised by the Commissioner or the Specified Officer. Though there is no positive provision for dismissing election petition for non-appearance or default, there is is neither an indication in the Statute nor Rules to the contrary. On the contrary, the Commissioner or Specified Officer has been specifically conferred with powers under the Civil P. C. for limited purpose. For effectively discharging the duty of deciding the election petition, the incidental and ancillary powers can also be exercised by the Commissioner or the Specified Officer under the provisions of S. 144-T and other sections and relevant rules. Such authorities being quasi-judicial in nature have the duty to determine objectively the matters referred to them under Section 144-T and have to exercise their discretion in judicial manner without caprice and according to the general principles of law and Rules of natural justice. Therefore, even in absence of specific provisions under the Act and the Rules, the Commissioner or Specified Officer under Section 144-T has the power to dismiss the election petition for non-appearance or default. As is provided in Section 144-T (4), petitions are to be disposed of as expeditiously as possible. If petitioners for any reason choose to remain absent for considerable time, it cannot possibly be held that the Commissioner or Specified Officer in such circumstances cannot have the power to dismiss for default the election petition. It therefore necessarily follows that since the Commissioner or Specified Officer has been conferred with certain powers vested in the Court, he has, by implication, the incidental and ancillary power to dismiss the election petition for default. Such a power is not only incidental or ancillary, but is necessary and is consistent with the object and the scheme of the Act as well as Rules framed thereunder. The power of dismissal for non-appearance or for default also implies a power of restoration of such dismissed election petition. AIR 1981 SC 606, AIR 1969 Bom 393, 1965 Mah LJ 65 (SC), AIR 1970 All 1 (FB), AIR 1968 Punj 152 (FB), AIR 1969 Raj 75, AIR 1965 Pat 378 and AIR 1968 J & K 91, Rel. on. (Paras 13, 14, 18-A)

In the instant case, the election results were declared on Nov. 21, 1978 and the petition was filed on Jan. 20, 1979 and the petition ultimately came to be dismissed for non-appearance of the petitioners or their advocate on Dec. 26, 1979. In between these two dates several adjournments were granted though the petitioners were not to be blamed for all the adjournments. However, the petitioners themselves had asked for a number of adjournments and ultimately on Dec. 20, 1979 petitioners' evidence was to begin. On Dec. 20, 1979, in spite of this, all the petitioners as well as their advocate chose to remain absent. The Additional Commissioner waited till 4.40 P. M. on that day, but neither there was any intimation to him seeking an adjournment nor mentioning of the matter before him as to why the petitioner could not remain present. According to the petitioners, they had sent a telegram dt/- Dec. 20, 1979 itself at about 12.45 P. M. Admittedly, this telegram reached the office of the Additional Commissioner on Dec. 21, 1979. The matter was posted to Dec. 26, 1979 for passing final order. However, no enquiries were made by the petitioners or their advocate between 21st and 26th Dec., and therefore, the Commissioner passed the order on Dec. 26, 1979 dismissing the petition. In the application made by the petitioner for the restoration of the said election petition, a very strange case was made out that there was an understanding that the contesting respondents and the petitioners had reached an understanding to seek adjournment on Dec. 20, 1979 as both the parties were busy in canvassing for their respective candidates in Parliamentary elections. It was further stated that the petitioners as well as contesting respondents belonged to the different parties but not to disturb their work of election campaign, it was not possible to attend the proceedings before the Additional Commissioner on Dec. 20, 1979. As the respondents had agreed to this arrangement, petitioners informed their advocates, and therefore their advocate did not make separate application before the learned Additional Commissioner for adjournment and further date for hearing of the petition. The contesting respondents opposed the petition being restored and denied the theory of mutual agreement on account of preoccupation with the Election Campaign in support of their respective candidates. The Additional Commissioner heard both the parties on the restoration petition and came to the conclusion that reasons assigned in the application for restoration were an afterthought inasmuch as the contesting respondents had denied claim made by the petitioner in the restoration.

Held, the Additional Commissioner was right in dismissing the election petition for non-appearance. He was also right in dismissing the restoration application. In spite of the mandate contained in Section 144-T (4), hearing of the election petition had gone on for a period of one year and there were several adjournments. The petitioners had not made out good or sufficient grounds as to why they were absent on Dec. 20th 1979. Even if they were busy in the election campaign, that was no reason as to why they or their advocate had chosen to remain absent before the Additional Commissioner. The Additional Commissioner was absolutely in the dark as to why the petitioners did not choose to remain present. No doubt he had received a telegram on the next day i.e. on Dec. 21, 1979, but merely sending a telegram was not sufficient enough and this tendency on the part of the litigants to seek an adjournment by correspondence could not be encouraged. Admittedly, from Dec. 21st to Dec. 26th, none of the petitioners or their advocate had chosen to remain present or had explained the reasons to remain absent. In the circumstances, the Additional Commissioner was not in error in ultimately dismissing the election petition for non-appearance on Dec. 26, 1979. Regarding the restoration application, the reasons assigned for the restoration application were clearly an afterthought and they did not amount either to good or sufficient grounds having been made out for restoration of the election petition. The contesting respondents having disclaimed any mutual understanding whatsoever, the Additional Commissioner was right in dismissing the restoration application also.

(B) Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act (24 of 1961), S. 144-U — Term 'a petitioner' — Includes petitioners — In case of joint election petition, security deposit payable is only Rs. 500, since petition is only one — Security deposit credited under S. 144-U is not liable to forfeiture. (General Clauses Act (1897), S. 13).

The expression "A petitioner shall deposit an amount not exceeding Rs. 500/-" in Section 144-U is to be read to mean that by ordinary rule of construction that the singular in this section would include plural, and therefore, where there are two petitioners, the section would be read to include more than one petitioner. Such a construction is warranted upon the provisions of S. 13 of the General Clauses Act itself. In such a case even though there are more than one petitioner as long as one deposit is made for the election petition, it would be deemed to be made on behalf of all the petitioners and the only inescapable inference that would follow is that all the petitioners have complied with the requirement of S. 144-U. (Para 22)

Held, even if there was more than one petitioner in the instant case, since a joint petition by more than one petitioner was permissible the deposit made by only one of the petitioners was valid one and the joint petitions by others without paying deposit did not suffer from any infirmity whatsoever. The Addl. Commissioner's view that the petition in absence of security deposit by other three petitioners was liable to be dismissed in limine was wholly wrong and not sustainable

In the eyes of law. Further, the order for forfeiture of security deposit was palpably illegal, untenable and without any authority of law and liable to be set aside. There was no provision either in the Act or Rules framed thereunder or even in the Election Rules of 1971 to sustain the said order. The only reference to forfeiture in the entire election rules was contained in R. 68 of the Election Rules which had nothing to do with the provisions relating to forfeiture of the security deposit which was deposited under S. 144-U of the Act at the time of filing of the petition. S. A. Deshmukh, for Petitioners; A. V. Savant and R. D. Rane, Asstt. Govt Pleader, for Respondents.

BHONSALE, J.:— This petition is filed by the petitioners under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India challenging two orders dated December 26, 1979 and April 19, 1980 passed by the Additional Commissioner, Pune Division, Pune in Election Petition No. 17/79. The petitioners contested the election to the Board of Directors of respondent No. 1, i.e., Khandala Taluka Shetkari Sahakari Kharedi Vikri Sangh Ltd., Lonand, District Satara. The respondents Nos. 3, 4 and 8 to 12 are the returned candidates in the election the results of which were declared on Nov. 21, 1978. The respondent No. 1 is a Specified Society and as per provisions of S. 73-G of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960, it is the Collector of District who holds and conducts the election in a manner laid down in Chap. XI-A of the said Act.

2. The petitioners filed Election Petition No. 17/79 before the respondent No. 13, i.e., the Additional Commissioner, Pune Division, Pune. The Board of Directors consists of 7 Directors (A Class) representing the various Co-operative Societies in the jurisdiction of respondents Nos. 1, and 2 Directors (B Class) representing agriculturists members. The main grounds on which the election of the respondents was challenged were as follows:

(i) That the nomination paper of representative of one Dhavadwadi Society was wrongly accepted as a Society had not purchased share of Rs. 1,000/- from the respondent No. 1 as per the Bye-law No. 30-(b) of the respondent No. 1. The representative of Dhavadwadi Society was, therefore, disqualified from contesting the election and this wrong acceptance of the nomination paper had materially affected the result of the election. The election was, therefore, illegal and deserved to be set aside;

(ii) At the time of the counting of the votes, the Returning Officer-respondent No. 2 to this petition, wrongly treated ballot papers as valid votes although on each of them the marking was done in favour of six candidates instead of 7 candidates (who) were to be returned in election from 'A' group constituency of Directors. This kind of defective voting had materially affected the election.

(iii) Election of returned candidate-respondent No. 8, was illegal inasmuch as Dhavadwadi Society which he represented as candidate was not cleared under a proper audit report by an auditor and as such the election of the said respondent No. 8 is illegal and deserves to be set aside;

(iv) The returned candidates did not render proper accounts relating to the expenses incurred in election after the election to the Collector, Satara, and therefore, on that count also the election deserves to be set aside.

The petitioners also prayed that the entire election, having been illegal, void and vitiated ab initio for the reasons stated in the petition, should be declared illegal and it be set aside and further the petitioners be declared as elected, alternatively fresh elections to the Board of Directors of respondent No. 1 may be ordered.

3. The notices of this petition were served on the respondents. The returned candidates submitted written statements and apart from denying all the allegations in the petition on merits, contended that the petitioners being representatives of the respective societies, had no legal right to file the petition in the absence of authority delegated to them by the concerned societies and on that ground alone the petition deserved to be dismissed placing reliance on the provisions of Rule 74 of the Maharashtra Specified Co-operative Societies (Elections to Committees) Rules 1971 (hereinafter for the sake of brevity described as "Election Rules"). It was further contended by the returned candidates that the nominee or delegate of the society had no legal right to file the election petition. They further denied the allegations on the point of disqualification as well as denied the other contentions raised in the petition.

4. On these rival contentions, the learned respondent No. 3, i.e., Additional Commissioner, framed necessary issues and the parties were called upon to file their documents and list of witnesses in support of their claims. However, on the adjourned date, i.e., on Dec. 20, 1979 which was fixed for evidence of the petitioners, all the four petitioners as well as their advocate, remained absent. There was no intimation to the respondent No. 13 regarding their inability to remain present for hearing. From the record, it appears that respondent No. 13 waited until 4.40 P. M. on that day expecting some kind of intimation from petitioners or their advocate. As the petitioners and their advocate failed to present themselves before the Commissioner, the Commissioner passed the following order.

"None for the petitioners. There is no information from either of the 4 petitioners regarding their absence for today's hearing.

Respondents Nos. 1, 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 by Shri S. J. Khurjekar, Advocate

The case was fixed for evidence of petitioners. But the petitioners remained absent Shri V. M. Chimbalkar, Advocate for the petitioners is also absent — although the names of all the petitioners were called out and I waited for their appearance or the appearance of their Advocate till 4-40 p.m. today, but no one has turned up so far nor is there any information regarding their absence or inability to remain present for today's hearing. On account of default in appearance on the part of the petitioners I close the petition for final orders. For orders.

C. F. 16-12-1979.

Sd/- (M. R. Kher)

Addl. Commissioner, Pune, Dn. Pune."

5. From the record, it does appear that the petitioners had sent a telegram on Dec. 20, 1979 itself informing respondent No. 13 that they would not be able to attend the proceedings. This telegram was received by the office of the respondent No. 13 on Dec. 21, 1979. However, the learned respondent No. 13 dismissed the election petition by his order dated Dec. 26, 1979 as referred to above. In addition, the respondent No. 13 further observed that the petitioner did not want to avail the opportunity and wanted to delay the trial of this petition by remaining absent without any sufficient cause. He further observed that out of four petitioners, only one petitioner, viz., Shri Madhav Bhikaji Dhaygude has credited security deposits of Rs. 500/- on 19-1-1979. According to the interpretation placed by the learned respondent No. 13 on the provisions of S. 144-U of Maharashtra Cooperative Societies Act, there could not be one deposit of Rs. 500/- in support of election petition in respect of four petitions. According to the learned Additional Commissioner, the provisions of Section 144-T of the said Act are mandatory and unless each petitioner deposits security deposit of Rs. 500/- at the time of presentation of election petition, the petition shall be summarily dismissed.

6. This defect of non-compliance of mandatory provisions of S. 144-T and U of the said Act against the remaining three petitioners, is a defect of serious nature by reason of which the petition deserves to be dismissed.

7. The learned Additional Commissioner, therefore, by his order dated Dec. 26, 1979 dismissed the election petition as not maintainable and further directed that the security deposit of Rs. 500/- made by the petitioner Shri M. B. Dhayagude shall be forfeited to the government. It is further directed that parties to bear their own costs.

8. The petitioners realised that their petition was dismissed for non-appearance and, therefore, they filed a restoration application dated Jan. 9, 1980 before the respondent No. 13. In this application several reasons were assigned by the petitioners as to why they were absent on Dec. 20, 1979. The main reason given by the petitioners was that there was understanding between themselves and the returned candidates to ask for adjournment of the hearing of the petition fixed on 20-12-1979. Both the parties were busy in canvassing in the parliamentary elections which were to be held in the first week of January. It was further stated that since he returned candidates had consented to such an arrangement, petitioners sent a telegram on the same day i.e. on Dec. 20, 1979 for adjournment. It was also stated in the said petition for restoration that as both the parties had decided amongst themselves to ask for adjournment, the petitioners had informed their advocate. Accordingly, they did not make separate application praying that the petition should be restored and heard on merits. Notices of this restoration petition were served on the returned candidates — respondents to this petition. As there were some doubts as to whether this petition amounted to review of the earlier order passed by the respondent No. 13 or was one for setting aside ex parte order passed by the respondent No. 13 by reason of wilful default on the part of the petitioners in regard to their appearance on the day fixed i.e. on Dec. 20, 1979 the learned Additional Commissioner heard the advocate for the petitioners on Mar. 4, 1980. The advocate for the petitioners submitted that this was an application for restoration of the petition as the Court order dated Dec. 26, 1979 was ex parte against the petitioners who wanted the respondent No. 13 to hear the petition on merits. Accordingly, the learned Assistant (Additional?) Commissioner directed notices to be issued to the respondents. The respondents thereafter filed the reply and ultimately (sic) heard the arguments of both the sides on Apr. 19, 1980 and rejected the petitioners' application dated Jan. 19, 1980 for restoration of their election petition No. 17/79.

9. In his order, the learned Additional Commissioner has recorded that the respondents filed written statement and denied that there was any arrangement between the parties to seek the adjournment on Dec. 20, 1979. The returned candidates had further denied they had consented to the prayer of the petitioners to restore the election petition. The learned Additional Commissioner observed that the reasons for restoration were not at all convincing apart from the fact that the respondents had categorically denied the contentions of the petitioners in support of their restoration application. He also reiterated his reasoning contained in earlier order that petition was liable to be dismissed on the ground that only one of the four petitioners had deposited the security amount of Rupees 500/- and on that ground alone without going into the merits the petition was liable to be dismissed. According to the learned Additional Commissioner, as the reasons stated in the application dated Jan. 19, 1980 were an afterthought they merited no consideration and therefore no sufficient or good reason was given for wilful default in appearance on Dec. 20, 1979 which was specifically fixed for recording evidence of the petitioner after a number of other earlier adjournments. In this view, which the learned Additional Commissioner chose to adopt, he rejected the petitioners' restoration application by his order dated Apr. 19, 1980. It is these two orders which have been challenged by the petitioners in the present petition filed under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constn. praying that these orders be set aside and the Election Petition No. 17/79 be restored and heard on merits.

10. The learned counsel for the petitioners Shri S. A. Deshmukh urged three grounds before us in support of the petition. Firstly, his main contention was that in the absence of any provision in the said Act or in the Rules framed thereunder the learned Additional Commissioner respondent No. 13 before whom the election petition was filed under the provisions of S. 144-T of the said Act had no jurisdiction to dismiss the election petition for non-appearance or for default. Secondly, he contended that the order passed by the learned Additional Commissioner forfeiting security deposit of Rs. 500/- on behalf of the petitioners was unwarranted, unjust and without any authority of law. Thirdly, he submitted that if the Rojnama was taken into consideration, the petitioners were not to be blamed for several adjournments and the returned candidates had in fact an understanding with the petitioners to ask for adjournment of the hearing of the petition which was fixed on Dec. 26, 1979 as both the parties were busy in canvassing of their respective parliamentary candidates contesting the parliamentary elections to be held in the first week of January 1980. The petitioners belong to the party of Congress (I), whereas the respondents — Returned candidates belong to the rival Congress i.e. Congress (U). It was, therefore, agreed between the parties to have the hearing of the election petition fixed after the result of the parliamentary elections were declared, and therefore, no formal application was made before the learned Additional Commissioner.

11. As against this the learned counsel Shri A. V. Savant appearing on behalf of the returned candidates has submitted that in law the respondent, which was Election Tribunal — Additional Commissioner before whom the election petition was to be filed, had the powers to dismiss the election petition for non-appearance or for default. According to him, though there was no provision in the Statute or the Rules, placing reliance on several decisions of various High Courts, he contended that the Tribunal had the power to dismiss such election petition for default.

12. The first question that falls for determination in this petition is whether the respondent No. 13 — Additional Commissioner could or could not have dismissed the election petition No. 17/79 for non-appearance or default of the petitioners or their advocate. Now, admittedly, the respondent No. 1 is a specified society within the meaning of S. 73 (v) of the said Act and Chap. XI-A governs the election to such specified societies. Section 73 (G) reads as follows:—

"The election of the member of the committees (and the officers by the committees) of the Societies of the categories mentioned below shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XI-A and shall be conducted in the manner laid down by or under that Chapter".

13. There is no dispute before this Court that respondent No. 1 is such a specified society. Chapter XI-A of the said Act provides for elections of committees and officers of certain societies. The said Chap. XI-A is inserted in the Act by Mah. Act 27 of 1969. The elections of such societies are to be held by the Collector and shall be conducted under his control by such returning officer as may be appointed by him in that behalf. Any dispute relating to election has to be referred to the Commissioner of the Division in which such an election is held or to an officer not below the rank of Additional Commissioner of a division referred to as a specified officer according to the provisions of S. 144-T. An election petition has to be filed by the aggrieved party within the period of two months from the date of declaration of the results and a petitioner presenting an Election Petition under S. 144-T shall pay a deposit not exceeding Rs. 500/-. Unless the petitioner deposits the said amount, the petition shall be summarily dismissed. Subject to such condition as may be prescribed at the time of deciding the petition, the Commissioner shall assess the costs of the hearing of the petition and shall require the petitioner or the respondents or both, as the case may be, to defray the whole or in such proportion as he thinks fit, the costs of the petition, including the deposit so made. The Commissioner is further required to credit to Government such sum as he assesses as the costs to Government of hearing the petition. The powers of the Commissioner under this Chapter XI-A in conducting the election petition are to be found in S. 144-T itself as well as in Ss. 144-S, 144-U and 144-W and in Election Rules from R. 73 to R. 94. Under Section 144-T, sub-sec. (3), in exercising functions conferred upon him under Chap. XI-A, the specified officer shall have the same power as vested in a Court in respect of—

- (a) proof of facts by affidavit;
- (b) summoning and enforcing the attendance of any persons and examining him on oath;
- (c) compelling discovery or the production of documents; and

(d) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses.

Under sub-sec. (4) of the said section such election petitions shall be heard and disposed of by the specified officer as expeditiously as possible and the order made by the specified officer on such petition shall be final and conclusive. In order to appreciate these rival contentions that such specified officer as described in S. 144-T and others has no jurisdiction or is not empowered under the Statute as well as Rules to dismiss the election petition for non-appearance or for default, we have to appreciate the character of the powers conferred on the Additional Commissioner or other specified officer under the provisions of S. 144-T itself. In sub-sec. (3) of the said section, he has been conferred with the same powers as are vested in the Court itself in respect of items mentioned therein. That, however, in our opinion does not detract from incidental powers which Court possesses. If the Commissioner or the specified Officer under S. 144-T is vested and empowered to exercise certain powers of the Court, it follows that all such incidental and ancillary powers which a Court is empowered to exercise as is referred to in sub-sec. (3) of S. 144-T can also be exercised by the Commissioner or the Specified Officer. What is contended before us is that there is no provision either in the Act or in the Rules framed thereunder to confer such power on the Commissioner or the specified officer as to dismiss the petition for non-appearance or for default. The learned Additional Commissioner at one stage wanted to find out whether the application presented by the petitioner on Jan. 19, 1980 was an application for review or merely an application for setting aside an ex parte decision. There is a necessary distinction to be drawn between an application for review and application for setting aside an ex parte award. In this context, the petitioner contended that as there was no evidence led before the Commissioner in respect of the absence of any provision in the Statute or the Rules there is power to set aside an ex parte Award.

14. It is true that there are no provisions as stated above either under the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act or under the Rules framed thereunder to dismiss the petition for non-appearance or default. However, as observed by the Supreme Court in Grindlays Bank Ltd. v. Central Government Industrial Tribunal, (AIR 1981 SC 606) that it is a well-known rule of statutory construction that a Tribunal or body should be considered to be endowed with such ancillary or incidental powers as are necessary to discharge its functions effectively for the purpose of doing justice between the parties. In the present case, if the entire spectrum of powers vested in the Additional Commissioner or the Specified Officer in conducting the election petitions is taken into account, we are of the view that the said Commissioner or the Specified Officer should be considered as invested with such incidental or ancillary powers and though there is no positive provision for dismissing election petition for non-appearance or default, there is neither an indication in the Statute nor Rules to the contrary. There is no statutory prohibition for dismissing the election petition for non-appearance or for default. On the contrary, the Commissioner or Specified Officer has been specifically conferred with powers under the Civil Procedure Code for limited purpose. For effectively discharging the duty of deciding the election petition, in our opinion, the incidental and ancillary powers can also be exercised by the Commissioner or the Specified Officer under the provisions of S. 144-T and other sections and relevant rules. It cannot be denied that the Commissioner or the Specified Officer, apart from specific powers conferred as are vested in the Court, has in deciding the election petition all the trappings of the Court and there could be no doubt that they exercise quasi-judicial functions. Such authorities being quasi-judicial in nature have the duty to determine objectively the matters referred to them under S. 144-T of the said Act and have to exercise their discretion in judicial manner without caprice and according to the general principles of law and Rules of natural justice. In our view, therefore, even in absence of specific provisions under the Act and the Rules, the Commissioner or specified Officer under Section 144-T of the said Act has the power to dismiss the election petition for non-appearance or default. It necessarily follows that this power of dismissal for non-appearance or for default also implies a power of restoration of such dismissed election petition.

15. We are fortified in the view we take regarding these powers of the Commissioner or the specified Officer under S. 144-T of the said Act and from the several reported decisions under the provisions of Representation of the People Act (1951), it would appear that the respondent No. 13 herein i.e. Election Tribunal (in this case Additional Commissioner or Specified Officer) certainly will have power to dismiss the election petition for default. Before we go to the several other decisions of various High Courts on this point, we may refer to the decision of this Court though under the provisions of Rent Control Order reported in 1969 Mah. LJ 421 : (AIR 1969 Bom 393), (Biwalibai v. Jai-kumar). This was a case under the provisions of S. 13-(3)-(i) and (ii) of the Rent Control Order. After several adjournments, on the date fixed for evidence, both the petitioners and counsel remained absent. The Rent Controller therefore, closed the case for orders. In subsequent applications filed for setting aside the ex parte order, the question arose whether such an application for setting aside ex parte order was or was not tenable in law. This was raised as a preliminary objection on behalf of the landlords. The Rent Controller had observed that the reasons given by the petitioners for their absence have hardly any justification and it is nothing but a case of negligence and law could not come to help such parties who are negligent. When the said decision was challenged before the High Court, the learned single Judge of this Court was of the opinion that the jurisdiction to dismiss an application for default of appearance or to proceed ex parte against a party who fails to enter appearance is implicit in the jurisdiction to entertain and adjudicate upon the claims made before it by the parties in proceedings under the Rent Control Order. This jurisdiction is not traceable to its inherent powers but is implicit in the power to decide the case itself. If there is a power to dismiss an application for non-appearance of the applicant, it hardly needs to be emphasised to point out that there is a co-ordinate power to proceed ex parte against a party who fails to appear, but this power to dismiss in default or to proceed ex parte also implies equally a duty to restore an application dismissed for default or to set aside ex parte order if the defaulting party satisfies the authority that there was good cause for non-appearance. It is, therefore, clear that a Tribunal or Body which is required to act quasi-judicially has incidental powers apart from those which are specifically conferred on it. Such incidental or ancillary powers would include, in our opinion, power to dismiss for non-appearance, and therefore, power to restore dismissed petition also. This power though ancillary and incidental would appear to us as sine qua non to any judicial procedure which under the Act or the Rules framed thereunder is required to adjudicate upon disputes between the parties and this is a necessary rule of procedure that powers should vest during the proceedings of the Commissioner or the Specified Officer either to dismiss in default of appearance of a party or to proceed ex parte against the defaulting party.

16. The Supreme Court as far back as in the case of Dr. Sushila Balraj v. Ardnendu Bhushan, (1965 Mah LJ 65) observed that granting of an adjournment was primarily a matter for the Tribunal to consider and decide in its discretion, that there was power in the Election Tribunal under the Representation of the People Act, 1951, to dismiss the petition for non-appearance in its discretionary powers. However, that power has to be exercised judicially. It was held by Gajendragadkar C. J. delivering the judgment for the Bench confirming the finding of the High Court, that there was no substance in the argument urged by the respondent that the Election Tribunal had no jurisdiction to dismiss the petition for non-prosecution. The learned Chief Justice also observed that in considering the scheme of the Representation of the People Act, what was to be borne in mind is that the election petition must be tried as expeditiously as possible. It is pertinent to note at this stage that sub-sec. (4) of S. 144-T of the said Act lays down that such election petition shall be heard and disposed of by a Commissioner or a specified Officer as expeditiously as possible. The reason is not far to seek. If these petitions are allowed to be conducted in a leisurely way and go on interminably, then the very object of permitting the remedy of challenging the validity of elections in good time would be defeated. That is why S. 144-T sub-sec. (4) lays down that every election petition shall be tried as expeditiously as possible. In determining whether the Commissioner or the specified Officer has the power to dismiss the election petition for non-appearance or for default, the provisions of sub-sec. (4) of S. 144-T cannot be ignored.

17. There are several decisions of various High Courts which support the view that the authority i.e. Election Tribunal deciding the election petition under the Representation of the People Act has power to dismiss the petition for default in appearance of the petitioner. It is also illogical to hold that the Tribunal has no power to restore the same. In Duryodhan v. Sitaram reported in AIR 1970 All 1, the Full Bench of Allahabad High Court had occasion to decide the very point and it has been held by the Full Bench that even in the absence of power conferred on the Election Tribunal, Section 98 does not only contemplate an order on merits alone and an order of dismissal for default would be an order dismissing the election petition under Section 98 (a) of the Representation of the People Act. Three learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court, though for different reasons, held that the Election Tribunal did possess such powers, and procedure provided under Orders 9 and 17 was held applicable for dismissal for non-appearance or default as well as for restoration of such petition.

18. The Full Bench of Punjab High Court in the case of Jugal Kishore v. Baldev Parkash reported in AIR 1968 Punj 152 after reviewing several authorities also came to the conclusion that in prosecuting election petition though there is no specific provision laid down under the Act for application of provisions of Civil P. C., the Court has the power to dismiss the petition for default of the petitioner for non-appearance. Justice Grover who delivered judgment for the Bench observed that, where the petitioner chooses to simply absent himself from the Court or ceases to give any instructions to the counsel engaged by him, the Court will have no option but to dismiss the election petition under the provisions of the Civil P. C. which would be applicable to the election petitions in the absence of any express provisions in the Act. Referring to the judicial conflicts between some High Courts and after extensively referring to the decisions of various Courts, the learned Judge observed that there was no distinct provision under the Representation of the People Act laying down any particular or special procedure which is to be followed when the petitioner chooses to commit default either in appearance or in production of evidence or generally in prosecuting the election petition. Accordingly, it was held that the Court had powers to dismiss the petition for non-prosecution. The learned Judge in his observation relied on the decision of Patna High Court reported in the case of S. B. L. Verma v. T. D. N. Singh (AIR 1965 Pat 378). The learned Judge extensively referred to this judgment and held as follows (at pp. 158, 159):

"It has been repeatedly said that an election petition once filed is not a contest only between the parties thereto but continues for the benefit of the whole constituency. It is for that purpose that in the Representation of the People Act, 1951, provisions have been made in Ss. 112 and 116 relating to abatement of such a petition, the effect of which is that the petition cannot come to an end by the withdrawal thereof by the death of the petitioner or by the death or withdrawal of opposition by respondent, but is liable in such cases to be continued by any person who might have been a petitioner. There is nothing in the entire Act providing or indicating that a similar procedure is to be followed in the event of a petitioner failing to prosecute the petition. Such failure can be due to various causes. The petitioner can, by force of circumstances, be genuinely rendered helpless to prosecute the petition. For instance, he may find that his financial condition has suddenly worsened and that he can no longer afford the expenses of litigation. He may even, owing to exigencies of business or vocation or profession, have to go to such a distant place from the seat of the High Court where the election petition is being tried that he may find it impossible to prosecute the petition in a proper manner. There would be two courses open to him and that will depend entirely on his volition. He can either file an application for withdrawal of the petition disclosing the circumstances which have brought about such a situation in which case there would be no difficulty in following the procedure laid down in Ss. 109 and 110 of the Act, or he may choose to simply absent himself from the Court or cease to give any instructions to the counsel engaged by him or fail to deposit the process fee in which case the Court will have no option but to dismiss the election petition under the provisions of Civil P. C. which would be applicable to the election petitions in the absence of any express provisions in the Act. The dismissal will have to be under the provisions contained in O. 9 or O. 17 of the Code."

18-A. Admittedly there are no specific provisions in Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 or the Election Rules. Rule 79 speaks of order of the Commissioner and lays down that at the conclusion of the trial of an election petition, the Commissioner shall make an order—

- (a) dismissing the election petition; or
- (b) declaring the election of all or any of the returned candidates to be void; or
- (c) declaring the election of all or any of the returned candidates to be void, and the petitioner or any other candidate to have been duly elected.

Rule 80 speaks of other orders to be made by the Commissioner which are to be passed at the time of making a final order under Rule 79. There is no specific provision in the said Rules for dismissing election petition for non-appearance or in default or for non-prosecution. As is provided in sub-section (4) of S. 144-T, petitions are to be disposed of as expeditiously as possible. It, therefore, necessarily follows that since the Election Tribunal has been conferred with certain powers vested in the Court, we will have to read by implication such incidental and ancillary power in the Commissioner and specified officers for dismissing the election petition for default. Such a power is not only incidental or ancillary, but is necessary and is consistent with the object and the scheme of the Act as well as Rules framed thereunder. If petitioners for any reason choose to remain absent for considerable time, it cannot possibly be held that the Commissioner or specified officer in such circumstances cannot have the power to dismiss for default the election petition. As observed earlier, it has been held by various High Courts that such power does not (sic) vest in the Election Tribunal even in absence of specific provisions in the Act or in the Rules framed thereunder. This view is also supported by the decisions of the Rajasthan High Court reported in AIR 1969 Raj 75 (Keshari Lal v. Narain Prakash); Patna High Court reported in AIR 1965 Pat 378 (S.B.L. Verma v. T.D.N. Singh) and Jammu and Kashmir High Court reported in AIR 1968 J & K 91 (Bupa Singh v. Bishamber Singh).

19. Having held that the learned Commissioner did have the power to dismiss the petition for default, it now becomes necessary to examine whether the Commissioner was justified in dismissing the petition for default. In our opinion, the learned Additional Commissioner was perfectly justified to pass both the impugned orders and for good reasons. It is clear from the record of the case that the election results were declared on Nov. 21, 1978 and the petition is filed on Jan. 20, 1979 and the petition ultimately came to be dismissed for non-appearance of the petitioners or their advocate on Dec. 26, 1979. In between these two dates several adjournments were granted by the learned Additional Commissioner. We are not suggesting that for several adjournments the petitioners are to be blamed. However, it will be seen from the record that the petitioners themselves have asked for a number of adjournments and ultimately on Dec. 20, 1979 petitioners' evidence was to begin. On Dec. 20, 1979, in spite of this, all the petitioners as well as their advocate chose to remain absent. The learned Additional Commissioner waited till 4.40 P. M. on that day, but neither there was any intimation to the learned Additional Commissioner seeking an adjournment nor mentioning of the matter before the learned Additional Commissioner as to why the petitioner could not remain present. According to the petitioners, they had sent a telegram dated Dec. 20, 1979 itself at about 12.45 P.M. Admittedly, this telegram reached the office of the Additional Commissioner on Dec. 21, 1979. In the petition itself what is stated is that the learned Additional Commissioner should have granted adjournment on the basis of this telegram. The matter was posted to Dec. 26, 1979 for passing final order. However, no enquiries were made by the petitioners or their advocate between 21st and 26th Dec., and therefore, the learned Commissioner passed the order on Dec. 26, 1979 dismissing the petition, as stated above.

20. In the application made by the petitioner for the restoration of the said election petition, a very strange case is made out that there was an understanding that the contesting respondents and the petitioners have reached an understanding to seek adjournment on Dec. 20, 1979 as both the parties were busy in canvassing for their respective candidates in Parliamentary elections. It was further stated that the petitioners as well as contesting respondents belonged to the different parties but not to disturb their work of election campaign, it was not possible to attend the proceedings before the learned Additional Commissioner on Dec. 20, 1979. As the respondents had agreed to this arrangement, petitioners informed their advocates, and therefore their advocate did not make separate application before the learned Additional Commissioner for adjournment and further date for hearing of the petition. The learned Additional Commissioner heard both the parties on this petition and came to the conclusion that reasons assigned in the application for restoration were an after-thought inasmuch as the contesting respondents had denied the claim made by the petitioners in the restoration. In fact the contesting respondents had opposed the petition being restored and denied the theory of mutual agreement on account of pre-occupation of the Lok Sabha Election Campaign in support of their respective candidates. According to the learned Additional Commissioner, he was duty bound to hear and dispose of the petition as expeditiously as possible, and therefore, order passed by him earlier on Dec. 26, 1979 was final and conclusive within the meaning of Sec. 144-T (4) of the said Act read with Rule 79 of the Election Rules 1971. The Additional Commissioner also reiterated his earlier stand that all the petitioners have not separately credited security deposit of Rupees 500/- and without going into the merits of the petition, the petition, even otherwise, was liable to be dismissed. Having held this, the learned Additional Commissioner dismissed the restoration application by his order dated April 19, 1980.

21. We are of the opinion that in spite of the mandate contained in sub-section (4) of Section 144-T, the election petitions are to be heard and disposed of as expeditiously as possible. Hearing of this petition has gone on for a period of one year and there were several adjournments. In our opinion, petitioners have not made out good or sufficient grounds as to why they were absent on Dec. 20th, 1979. Even if they were busy in the election campaign, in our opinion, that is no reason as to why they or their advocate had chosen to remain absent before the learned Additional Commissioner. The learned Additional Commissioner was absolutely in the dark as to why the petitioners did not choose to remain present. It is true that he had received a telegram on the next day i.e. on Dec. 21, 1979, but merely sending a telegram was not sufficient enough and, in our opinion, this tendency on the part of the litigants to seek an adjournment by correspondence must be discouraged. Admittedly, from Dec. 21st to Dec. 26th, none of the petitioners or their advocate had chosen to remain present or had explained the reasons to remain absent from this day and we are inclined to observe that the learned Additional Commissioner was not in error in ultimately dismissing the election petition for non-appearance on Dec. 26, 1979. We are also of the opinion that the reasons assigned for the restoration application are clearly an after-thought and they do not amount either to good or sufficient grounds having been made out for restoration of the election petition. The contesting respondents having disclaimed any mutual understanding whatsoever, the Additional Commissioner was right in dismissing the restoration application also.

22. Before passing final order, however, we must examine other submissions made by the petitioners' counsel. Petitioners' counsel contended that the order passed by the learned Additional Commissioner, holding that election petition was liable to be dismissed because of defect of serious nature inasmuch as each of the petitioners had not separately credited Rs. 500/- by way of security deposit, is bad and unsustainable in the eyes of law is well founded. Under the provisions of S. 144-U of the said Act, it is provided as follows :

“Deposit towards costs for hearing and power to award costs.

144-U. A petitioner presenting an election petition under the last preceding section shall pay a deposit not exceeding Rs. 500/- as the Commissioner may direct towards the costs for hearing the petition. Unless the petitioner deposits the same as aforesaid, the petition shall be summarily dismissed. Subject to such conditions as may be prescribed at the time of deciding the petition, the Commissioner shall assess the costs of the hearing of the petition and shall require the petitioner or the respondents or both as the case may be, to defray the whole or in such proportion as he thinks fit, the costs of the petition, including the deposit so made. The Commissioner shall credit to Government such sum as he assesses as the costs to Government of hearing the petition (but not exceeding Rs. 500/- in any case).”

In other words, a petitioner presenting an election petition u/s. 144-T of the said Act has to deposit an amount not exceeding Rs. 500/-. If this deposit is not made by the petitioner, the petition is liable to be summarily dismissed. The Additional Commissioner at the time of hearing of the petition shall assess the costs of hearing and shall require both the parties to deposit the whole or in such proportion as he thinks fit the costs of the petition including the deposit so made. In other words, the security deposit is made for defraying the costs to be assessed by the Additional Commissioner at the conclusion of the trial of the petition. It is a well known rule of construction that singular includes plural, and therefore, even though the word used in S. 144-U is “A petitioner” it shall include petitioners. Therefore, the expression “A petitioner shall deposit an amount not exceeding Rs. 500/-” is to be read to mean that by ordinary rule of construction that the singular in this section would include plural, and therefore, where there are two petitioners, the section would be read to include more than one petitioner. Such a construction is warranted upon the provisions of the General Clauses Act itself. In such a case even though there are more than one petition as long as one deposit is made for the election petition, it would be deemed to be made on behalf of all the petitioners and the only inescapable inference that would follow is that all the petitioners have complied with the requirement of Section 144-U.

23. Therefore, we are of opinion that in spite of the fact that the other petitioners have not deposited separately security deposit of Rs. 500/- at the time of presentation of the election petition, the petition would be maintainable and was not liable to be summarily dismissed as has been held by the learned Additional Commissioner. In our opinion, the learned Additional Commissioner's view that such a petition in absence of security deposit by the other three petitioners was liable to be dismissed in limine was wholly wrong and not sustainable in the eyes of law. We are fortified in the view we have taken inasmuch as this Court has taken a similar view in Namdeo Chimnaji v. Govinddas, reported in (1963) 65 Bom LR 843 : (AIR 1964 Bom 137 at p. 146), where it is held as follows :

“Though there may be more than one petitioner to an election petition, so long as one deposit is made for the election petition, the election petitioners would comply with the requirements of Sec. 117 of the Representation of the People Act.”

24. A similar view has been taken by the Judicial Commissioner, Goa, Daman and Diu in the case of Yeshwant v. Jaisingrao, reported in AIR 1974 Goa 4. In that case the election of successful candidate was challenged on several grounds. One of the preliminary contentions opposing the petition was raised to the effect that at the time of presenting an election petition only one deposit of Rs. 2,000/- was made by the petitioner and not by each of the several petitioners. Relying on the provisions of Section 117 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, it was contended that each of the petitioners must deposit Rs. 2,000/-. Rejecting this contention, it was held that the deposit was for the security of costs of the petition. In joint petitions, though there are more than one petitioner, the petition being only one, the deposit of Rs. 2,000/- was payable. This decision is applicable to the facts of the present case with all force. Even if there is more than one petitioner in this case, since a joint petition by more than one petitioner is permissible we are of the opinion that deposit made by only one of the petitioners was valid one and the joint petition by others without paying deposit did not suffer from any infirmity whatsoever. We are of the opinion that the submission made by the learned counsel for the petitioners is sound as far as this finding of the learned Additional Commissioner is concerned.

25. In our view, the submission made by the learned counsel for the petitioner in respect of the order forfeiting the security deposit to the Government is also well-founded. We are of the opinion, that the said order of forfeiture of security deposit is palpably illegal, untenable and without any authority of law. There is no provision either in the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 or Rules framed thereunder or even in the Election Rules of 1971 to sustain the said order. The only reference we found to forfeiture in the entire election rules is contained in R. 68 of the Election Rules which states that where a candidate has lost the election, his deposit shall be forfeited to the State Government if at an election the number of valid votes polled by him does not exceed one-eighth of the total number of valid votes polled by all the candidates. This obviously has nothing to do with the provisions relating to forfeiture of the security deposit which is deposited under Sec. 144-U of the said Act at the time of filing of the petition. As the order passed by the learned Additional Commissioner forfeiting this security deposit to the Government is wholly illegal, the same is liable to be quashed and set aside and we, therefore, set aside that part of the learned Additional Commissioner's order.

26. In view of this, the petition is partly allowed to the extent of setting aside the order of the Additional Commissioner, Pune Division, Pune forfeiting the security deposit of petitioner No. 2 to the State Government. As far as the petitioners' prayer for restoration of the Election Petition No. 17/79 is concerned, we are of the opinion that the petitioners have not made out sufficient and good grounds for the restoration of the case. This part of the order of the Additional Commissioner of Pune Division, Pune is hereby confirmed.

27. In view of the fact that we have partly allowed the petition granting a limited relief to the petitioners of refunding the security deposit of Rs. 500/-, the rule is partly made absolute. However, in the circumstances of the case, there would be no order as to costs.

Petition partly allowed.

ORDER :— This is a reference under Section 18, Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (hereinafter referred to as "the said Act") for the determination of compensation in respect of acquisition of certain lands situated at village Borla, in Kurla, Bombay.

2. The proceedings arise out of the acquisition of a large area of land admeasuring 30 acres 34 gunthas and 4 annas, equivalent to 1,49,344.25 sq. yards, situated at village Borla in Kurla. Three notifications under Section 4 of the said Act declaring the intention to acquire the said lands, were published on 27-11-1958. On 14-10-1960, an agreement was arrived at between the claimants and the Bombay Municipal Corporation, being the acquiring body, for whose purposes the aforesaid lands were being acquired under the said Act. The said agreement was arrived at between the claimants as representing their families including certain minors and the Bombay Municipal Corporation as well as a confirming party. The recitals to the said agreement show that the Improvements Committee of the said Corporation by its resolutions, dated 8th Sept., 1950 and 22nd Dec., 1959 respectively had sanctioned, inter alia, the acquisition of certain lands situated at Borla village, admeasuring about 50 acres and 33½ gunthas i.e. 2,44,813.25 sq. yards described in the first and second schedules thereto and the said lands were notified under Sec. 4 of the said Act for acquisition under notification published in the Bombay Government Gazette (part 1) dated 27th Nov., 1958. The recitals further show that by the said resolutions, the Improvements Committee and the Corporation had also agreed to purchase the land situated at Borla village admeasuring 5 acres and 39 gunthas i.e. 28,919 sq. yds. or thereabouts which was also delineated on a plan annexed to the said agreement. There is a further recital in the agreement which runs as follows :

“And whereas the Corporation pursuant to the said resolutions proposed to acquire the said land belonging to the owners at the value of Rs. 4.25 per sq. yard inclusive of all interests in the land.”

As far as the clauses of the agreement are concerned, clause No. 1 records the consent of the owners and the consent of the Corporation to the acquisition of land admeasuring 50 acres and 23 gunthas which has been delineated on a plan annexed to the agreement and that the confirming party has confirmed such acquisition. Clause 2 runs as follows :

“It has been agreed between the parties that for the purpose aforesaid the market value of the said property including all interest therein shall be computed at the rate of 4.25 per sq. yard for the said piece of land under the terms and provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. No extra compensation will be given under the Act for timber or firewood or wells and the parties will request the Special Land Acquisition Officer to pass an award as per the terms and provisions of the Land Acquisition Act for the compensation of the acquisition of the said land as hereinbefore mentioned for the actual area of the land ascertained by a joint survey, ... ”

The rest of the clause is not material for the purpose of this reference. Clause 3 shows that the owners agreed to sell and the Corporation agreed to purchase pieces of land admeasuring 5 acres and 39 gunthas which have been there, particularly described in the third and fourth schedules to the agreement at and for the price of Rs. 4.25 per sq. yard. Rest of the clauses are not material. The possession of the notified land was taken on the same day, namely, 14th Oct., 1960. Thereafter, Sec. 6 notification was issued and an award was made and declared on 5th Dec., 1970 in respect of the acquired land. The award makes somewhat interesting reading. In dealing with sales of lands between 1957 and 1959, the Land Acquisition Officer has pointed out that, in the background which he has referred to, only certain sales which are of the adjoining lands to the lands under acquisition need comparison and the price under these sales ranges from Rs. 5 to Rs. 6.60 ps. He has then stated that, taking into account all relevant aspects, the reasonable market value of the lands acquired would be Rs. 5.50 per sq. yard. He has further stated that the value as agreed upon will have, however, to be paid i.e. Rs. 4.25 per sq. yard. As far as the question of solatium, which is the only matter regarding which there is controversy in this reference, is concerned, the Land Acquisition Officer has stated as follows :
